HISTORY OF KENTUCKY

James D. Black. Barbourville, judicial center and principal city of Knox County, claims as its most distinguished citizen, James Dixon Black, former governor of Kentucky, and foremost in connection with civic and business affairs in his home city and native county. He has secure vantage ground as one of the representative members of the Kentucky bar and at Barbourville he is president of the National Bank of John A. Black.

James Dixon Black was born on the old homestead farm of his father, nine miles east of Barbourville, Knox County, on Big Richland Creek, and the date of his nativity was September 24, 1849. On this farm his father, John C. Black, died in the year 1876, his birth having occurred in South Carolina, in 1804. Alexander Black, grandfather of the ex-governor of Kentucky, was a native of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish lineage, and was reared and educated in his native land, whence, shortly after his marriage, he immigrated with his young wife to America and established his residence in South Carolina, where he continued his association with farm industry until his removal to the eastern part of Tennessee, whence he came as a pioneer into Knox County, Kentucky, when his son John C. was a boy. He instituted the reclamation and development of what became one of the finest farm estates of this county, was influential in public affairs and general community life and was a commanding figure in connection with early stages of civic and material development and progress in Knox County, where he continued to reside, as an honored pioneer citizen, until the time of his death.

John C. Black was reared to manhood in Knox County, where in all of the relations of life he wielded benignant influence during the course of a signally active and useful career. He became one of the most extensive and successful exponents of farm enterprise in this county, was originally a whig and later a republican in politics, and the only office in which he consented to serve was that of justice of the peace, of which he continued the incumbent several years. In Clay County, this state, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Clarissa Jones, who was there born in the year 1807, and whose death occurred on the old Black homestead farm, nine miles east of Barbourville, in 1862. Of the children the eldest was Permelia, who was born in 1827, and who became the wife of Hiram Jones, the closing period of their lives having been passed on their home farm, in Laurel County; Isaac J., who was born in the year 1829, was a farmer one mile east of Barbourville at the time of his death, and his was the distinction of having been a captain in a Kentucky regiment that gave valiant service in defense of the Union in the Civil war; Samuel, who was born in 1831, likewise became a prosperous representative of farm enterprise and he was a resident of Richmond, Madison County, at the time of his death, in 1919; Alexander, who was born in 1832, is a retired farmer residing at Richmond; Rhoda, born in 1834, the widow of Nathan McBee, and resides in Laurel County, where her husband was a representative farmer; David, born in 1836, was a substantial farmer of Madison County at the time of his death, in 1916; Isabella, born in 1838, died at Barbourville, and her husband, John Brogan, is now engaged in the banking business at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; John A., born in 1842, resides at Barbourville, where he was formerly a leading merchant and where he became the most influential factor in reorganizing the private banking business founded by John A. Black into what is now the National Bank of John A. Black, of which he became the first president, a capacity in which he served a number of years, since which he has lived virtually retired; Hiram was a prosperous farmer in Knox County at the time of his death; Alabama became the wife of William Hopper and died in Laurel County, where her husband is still actively engaged in farm enterprise; James D., of this review, is the youngest of the children.

Knox County's native son who was destined to become governor of this great commonwealth, gained his early education in the rural schools and a subscription school maintained at Barbourville. Thereafter he completed a course in Tusculum College, situated four miles east of Greenville, Tennessee, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1872 and with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. It was a fitting recognition which his alma mater accorded to him many years later, when, in 1911, Tusculum College conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, he having marked the intervening years with substantial and distinguished service and achievement.

After his graduation in the college mentioned above Mr. Black returned to Knox County, and here he gave two years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools. In the meanwhile he gave much attention to the study of law, and that he made definite progress in the absorption and assimilation of the science of jurisprudence is indicated by the fact that in August, 1874, he was duly admitted to the bar of his native state. Depending upon no fortuitious influence, he proved his ability by successful work in his chosen profession, and for many years he has maintained a place of acknowledged leadership as a member of the bar of Eastern Kentucky. His practice, which has been of representative order, has involved his appearance in connection with many civil and criminal cases of major importance, and he has extended his practice into the Supreme Court of Kentucky and the Federal courts of the state. The building in which he maintains his law offices, at the corner of Main and High streets in Barbourville, is a two-story brick block that is owned by him, and in his extensive practice he is now the senior member of the firm of Black, Black & Owens, in which his associates are his only son, Pitzer D. Black, and his son-in-law, H. H. Owens.

Mr. Black has long been a leader in the councils and campaign activties of the democratic party in Southeastern Kentucky, and in 1875, shortly after he had attained to an age that made him eligible for such office, he was elected representative of Knox and Whitley counties in the lower house of the Kentucky Legislature, in which he gave effective service during the session of the Centennial year, 1876, and proved himself a resourceful working member of the House and of the various committees to which he was assigned. In 1884-5 he served as commissioner of the common schools of Knox County, and his versatility has been shown not only in his work as a public official and able lawyer, but also in his vital loyalty and liberality as a citizen. In 1911-12 he officiated as president of Union College, and during the latter year he was first assistant attorney general of Kentucky. He became, in 1915, the democratic candidate for lieutenant governor of Kentucky, to which office he was duly elected and in which he served until 1919. As lieutenant governor he presided over three full sessions of the State Senate and during one impeachment trial before that body. In May, 1919, by virtue of existing conditions, he became governor of the state, and in this high office he continued his executive service, with characteristic high sense of stewardship and with marked discrimination and circumspection, until the inauguration of Governor Morrow, in December, 1919, when he resigned the reins of government to the present chief executive of the state. During his brief regime as governor he punctiliously directed all routine affairs of the office and looked at all times to the safeguarding of the interests of the state and its people, in which connection it is to be noted that, though there were many opportunities, he consented to pardon but very few criminals, his judgment as a lawyer of profound learning and long experience and his fine sense of justice causing him to avoid the executive clemency that the merits of cases presented to him did not fully authorize. Upon retiring from the office of governor he served during 1920 as chief prohibition inspector of Kentucky. Since that time he has given his attention to his law business, and he finds constant demands for his interposition in advisor capacity and as counsel in connection with important interests and law cases. Among his real-estate holdings are his fine home property, at the corner of Main and High streets in the city of Barbourville, and 2,000 acres of coal land and other mineral land, in Whitley, Bell and Knox counties. The year 1921 marks the third consecutive year of Mr. Black's service as president of the National Bank of John A. Black, which had its inception in a private bank established many years ago by his brother, John A., its incorporation as a national bank, under the present title, having occurred April 18, 1914. Judge W. R. Marsee and J. S. Miller are vice presidents of the institution, and W. R. Lay is its cashier. The bank has a capital stock of $30,000; its surplus fund and undivided profits aggregate $50,000, and its deposits are fully $850,000. Mr. Black is a director of the Barbourville Cemetery Company. He has been a close and appreciative student of the history and teachings of the Masonic fraternity and is one of its prominent and honored representatives in his native state. His ancient-craft affiliation is with Mountain Lodge, No. 187, Free & Accepted Masons, at Barbourville, and he has served seven different times as master of this lodge, besides which he had the distinction of serving in 1889 as grand master of the Kentucky Grand Lodge of Free & Accepted Masons. His capitular membership is in Barbourville Chapter, No. 137, Royal Arch Masons, of which he has twice served as high priest. At London, Laurel County, he is affiliated with the council of Royal & Select Masters, and his York Rite circle is completed by his affiliation with Ryan Commandery, No. 17, Knights Templars, at Danville. In the City of Louisville he holds membership in Kosair Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He and his wife are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Black was Lieutenant-Governor of Kentucky at the time when the United States became involved actively in the World war, and with characteristic loyalty he gave his aid in the forwarding and supporting of the various war activities in his native state, in which connection he made many patriotic speeches in Knox County and other counties of eastern Kentucky. He wielded much influence in furthering the campaigns in support of the government war-bond issues, savings stamps, Red Cross work, etc., and made his personal subscriptions touch hard upon the limit of his available resources.

In December, 1875, at Barbourville, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Black to Miss Mary Janette Pitzer, daughter of the late T. J. and Mary (Glass) Pitzer, who were residents of Barbourville at the time of their death, Mr. Pitzer having come to Kentucky from his native state of Virginia and having for many years been a leading merchant at Barbourville. Pitzer D., eldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Black, was born in the year 1881, was graduated in Centre College, at Danville, Kentucky, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and thereafter he attended the law department of the University of Virginia. Since his admission to the bar he has been actively associated with his father in the practice of law at Barbourville. Miss Gertrude D. Black remains at the parental home and is a graduate of the Woman's College at Danville, Kentucky, from which she received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Georgia is the wife of H. H. Owens, the third member of the representative law firm of Black, Black & Owens. Mrs. Owens likewise received from the Woman's College at Danville the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The family is one of prominence in the representative social life of Barbourville and Knox County, and the former governor has commanding place in the esteem of the people of not only his native county, but also of the state in general, for his ability and achievement mark him as one of Kentucky's distinguished citizens.

John F. Lynch. In the years that immediately preceded the Civil war and in the late '40s of the last century immigrants from the Emerald Isle came in large numbers to this country, owing largely to the unsatisfactory economic conditions prevailing at that time in Ireland. The Lynch family, of whom John F. Lynch is a descendant, was among the early settlers in Chilesburg, Kentucky.

John F. Lynch, now engaged in farming and in the management of a general merchandise store and in the handling of grain, coal, seeds, etc., at Chilesburg, lying six miles east of Lexington, was born near Chilesburg, a son of Patrick and Bridget (Walsh) Lynch, natives of Ireland, who came to this country when they were children and later married in Kentucky. Some time after the Civil war Patrick Lynch took up farming near Chilesburg, and continued along that line up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1904. His widow died in the following year. These worthy people were the parents of four sons and two daughters: Mrs. Thomas B. Adams, living at Brighton; Thomas, a farmer near Chilesburg; William, deputy county assessor, living at Lexington; John F., subject of this sketch; James, living with his sister at Brighton; and Anna, who died in March, 1910.

John F. Lynch, who is now one of the prominent merchants of Chilesburg, received his early education in the district schools of his native place and later assisted his father in the operations of the home farm. Since 1896 he has been extensively engaged in farming on his own account. Up to the time of the death of the late John W. Christian, in 1903, Mr. Lynch and Mr. Christian carried on a general merchandise company, also being engaged in the sales of grain, coal, seeds and other commodities, this business from the very beginning having met with a large measure of success. The members of the Christian family still have an interest in the business in which their father was a partner, and the entire undertaking is now under the personal direction of Mr. Lynch.

Apart from his commercial interests in the store Mr. Lynch is the owner of 600 acres of prime land, on which he carries on general farming, and in this line he is regarded as one of the most successful farmers in this part of the state. He is a director of the Phenix and Third National Banks at Lexington, to the affairs of which he gives close attention. He is an earnest member of the Catholic Church, to the good works of which he gives practical support. In fraternal affiliation he holds membership with the Elks. Mr. Lynch has never been a seeker after political office, but gives a good citizen's attention to civic affairs and takes a warm interest in all projects designed to advance the welfare of the community in which he has spent almost his entire life.

George Clifton Leachman, M. D., has responded to the routine duty of a capable physician and surgeon at Louisville for over twenty years. This has been important service in itself, but other attainments rank him as more than an ordinary member of his profession. He has done his share in the educational department of medicine and surgery, has helped advance the prestige of local hospitals and was an army surgeon during the World war, while two of his sons were in the navy.

Doctor Leachman is the son of a physician and was born at Louisville, September 23, 1877, son of William Thomas and Lettia (Field) Leachman. His father, who was born at Danville, Kentucky, in 1834, was primarily educated in Washington County and in 1857 graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Louisville. From that time until a few years of his death, which occurred in May, 1906, he had an extensive general practice and for years was considered one of the ablest physicians of Louisville. He was a member of the Jefferson County and Kentucky State Medical associations, and for several years was a trustee of the Louisville city schools. His wife was born at Louisville in 1844 and died in 1900. They had nine children: Silas F., of Chicago; W. T., of Cincinnati; Edward, deceased; Theodore, of Louisville; Bessie, who married John Rosenbaum and died at the age of twenty-seven; Harry M., who died in 1919; Lettia, wife of Richard F. Watts, of Louisville; Roman, of Louisville; and George Clifton.

George Clifton Leachman has lived practically all his life in Louisville, where he was educated in the grammar schools and the Male High School. He was only nineteen when he graduated in June, 1896, from the Kentucky School of Medicine, and from the date of his graduation until 1898 remained with the college as demonstrator of anatomy. Since 1898 he has had a practically uninterrupted program of professional work at Louisville. He was assistant professor of surgery and clinical surgeon at the University of Louisville. He has been visiting surgeon at the Louisville City Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital for a period of twelve years. He is a member of the Jefferson County, State Medical and American Medical associations, the Mississippi Valley Medical Association, and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, indicating his special attainments in surgery. Doctor Leachman was one of the first members of the Medical Advisory Board of the United States Army. Later he resigned to take active duty with the Medical Corps and was in service from September 13, 1918, until December 15, 1919. He is a member of the United States Military Surgeons. In politics Doctor Leachman gives his approval to candidates and policies according to his independent judgment.

October 2, 1895, he married Margarita Antoinette Denunzio, a native of Louisville. Doctor and Mrs. Leachman, whose home is at 1127 Fourth Avenue in Louisville, are the proud parents of a family of ten children, named: Salvador J., William T., George Clifton, Jr., Bernard D., Louis F., Mary M., Margaret L., Helen L., Silas F. and Angeline N.

The oldest son, Salvador J., was a member of Company A of the First Kentucky Infantry during the Mexican border difficulties, and saw service on the border for ten months. He was mustered out of the Federal service about two months before America declared war against Germany, and he at once re-enlisted, joining the navy and became a fireman on the transport America. He was on this vessel when it took its first cargo of American troops to Brest. Altogether he made eleven trips in transport work across the Atlantic, and was in service until mustered out in March, 1919. He now lives at Nutallburg, West Virginia. His wife was Clara O'Connell.

The second son, William T. Leachman, enlisted a month after war was declared with Germany and became an apprentice seaman assigned to the battleship Arkansas. He was with this ship in the North Sea for six months and was present at the surrender of the German fleet. After twenty-seven months he received his honorable discharge and is now living at Louisville. He married Catherine Gruesling. The third son, George C., Jr., was a member of the Reserve Officers Training Camp while a student in the Male High School of Louisville.

George L. Danforth. The first wholesale dry goods house was established at Louisville nearly a century ago by Joseph Danforth. From that time to the present the family name has been signficant of the larger commercial enterprise of the city, and also of that liberal public spirit which has been responsible for some of the community's best institutions and standards of civic progress.

The Danforths came to America nearly two centuries before the first of the family reached Kentucky. Nicholas Danforth settled in the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1634, coming to America to seek religious freedom. He was one of the founders of Newtown, later Cambridge, and was also identified with the early history of Harvard College. His son Thomas was deputy governor of Massachusetts and later president of the Province of Maine. His son Samuel was a clergyman distinguished in Massachusetts church history.

From Massachusetts various branches of the family spread into adjoining sections of New England. One of the Revolutionary soldiers at the battle of Bunker Hill was Joseph Danforth, Sr., who married Elizabeth Barker and lived at Londonderry, Rockingham County, New Hampshire, when his son Joseph was born January 21, 1792.

This Joseph Danforth was reared and educated in New Hampshire, at the age of eighteen began his apprenticeship as a mechant at Boston, and for several years was an importing merchant in that city. In 1815 he married Lucy Shaw Lewis, a lineal descendant of Mary Chilton, the first woman to step from the Mayflower to Plymouth Rock in 1620. In search of a location to build up a business in the far west Joseph Danforth visited Kentucky at a time when Louisville had less than 4,000 population. He came to the city in 1818 and later established himself in business as a general commission merchant and in 1823 founded the first wholesale dry goods house. He was associated with his brother, James B., in the business known as J. B. Danforth and Company, later known as Danforth, Lewis & Company, and finally as J. Danforth & Son. Joseph Danforth died at Louisville, November 26, 1885. His wife passed way August 10, 1859.

One of their four children was Joseph L. Danforth, who was born at Louisville, January 21, 1821, and died October 29, 1887, only two years after the death of his father. Cultured New England parents gave him every advantage and facility for acquiring a liberal education, and at the age of fourteen he entered Harvard College, remaining until he graduated in 1839. He secured his training in business at Philadelphia under his uncle, James B. Danforth, then head of the firm Danforth, Lewis & Company, and two years later went to New Orleans, were he was associated with his maternal uncle, George A. Lewis. He returned to Louisville in 1844 and became a member of the firm Danforth, Lewis & Company, and later junior partner of J. Danforth & Son. He was a merchant until 1853, when he became secretary of the Falls City Insurance Company, thereby transferring the business associations of the family name to the field of fire insurance, with which it has been prominently related ever since. Joseph L. Danforth was elected president of the Louisville Board of Underwriters in 1861. He was largely instrumental in securing better fire protection for Louisville after the destructive fire of 1856. His name was associated with several important and philanthropic enterprises of the city during his time. In 1866 he was elected president of the Board of Education, and was largely instrumental in introducing manual training into the high school in 1870. He was one of the founders of the Home for Aged Women, and on his advice this institution was merged into the Cook Benevolent Institution, and he was one of its trustees. He was one of the organizers of the Home of the Friendless, established in 1869. From 1854 until his death he was a prominent member of the Church of the Messiah, Unitarian, and in politics was a democrat.

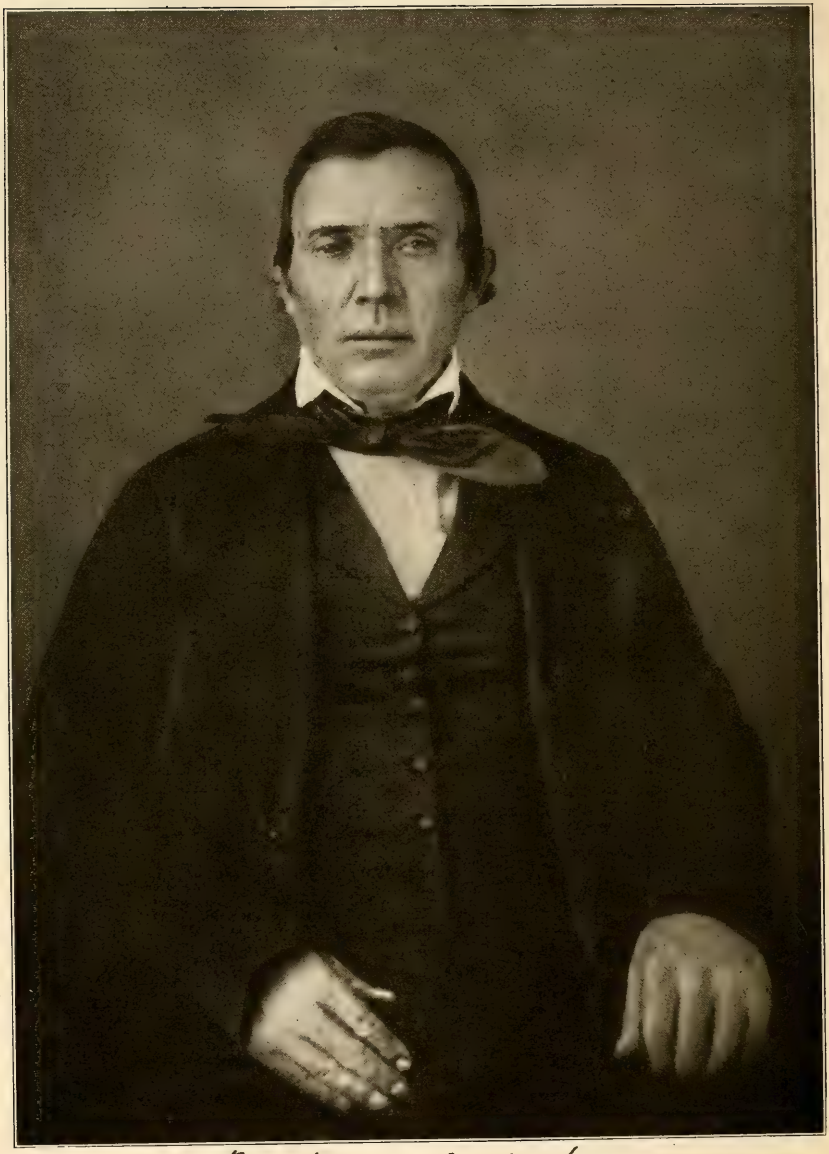
May 12, 1845, Joseph L. Danforth married Miss Frances A. E. Ward, of Boston. Her great-grandfather was Gen. Artemus Ward, who was a president of the Massachusetts Bay Colony and was one of the first major generals appointed by the Continental Congress during the Revolution. He was a member of Congress from Massachusetts from 1791 until 1795. Mrs. Joseph L. Danforth died November 19, 1898, at the age of seventy-six. She was the mother of five children: Florence Ward, who was married to H. Victor Newcomb; Josephine Lewis; Antoinette, wife of Charles Freeman Smith; George Lewis; and Sallie Ward, who married Charles Thurston Johnson.

George Lewis Danforth, only son of Joseph L. Danforth, was born at Louisville, July 24, 1854, and for many years has been prominent in insurance circles, succeeding to the business established by his father as J. L. Danforth & Company. He entered that business after completing his education in the public schools of Louisville. Like his father, he is a past president of the Louisville Board of Fire Underwriters. From 1877 to 1844 he was vice president and general manager of the New Albany Rail Mill Company. He was one of the promoters of the Louisville Southern Railway. In his public relations he has been prompted by the same broadly constructive spirit of his father and grandfather, and has readily enlisted his time and means in behalf of movements to promote the general welfare of the city and state. He is a democrat, and a member of Christ Episcopal Church.

February 13, 1877, he married Miss Florence Standiford, a native of Louisville. They became the parents of five children: Nannie S., who died at the age of eleven years; Marie Antoinette, George Lewis, Jr., Florence and Standiford.



Elisha David Standiford, father of Mrs. George L. Danforth, was another distinguished citizen of Louisville. He was born in Jefferson County, December 28, 1831, and died July 26, 1887. His father, Elisha Standiford, was a successful farmer in Jefferson County. His mother, Nancy (Brooks) Standiford, grew up from early childhood in Louisville when it was a frontier settlement. Elisha D. Standiford was educated in public schools, in St. Mary's College near Lebanon, Kentucky, studied medicine, graduating from the Kentucky School of Medicine, and for several years engaged in practice. The profession was not altogether congenial and he soon turned his attention to farming. Possessing a scientific mind, eminently practical in business affairs, he carried on his agricultural operations in a way to justify the assertion made by the Louisville Courier Journal at his death "that he was in the broadest sense the best and most successful farmer in Kentucky." Much that he did gave a new impetus and set a new standard copied and widely followed by Kentucky farmers for a generation or more. As a manufacturer and financier he was interested in the Red River Iron Works and the Louisville Car Wheel Company, serving as president of both these great industries. From 1870 to 1885 he was president of the Farmers and Drovers Bank. In 1873 he was made vice president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, and two years later was chosen president, an office he held until 1879. During his administration the road was not only extended in mileage but its operating efficiency tremendously increased. He was one of the original projectors and was largely instrumental in keeping alive the project of building the Louisville Southern Railway, the construction of which was finally started in 1885. For a number of years he was president of the Louisville Bridge Company.

He was a man of large affairs who enjoyed keenly the great contests of partisan politics, though he was never in politics for his selfish advantage and had no needs of the rewards of political office. For several terms he was a member of the Louisville Board of Education, was elected to the State Senate in 1867 and re-elected in 1871, in 1872 was sent to Congress by the Louisville District, serving one term in the Forty-third Congress, where some of his speeches attracted nation-wide attention. At the time of his death in 1887 he was a candidate for election to the United States Senate. Doctor Standiford was distinguished by many lofty qualities of character and intellect, by his achievements in business, and by his friendships. At his death he left one of the largest estates ever probated by a citizen of Louisville. His first wife and the mother of Mrs. Danforth was Miss Mary E. Neill, who died in 1875, leaving five children.

Merritt Drane. While growing up on a Kentcky farm, Merritt Drane applied himself to the science of surveying and civil engineering, and has been a well-qualified representative of that profession for over thirty years. He has done much of the important work of his profession in and around Louisville and is the present county engineer of Jefferson County.

His birth occurred on his father's farm in Shelby County April 7, 1865. He is a son of Albert and Selinda (Hinton) Drane, both natives of Shelby County, where the father was born in 1841 and the mother in 1842. Albert Drane was reared and educated in Shelby County and spent his active life there as a farmer. He made a specialty for some years of the breeding of Cotswold sheep. He voted independently and was a member of the Baptist Church. Both he and his wife died at the age of sixty-five. Of their five children four are living, Merritt being the second in age. Merritt Drane's maternal ancestors came to America in Colonial times and settled in Maryland. There were seven brothers who established the family in that state. Mr. Drane's great-grandfather, Evan Hinton, was an early settler in Shelby County, and his homestead, patented to him by the United States Government, has never passed out of the Hinton family.

Merritt Drane acquired his education in public schools and at old Eminence College, where he showed his proficiency in mathematics and kindred branches. He qualified for work as a civil engineer at the age of twenty, and for three years was employed by the South Pittsburg City Company in Tennessee. From there he came to Louisville, and for nineteen years was a civil engineer in the employ of the Kentucky

Rankin Roberts

Title Company. He was then elected and served in 1908-09 as county surveyor of Jefferson County. Following this he practiced as a civil engineer on his own account for a number of years, and in November, 1917, was elected county engineer, the duties of which office still engage him. He is a member of the Louisville Engineers and Architects Club and the American Society of Civil Engineers. He also belongs to the Louisville Board of Trade, is a member of Louisville Lodge No. 400, F. and A. M., King Solomon Chapter, R. A. M., Louisville Commandery No. 1, K. T., Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Louisville Lodge No. 8 of the Elks.

June 17, 1909, he married Clara Lindeman, a native of Cincinnati. They have one daughter, Laura Selinda.

Ezra Offutt Witherspoon, M. D. Numerous distinctions have attended the professional career of Doctor Witherspoon, one of the very earnest and capable physicians and surgeons of Louisville. Doctor Witherspoon has been a leader in various forms of public health work. He represents the third generation of a family that has been identified with the medical profession of Kentucky for well upwards of a century.

His grandfather was Dr. John Witherspoon, who was one of the early day physicians at Lawrenceburg in Anderson County. He was not only a good doctor but a good business man, and was one of the founders of the J. & J. A. Witherspoon Bank, later known as the Anderson County Deposit Bank and finally the Anderson National Bank. He was also associated with others in a pioneer transportation enterprise, both freight and stage, between Louisville and Frankfort.

The second generation of this family was represented by Dr. Oran Hawes Witherspoon, who was born at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, June 14, 1842, and was a resident of that community practically all his life. He died January 5, 1901. He acquired a liberal education, attending the common schools, the Kentucky Military Institute, and graduated from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia in 1865, and in the same year received a diploma from Bellevue Medical College of New York. He took up his professional work at first in association with his father, whom he succeeded in practice at Lawrenceburg, and was a leader in his profession in Anderson County for over forty years. He was honored with the office of president of the Anderson County Medical Society, was health officer for Anderson County one term and also physician to the City of Lawrenceburg. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics a democrat. Dr. Oran H. Witherspoon married Mary Edmonia Offutt, who was born in Scott County, Kentucky, February 4, 1845, and is still living.

Ezra Offutt Witherspoon, only child of his parents, was born at Lawrenceburg October 3, 1878, and entered his profession equipped with a liberal education and training and the honorable traditions set by his father and grandfather. He attended public school at Lawrenceburg, completed his literary education in Georgetown College, Kentucky, and in 1901 graduated from the Hospital Medical College of Louisville. Besides the opportunities presented by his practicing experience Doctor Witherspoon has a number of times attended courses and clinics in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. For seven years he was connected with the faculty of the Hospital Medical College, beginning as assistant in chemistry, was for two years professor of inorganic chemistry, and for six years professor of proctology. For a year he was an interne in the Gray Street Infirmary and in November, 1909, was appointed assistant health officer of Louisville, an office he filled for eight years. He is a former president of the Alumni Association of Hospital Medical College.

While for several years he has been busy with an extensive private practice, Doctor Witherspoon continues an interest in public health work. He has been a member of the staff of the City Hospital and the Home for the Incurables. He is a member of the Society of Physicians and Surgeons, the Jefferson County Medical Society, Kentucky State Medical Society and American Medical Association. He has served as state medical director for the Modern Woodmen of America.

Doctor Witherspoon is a member of the Phi Chi fraternity, Falls City Lodge No. 376, F. and A. M., King Solomon Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., Louisville Commandery No. 1, K. T., and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a democrat and a member of the Pendennis Club. October 14, 1908, he married Nell E. Newman, a native of Bardstown, Kentucky, and oldest child and only daughter of the eight children of William H. and Minnie (Elliott) Newman.

Charles D. Rodman. In life insurance circles at Louisville, Charles D. Rodman holds a prominent and responsible position as the result of over a quarter of a century's work and experience. He is general agent at Louisville for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee. His agency in production ranks well up with the largest of the company.

He was born in Curdsville in Daviess County March 14, 1875, son of Thomas V. and Minerva Jane (Smith) Rodman, the former a native of St. Joseph, Kentucky, and the latter of Virginia, who as an orphan at the age of twelve with her two brothers and one sister came in a road wagon to an aunt's in Henderson County, Kentucky. The father, who died in 1879, was educated in St. Mary's College, Kentucky, was a Catholic all his life and for many years an active merchant at Curdsville. He also served several years as sheriff of Daviess County. The mother, who died in 1912, is survived by one sister, Mrs. Ann Lett, of Henderson.

Charles D. Rodman was also educated in St. Mary's College. Before entering and after leaving college he did various kinds of work. His first money, 10 cents a day, was earned in a tobacco factory. Later he worked on a farm, in a brick yard, at a sawmill, sawed and rafted logs, but at the age of twenty-one came to Louisville, collected doctors' bills, sold a book written by negroes to negroes, and sold his first life insurance for the Western and Southern Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, an industrial or weekly payment plan company. He was with that company about eight months and then joined the rank of agents of the Northwestern Mutual Life at Louisville, in which company's service he has been continuously. In 1904 the company assigned him the important responsibility of establishing its first office in the then Territory of Arizona. He located at Phoenix as general agent, and remained there until 1906, when, in accordance with his uncle's wishes and the endorsement of the company, he cancelled his Arizona contract and returned to Louisville and formed a partnership with his uncle, Dr. H. D. Rodman, which continued to May 31, 1916, at which date Doctor Rodman retired and Mr. Rodman accepted his present responsibilities as general agent. He has probably been a general agent a greater number of years than any man of his age with the company.

He is an active member and a past president of the Louisville Association of Life Underwriters. He organized the Life Insurance Men of Louisville to sell Liberty Bonds during the World war. He organized and was the first president of the Exchange Club, a weekly luncheon civic organization. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, is a Catholic, and in politics is a democrat. His wife was Alice M. Joyce, a native of Ludington, Michigan. They have one son, William Joyce Rodman.

William R. Roberts, whose fine homestead farm is situated in Jessamine County, near the Fayette County line and 6½ miles south of the City of Lexington, is a popular representative of one of the old and well known families of this favored section of the Blue Grass state. This ancestral homestead, on the Nicholasville Turnpike, was formerly owned by Rankin Roberts, Sr., grandfather of him whose name initiates this paragraph. The grandfather here owned a landed estate of 700 acres, and here he erected the substantial brick house which is still in use and in an excellent state of preservation. The building was completed about the year 1840, the brick utilized in its erection having been manufactured on the farm itself, and from the place having been taken the timber utilized in all exterior and interior woodwork of the building.

Rankin Roberts, Sr., was born near Brannon Station in Jessamine County, on the 26th of June, 1799, a date that indicates conclusively that he was a member of one of the early pioneer families of this locality. He was a son of Thomas and Sarah Roberts, the former of whom was born in Virginia, in 1755, and the latter of whom was born in North Carolina. The death of Thomas Roberts occurred March 26, 1830, and that of his wife on the 29th of November, 1834. Thomas Roberts reclaimed and developed one of the best of the pioneer farms in this section of the state and did well his part in the furtherance of the social and material progress and prosperity of the community. His name merits high place on the roll of the honored pioneers of Central Kentucky. Of his children the eldest was Joseph, who was born March 4, 1776, and the second son was Rankin, Sr., who, on the 17th of October, 1828, married Miss Nancy Jones. Within a short time thereafter Rankin Roberts and his wife established their residence on the old homestead now owned by the subject of this sketch, and here they occupied the present house from the time of its erection until their deaths, Mr. Roberts having passed away July 24, 1877, and his widow having survived until April, 1885. Their daughter Susan became the wife of Peter Foree, of Henry County, and was forty-five years of age at the time of her death, Mary, Emma, Belle and Florida all died in young womanhood, victims of consumption, and none of them had married. James A., who was born October 8, 1841, died on the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth. John, another brother, was familiarly known as Jack Roberts, and was a buoyant and genial personality, a man of sporting proclivities, and he died in 1848, in his sixty-third year. Rankin died at the age of seventy years, he having owned a part of the ancestral landed estate. His son Handley is engaged in the wholesale hardware business in the City of Chicago.

James A. Roberts was united in marriage, in November, 1875, to Miss Rosa B. Oldhan, daughter of Hiram D. Oldhan, of Madison County, and she passed to eternal rest on the 12th of January, 1919. James A. Roberts became the owner of a valuable farm comprising about 350 acres, and has gained marked success as a vigorous exponent of agricultural and livestock enterprise, with special attention given to the raising of cattle and swine and the breeding of fine Kentucky trotting horses. He has raised such standard bred horses for fully twenty years, and has sold the major number of the horses when they were colts. He is a member of the Providence Christian Church, as was also his wife. His father, Rankin Roberts, Sr., was well advanced in years when he likewise became a member of this church, and that he did not readily lose some of the proclivities of his more unregenerate days is indicated by the following amusing incident. On one occasion the clergyman and a number of the church brethren called at the Roberts home to pass an hour or two. When the clergyman finally suggested a brief session of prayer Mr. Roberts replied: "I think that would be a d——d good idea."

James A. and Rosa B. Roberts became the parents of three children who attained to years of maturity, William Rankin, of this review, being the eldest of the number and the only son. The two daughters, Nancy Belle and Florida Mason, have been twice married but have no children, and they now reside with their brother on the old home farm. William R. Roberts has been twice married. His second wife was Margaret Duncan. Their one son, James Oldhan, aged nine years (1920), and the three children of Handley Roberts, of Chicago, are thus the only children representing the Roberts family in that generation. Handley Roberts' children are two sons and one daughter.

William R. Roberts and his two sisters are associated in the ownership of the old homestead, and he has specialized in the raising of standard bred horses, which he has sold as colts. He is a republican in politics, as is also his cousin Handley, of Chicago, but his father and grandfather both gave allegiance to the democratic party.

James Harvey Hester, M. D. While he began his career as a general physician and surgeon, after several years Doctor Hester availed himself of opportunity to perfect his skill in handling affections of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and since he located at Louisville his practice has been entirely confined to that specialty, and he is one of the leading authorities in this branch of medicine and surgery in Kentucky.

Doctor Hester was born at Greenville, Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, May 24, 1879, son of Thomas S. and Naicissur (Creal) Hester. His mother was born in Green County, Kentucky, in 1860, and his father in Hart County in 1852. They have seven children, and the family circle has not yet been broken by death. Doctor Hester is the oldest child. His father was reared and educated in Hart County, and after farming for a time became a merchant at Blanco and since 1912 has lived retired. He is a republican and a member of the Christian Church.

Doctor Hester attended public school in Hart County, Kentucky, graduated in 1897 from the high school of Millerstown, and being without means to satisfy immediately his ambitions for a medical career he turned to teaching, a vocation he followed four years, and from 1901 to 1904 was in the mercantile business at Roseburg.

Doctor Hester then entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, graduating with the class of 1907. For four years he engaged in general practice at Munfordville, but in 1911 abandoned his practice and for about two years devoted all his time to special instruction and experience. He attended the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital of New York City, also the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College and Chicago Post-Graduate School of Medicine. He was appointed and served one year as house surgeon of the Illinois Eye and Ear Infirmary. It was with this training and unusual equipment that Doctor Hester returned to his native state and located at Louisville to take up his special work, including diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He is a member of the Louisville Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Society, and also of the Jefferson County, Kentucky State, Southern and American Medical Associations. Doctor Hester is an outdoor man, and when his professional duties permit enjoys the sports of tennis, fishing and swimming. He is affiliated with Willis Stewart Lodge No. 224, F. and A. M., also with the Scottish Rite and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and a republican. November 14, 1915, Doctor Hester married Mary E. Yeatts, a native of Virginia. They have two children, May and Raymond H.

Henry Hamilton Lewis is vice president of the Lewis Implement & Seed Company of Louisville. While the present corporate form is comparatively new, the business is one of the oldest of its kind in Kentucky, and is one with which the Lewis name has been identified for half a century.

Mr. Lewis, who was born at Louisville September 26, 1870, is the only child of Frederick Nantz and Margaret Frances (Hall) Lewis. The ancestry of this branch of the Lewis family is traced back to Colonel Robert Lewis, a distinguished Welshman who is said to have held the last castle in Wales against the English Government. He had two sons, Robert and Fielding, and Fielding immigrated to America and was a soldier on Washington's staff in the war for Colonial independence. Fielding Lewis married General Washington's only sister, Bettie Washington, and both of these distinguished personages belong in the ancestral line of the Lewis family of Louisville. The history of the Lewis family in Great Britain can be traced back in unbroken line to the time of Alfred the Great.

The grandparents of Henry Hamilton Lewis were John Buford and Marion (Nantz) Lewis, both of whom were born in Washington County, Kentucky. They had three children, two sons and one daughter, the oldest being Frederick N. John B. Lewis for a number of years had some extensive interests in the silver mines of Colorado.

Frederick Nantz Lewis was born at Springfield, Washington County, Kentucky, February 22, 1846. His wife was born in Bullitt County, Kentucky, March 29, 1848, and died January 29, 1913. He received a public school education and in 1863 was appointed deputy clerk of the Circuit Court of Marion County and later deputy county clerk of Washington County. He removed to Louisville in 1865 and was an employe of Bondurant, Todd & Company in the implement and seed business until 1871. In that year he and O. S. Gage bought the Todd interests, making the firm Bondurant, Lewis & Gage, while in the fall of the same year Mr. Bondurant sold out, leaving the firm as Lewis, Gage & Company. Subsequently Mr. Lewis and H. D. Hanford bought the Gage interests, and after the death of Mr. Hanford in 1891 the firm was Lewis & Chambers. The Chambers interests were acquired in July, 1918, and at that time the Lewis Implement & Seed Company was incorporated. Frederick N. Lewis, though seventy-five years of age, is still active in the business as president, but a part of the management devolves upon his son, the vice president. The father is an active member of the Baptist Church, is an independent democrat and a member of the Pendennis Club of Louisville.

Henry Hamilton Lewis was born about the time his father became a partner in the business, and during his youth and early manhood he was given every opportunity to acquire culture and an education fitting him for the responsibilities of a business career. He attended school at Louisville, both public and private, and prepared for college in Phillips Andover Academy at Andover, Massachusetts, and from there entered Harvard University with the class of 1894. He left university before graduating, and for two years traveled in Europe. On his return to Louisville he became associated with Lewis & Chambers, and when the business was incorporated under the present title he became vice president.

Mr. Lewis is a member of the Presbyterian Church, the Pendennis Club, the Louisville Country Club, and is an independent democrat. He has not scattered his associations either in business or socially, nevertheless he is one of the best known citizens of Louisville. October 24, 1900, he married Miss Helen Lapham Rockwell, daughter of Charles Le Roy and Helen (Lapham) Rockwell. Her parents were both born in New York State and are now deceased. Her grandfather, Jerome Lapham, was one of the pioneer lumbermen of Northern New York and interested in the pulp and paper business at Glen Falls, New York. Later he was president of the Glen Falls Fire Insurance Company at Glen Falls. Mrs. Lewis is the second in a family of two daughters and one son, two of whom survive. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are Margaret Lapham and Helen Hamilton.

Roy Read Hargan, cashier of the Farmers National Bank of Hodgenville, represents the third successive generation of the Hargan family in the commercial life of that locality.

He was born at Hodgenville February 10, 1881, a son of Jacob and Eliza (Cates) Hargan, both natives of LaRue County. His great-grandfather, Daniel Hargan, was a native of Virginia and founded the family in LaRue County in pioneer times. Benjamin J. Hargan, grandfather of the Hodgenville banker, was one of the prominent citizens of the county, a merchant at Hodgenville, and also owned extensive tracts of farm lands. Jacob Hargan followed merchandising throughout his active career, was a member of the Christian Church and voted as a democrat. His wife, Eliza Cates, was a daughter of John B. Cates, of Virginia ancestry, and who moved to LaRue County from Hart County. Mrs. Eliza Cates Hargan is living at Hodgenville at the age of sixty-two and is a member of the Baptist Church.

Roy Read Hargan is one of two children, a sister being deceased. He was reared and educated in Hodgenville and as a youth took up merchandising with his father. In 1907 he became identified with the LaRue County Deposit Bank, and has been with that institution ever since, the Deposit Bank being succeeded by the Farmers National Bank. Mr. Hargan has been cashier since 1914. He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church and a Knight Templar Mason.

In 1902 he married Miss Terry O'Brian, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Washington O'Brian. They have three children: Virginia, Lynda and Frances.

Henry Irvin Fox. An attorney whose attainments have advanced him to a high position in the Louisville bar, Henry Irvin Fox was reared and educated in that city and has been employing his time and talents diligently within the strict lines of the law for the past fourteen years.

He was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, May 19, 1882, son of Henry and Matilda (Katzman) Fox, also native Kentuckians. Henry Fox supports the republican ticket in politics. He is the father of two sons, Arthur, who married Eva Dixon, and Henry I.

Henry I. Fox attended the public schools of Louisville and was graduated from the law department of the University of Louisville in 1907. He was admitted to the bar the same year and has been engaged in general practice, his offices being in the Louisville Trust Building. He is a member of the Louisville, Jefferson County and Kentucky State Bar Associations. Fraternally he is affiliated with Abraham Lodge No. 8, F. and A. M., King Solomon Chapter, R. A. M., DeMolay Commandery No. 2, K. T., Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Louisville Lodge No. 8 of the Elks. Mr. Fox is a republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

October 21, 1911, he married Genevieve Stroud, a native of Canada. They have two daughters, Mary Elizabeth and Sarah Katherine.

Benjamin B. and Thomas C. Goodwin are popular bachelor brothers whose fraternal association has continued specially close, as they maintain partnership relations in the ownership and management of the fine old homestead farm on which their honored father continued his residence until his death, this excellent rural estate being situated seven miles east of the City of Lexington and near the Village of Chilesburg, which is the postoffice address of the brothers. They have continued to maintain the prestige of the place as one of the well-ordered and productive farms of Fayette County and are known as loyal and progressive citizens.

Benjamin B. Goodwin was born August 4, 1872, and Thomas Coleman Goodwin was born November 7, 1876, and from the time of their births they have maintained their home in Fayette County. They are sons of Thomas Coleman and Mary E. (Bryant) Goodwin. Thomas C. Goodwin was born in Fayette County, on a farm about one mile distant from the present home of his sons to whom this sketch is dedicated, and the date of his nativity was January 1, 1844. He was a son of Joseph Graves and Lucy (Graves) Goodwin and a grandson of Graves and Frances (Graves) Goodwin, whose two sons were Joseph and Benjamin. The names of the Goodwin and Graves families have been prominently and influentially linked with the history of Fayette County since the early days. Thomas C. Goodwin was reared on the old farmstead which was the place of his birth, and his entire life was marked by close and effective association with farm enterprise. In 1869 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Bryant, who was born and reared in Jessamine County, a daughter of Joel Bryant. Joel Bryant was one of twelve sons, and the old home farm which was long the stage of his activities is now owned by his son Buckner, the place being situated on the Nicholsville Turnpike. It was on this farm that Mrs. Mary E. (Bryant) Goodwin was born. In 1870 Thomas C. Goodwin and his brother Joseph G. received a valuable farm estate as an inheritance from their father, and in 1879 the brothers made an equitable division of the property. Thomas C. thus became the owner of 200 acres, and his brother purchased a farm four miles east of Lexington, where he passed the remainder of his life, his son Benjamin H. still remaining on this farm. From 1879 until the close of his life Thomas C. Goodwin gave his personal supervision to his well-improved farm estate, upon which he erected the present main part of the substantial house that adorns the place and is occupied by his sons Benjamin B. and Thomas C., Jr., of this sketch. Mr. Goodwin was a successful stock-raiser and gave special attention to the feeding of cattle. His interests were ever centered in his home, his church and his business, and he so ordered his life as to merit and retain the unqualified confidence and good-will of his fellow men. With no desire for political activity, he gave loyal support to the principles of the democratic party, and he served many years as deacon and elder in the Macedonia Christian Church, of which his wife likewise was a devout member. He was seventy years of age at the time of his death, June 27, 1914, and his wife passed away at the age of thirty-six years, on the 17th of July, 1887.

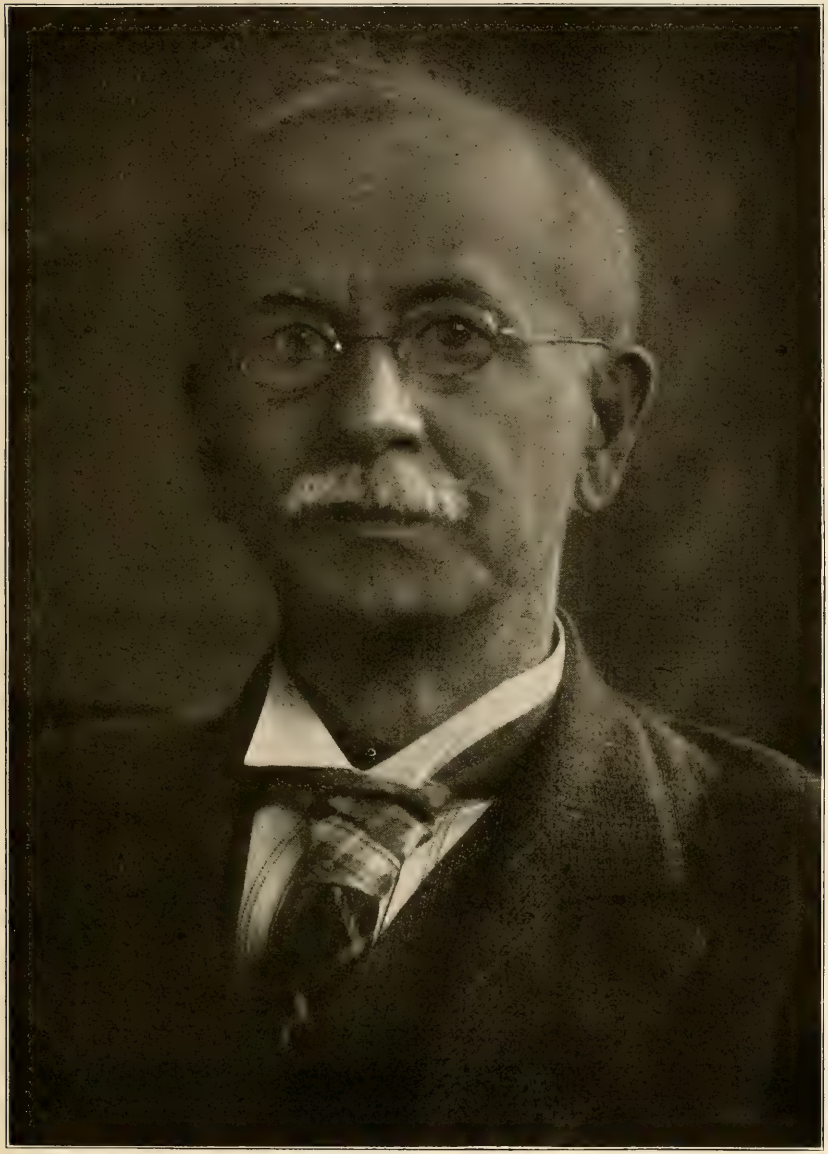
The Graves and Goodwin families have been closely linked by marriage in various generations. Frances Graves became the wife of Graves Goodwin, and she was one of a family of six daughters, whose brothers were Joseph and Benjamin, mentioned in a preceding paragraph. Eliza T., another of the sisters, became the wife of Robert J. Key; Kittie married Doctor Chinn, the grandfather of Asa Chinn, a well-known resident of Lexington at the present time; Adeline became the wife of a Mr. Cartright; Polly married Lloyd Goodwin; Ellen became the wife of Rev. Buford Allen, a clergyman of the Baptist Church; Lizzie married Samuel Coleman, and one of their children was the late Dr. Benjamin Coleman.

Thomas C. and Mary E. (Bryant) Goodwin became the parents of four children: Benjamin, B.; Mattie Graves, wife of William D. Hamilton, who is in the United States internal revenue service at Lexington; Thomas Coleman, Jr.; and Robert Graves. Robert G. Goodwin, the youngest son, likewise is a prosperous farmer in Fayette County. He married Miss Ada Fishback, and they have two children, Robert and Jane Belle.

Benjamin B. and Thomas C. Goodwin have maintained a partnership alliance in the operations of the old home farm since the death of their father, and by purchasing the interest of the other heirs they have come into full ownership of the valuable property. Their energies are directed to diversified agriculture and the raising and feeding of livestock, and in the old home they maintain bachelors' hall, with an excellent housekeeper, the while they are ever ready to extend the hospitality of this attractive home to their many friends. Both were afforded the advantages of the schools of their native county, and they have become progressive and successful representatives of productive farm industry in this favored section of the old Blue Grass State. They are aligned in the ranks of the democratic party and are active members of the Macedonia Christian Church.

William L. Davis is one of Fayette County's farmers who have come up to independence through the avenue of renting and eventually ownership of land. The home farm of Mr. Davis is twelve miles south of Lexington, and it is a place of well-ordered industry and one that has made money for its owner without any of the frills of fancy farming.

Mr. Davis was born in Jessamine County October 14, 1870, son of John P. and Mildred Frances (Spears) Davis. His mother is a sister to Mrs. Leroy Land of Lexington. John P. Davis, a brother of the late Thomas A. Davis, died March 30, 1911, on his home farm near Spears, in his seventy-second year. That old homestead has since been sold. His four children were: William L.; Miranda Elizabeth, wife of Perry H. Bronough, near Nicholasville; Riley Spears, of Fayette County; and Charles J., a farmer near Union Mills in Jessamine County.



William L. Davis grew up on the home farm, graduated from the common schools, and at the age of twenty-three began renting a portion of his father's farm. At that age he married Ella H. Hisle, who was also twenty-three. She was a daughter of LeRoy Hisle, a farmer, stock trader and drover of Estill County, now living retired with Mr. and Mrs. Davis. Mr. Davis continued renting land for twenty years in Fayette County and in that time by his thrift and energy acquired the capital to become a farm owner. In 1917 he bought the old James Viehl farm of 206½ acres. The transaction is one that indicates some of the changes in land values in this section of the state. He paid $130 an acre for the land, but subsequently sold it for $230 an acre. He hardly made the sale before he became dissatisfied with the transaction, and a few months later he bought the farm back at $250 an acre and is its satisfied proprietor today. In the meantime he had owned a neat home and another farm elsewhere. His business is the production of staple crops of corn, wheat and tobacco, and every year he feeds a large bunch of hogs.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis have four children, all at home: William Lee, a partner with his father; Jessamine Mitchell; Sarah Frances; and Preston Perry.

Charles Albert Johns was a Lexington merchant whose business ability and personal character were closely united and brought him abundant esteem and a highly profitable business for many years.

In 1889 he opened his drug store at the corner of Main and Walnut streets, where it has been a landmark and a center of the very best service in that line ever since. He had previously been in business on Broadway. His entire life was devoted to the drug business and to the cultivation of his friends and his civic interests at Lexington.

He was born in Lexington March 19, 1848, and died in that city March 8, 1920. He was educated in public schools and at the age of sixteen went to work in a drug store, and for over half a century his daily work was in the field of drugs. He took an active part in public matters, was liberal in his donations to church and charities, was a member of the Episcopal Church and a democrat.

The late Mr. Johns bought the corner on which his business is still continued by his sons in 1889, at which time he built a three-story building, and later on adjacent land comprising a 67½ foot frontage he erected another three story building. He also bought land in the rear extending to Walnut Street, with 100 feet of frontage on that thoroughfare, and since his death his sons have carried out his plans by erecting a two-story brick and concrete building. These improvements make one of the very valuable properties in Lexington. The corner is opposite the postoffice and also the new Lafayette Hotel. The late Mr. Johns for a number of years took his vacations in company with a select party of friends hunting or fishing in the lakes and woods of Canada. Of that company not one is now left in Lexington. In 1882 Charles Albert Johns married Alice Gilmore, a native of Lexington, where she is still living. She is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. Of her four children Alice is the wife of J. M. Lyle, a farmer at Lexington, and they have two children, Alice Maxwell and James Albert Lyle. The three sons are Andrew, Albert and Gerard, the last being a student in Kentucky University.

The business is now carried on by Andrew and Albert Johns. Both are registered pharmacists while Albert is a graduate in chemistry from the University of Virginia and also attended the Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh and the Louisville College of Pharmacy. Both became associated with their father before his death and they have continued the same atmosphere of good will and desire to serve which has long made the business so popular among Lexington people. Albert Johns is a member of several college fraternities and the Kiwanis Club, while Andrew is an Elk and Mason. The brothers enjoy the same kind of sport as their father, and in vacation times go to the mountains and river sections of Eastern Kentucky and elsewhere. Andrew Johns married Rena Christian, daughter of E. C. Christian and has a son Andrew, Jr. Albert Johns married Mary McKinney, whose father is magistrate of the Seventh Fayette County District.

Luther H. Davis. Eleven miles south of the Court House in Lexington, on Taits Creek Pike, is located the country home and establishment of Luther H. Davis, a citizen of the highest character, a capable farmer and business man, and representing one of the old and leading families of Jessamine County.

Mr. Davis was born in Jessamine County June 23, 1854. His birth occurred within a mile of his present home. His father was Thomas A. Davis, who spent his last years retired at Nicholasville, where he died in 1912, at the age of eighty-two. His children were: Emma J., Alice and Cora, all unmarried and living at Nicholasville; Bettie, wife of J. E. Phelps, a real estate man at Lexington; Susan, who died in Fayette County in 1910, wife of A. C. Downing, who now lives at Lexington; Thomas R., a farmer in Jessamine County; Robert A., a dairyman on Taits Creek Pike; and Luther.

Luther H. Davis grew up at his father's old home and helped in the management of the farm until he was thirty-one. At that date he married Miss Edna Stagg, of Jessamine County, who died a little more than a year later. Until 1892 Mr. Davis did farming as a renter, and in that year bought his present home, the old Martin place of eighty-five acres. The house is one of the oldest in the community. The farm many years ago was owned by a member of the Bibb family, and later by the Baker family. It is said that the Bakers erected the house. There were two brothers, Allen and David Baker. The latter, who died a bachelor when in advanced years, conducted a tannery, harness and saddlery shop, distillery and other enterprises on the farm. When David Baker was quite an old man he once called two young men to him, Thomas A. Davis and Frank Johnson, and requested that they carry a large sum of money he had accumulated in his house to Lexington and deposit it in the bank. The money was in gold and silver, and the saddle bags were so heavy with the coin that they broke, allowing the pieces to roll about in the dirt, though all was eventually recovered. On this old farm Mr. Davis is performing his business duties as a successful farmer and stock man. He is a democrat and has been a member of the Baptist Church since he was sixteen years of age.

In 1890 he married Miss Rosa Turner, of Shelby County, daughter of George and Jennie Prewitt Turner, the former of Shelby County and the latter of Jessamine County. Mr. Davis by his first marriage had one daughter, Lula, wife of F. R. Parks, a commercial salesman at Lexington, and they have one son, F. R., Jr. The children of his second marriage are: Prewitt, who is a farmer on the DeLong Pike in Fayette County and by his marriage to Edna Thompson has a daughter, Elizabeth Rose, and a son, Luther, Jr.; Robert, who lived at home and died at the age of twenty-two; and Virginia, still at home with her parents.

W. N. King, whose home is one of the desirable old country places of Fayette County, seven miles south of Lexington, on the Walnut Hill Pike, the old Robert Todhunter farm, is essentially a business man, and has been a merchant and manufacturer for many years.

He was born near Olive Hill in Carter County, Kentucky, June 17, 1879. His father, J. N. King, who died at his home at Newfoundland, Kentucky, at the age of seventy-three, spent the greater part of his life as a wholesale and retail merchant at Ashland, Kentucky, where the business is still continued by a son. W. N. King was reared and educated at Ashland and for fifteen years was in the general merchandise business at Soldier, Kentucky. For the past ten years he has been extensively engaged in the operation of the limestone quarry and the crushing and grinding of limestone for agricultural and industrial purposes. His organization has three plants in operation, with a capacity of fifty carloads per day. Much of the output is crushed rock for road ballasting purposes, and about five cars of crushed limestone are shipped daily for agricultural use. It is a growing and successful business. Mr. King is also a stockholder in a tobacco warehouse, and at his home place south of Lexington he carries on operations as a general farmer, having 458 acres in his farm.

As the age of twenty-nine Mr. King married Miss Effie W. Kitchen, of Ashland, Kentucky. They have two children, Justine and Billie, Jr. Mrs. King is an active member of the Woman's Club and other societies. Her father, Charles Kitchen, is a lumber manufacturer and wholesaler with the firm of Van Sant, Kitchen & Company, operating mills in North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. He is also president of the Second National Bank of Ashland, Kentucky.

Robert Peter. The services of the late Dr. Robert Peter as an educator and scientist enriched the cultural life of Kentucky, and while he was not a native son he was one of the state's most eminent men.

He was born in Cornwall, England, in 1805, and at the age of twelve was brought by his parents, Robert and Johanna Peter, to Maryland. His parents subsequently removed to Pittsburgh, where his father died. Doctor Peter was educated in Pittsburgh, in 1828 was naturalized as an American citizen, and that year attended the Rensselaer Polyclinic Institute at Troy, New York. During 1829 he gave a course of lectures in natural sciences and during 1830-31 was lecturer on chemistry at the Western University of Pennsylvania. Rev. B. O. Peers had opened an Eclectic school at Lexington, and Doctor Peter accepted an invitation to come to Lexington as a teacher and partner in the enterprise. In 1832 he was appointed assistant in the chair of chemistry at Transylvania University, and in March, 1833, was promoted to professor of chemistry in Morrison College, one of the institutions of Transylvania. He also read medicine, did some valuable work in the cholera epidemic of 1833, and in 1834 was awarded his diploma as a Doctor of Medicine. In 1838 he was elected to the chair of chemistry and pharmacy in the Medical School of Transylvania University, and so continued until that department of the school was closed in 1857. In the meantime, from 1850 to 1853, he was a lecturer at the Louisville Medical College. He was largely instrumental in promoting the first geological survey of the state, preparing the memorial presented by the various agricultural societies to the Legislature in 1853, and advocating such a survey. The work was started in 1854, with Dr. David Dale Owen as chief geologist, and it was continued under his direction until the death of Doctor Owen in 1860. Doctor Peter was connected with the survey as chemical analyst. During the Civil war he was surgeon in charge, with the rank of major, at three Government hospitals. After the war he became professor of chemistry and physics in Kentucky University and A. and M. College. In 1873 he resumed his laboratory work in connection with the geological survey, under Doctor Shaler, and also resumed lectures at the Agricultural College, and at Morrison College the work of that institution was resumed. For a number of years he was professor of materia medica and of physics and chemistry at Transylvania.

Dr. Robert Peter passed away April 26, 1894, at the age of eighty-nine, and had continued his lecture work until he was eighty-seven. Out of his broad and diversified knowledge and investigations he contributed regularly to scientific journals, writing on chemistry, botany, horticulture and agriculture, was at one time assistant editor of the Farmers Home Journal, was editor of Volume 10 of the Transylvania Medical Society's Transactions, and also used his pen frequently to advance every worthy object associated with the welfare of Lexington. He served as a member of the City Council, and was requested to become a candidate for mayor, but was not a seeker of public honors. At an early date he realized and advocated the development of the mineral resources of Kentucky, especially along the Big Sandy. He died before this development was fairly started. In many ways his ideas and opinions were in advance of the time. In educational affairs he advocated special scientific training in preference to the standards of the old classical courses, and lived to see the rigid curricula of higher institutions of learning greatly reformed. However, on the subject of women he was not in accord with modern ideas, and believed that the place of woman was in the home. As a young man he taught in an Episcopal Sunday School, but later became liberal in his views, though always a supporter of churches. He was a member of many philosophical and scientific societies, and while of a social nature he reluctantly participated in formal social affairs.

In 1835 Doctor Peter married Miss Frances Dallam. They lived in Lexington until 1867, their residence being at the corner of Market and Mechanic streets, and they then moved to what is now known as the Peter Farm, seven miles from Lexington on the Newtown Pike. This farm is a part of the old Meredith grant, belonging to the family of Mrs. Robert Peter.

The Meredith grant was assigned to Colonel Samuel Meredith by the State of Virginia for his military services in the French and Indian war. He never occupied it himself, but it was eventually taken possession of by his son, Major Samuel Meredith. Colonel Samuel became colonel of the first regiment raised at Richmond, Virginia, for service in the Revolution. He married Jane Henry, a sister of Virginia's great orator, Patrick Henry. Colonel Meredith had his home at Amherst, Virginia, and most of his Revolutionary service was in the Carolinas.

Major Samuel Meredith came out to Kentucky with his family in 1790. Three years previously he had sent some slaves and a manager to improve the Meredith grant, and thus a home was ready for him when he arrived. Major Meredith married Miss Elizabeth Breckenridge, a sister of Attorney-General John Breckenridge in Jefferson's cabinet.

Of the children of Major Meredith, his daughter Jane Meredith died unmarried in old age. The second daughter, Letitia P., became the wife of Major William S. Dallam, whose father, Gen. Richard Dallam, was an officer of the Flying Squadron in Maryland during the Revolution. Major Dallam after his marriage became a prominent financier at Lexington, and died at the age of seventy-five. His widow spent her last years at the old Meredith grant, and she also died at seventy-five. She was the mother of three daughters, the oldest being Frances Paca Dallam. Letitia Preston Dallam, the second, died at the age of eighty-nine and was the wife of William N. Robb, for many years sergeant at arms in the State Legislature. Elizabeth Meredith Dallam, the third of the children, became the wife of James O. Frazer and they moved from Kentucky. The Dallam home at Lexington entertained many prominent men, including President Monroe, a personal friend of Major Dallam, they having met while Mr. Monroe was ambassador to France. Major Dallam died in December, 1845.

Frances Paca Dallam, the oldest daughter of Major Dallam, was married to Dr. Robert Peter when about twenty years of age, and for forty years she lived at the old homestead. The house that is now the home of her children was built in the early '20s, and at that time stood about two miles from Russell Cave Pike, but is now about midway between Mount Horeb Pike and the Newtown Pike. The original Meredith grant contained about 3,000 acres, but has since been greatly reduced.

Mrs. Peter died in 1907 in her ninety-second year. She lived to a vigorous old age, keeping in touch with matters of home and elsewhere, and was always very fond of society. She inherited the old homestead and lived there forty years, Doctor Peter going back and forth between the home and Lexington every day to attend his professional duties.

The children of Doctor Peter and wife were: Letitia Dallam, who was a musician and prominent in musical circles at Lexington and died when past eighty; William, who died in boyhood; Benjamin Dudley, who spent his life at the old farm and died unmarried at the age of seventy-two; Frances Dallam, who died at the age of eighteen; Miss Johanna, who still lives at the old home and collaborated with her father and since his death completed the History of the Transylvania University Medical Department, which has been published as one of the Filson Club papers; Robert, who left Kentucky when a young man and became interested in mining in Colorado, where he died; Sarah Henry, who also lives at the homestead; Arthur, a farmer, who died unmarried at the age of sixty-nine; Hugh, the son who remains with his sisters at the home farm; Alfred Meredith, mentioned on other pages as chemist of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station; and Alice Meredith, who died at the age of eighteen.

MATTHEW LOVE AKERS, a prominent railroad official, has been a resident of Louisville for a quarter of a century and is also widely known through his interests and activities as a horseman.

Mr. Akers, who was born in Floyd County, Indiana, September 10, 1870, is descended from two families who became identified with the Ohio River Valley in frontier days, and his ancestry goes further back, to Revolutionary and Colonial times. The founder of the paternal line was Simon Akers, who immigrated from England to Virginia in Colonial times. For three years he was a soldier in the Virginia Continental Line during the Revolution. For that service he was granted land in Warrant No. 4985, issued to him at Williamsburg, Virginia, February 18, 1801. About 1812 he came west to Kentucky and Southern Indiana, and utilized his land grant in this section of the West. He died in Clark County, Indiana, March 19, 1819.

His son, George Akers, was born in Virginia March 30, 1791, and was a well-known citizen of Southern Indiana, serving as justice of the peace for many years. In 1832 he went to Texas, which was then a part of Mexico, lived there during the Texas Revolution and the period of the Texas Republic, and died in the state December 16, 1859.

The third generation of the family was represented by Hiram Akers, who was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, February 26, 1811. He lived most of his life in Clark County, Indiana, where he died May 22, 1856.

The fourth generation contained Reason Lawson Akers, father of Matthew Love Akers, of Louisville. He was born in Clark County, Indiana, January 9, 1837, was educated in the common schools there and also in normal schools, and from 1862 to 1868 served as a surgeon in the United States Army. After the war he became a farmer, and was also a pioneer in the manufacture and development of the hydraulic cement industry. His associates in that enterprise were the well-known Louisville men, J. B. Speed and Dexter Belknap. Reason L. Akers was a close friend of Michael C. Kerr, the first Speaker in the House in the first Democratic Congress after the Civil war. He was a stanch democrat and a member of the Christian Church.

Matthew Love Akers is the only child of his parents. His mother was Louisa Abraham Miller, who was born in Clark County, Indiana, July 13, 1847, and was married to R. L. Akers September 28, 1865. She is still living, while Reason L. Akers died in Clark County, Indiana, November 23, 1878.

The maternal ancestry of Matthew L. Akers includes some notable personages in the four generations preceding his mother. Her first American ancestor was Abraham Miller, who immigrated from Holland to Northampton County, formerly a part of Bucks County, Pennsylvania, in 1740. He acquired a large amount of land purchased from Richard Peters, and died in that county in 1752.

His son, Abraham Miller, was born in Holland April 1, 1735. He served during the French and Indian wars as a non-commissioned officer, was a member of the Committee from Northampton County in December, 1774; a recruiting officer at Easton in June, 1775; captain of Miller's Company of Thompson's Pennsylvania Rifle Battalion, June 25, 1775; a captain of Pennsylvania Militia in 1776; member of the Constitutional Convention of July 15, 1776; and after the close of the Revolution Governor Clinton appointed him the first judge of Tioga County, New York, on February 17, 1791. Judge Miller died in Tioga County July 25, 1815.

The third generation was represented by his son, John Miller, who was born in Northampton County, Pennsylvania, in 1760, and died in Tioga County, New York, in April, 1833. In spite of his youth he served as a private in his father's company in 1775, and afterward continued in the same company when it became a part of the First Pennsylvania Continental Line. A number of years later this Revolutionary soldier was a member of the New York Assembly from 1804 to 1807. He subsequently moved to Indiana, invested in land in that state, and was a member of the Indiana Legislature from Clark County during 1820-21.

His son, Abraham Miller, maternal grandfather of Matthew L. Akers, was born in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, April 9, 1787, and died in Clark County, Indiana, April 22, 1867. He was a volunteer in the War of 1812, and was wounded at the battle of Tippecanoe. While a resident of Jeffersonville in Clark County he served as a member of the city council during 1841-44. He was more than seventy years of age when the Civil war broke out, but enlisted and served with the United States Naval forces on the Ohio, Mississippi and Red Rivers from 1862 until 1865.

In Jefferson County, Kentucky, August 24, 1842, Abraham Miller married Louisa Owen, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Love) Owen. The middle name of Mr. Akers is Love. His great-grandmother, Rebecca Love, was a daughter of Matthew and Susannah (Ross) Love, who were married in Jefferson County, Kentucky, August 12, 1794. Matthew Love was one of the early magistrates of that county, and his home on Cane Run Road was one of the first brick houses erected in the county. The mother of Susannah Ross was Susan Oldham, a sister of John and William Oldham. The Rosses and Oldhams came from Virginia to Kentucky as early as 1789.

Up to the age of twelve Matthew Love Akers attended the common schools of Southern Indiana, and after that his education was under the direction of private tutors. At the age of sixteen he began railroading with the Pennsylvania system. He was station agent at different points and in 1889 joined the Chesapeake & Ohio as secretary to the general manager, and filled other positions until 1895, in which year he was appointed general agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio at Louisville. From 1910 to 1917 Mr. Akers was vice president and secretary of the Louisville and Jeffersonville Bridge Company, resigning that office when the railroad administration took over the railroad properties. During the war he was chairman of publicity for the Railroad War Board in Kentucky. In 1908 Mr. Akers reorganized the Louisville Soap Company, and was president of that local industry for three years.

Mr. Akers has always been a lover of good horses and has done much to promote Louisville's prestige as a great thoroughbred center. In 1907-1908 he was president of the Louisville Horse Show. In association with Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt he reorganized the Madison Square Garden Horse Show, which after the reorganization held the first exhibit in November, 1909.

Mr. Akers is a member of the Pendennis Club of Louisville, the Westmoreland Club of Richmond, Virginia, and is a member of the Society of Colonial Wars and Sons of the American Revolution. He is an Episcopalian and a Democrat. On December 16, 1901, he married Miss Frank Guthrie, a native of Louisville and daughter of Benjamin F. and Keziah (Pollard) Guthrie, the former a native of Woodford County and the latter of Henry County. Her parents both died in the year 1891. Both Mr. and Mrs. Akers had no brothers or sisters, and they have only one son, Frank Guthrie Akers, born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, December 9, 1902.

CHARLES SNEED WILLIAMS, portrait and figure painter, whose work has been accorded international recognition, has for practically all his life made his home at Louisville and is prominent among the men claimed for the citizenship of Kentucky.

He was born at Evansville, Indiana, May 24, 1882.

His parents were Bailey Peyton and Virginia (Sneed) Williams, the former born in Smith County, Tennessee, August 19, 1840, and the latter in the same locality in 1844. Both of pre-revolutionary stock. His mother died in 1909. Charles S. is the youngest of seven children, six of whom are still living. His father was educated in Carthage Academy at Carthage, Tennessee, and soon afterward became a Confederate soldier in the army of General Bragg. He was captured at the battle of Missionary Ridge, and thereafter until the close of the war was a prisoner at Rock Island, Illinois. He then returned to Tennessee, became a merchant, in 1880 removed to Evansville, Indiana, and shortly after the birth of his son Charles located at Louisville. He is now living retired at Cookeville, Tennessee. He is a democrat in politics.

Charles S. Williams reared and educated in Louisville, attending the public schools and graduating from the Manual Training High School in 1899, and after leaving high school he studied art in Louisville. Later he was under some of the able masters of New York City, and then went abroad to London and for four years was a scholarship student in the Allan-Fraser Art College in Scotland, where he was graduated in 1905. He remained in Scotland for some time developing his abilities under private instruction, and also traveled in continental cities.

Mr. Williams returned to Louisville in 1908, and that city he has since regarded as his permanent home. However, he has been much abroad, spending portions of the years 1910 to 1914 and again in 1919-21 in European art centers.

Mr. Williams has executed many notable portraits and landscapes, and his offerings have been accepted and have found place in exhibitions both in Europe and America. He is a member of the Union Internationale des Beaux Arts, Paris, is first vice president of the Louisville Arts Club and for a number of years was chairman of the Art Committee of the Louisville Art Association. He is a member of the Art Club of Washington, D. C., and at Louisville is a member of the Pendennis Club. Mr. Williams is a democrat in politics.

August 27, 1912, he married Elsie Ellen Luke, who was born in Portsmouth, England, only child of William Joseph and Ellen (Cole) Luke. Her father was born in Portsmouth in November, 1862, and her mother in Devonshire, England. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Williams are William Luke and Virginia.

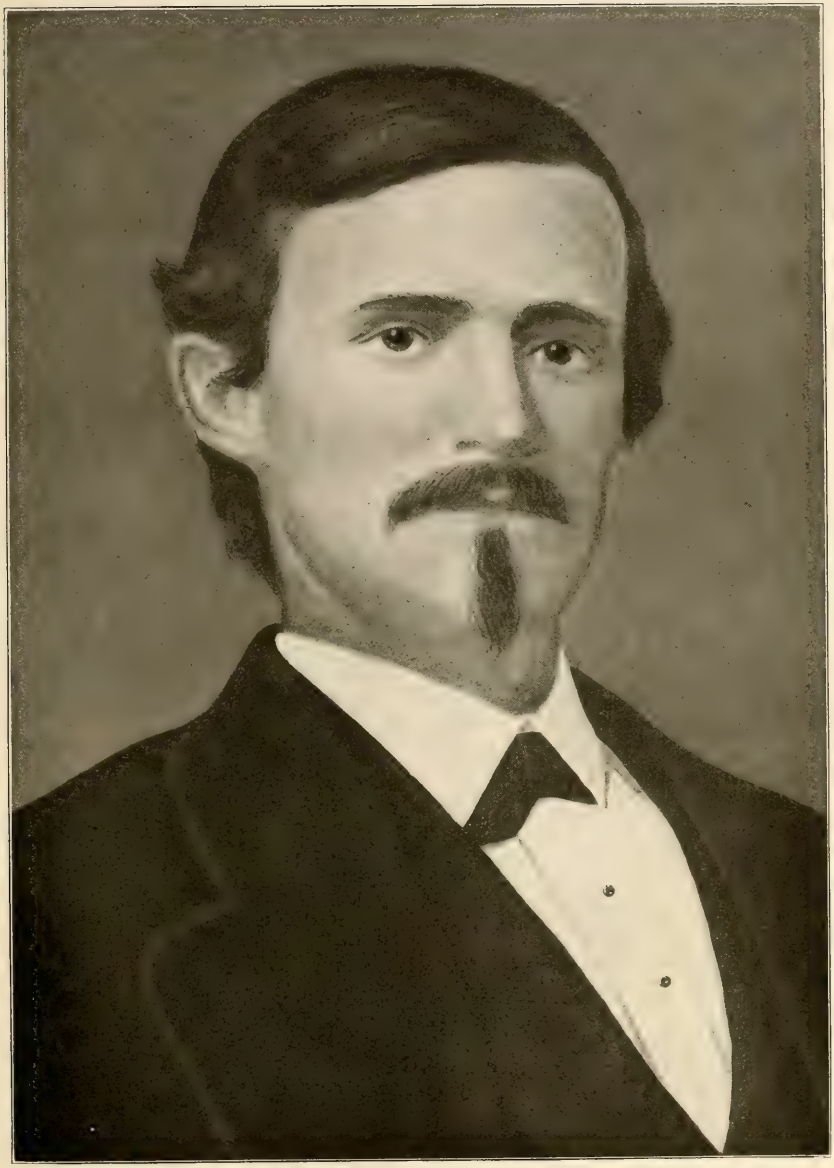
Alfred Meredith Peter. As chemist of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station for the past thirty-five years, it is the good fortune of Professor Peter that the value of his scientific services has come to be widely appreciated by the agricultural interests of the state, in the advancement of which he has done work of incalculable value.

He was born at Lexington, Kentucky, where he has his home today, May 25, 1857, son of Dr. Robert and Frances (Dallam) Peter. His father was a physician and also a distinguished educator, being professor of materia medica and of physics and chemistry in Transylvania University.

Alfred M. Peter was educated in the Academy and the College of Arts of Kentucky University, received his Bachelor of Science degree from the State Agricultural and Mechanical College of Kentucky in 1880 and his Master of Science degree in 1885. In 1913 the Kentucky State College bestowed upon him the well-merited honor of Doctor of Science. He has been devoted to scientific pursuits since early boyhood, and before his graduation he served from 1876 to 1878 as instructor in Kentucky University. During 1880-81 he was adjunct professor of chemistry and natural history in the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, and from 1881 to 1886 was assistant chemist for the Kentucky Geological Survey.

In addition to his duties as chemist of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station he was acting director of this station from September 24, 1916, until January 3, 1918, and since 1910 has been professor of soil technology in the State University of Kentucky. He was reporter on soils and ash for the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists in 1894-95, was a member of the State Board of Agriculture in 1917, and from 1904 to 1912 was supervising chemist of the Kentucky Geological Survey. Doctor Peter is a member of the American Chemical Society, is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, was a member in 1912 of the Eighth International Congress of Applied Chemistry, a member of the Kentucky Mining Institute, the Kentucky State Historical Society, is a member and former secretary of the Kentucky Academy of Science, and is a member of the Society of Chemical Industry, the American Association of University Professors, and the Alpha Chi Sigma college fraternity.

On September 27, 1887, Doctor Peter married Mary B. McCauley, of Lexington.



Mrs. M. Kate Oldham, whose attractive home is on the Harrodsburg Pike adjoining the City of Lexington at the south, is the widow of the late William E. Oldham, whose career was one of importance in itself and whose connections run back into the very earliest years of Kentucky history.

William E. Oldham, who died at his home near Lexington October 21, 1910, was born at Shelbina, Missouri, son of Jefferson and Millie (Miles) Oldham. He was descended from one of two brothers, Edward and William Oldham, who came from Yorkshire, England, to America, and both participated as soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Edward at the age of seventeen entered the Colonial army, and had seven years of service. For many years he lived on an island home which he owned in Chesapeake Bay, near Baltimore. His brother William came out to Bourbon County, Kentucky, in pioneer times, and died at Lexington at the age of fifty.

The grandfather of William E. Oldham was Edward Oldham, who was the second in a large family of thirteen children, several of whom are represented by descendants in Central Kentucky. Edward Oldham was twice married, his third son being Jefferson Oldham, who was born in Kentucky, as was his wife, Millie Miles. After their marriage they moved to Missouri.

When William E. Oldham was an infant his father died, and soon afterward he was brought to Kentucky to live with his grandfather, Edward Oldham, who owned and operated woolen mills at Sandersville, a place now known as Greendale in Fayette County, several miles north of Lexington, and was also owner of a valuable landed estate of several hundred acres in that vicinity. William E. Oldham grew up in his grandfather's home, acquired a thorough education and was well trained both as a farmer and business man. Edward Oldham was venerable in years at the time of his death, and his grandsons Edward Kibby and William E. were made administrators of his large estate, a part of which they inherited.

In 1864 William E. Oldham married Miss M. Kate Lowman, of Lexington, where she was born and reared, being eighteen at the time of her marriage. Her parents were Thomas and Mary (Geers) Lowman. Her father died in 1849, a victim of the cholera epidemic that caused many deaths in the state within that year. Mrs. Oldham was carefully reared by her widowed mother, and is the only daughter and only survivor of four children. Her brothers, Thomas, Theodore and Lewis, were at the time of their deaths living in Lexington, where Thomas for many years was a grocery merchant and the other two brothers were painters by trade. Mrs. Oldham's mother continued to maintain her home at Lexington until the age of sixty-five.

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Oldham established his residence on the old Thomas Payne farm on the Frankfort Turnpike in Fayette County. Later he sold this property and purchased the present Garrett Watts farm three miles south of Lexington. He sold the property to Mr. Watts in 1898. This farm comprised 260 acres, and the residence was built by Mr. Oldham about 1874. In 1898 Mr. Oldham bought the beautiful suburban home with house and ten acres of ground on the Harrodsburg Pike, which they named "Glenwood." The residence had been erected a short time previously by the former owner, William Day. Here Mr. Oldham lived virtually retired, though occasionally satisfying his spirit of enterprise by buying and dealing in livestock, a business that he had followed for many years, particularly the buying and shipping of cattle and sheep. He was one of the very successful leaders in agricultural affairs of Fayette County, and in all the relations of life was known as a man of thorough integrity, commanding unqualified popular confidence and esteem. He had no ambition for public office, but had a record as a Union soldier and was always a stanch republican.

In the Civil war he won promotion from the ranks to the office of first lieutenant in the Twenty-first Kentucky Infantry, commanded by Colonel Price, his company captain being C. W. Milward, who later was a colonel. Mr. Oldham was in service through a number of campaigns and battles until the close of the war. For many years he was affiliated with the Grand Army Post. Death came to him at the age of seventy, and he was laid to rest in the Lexington Cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Oldham were the parents of three children. Thomas, who died in June, 1910, about four months before his father, had been for a number of years in the United States Internal Revenue Service at Lexington. The only daughter, Mary, is the wife of Thomas W. Price, and they live at the Oldham home on the Harrodsburg Pike. Mr. Price has long been interested in thoroughbred Kentucky horses. Mr. and Mrs. Price have one child, Robert Francis, now a student in the Lexington High School. The youngest of Mrs. Oldham's children, Jefferson, died in his twenty-first year, while a student at the University of Kentucky.

Llewellyn Sharp, to whom this memoir is dedicated, was a native of Kentucky, where he passed his entire life and where he rendered admirable account of himself in connection with civic and industrial progress. He became the owner of one of the fine old landed estates of Fayette County, the old Boggs homestead, ten miles southeast of the City of Lexington, and this property is still owned by his daughters. The fine old brick mansion, with its solid walls, attractive Colonial architecture and spacious rooms, is said to have been erected by Mr. Boggs, the original owner of the property, more than a century ago. This stately old house, in admirable preservation and now equipped with modern improvements, including running water and electric lights, is situated in a beautiful little valley and is scarcely visible from the present thoroughfare that passes the property, this road having been constructed years after the house had been built. In the immediate proximity are fine springs of pure and sparkling water, from whose unfailing sources the home has been supplied for generations. Ensconced amid idyllic surroundings, this historic mansion, half-hidden from the public highway and maintaining its atmosphere of patrician exclusiveness, is one of the landmarks of Fayette County. The widow of Mr. Boggs became the wife of Clayton Curl, and they resided on the old Boggs homestead until their deaths. The place was then sold to Dr. George O. Graves and his son-in-law, George O. Tibbs, and in 1882 the property passed into the possession of Llewellyn Sharp. The original area of the estate contained 685 acres, but at the time of its purchase by Mr. Sharp the farm comprised 335 acres. Mr. Sharp made the place the stage of vigorous and successful enterprise in the domain of agriculture and stock-growing, and to the property his daughter Lillie (Mrs. John H. Stevens) later added by the purchase of an adjoining tract of 110 acres, so that the area of the estate is now 445 acres. The three daughters own the original tract purchased by the father.

Llewellyn Sharp was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and passed the closing years of his life on the fine old estate described in the foregoing paragraph. His character and achievement gave him inviolable place in popular confidence and esteem. His grandfather on the paternal side passed his entire life in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, the original American progenitor having settled in the Old Dominion State in the Colonial period of our national history. James Sharp, father of Llewellyn, came from Virginia to Kentucky and eventually made his way to Missouri, but he returned to Kentucky and established his home in Fayette County, where he passed the remainder of his life and where he died at an advanced age.

As a young man Llewellyn Sharp wedded Miss Julia Flannigan, daughter of James and Julia (Curry) Flannigan, of Fayette County, and she still resides on the old homestead with her daughter Lillie, wife of John H. Stevens. Of the children, the eldest is Lizzie, who is the wife of Charles H. Overly, of Lexington; Charles remained on the old home place until his death, at the age of thirty-five years; Llewellyn, Jr., resides in the City of Lexington; and Lila and Lillie are twins, the former married and residing on Woodland Avenue in the City of Lexington, and the latter being the wife of John H. Stevens, of whom more specific mention will be made in later paragraphs. Mrs. Stevens remains on the old home place, which is jointly owned by her and her two sisters, and here she accords to her loved and venerable mother the deepest of filial solicitude. Mrs. Stevens personally maintains a general supervision of the business and practical operations of the fine farm estate, which is given over to diversified agriculture and the raising of excellent grades of livestock.

John Hubbard Stevens, who is one of Kentucky's prominent and successful breeders of fine horses of thoroughbred type, was born in the immediate vicinity of Boonesboro, Kentucky, and on the old home place of his father stands the fine old monument erected to the memory of the great frontiersman, Daniel Boone, the property being now owned by Doctor Williams, of Richmond, Virginia. Mr. Stevens is a son of Thomas Stevens, who for several years maintained his residence on his fine old farm on the Richmond Turnpike, six miles distant from Lexington, where he died at the age of sixty-two years, his father, John Stevens, having been a pioneer settler in Kentucky and having been eighty-one years of age at the time of his death. Thomas Stevens made his Fayette County estate, known as Walnut Hill Stock Farm, the stage of specially successful enterprise in the raising of thoroughbred horses, and he was one of the representative breeders and turfmen of Kentucky. He raised the best type of thoroughbred and standard-bred horses, many of which he sold at high figures, and he was a prominent factor in the leading racing circles of the country.

From his boyhood days John H. Stevens had close association with the raising of fine horses, and for many years he held precedence as a successful breeder and owner of thoroughbred and standard-bred horses, a field of activity in which he has abated his enterprise in later years, largely owing to the decline in turf affairs under present Governmental restrictions. He and his wife maintain on the old estate of the latter's father the generous hospitality for which the place has long been celebrated, and he is one of the well-known and distinctively popular citizens of Fayette County.

Mr. Stevens married Miss Lillie Sharp, a daughter of the late Llewellyn Sharp, to whom this memoir is dedicated, and they have one son, John Hubbard Stevens, Jr.

Wallace McClelland. Lovers of horseflesh and breeders of thoroughbreds will have no difficulty in identifying Wallace McClelland, now living about six miles south of Lexington, as one of the well-known McClelland family who for several generations have been prominent in the life of this part of Kentucky.

Wallace McClelland was born August 29, 1847, on the old home farm place on Nicholasville Pike, within four miles of Lexington. He is a son of James M. and Lucy (Wallace) McClelland, both natives of Jessamine County, the former a son of William McClelland, also of the same farm, and who in his day was a well-known citizen of this part of Kentucky, as was his son, James M. James M. McClelland was a noted follower of horses and races, and in his time he did his share of betting and was considered a success in picking winners. He died at the age of sixty-six. During the Civil war he served as assistant quartermaster under Gen. Kirby Smith, of the Confederate army. He superintended the transportation of 1,600 head of cattle from Kentucky to Knoxville, Tennessee, and delivered the cattle to Gen. Braxton Bragg.

Wallace McClelland was reared on his father's farm, on which he worked for some years, and was educated in the schools of his home neighborhood. About 1878 he gave up farm work and became a trainer of thoroughbred horses, proving a success in that line. His two brothers, Johnnie and Byron McClelland, developed into expert race riders and followed the circuit for nearly twenty years. Wallace McClelland was associated with Byron for the greater part of this period, and Byron became a noted horseman and one of the best judges of a colt likely to make a racer, some of his trained animals bringing as high as $35,000. He died in 1898.

Following the death of his brother Wallace McClelland left the race track and secured his present farm. While actively engaged with horses, he was successful in training some of the best runners, and became an expert in that line. He concedes, however, that his brother Byron was his equal in all respects. Mr. McClelland has not altogether lost his old interest in horseflesh and is still a judge of a good racer. He follows fishing with keen enjoyment.

In 1883 Wallace McClelland was united in marriage to Mattie J. Bond, of Lexington, and to this union three sons and two daughters were born: Byron and John, living at home, the former engaged in the chemical department of agriculture under Federal control; Francis, living in Lexington; Sarah, at home; and Mrs. Joseph Phelps, living near her father. John McClelland served with the United States army in France during the World war. He was in the engagements in the Argonne Forest and in St. Mihiel, serving with the First Field Artillery. Although these engagements were among the most strenuous and bloody of the whole campaign in which Americans participated, young McClelland came out without a wound.

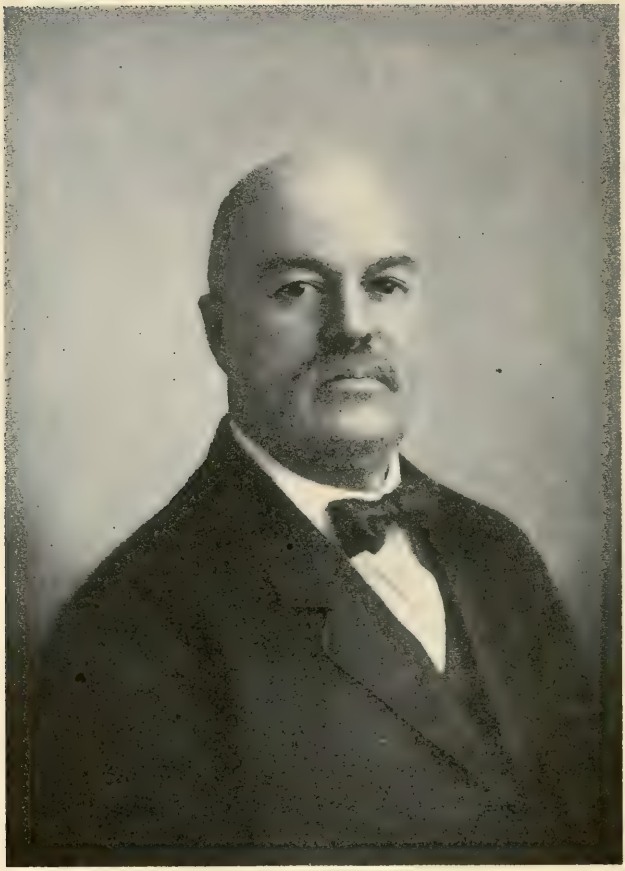
Joseph H. Smith, whose home is ten miles south of Lexington, on the Walnut Hill Pike, is one of the most active, progressive and successful farmers and stockmen in this section of the state. He has been in the livestock business practically since early boyhood.

He was born in Madison County, Kentucky, April 5, 1888, a son of Thomas J. Smith, who is now a retired farmer at Lexington, Kentucky. Joseph H. Smith grew up on a farm, had a common school education, and at the age of seventeen began raising, feeding and handling livestock, cattle, sheep and hogs. At his farm south of Lexington he has built up an extensive industry, feeding much stock for export and also for the local butcher trade. He has made a success of this business and has confined his attention almost entirely to the farm. However, he is a director in the Guaranty Bank & Trust Company of Lexington.

Mr. Smith at the age of thirty married Miss Jane Land, whose father, Charles Land, is president of the Guaranty Bank & Trust Company of Lexington. Mrs. Smith possesses the intellectual and social qualities to make her an ideal head of the beautiful country home in which she and Mr. Smith reside.

W. J. Lavin, M. D. For over a quarter of a century Doctor Lavin has been a successful country physician practicing in a large community south of Lexington and in the same community where he was born and reared. His home is on the Richmond Pike, on rural route No. 10 out of Lexington and 7½ miles south of that city.

Doctor Lavin was born in that locality March 21, 1870. His father, Thomas Lavin, came when a young man from Ireland and married in Fayette County, Kentucky, Catherine Shearen, also a native of Ireland, and was brought to the United States when a child. Thomas Lavin carried on an extensive enterprise as a farmer in Fayette County, and died at his old homestead at the age of seventy. His four daughters still live in the old home, and his son, C. A. Lavin, operates a general store in the same locality.



Dr. W. J. Lavin attended St. Mary's College near Louisville, took a business course in Smith's College and studied medicine in the University of Louisville, graduating in 1893. Since that date he has looked after the welfare of his clientage around the old home, and for some seven or eight years conducted a store, carrying a general line of drugs and other supplies. He is a member of the various medical societies, and for four years was physician at the County Infirmary.

Doctor Lavin is independent in politics and takes no special interest in partisan controversies. He is a member of St. Paul's Catholic Church at Lexington. In 1907 he married Margaret Gallaher, a native of Knoxville, Tennessee, who came to Kentucky with her parents. She attended college at Knoxville. They have two children, Catherine and Allen.

Robert Worth Bingham, president of the Louisville Courier-Journal Company and the Louisville Times Company, is a lawyer by profession, has been a member of the Louisville bar twenty-three years, and his name has long stood for distinctive leadership in the city's life and affairs.

Judge Bingham is a graduate of the noted Bingham School of Asheville, North Carolina. This school, one of the oldest preparatory schools in America, is the only school for boys in the United States which has been administered by three successive generations of headmasters for over a quarter of a century.

Bingham School was founded in 1793, at Wilmington, North Carolina, by Rev. William Bingham, a native of Ireland, graduate of the University of Glasgow in 1778, who came to the United States in 1785, and eight years later founded the school in the management of which he was succeeded by his son William J. in 1825, by his grandsons William and Robert after 1857, and since 1873 the head master of the school has been Col. Robert Bingham, father of the Louisville publisher and lawyer. Col. Robert Bingham was born at Hillsboro, North Carolina, September 5, 1838, was prepared for college by his father, graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1857, at once took his place in the management of the Bingham School, and except for the four years of his duties as a Confederate soldier has been connected with this school uninterruptedly. Besides building up this splendid institution of learning, Colonel Bingham for many years has been a power in promoting educational progress all over the South, more particularly in his home state, and has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most scholarly and broad-minded men of the South. Colonel Bingham married Delphine Louise Worth, who died in 1886. Her father, John M. Worth, was a pioneer cotton manufacturer in North Carolina, was state treasurer in 1877, and was a brother of Jonathan Worth, a governor of North Carolina.

Robert Worth Bingham, who was born in Orange County, North Carolina, November 8, 1871, graduated from his father's school in 1888, the University of North Carolina in 1890, also attended the University of Virginia, and the law department of North Carolina University, and in 1896 entered the law school of the University of Louisville. He graduated in 1897, and also took a short course in law at the University of Michigan.

Judge Bingham began his law practice at Louisville. In 1903 he was appointed and in the following year elected county attorney of Jefferson County, serving until 1907. In the latter year the governor appointed him mayor of Louisville, a position he held several months. In 1911, also by appointment from the governor, he was made chancellor of the Jefferson County Circuit Court. These public duties have been discharged from a sense of civic obligation, incidental to his busy professional and business career.

Besides being president of two of Kentucky's leading newspapers Judge Bingham is a director of the American Creosoting Company, of B. F. Avery & Sons Company, Louisville Trust Company and National Bank of Kentucky. Since 1900 he has been president of the Kentucky Children's Home. He is a member of the Louisville, Kentucky State and American Bar associations, is an independent democrat, a York and Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of the Episcopal Church. He belongs to the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, the Pendennis, Country and River Valley clubs of Louisville, New York Yacht Club, the University Club of Chicago, and the Metropolitan Club of Washington.

On May 20, 1896, Judge Bingham married Eleanor E. Miller, of Louisville. She was a granddaughter of Dennis Long, founder of the firm Dennis Long & Company. On November 15, 1916, Judge Bingham married Mrs. Mary Lily Slagler, of New York. His three children, all by his first marriage, are Robert Norwood, Henrietta Worth and George Barry Bingham.

James S. Renick, whose death occurred in the City of Havana, Cuba, on the 14th of February, 1917, had gone to that tropical island to pass the winter, and had passed several preceding winters in Florida. Mr. Renick was one of the substantial exponents of agricultural industry in Clark County, Kentucky, where he had given special attention to the growing of tobacco and hemp upon a large scale. He was one of four brothers who inherited the large and valuable landed estate of their grand-uncle, the late Abram Renick, in Clark County, and it was on his portion of this valuable estate that he conducted his vigorous and successful enterprise as an agriculturist. This fine rural estate, which was the home of his widow and son, is situated five miles northwest of Winchester, the judicial center of Clark County.

James Scott Renick was born in Bourborn County, Kentucky, on the 28th of March, 1862, and he was a representative of one of the old and influential families of the North Central part of Kentucky. He received excellent educational advantages in his youth, and remained in his native county the greater part of the time until his marriage, in 1884. Thereafter he continued his residence upon his fine farm property in Clark County until the close of his life, and he was one of the progressive and highly esteemed citizens and men of affairs in Clark County. He was a stalwart advocate and supporter of the principles of the democratic party, but the only public office in which he consented to serve was that of justice of the peace, of which he was the incumbent at the time of his death. He was a leader in the modern system of tobacco and hemp culture in this section of the state, and had made a close study of tobacco growing in Cuba, besides which he was associated with Louisville dealers in the handling of tobacco. In company with his brother Abram he continued the maintenance of the fine herd of Shorthorn cattle that had been established by their grand-uncle, the late Abram Renick, and from the herd they made exhibits at numerous fairs and stock shows. Mr. Renick took great pride and interest in his live-stock enterprise and made the same a special feature of his farm industry until he sold his stock to his brother Abram. During the last two years of his residence in Clark County he lived practically retired at Winchester, owing to impaired health, and it was in an effort to recuperate his physical energies that he went to Cuba, where his death occurred, as previously noted. Mr. Renick was a member of the Presbyterian Church, as is also his widow, and he was affiliated with the Winchester Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The property which he received as a bequest from his grand-uncle has been in the possession of the Renick family for thirty-five years, and the beautiful old mansion on the place was erected more than a century ago by General Pendleton, the place having continued until recent years to be known as the old Pendleton house.

An atmosphere of romance and youthful independence attaches to the record of the marriage of Mr. Renick. He was a youth of twenty-two years when, in 1884, he eloped with Miss Princess Sutherland, of Clark County, to the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, where their marriage was solemnized on the 24th of December of that year. Mrs. Renick was born and reared in Clark County and is a daughter of David and Catherine (Grimes) Sutherland. Her paternal grandparents, Lewis and Elizabeth (Berry) Sutherland, were born and reared in Virginia, and within a short time after their marriage they came to Clark County, Kentucky, where they passed the remainder of their lives, Lewis Sutherland having been eighty-two years of age at the time of his death and his wife having passed away at the age of seventy-five years. Mr. Sutherland was a successful agriculturist and influential citizen, was a loyal democrat and active in public affairs in the community, though he never became ambitious for or consented to serve in political office. David Sutherland was born and reared in Clark County, and here he and his wife continued to reside until their deaths, both having passed away prior to the marriage of their daughter Princess, who was but seventeen years of age at the time of her romantic marriage and whose education had included a course in Winchester College. To Mr. and Mrs. Renick was born one son, Harry Phelps Renick, the date of whose nativity was September 28, 1890. He was afforded the advantages of excellent preparatory schools, including the Mooney School at Knoxville, Tennessee, and then entered the University of Kentucky. At the university he became affiliated with the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, and he holds membership also in the Masonic fraternity and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has had the active management of the old home farm since the death of his father, and which he has made the stage of vigorous and progressive enterprises as an agriculturist, with special attention given to the growing of corn and hemp. By reason of his connection with such productive enterprise he was refused service in connection with the nation's military operations in the late World war, but was a loyal and zealous supporter of the various local war activities and did well his part in food-production industry, a matter of primary importance in connection with American participation in the war. Mr. Renick married Miss Laurie Bruce Duty, who died five years later and who left no children. On January 5, 1921, he married Miss Katherine Williamson, of Paducah, Kentucky. With his mother Mr. Renick holds membership in the Presbyterian Church at Winchester.

Ellerbe Winn Carter was one of the well-established members of the Louisville bar for nearly a decade. He practically abandoned his professional routine for nearly three years while in the army on the Mexican border and during the war with Germany, and after his honorable discharge he entered business rather than resume the work of his profession. He is organizer and president of the Carter Guarantee Brokerage Company, a Kentucky corporation with home office in the Louisville Trust Building.

Mr. Carter was born in Bibb County, Alabama, March 23, 1884, a son of William Douglas and Julia Reese (Winn) Carter. His father was born at Louisville January 8, 1861, while his mother was born in Alabama December 9, 1862. They were married in Birmingham June 15, 1882, and Ellerbe W. is the first of their five children. William D. Carter is a very prominent lawyer. He was educated both in the literary and law departments of Washington and Lee University of Virginia, graduating as a lawyer in 1880. He was admitted to the Virginia bar at Fredericksburg, where for many years he has enjoyed a high rank as an attorney. He is a member of the various bar associations, is a past eminent commander of Fredericksburg Commandery of Knights Templar, and a member of the Episcopal Church.

Ellerbe W. Carter was reared at Fredericksburg, Virginia, received his A. B. degree from Fredericksburg College in 1904, and for over a year after leaving college he traveled abroad in Europe as a means of finishing his liberal education. He spent about two months in Rome, two months in Geneva and the Swiss mountains, and also traveled extensively in England and Scotland and France. On returning to the United States he entered the law school of the University of Virginia and graduated in 1907. He practiced in the Virginia courts until 1910, when he came west and began practice at Louisville, and there was no important interruption to his professional duties in that city until June, 1916.

Having in the meantime become identified with the National Guard of Kentucky, he was called to duty in the Federal service during the Mexican troubles. June 19, 1916, as captain, Co. B, First Kentucky Infantry, he was sent to Fort Thomas, Kentucky, and still later recruited Company C at Covington and in the Big Sandy Valley of Kentucky. After recruiting the companies he took them to Fort Bliss, Texas, and remained on the Mexican border until the early spring of 1917. At the beginning of the war with Germany he was stationed at Camp Taylor with his company, and later was sent to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and on July 16, 1918, was commissioned major of artillery. He received intensive training in the Field Artillery School of Fire at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and in September, 1918, went overseas with the 38th Division. He landed at Liverpool, crossed England and entered France at Cherbourg, and was on duty at several points in France until the signing of the armistice. He then returned to New York and to Camp Taylor and received an honorable discharge May 29, 1919, nearly three years after his first call to Federal service.

Major Carter two days after his honorable discharge, on May 31, 1919, organized the Carter Guarantee Brokerage Company. This company began business with $30,000 paid up capital, and its capital is now $325,000. At the close of the first year's business the resources of the company aggregated $864,583. Other officers and directors of the company are Philip Cole, vice president; George R. Burks, secretary and treasurer; Marion E. Taylor, and Owsley Brown. In April, 1920, Mr. Carter also organized at Nashville, Tennessee, the Carter Acceptance Company, with a paid up capital of $150,000, and he is also president of this corporation.

Major Carter is an active member of the American Legion, is affiliated with Falls City Lodge No. 376, A. F. and A. M., Highland Chapter No. 150, R. A. M., and the Knights Templar Commandery No. 1. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, the Louisville Boat Club, Louisville Country Club, and in politics is a republican.

On July 7, 1910, he married Nancy Hall Pearson, a native of Charleston, South Carolina, and only child of John and Daisy (Hall) Pearson, the former a native of South Carolina and the latter of Virginia. Mr. Pearson was a well-known lawyer and former judge. Mr. and Mrs. Carter have two children, Ellerbe, Jr., and Nancy.

Charles Whitner Milner, junior member of the well-known Louisville law firm of Humphrey, Crawford & Middleton, is rapidly becoming a prominent figure in some of the law controversies of his city and state, in which his able judgment and ability to provide the solution of many complexities have proven his right to be numbered among the rising members of his calling. Mr. Milner as a lawyer, conducting cases from their earliest consultation through their preparations in his office and the conflicts at the bar to the final engrossment after the last decree of the last tribunal, is systematic, patient and vigorous, and these qualities with his natural talent have contributed to his success.

Mr. Milner was born at Atlanta, Georgia, September 15, 1887, a son of Benjamin C. and Mary Ann (Whitner) Milner. His father, born at Barnesville, Georgia, in 1860, was educated at the University of Georgia, and is now one of the leading civil engineers of Atlanta and chief engineer of the Georgia Highway Board of Commissioners. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and maintains independent views as to political questions. Mrs. Milner was born at West Point, Georgia, in 1861, and she and her husband are the parents of four children: Charles Whitner, Benjamin C., Jr., Jean and Cobb.

Charles Whitner Milner received his early education in the public schools of Atlanta, following which he entered Center College, Danville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated with the class of 1907. Having decided upon a career in the law, he then prosecuted his legal studies in the law department of the University of Louisville, and was graduated with his degree of Bachelor of Arts with the class of 1909. In that same year he was admitted to practice before the state bar of Kentucky, and at once came to Louisville, where he has since been advancing steadily in his calling, and where for the greater part of the time he has been associated with his present concern, Humphrey, Crawford & Middleton, known as one of the formidable combinations of the city. Mr. Milner's practice is general in character, and he is equally at home in the various branches of his calling. He is a valued, interested and active member of the Louisville Bar Association and the Kentucky State Bar Association. With his family he maintains membership in the Second Presbyterian Church. Mr. Milner is a democrat in his political allegiance, but has sought no favors at the hands of his party or from his fellow-citizens.

On December 29, 1909, he was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Hudson, who was born at Danville, Kentucky, a daughter of H. A. and Allie (Salter) Hudson, natives of this state and agricultural people of Boyle County. Mrs. Milner is the fourth in order of birth in a family of five children, of whom two are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Milner there have been born two children: Charles Whitner, Jr., and Benjamin Hudson.

Thomas D. Clines, educated for the law, is a banker by experience, and for eight years had the important financial responsibilities of the office of county treasurer of Jefferson County.

Mr. Clines was born in Jefferson County, November 16, 1882, a son of Thomas P. and Mary (Manning) Clines. His father, a native of London, England, was reared and educated there, was a civil engineer by profession, and as a young man located at Louisville, where he practiced his profession until his death, in 1899, at the age of fifty-nine. He was a member of the Engineers Club of Louisville and a republican in politics. His wife was born in Ireland and died in January, 1920, at the age of fifty-seven. They had three children, Thomas D. being the oldest. John M. married Gertrude Howe and has three daughters, named Margaret Mary, Dorothy and Joan. Mary Sophia is the wife of Joseph Hund and has a son, Joseph, Jr.

Thomas D. Clines was reared and educated in Louisville, attending St. Xavier's College with the class of 1899. He afterward took the course of the Jefferson Law School, graduated LL. B. in 1905, and for about a year was regularly engaged in his professional work. In 1906 he entered the employ of the First National Bank of Louisville, and was with that institution until 1912. During 1912-13 Mr. Clines was assistant cashier of the Commercial Bank & Trust Company, and in April of the latter year was elected county treasurer of Jefferson County, and by re-election had charge of the treasury and funds of Jefferson County for eight years, his term expiring April 5, 1921. Both as a public official and as a thoroughly loyal private citizen Mr. Clines gave all the aid he could to the Government in the prosecution of the late war. As general secretary he had charge of the Knights of Columbus organization and activities at Camp Taylor. He was also chairman of the Labor Committee of the National Council of Defense and was one of the popular "Four-Minute" speakers in Louisville. He is a district deputy of the Knights of Columbus, belongs to Louisville Lodge No. 8, B. P. O. E., is a member of Mackin Council Young Men's Institute, the Audubon Country Club, the Louisville Automobile Club, Order of Alhambra, and politically is a democrat.

On September 21, 1905, Mr. Clines married Miss May Higgins, a native of Louisville, where her parents, William M. and Hattie (Hyde) Higgins, reside. Both her father and mother were born in New York State. Mrs. Clines is the third of their eight children. The five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Clines are Thomas D., Jr., William Manning, Hugh Higgins, Mary Eileen and Hattie Catherine, all residing at Audubon Park, Louisville, Kentucky.

Argus David Willmoth, M. D. Aside from the important service he has rendered through the routine work of his profession at Louisville Doctor Willmoth has earned distinction by his educational work in medicine and surgery, his contributions to scientific literature, and by the tremendous energy that has enabled him to look after many interests that seldom find a place in the career of a busy medical practitioner.

Doctor Willmoth was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, October 24, 1874. The Willmoths came from England and were Colonial settlers in Virginia. His grandfather, Louis Willmoth, came with his parents from Virginia when young and located in Washington County, Kentucky. The parents of Doctor Willmoth were William and Parmelia (Klinglesmith) Willmoth, the former born in Hardin County in 1851. They had two sons, A. David and Robert Lee. Important interests of the Willmoths for several generations have been stock farming and the breeding and training of thoroughbreds. In 1919 Doctor Willmoth and his father and brother, Robert L., established the Ridge Spring Farm in Hardin County. This is a model dairy farm and has become widely known for its herd of pure blood Jerseys.

Doctor Willmoth was reared on a farm, and he also employed his time and energies to the end of acquiring a liberal and thorough education and preparation for his chosen career. He attended public and private schools, has the degree Master of Arts from the University of Louisville, and in 1896 graduated from the Louisville Medical College. He has spent much time during the past quarter of a century attending clinics and keeping in touch with advanced ideas in medicine and surgery in New York, Chicago and other great medical centers. After graduating he practiced for several years in Hardin County, but in 1899 removed to Louisville, where his special attainments have brought him enviable rank both as a physician and surgeon. For the past fifteen years his practice has been largely limited to surgery and diseases of women.

He has served as lecturer on surgery and four years as professor of surgery and clinical surgery in the Kentucky School of Medicine. For two years he was professor of surgery in the medical department of Kentucky University, and also for two years was in the University of Louisville. He has been visiting surgeon to the Louisville City Hospital and St. Anthony's Hospital, and for three years was owner and editor of the American Practitioner and News, a medical publication at Louisville. He is also author of a number of special reports and treatises on medical and surgical subjects. He was for three years a member of the Jefferson County Board of Health, for one term was president of the Southern Medical Association, is a former president of the Louisville Clinical Society, a member of the Jefferson County, Kentucky State and American Medical associations, and belongs to the Muldraugh Hill Medical Society and the Mississippi and Ohio Valley Medical Society. He is a member of the Louisville Commercial Club, is affiliated with Preston Lodge No. 281, F. and A. M., Eureka Chapter No. 101, R. A. M., DeMolay Commandery of the Knights Templar and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and also with Louisville Lodge No. 8, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

His first wife was Maggie Brown, daughter of William Brown, of Meade County. She died in 1905. Doctor Willmoth married Edna L. Cralle, daughter of Shelby and Ella Cralle. They have one daughter, Louise Cralle.

William T. Muir, now and for many years past conducting an extensive farm located about five miles east of Lexington, Kentucky, is a member of the well-known Muir family who for many generations have been identified with the life and activities of this part of the state.

Alex. Thomas, of White Sulphur, Kentucky, following the close of the Civil war, moved to Fayette County. A daughter of his brother, Frank Thomas (Mary Elizabeth), had been married to a Mr. Kenney, who died in that county, and she later married William Muir, who was reared in Fayette, and they spent their whole married life on the present Muir farm, where her father's last days were lived and where he died when he had passed his eightieth year.

William Muir erected a part of the present home, and he and his brother, Thomas Muir, owned about 1,200 acres of land in this district and about 1,200 acres at White Sulphur, dividing the farming operations between them. They were well established as stockmen and were breeders of show horses, which they exhibited at leading shows, and they kept large numbers of export cattle, the partnership continuing until the death of William. The widow of the latter took up the partnership and remained in the business for ten years, when Thomas Muir sold out and later bought a small place at Muir Station. He retired from active work, lives a bachelor life and is now in his seventy-fifth year. Mrs. William Muir continued to operate the place until her death in 1916. The children are: Mrs. B. M. Herndon, of Georgetown, and William T., the subject of this sketch.

William T. Muir was born on October 25, 1880, and now resides on the old home place, where he operates 250 acres of prime land. For a few years he bred some thoroughbred horses, produced good racers, and carried off many honors with his exhibits. He is now engaged in general farming, to which he devotes his whole attention. He is a supporter of the democratic party, as were his father and uncle. The latter were members of the Baptist Church, while William Muir is an earnest and regular attendant on the services of the Christian Church.

On March 5, 1910, William Muir was united in marriage to Miss Edna Gianini, a daughter of Arthur Gianini, a well-known architect of Cincinnati, where his daughter was born. Mr. Gianini is at this time holding an appointment with the Hendricks Moore Company of Lexington. Mrs. Muir is also a member of the Christian Church.

Samuel Muir, brother of William and Thomas Muir, lived at Muir Station, which place was named in his honor, and there he spent his whole active life. He had three sons: W. W., a tax collector, living at Lexington; Ed. G., a medical doctor, living at Pawnee Rock, Kansas; and Henry, who farmed in Fayette County up to the time of his death. His widow now lives in Scott County, this state.

George Christian. On the Fayette County thoroughfare, now known as the Christian Turnpike, about one-half mile from the Richmond Turnpike, is to be found the attractive rural home of George Christian, who has here resided since his early childhood and is a representative of one of the old and honored families of the county. His farm is situated ten miles south of Lexington, and the house occupies a sightly elevation, so that there is afforded therefrom a fine view of the beautiful surrounding country. Mr. Christian was born at Athens, Fayette County, on the 27th of March, 1858, and is a son of William and Martha (Nichols) Christian, both likewise natives of Fayette County. John Christian, grandfather of the subject of this review, was one of the sterling pioneers and substantial farmers of this county, and here his death occurred when his grandson was still a boy. George Christian was but two years old at the time when his parents established their home on the farm which is his present place of residence, and his father here remained until he was well advanced in years, when he retired from the farm and established his residence in the City of Lexington, where he died in 1914, at the patriarchal age of ninety-two years, secure in the high esteem of all who knew him. His wife died at the age of sixty-five years, and of their eleven children nine attained to years of maturity. Of the number seven are now living and the daughter Bettie, who remained a maiden, was sixty-five years of age at the time of her death in October, 1920. The old homestead farm of 200 acres came into the possession of George Christian after the death of his father, as he then purchased the interests of the other heirs. He was reared to manhood on this fine old farmstead, which is thus endeared to him by many gracious memories and associations, and he had assumed the active management of the place many years prior to the death of his father. The present substantial and commodious house on this farm was erected by his father, and the turnpike which passes the place and bears the family name was formerly known as the Evans Mill Road, as it led to the old-time Evans grist-mill, which was operated by water power and which was three miles distant from the Christian homestead. All traces of this old mill have now disappeared. Mr. Christian gained his youthful education in the schools of his native county, and has continuously been associated with the activities of the old home farm, of which he is now the owner. He has taken loyal interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community, and while he has not been associated with so-called practical politics he has given staunch allegiance to the democratic party.

Mr. Christian was thirty-five years of age at the time of his marriage to Miss Susie Davis, daughter of Joseph and Sally (Bailey) Davis, whose old home place was on the Kentucky River at the mouth of Jack Creek, in Fayette County, Mr. Davis having there established his residence about the year 1865 and both he and his wife having there remained until their deaths. Mr. and Mrs. Christian have six sons: William, Clarence, Joseph, Thomas, John Moss and George, Jr. All of the sons remain at the parental home and are associated in the work and management of the farm except Clarence, who is married and is in service as a member of the Fortieth United States Infantry, of which command he was a member during the nation's participation in the late World war.

Frank W. Mimms is both a farmer and banker of Todd County, and his enterprise and character have reflected additional honor upon one of the old and honored names of this portion of the state.

His family was brought to Kentucky from old Virginia by his grandfather, a native of that state. His grandfather developed one of the early farms of Todd County, and was living near Trenton when he died suddenly while on a visit in Clarksville, Tennesssee. He married Miss Kimbrough, who died in Todd County. John C. Mimms, father of the Trenton banker, was born in Todd County June 6, 1847, and spent all his life in the county. He owned a large amount of farm land, tilled the soil and managed his affairs most creditably and successfully, and also served as magistrate of the Trenton district. He was a democrat and for years gave abundantly of his means and his influence as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He died at Trenton February 7, 1909. His first wife was a Miss Cross, who died in Todd County, leaving two daughters: Mary, wife of W. J. Dickinson, a farmer and bank director at Trenton; and Lucy, wife of R. M. Boswell, pastor of the Christian Church of Georgetown, Kentucky. The second wife of John C. Mimms was Donie Smith, who was born in Todd County in 1860 and is now living at Louisville. Their only son is Frank W. Her daughter Johnnie, who died at the age of thirty years, at Louisville, was the wife of C. E. Carmack, a resident of that city but a traveling representative for the Boy Scout work.

Frank W. Mimms was born in Todd County March 27, 1884, and before taking up the serious duties of life had a thorough education. He attended the public schools of Trenton, was graduated in 1902 from the Vanderbilt Training School at Elkton, and spent the year 1902-03 in Vanderbilt University at Nashville. He is a member of the Kappa Sigma college fraternity. On leaving university Mr. Mimms took up the duties of the home farm for three years, and since moving to Trenton has kept in close touch with agricultural matters in Todd County and is secretary and treasurer of the Trenton National Farm Loan Association. Two and a half miles west of Trenton he has a fine general crop and stock farm of 275 acres, and has made his mark in stock raising circles as a breeder of Angus cattle.

Mr. Mimms has been a member of the banking fraternity of Trenton since 1906, when he became assistant cashier of the Bank of Trenton. He resigned that post in October, 1908, to become assistant cashier of the Planters Bank, and since 1911 has been the cashier of that institution. He has been with it almost since the establishment of the bank, which was started with a state charter in February, 1908. This is one of the stronger banks of Todd County, has a capital of $30,000, surplus and profits of $26,000, and deposits of $220,000. The officers are: E. F. Camp, president; J. W. Chestnut, vice president; and F. W. Mimms, cashier.

Mr. Mimms was deeply engrossed in all patriotic movements in Todd County during the World war, working both as a banker and private official to promote the success of Libert Loan and other campaigns. He gave a large amount of time from his business and private affairs to do this work. For the past twelve years he has been a trustee of the Town of Trenton, is a steward and treasurer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a democrat in politics and affiliated with Bethel Lodge No. 20, A. F. and A. M. The home where Mr. Mimms and his family had lived for a number of years was burned November 6, 1919.

He married at Trenton in 1906 Miss Etta Bacon, daughter of P. E. and Etta (Dickinson) Bacon. Her mother is still living at Trenton, where her father died. P. E. Bacon was a farmer and also proprietor of the flour mill at Trenton. Mrs. Mimms is a graduate of Georgetown College of Kentucky. They have two daughters, Dorothy, born March 10, 1910; and Mary Edloe, born September 26, 1914

Robert Letcher Henderson. The members of the Henderson family from whom Robert L. Henderson, subject of this sketch, is descended, are among the oldest and most representative citizens of Lexington and the Muir Station district, where for many generations they have been identified with the agricultural and social life of this part of the State of Kentucky, the present member of the family in no wise departing from the best traditions handed down by predecessors. The family first settled here in the 1790's.

Robert Letcher Henderson, now living near Muir Station, about nine miles east of Lexington, was born on the farm April 28, 1853, a son of James and Susan (Hardesty) Henderson. James was a son of Thomas Henderson, whose father settled on this farm when he (Thomas) was a lad of twelve years. Thomas was postmaster at the old station, and dropped dead on the porch of the station, July 6, 1868, being then eighty-five years old. He married two sisters, Ruth and Jane Galloway, oldest and youngest of seven sisters. Six children were born of these two unions, five by the first marriage, Samuel G., William, James, Mary and Rebecca and one by the second marriage, Nancy. Samuel G. married twice and lived in Shelby County. He had two children by his first wife, John T. and William, and two by his last wife, Samuel S. and Sarah Ellen. William died when a young man. James died on June 6, 1866, at the age of forty-seven years. He married Susan Hardesty, and two children survive him, Robert L. and Mary Rebecca, the latter of whom married James Perkins. Mary remained single and died at Chestnut Grove in Shelby County, aged eighty-six years. Rebecca married Thomas Wise and had three children, Henry T., William, and Ella. Nancy married George Lynn and moved to Indiana. After his death she moved back to Shelby County, and she died at Chestnut Grove.

Robert L. Henderson bought out the interests of the other heirs on the old holding and it is now exclusively operated by him with the exception of one share. In 1889, when he was then thirty-six years of age, he was united in marriage to Kate Zimmerman, a daughter of Thomas Zimmerman, of Lexington, and one of the well-known printers of that city. They have become the parents of one daughter, Dorothy Vernon, now in school. Mr. Henderson has erected a substantial modern brick house, which is not only pleasant and attractive in appearance, but is a very desirable home, and here he and his family are comfortably situated.

Beall Brothers. Two miles northeast of Winchester is one of the finest farms of the famous Blue Grass region of Kentucky, owned and operated by Beall Brothers, three of whom have conducted their interests in common for many years and through their united efforts, each with some special ability, have been able to direct the affairs of one of the largest farms of Clark County on a very profitable scale.

The Beall brothers are Huston, Milton P. and T. S. Beall. They are the sons of Thomas Garrett and Margaret (McClure) Beall. Their grandparents were Leonard and Mary (Rash) Beall. Leonard Beall was a native of Kentucky and spent a long and active life as a farmer two miles from Kiddville. He died in 1886, at the age of eighty-nine, and his wife, Mary, died at the age of sixty-five. Leonard Beall for the last five years of his life lived with his only daughter, Sally. She was born December 4, 1837, and is still living near the old home, being the widow of Samuel T. Hadden, whom she married in 1852. Leonard Beall and wife had five sons: William R., who never married and died at the age of eighty-two, and was a soldier in the Mexican war; Edward Young, who died a bachelor at the age of sixty-five, having made his home for thirty years with Mrs. Hadden; Thomas Garrett; Martin Luther, who lived on the Richmond Pike near Lexington and his son Edward is a citizen of Lexington; and Ambrose Dudley, who died at the age of thirteen.

Thomas Garrett Beall was born near Kiddville, August 13, 1826, and died December 2, 1902. His earlier activities as a farmer were carried on at a place three miles east of Winchester, on the Ruckerville Pike, but about 1877 he moved to the Mount Sterling Pike, two miles northeast of Winchester. Here he owned 130 acres and later acquired 370 acres and in 1885 moved to another portion of the farm on the same pike. He was a prosperous farmer, a stanch citizen, and active in church and other affairs. He married in middle life Margaret McClure, who died January 25, 1913. Their family consisted of the three sons comprising the Beall brothers partnership.

These brothers have been steadily increasing their holdings until they have 775 acres in one body, improved with seven sets of buildings. There is perhaps no better instance to be found in the Blue Grass region of a large farm more capably and efficiently managed.

Huston Beall married Hattie Connor and has a son, Huston, Jr. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and the Bealls as a rule are members of the Christian Church.

Hon. Joshua Dever Powers. Kentucky is justly proud of the long list of its sons who have achieved national as well as state distinction. In that list there has been a growing appreciation for many years of the high character of the Louisville financier, Joshua Dever Powers, who is the only Kentuckian ever chosen president of the American Bankers Association. He is a lawyer by profession, practiced law actively in connection with other business affairs for many years, but for a considerable period his chief attention has been directed to the financial management of the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company, of which he is president.

Mr. Powers, whose versatility and resourcefulness have been tested in many trying and important responsibilities, was born at Hawesville, Hancock County, Kentucky, October 17, 1844. His grandfather, Stephen Powers, was a native of the North of Ireland. He immigrated to America in 1771, first settling at Ellicott's Mills, Maryland, and later becoming a pioneer of the new state of Ohio. The father of the Louisville financier was also named Stephen Powers. He was born at Wilmington, Ohio, February 22, 1821, and from Ohio he moved to Hawesville, Kentucky, in 1842 and for many years was a leading merchant of Hancock County. He died in November, 1902, at the age of eighty-one. At Hawesville he married Emily Noble Schrader, who was born there in 1824. Her parents, James and Susan Schrader, were natives of Louisiana and had settled at Hawesville in the early twenties. Mrs. Emily Powers died in 1858, when her son Joshua was fourteen years of age.

Up to that time he had attended private schools at Hawesville. After the death of his mother he came under the instruction of the eminent Kentucky educator, James Kennedy Patterson, now president of Kentucky University. He was taught by Professor Patterson at Greenville, Kentucky, and at the outbreak of the war between the states was a student in Georgetown College. War coming on, that college was suspended and, returning to Hawesville, Joshua Powers helped in his father's store as a clerk. During 1864-65 he was employed by a wholesale dry goods firm at Louisville. After the war he returned to Louisville and formed a partnership with his father under the firm name of S. Powers & Son, a business that continued until 1884. In the meantime Mr. Powers had diligently prosecuted his studies as a lawyer and was admitted to the bar in 1873. In that year he was chosen to the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature. As a lawyer his practice was at Hawesville until 1877, when he removed to Owensboro, and was one of the eminent lawyers of the Owensboro bar for a quarter of a century. In that time he was associated with several well known attorneys, being a partner of the late Judge G. W. Williams, under the firm name of Williams & Powers, until 1884, then in the firm of Powers & Miller until 1885, as Powers, Atchison & Miller until 1887, as Powers & Atchison until 1896, and finally as senior member of Powers & Anderson until Mr. Powers retired from active practice in 1902.

Mr. Powers abandoned the formal duties of his profession in order to remove to Louisville and discharge the heavy burdens which had been accumulating for a number of years in his business and financial relationships. Few Kentuckians have had delegated to them a greater variety of business responsibility, and it is to the disparagement of none that few have so faithfully and with such resourcefulness discharged these obligations. Mr. Powers first became a figure in Kentucky banking when he was elected in 1884 as president of the First National Bank of Owensboro. He held that office until he removed to Louisville in 1902. At Louisville he organized the National Trust Company, now the United States Trust Company, and was president of the former in 1907. In 1905 he took the leading part in organizing the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company, and has been its first and only president. Under his direction this has grown to be Kentucky's largest and most popular life insurance company.

Undoubtedly it is on the constructive side of finance and business that Mr. Powers has rendered his greatest service. Besides building up a great life insurance company and several banks he projected and built and was the principal owner of the Owensboro Street Railway in 1893; was president of the Owensboro Wharf Boat and Transfer Company from 1885 to 1895; and in 1888 organized the Hancock Deposit Bank of Hawesville, his native town. He has the distinction of having built and owned the Owensboro Bell Telephone Company plant, this being the second telephone exchange installed in Kentucky. Later he assisted in the organization of the Harrison Telephone Company of Owensboro. In 1892, with several other gentlemen, he projected and built the Louisville & Henderson Railroad, serving as its vice president for several years. At one time he was Owensboro legal representative of the Louisville & Henderson and the Louisville & Nashville railroads.

Besides the honor of being the only Kentuckian ever chosen as head of the American Bankers Association, Mr. Powers had another notable honor from that organization in the fact that he was twice elected a member of its Executive Council. He was first chosen to this position in 1889. After serving the constitutional limits of three years he was absent from the council during 1903. In 1904, while not even in attendance at the annual convention, he was chosen a member of the Executive Council for a second term of three years. In 1905 he was elected chairman of the council. In 1906 he was elected vice president of the association and the culminating honor of being elected president came in 1907.

He has a number of financial and industrial interests in Louisville and the state, though the actual management of the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company commands his utmost allegiance and most of his time. He has in the truer sense of the word been a distinguished public servant, though he has been very little in politics. President Cleveland in 1893 appointed him to the office of internal revenue collector at Owensboro. His jurisdiction embraced thirty-five counties of the state. Mr. Powers was appointed a member of the Board of Trustees of the Louisville Free Public Library in 1913 for a term of four years. He was reappointed for a second term, and from April, 1919, to April, 1921, was vice president of the board.

This record, though brief, cannot but suggest the fundamental strength of Mr. Powers' personal character, an unassailable integrity, and a breadth of mind and soundness of judgment that have fully earned him the great responsibilities he has carried.

On October 19, 1865, Mr. Powers married Clara Hawes. She was the youngest daughter of Hon. Albert Gallatin Hawes, who from 1847 to 1849 represented the Second Kentucky District in Congress. Mr. Powers is proud of all his children, grandchildren and even great-grandchildren, now living in homes widely scattered, and among these descendants several have earned distinction as soldiers. His oldest child, Stephen Powers, has for many years been a resident of Las Vegas, New Mexico, where he is superintendent of a public utility. By his marriage to Neville Pendleton his children are: Joshua D., who married Lois Hidden and was a first lieutenant of infantry during the war; Rosalie P. and Mary S., both teachers in New Mexico; Robert B., who served as a private in the cavalry; Ruth P., Katherine and Martha G., still attending school. Albert D. Powers, fiscal agent for the Photoplay Association at Fort Worth, Texas, married Ethel Bryant, and their children are: J. Bryant, a newspaper editor in British Honduras; Ethleel B., wife of Charles Ingelky, of British Honduras; and Albert H., who is in the oil business at Tampico, Mexico. Col. Robert B. Powers, the third son, graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1896, was a captain in the Seventh Regiment of Cavalry and in the regular army service twenty-four years, received two promotions during the war, to major and later to colonel, and recently was relieved of active service, though retaining the rank and pay of colonel subject to call to duty. The fourth son, Joshua D., Jr., is a farmer in Daviess County, Kentucky, and by his marriage to Bessie L. Young has two children: Josie D. and J. D. Powers 3rd. Jay Clay Powers, who married Lena Budd and has a daughter, Laura Lucille, was a major during the World war, saw active service in France, and is now a resident of Dallas, Texas. John H. Powers, a wholesale grocer at Lexington, married Florence Whipple. Thomas McCreery, the next in age, served in the United States Aviation Corps in Scotland as inspector over five divisions, where he met with a serious accident while on duty, his plane collapsing at a height of 700 feet, and he was sent to the London Infirmary and suffered from wounds nearly a year before recovery. He is now an actor on the stage with home at New York. The two daughters of Mr. Powers are Jessie C. and Emily H. Jessie is the wife of Dr. Hugh Kimberly, of Owensboro, Kentucky, and the mother of a daughter, Sarah Ray. Emily is the wife of Eugene Iglehart, a practicing lawyer at Indianapolis, Indiana, and their children are Emily, Eugene and Robert Iglehart.

Arthur Loomis, an architect of specially high attainments and one who now stands among the leading representatives of his profession, is a native of Westfield, Massachusetts, but since early youth has been closely identified with affairs in the City of Louisville, within which it has been his aim to attain a secure place in the popular confidence and esteem as one of the leading citizens.

Arthur Loomis comes of old New England stock. The progenitor of the Loomis family in America was Joseph Loomis, who came to America in 1639, a Puritan from Braintree, England, and settled in Windsor, Connecticut. The genealogy of the family is authentically traced back as far as the fifteenth century to John Loomis, a man of distinction, who was the father of Joseph Loomis, the founder of the family in America.

Many of the Loomis family are enrolled among the heroes of the Revolutionary War, among them being the great-grandfather of Arthur Loomis, and his great-great-grandmother was the first white child born in Plymouth, Massachusetts.

Several of America's ablest scientists and scholars have borne the name of Loomis. One of them, Mahon Loomis, a dentist by profession, as early as 1868 demonstrated before officials of the Smithsonian Institute the practical operation of a "Wireless Telegraph" nearly thirty years before wireless telepathy was heralded to the world as a new and modern invention.

Mr. Loomis is a son of Dr. John Loomis and Clarissa (Robinson) Loomis, the former of whom was born at Russell, Massachusetts, and the latter at Pembroke, New Hampshire.

Dr. John Loomis, his father, was a graduate of both the Eclectic and the Homeopathic Schools of Medicine, and was the oldest practicing physician of Clark County, Indiana, coming from Massachusetts in 1861. He was a man of sterling character and strong intellectual powers. He had no ambition for public life, but was prominent in supporting movements for the community betterment. Doctor Loomis voted for nineteen whig and republican candidates for President, casting his first ballot for Henry Clay and his last for Charles Hughes in 1916. He was keenly interested in the various incidents of the World war, and was well preserved, both mentally and physically, when he passed away, having attained the patriarchal age of ninety-nine years and seven months.

Acquiring a good practical education in the public schools, Arthur Loomis entered the office of Mr. C. J. Clarke, one of the most prominent architects in Kentucky and the Middle West. His boyhood foreshadowed his later years, for in school he displayed that faithful industry that has been so important an element to his success. Thoroughly reliable in all things, the quality of his work was a convincing test of his personal worth, and the forming of the firm of Clarke & Loomis in 1891 was a merited recognition to Mr. Loomis' ability as an architect and his standing among the profession. Mr. Loomis has had, always, a fondness for books pertaining to art, and to that art he devoted the enthusiasm of years of study with results that have made his profession a medium for the expression of a creative and fine artistic ideals.

His work is best exemplified by many important buildings and beautiful residences throughout Kentucky and the three Fall Cities, among these, the Speed Block, Fourth and Guthrie, the Todd Office Building, J. Bacon & Son's store building, Levy Brothers' store building, Medical College of the University of Louisville, Shelby Park Library, Envangelical Zion Church, St. Peters Reformed Church, St. Matthews Envangelical Church, the First Presbyterian Church, the Nurses Home, Norton Memorial Infirmary, as well as the residence of former Governor Wilson of Kentucky, residence of the poet Cale Young Rice, the Third Avenue residence of the late A. T. Hert, the Caldwell residence, St. James Court, formerly the Conrad residence, and many other structures in and about Louisville bear testimony to Mr. Loomis' ability in artistic designing.

In the Blue Grass region might be mentioned the department store of Welsh and Wiseman, Danville, and the residence of Mr. Field McLeod, Versailles, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, the Public Library, the Citizens Trust Company Building, the First National Bank and the High School building in the neighboring City of Jeffersonville, Indiana, and St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, Anchorage, Kentucky, are also Mr. Loomis' work.

Mr. Loomis is a member of the American Institute of Architects, is former president of the Kentucky Chapter of that institute and a delegate in 1908 to their National Convention held in Washington, D. C.; is a director of the Louisville Art Association, and he also is a member of the Pendennis Club.

Mr. Loomis has the honor of being one of the only two honorary members of Louisville Lodge No. 400, Free and Accepted Masons; is a Royal Arch Mason, being a past high priest; is a Knights Templar, being a past eminent commander; a member of the Scottish Rite, and of the Order of the Mystic Shrine, and is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On December 9, 1902, Mr. Loomis was married to Miss Carrie Dorsey, of Jeffersonville, Indiana, the daughter of Captain J. C. Dorsey, who belonged to the prominent Maryland Dorsey family, and who for many years was superintendent of the Louisville and Jeffersonville Ferry Company.

Alvin Tobias Hert. The death of Alvin Tobias Hert in June, 1921, was an event recognized as significant by practically all the metropolitan newspapers of America which carried the news prominently displayed. Alvin Tobias Hert was in fact a national character. The republican party for years had regarded him as one of its most influential chieftains. While it was chiefly his political prestige that made him a national figure, he also stood in the front rank of American business men.

Mr. Hert was of Kentucky ancestry, though a native of Indiana. He was born at Owensburg, April 8, 1865, a son of William and Isabel (Owen) Hert. His father was of Virginia stock. From Crab Orchard, Kentucky, he moved to Indiana and opened a general store at Owensburg. William Hert was a native of Barren County, Kentucky.

Alvin T. Hert acquired a public school education in Indiana, attended the Bloomfield Academy, and while still a schoolboy assisted his father in the store. As a youth he was ambitious, studious, energetic, faithful in performance, constantly reaching out for larger opportunities of usefulness. After his early commercial training in a store he became Indiana salesman for a Louisville shoe house. He had a merchandising business in Brazil, Indiana. His first active connection with politics began at Brazil, Indiana, where in 1895 he was elected and served as mayor of that city.

At Bedford, Indiana, November 20, 1893, Mr. Hert married Miss Sallie Aley. It was a true union of hearts and all the interests that affected them mutually, and it is said that Mrs. Hert supplied a modest part of the captial with which Mr. Hert established himself as a merchant at Brazil, and in all subsequent years he never took a business or political step without advising with her.

From 1895 until 1902 Mr. Hert was superintendent of the Indiana Reformatory at Jeffersonville. The connection that placed him among the constructive American business men of his age proceeded from his organization of the American Creosoting Company in 1904. This company opened its first plant at Shirley, Indiana. For several years before his death this corporation, of which Mr. Hert was president, operated fifteen plants in the United States, some of the allied companies being the American, Indiana, Shreveport, Colonial, Federal and Georgia Creosoting Companies. The company also had a supervising interest in a Canadian company. Mr. Hert was chairman of the Board of the American Tar Products Company and was president of the Southern Motors Company and director of the American Security Company of New York and the National Bank of Kentucky.

While performing the arduous duties of building up these industries Mr. Hert was interested in politics, and when he reached a stage in his career where he found himself with the opportunities to enter personally into the larger domain of politics he did so with a vigor and equipment that soon brought him a place among the leaders. In 1916 he was made republican national committeeman from Kentucky, and during the campaign of that year was western campaign manager for Charles Evans Hughes. In 1920 he was re-elected national committeeman from Kentucky, and was a leader in the national convention that year and influential in the group of delegates who brought about the nomination of Warren G. Harding. He was a member of the Republican Executive Committee of five and adviser to Will H. Hays in the management of President Harding's campaign. After the election he consistently refused some of the distinctive honors of politics, declining appointment as an ambassador, also as the President's representative on the Government Reorganization Committee.

The late Mr. Hert was a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Pendennis Club, Louisville Country Club, Chicago Club, Union League Club of Chicago, Columbia Club of Indianapolis, and was a member of the Episcopal Church. He maintained a modern country home known as Hurstbourne, and was interested in the practical side of farming. His business offices were in the Columbia Building at Louisville.

William Pratt Dale in his mature career has achieved high standing and a large business as a Louisville lawyer. He is a native of Kentucky, and his ancestry includes several of the state's early and prominent families.

He was born on his father's farm in Shelby County June 19, 1877, a son of William B. and Lizzie (Pratt) Dale. His grandparents, B. H. and Julian Ann (Scearce) Dale, were also natives of Kentucky, the former a pioneer farmer of the state, actively affiliated with the Baptist Church, and a democrat in politics. Of their five children William B. was the oldest and was born in Shelby County, October 25, 1856. He was engaged in farming in his native county until 1889, when he entered the wholesale wool and hide business at Louisville as a member of the firm M. Sabel & Sons. He was also a democrat and Baptist. Lizzie Pratt, wife of William B. Dale, was born at Lexington and died in 1889, her son William Pratt, the Louisville lawyer, being the oldest of three children. The second child died in infancy and the youngest is Julian K. Dale, Ph. D., a resident of Peoria, Illinois. Lizzie Pratt was a daughter of William M. and Mary Ellis (Dillard) Pratt. William M. Pratt was born at Fenner, New York, in 1817, graduated in 1835 from the Hamilton College, now Colgate University, and in 1838 came to Kentucky and located at Lexington and for years was one of the leading ministers of the Baptist Church in that city. He was also president of the Board of Trustees of Georgetown College. He died in 1897, at the age of eighty. His wife, Mary Dillard, was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1825 and died in 1907, the mother of five children. Mary Dillard was a daughter of Rev. R. T. Dillard, who came to Lexington from Virginia and served as one of the early superintendents of public instruction in Kentucky. Rev. Mr. Dillard married the granddaughter of Ambrose Dudley, who also came out of Virginia and settled at Lexington during the closing years of the eighteenth century.

William Pratt Dale spent the first twelve years of his time on his father's farm in Shelby County, where he attended country school. He completed his education in the ward schools of Louisville, graduated in 1895 from the Boys High School of that city, then went east to Princeton University. He received his A. B. degree from that university in 1899, and the following year graduated with the LL. B. degree from the University of Louisville. Since then for two decades he has been busily engaged in the general practice of his profession at Louisville, where his offices are in the Lincoln Building. He is a member of the Louisville, Kentucky State and American Bar associations, and along with his profession has endeavored to exercise a helpful influence in civic affairs. During the World war he was Federal director for Kentucky of the United States Employment Service. Mr. Dale is a member of the Pendennis Club, the Louisville Country Club, the River Valley Club, the Chess and Whist Club, and in politics is a democrat.

On November 7, 1914, he married Elizabeth Burnett, daughter of Judge Henry Burnett, of Louisville, a distinguished Kentuckian whose life is the subject of an article on other pages. Mr. and Mrs. Dale have one son, William Pratt Dale, Jr., born July 4, 1919.

Joseph William Porter, for many years actively identified with banking at Lexington, is best known because of his public spirited performance and unselfish devotion to a number of causes that essentially express the general welfare of the community and state. The impelling force in his career has been a constant regard for the good of institutions and the better citizenship of his locality.

Mr. Porter was born in Nicholas County, Kentucky, December 9, 1862, a son of James Harvey and Nannie Dazey (Neal) Porter. His first American ancester was Joseph Porter, a native of Londonderry, Ireland. Mr. Porter's great-grandfather was the founder of the family in Kentucky. His grandfather, Joseph Porter, was a native of Fleming County. James H. Porter in 1863 moved to Fayette County, and he devoted the rest of his years to farming and also served as a magistrate of the Bell School District, and while he gave a good account of himself in this office he was not regularly in politics as a seeker for public honors. He voted as a democrat. He died at his country home at the age of fifty-five and his widow survives him at the age of eighty-six. Joseph W. was the oldest of three children. His sister Belle is Mrs. W. J. Shearer, of Erlanger, and his sister Rika is Mrs. T. S. Hagan, of Richmond.

Joseph William Porter attended country schools, graduated in 1882 from Transylvania University in the Liberal Arts course, and in 1886 received the Master of Arts degree. For eleven years he was one of the faculty of Hamilton College at Lexington, professor of Latin and mathematics. He also conducted the Transylvania Printing Company, printers of stationery and other supplies. Mr. Porter's active identification with the First and City National Bank continued for fourteen years. In 1906 he joined the First National Bank, and for seven years was cashier of the consolidated First and City National Bank, finally resigning his post in 1920, but is still a director. For the past ten years Mr. Porter has been a curator and chairman of the executive committee of Transylvania University. For one year he was president and three years secretary of the Board of Commerce. He is prominent in Rotarian circles both in the state and nation, and was formerly district governor for the Thirteenth District, comprising Kentucky and Tennessee and was active in organizing rotary clubs over this district. For five years he was secretary of the Board of Park Commissioners. It was during his connection with the board that a substantial beginning was made of park development at Lexington, as a result of which the city has its pretentious Woodland Park and two small parks. Mr. Porter was president of the Aylesford Land Company which platted the Aylesford subdivision and built many residences contributing to the general plan of improving one of the handsome residential sections of Lexington. Mr. Porter was also active in and for one year president of the Kentucky State Development Association. During that time there was held at Washington the Conference of Governors through invitation by President Roosevelt, and Mr. Porter was one of the three Kentucky delegates selected to attend the conference by Governor A. E. Willson. In politics he is a democrat, but with strong independent tendencies and is a member of the Christian Church.

At the age of twenty-nine he married Miss Mary Shropshire, and they shared the incidents of life together for twenty-seven years, until the death of Mrs. Porter in 1919. Her great-grandfather was Abner Shropshire, who served as a soldier in the Revolutionary army and was an early settler of Kentucky. Her father, Alexander Harcourt Shropshire, was a son of James Harvey Shropshire, of Bourbon County. Mr. Porter has one daughter, Dazey Moore, now Mrs. Thomas Bullitt McCoun, of Frankfort. His granddaughter is Josephine Porter McCoun.

Lee Congleton is the owner of one of the large and valuable landed estates of Fayette County, and within the comparatively short time since this property came into his possession he has so improved it as to make it one of the model places of this famous Blue Grass region, even as he has shown remarkable progressiveness in his operations as an extensive agriculturist and stock-grower, and has provided the most modern accessories and equipment for the furtherance of both departments of farm industry. Mr. Congleton has been associated with business and industrial enterprises of broad scope and importance, and his ability and the success which he has achieved mark him as one of the most progressive and influential figures in connection with civic and industrial affairs in Fayette County. In his farm enterprise he was ably seconded by his son, Conley, whose individual residence was likewise on the fine estate just mentioned. This son died in February, 1921. Claude and Ernest, two other sons, are now assisting him on the home place.

Lee Congleton was born in Lee County, Kentucky, on the 23d of February, 1871, and is a son of Isaac and Delilah (Brendenburg) Congleton. Isaac Congleton likewise was born in Lee County, to which county his father, Isaac, Sr., had removed from Wolfe County, in which latter the family was founded in the pioneer days. Isaac Congleton, Jr., finally removed to Estill County and established his home on a farm near Irvine, the County seat, but later he returned to Lee County, where he is still actively associated with farm industry.

Lee Congleton was afforded the advantages of the public schools of his native county and was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, in which connection he gained practical knowledge which has been of great value to him in his independent operations as an agriculturist and stock-grower. His resourcefulness and energy were shown early in his career, when, while continuing his farm enterprise, he engaged in rafting timber down the Kentucky River from Lee County to Frankfort. In 1896 he purchased the general store of his father-in-law, John T. Brewer, at Sturgeon, Owsley County, Mr. Brewer having there been engaged in business for twenty years. Mr. Congleton continued this enterprise ten years, and then, in 1906, became associated with Thomas and William T. Williams, bankers at Irvine, in the buying of standing timber. In the buying of this timber land Mr. Congleton was the active manager or superintendent of the business, and in the cutting of the timber and manufacturing of the same the firm employed a force of more than 100 men. Under the direction of Mr. Congleton five mills were operated by his firm, including two mills devoted to the manufacturing of staves for beer barrels. Operations were successfully continued four years under the original partnership alliance, and Mr. Congleton then acquired the interests of his associates and expanded the scope of operations by manufacturing staves for oil barrels as well as those for beer. The enterprise involved operations in a number of Kentucky counties, including Lee, Jackson, Laurel, Clay, Estill and Wolfe. In the manufacturing of staves Mr. Congleton utilized a large amount of white oak timber, and much stumpage of this type was made available. Two of his sons eventually became associated with him in the substantial and prosperous industrial enterprise, which is still continued on a large scale. At one time the enterprise of which Mr. Congleton was thus the executive head represented the largest production of beer barrel staves in the entire United States, the products being sold to coopers in carload lots. The business is now conducted under the firm name of Lee Congleton & Sons, and the year 1920 recorded the production by the firm of 1,500,000 staves for oil barrels.

In 1916 Mr. Congleton leased a large tract of coal land in Perry County, and in connection with the mining enterprise thus instituted he constructed a railroad extension to connect with the L. & N. Railroad, this line being sold, after successful operation, to the railroad company, and constituting an important division.

In 1918 Mr. Congleton purchased 1,000 acres of fine Blue Grass land in Fayette County, the tract being divided into three farms, and for this property he paid at the average rate of $200 an acre. With characteristic vigor and progressiveness he at once instituted the improvement of the property, on which he has erected four large barns of the best modern type, and also four silos of large capacity. In 1920 he completed the erection of the fine modern house which he now occupies, besides erecting three large tobacco barns. On the estate Mr. Congleton feeds an average of 200 head of cattle, and he still continues his active association with the Elk Stave Lumber Company at Big Creek, Clay County, the business being in charge of his eldest son, Claude. In the midst of his varied and exacting business affairs Mr. Congleton has shown in his civic loyalty the same liberality and progressiveness, and while he has had no desire to enter the arena of practical politics he has given a staunch allegiance to the democratic party.

Mr. Congleton was twenty years of age at the time of his marriage to Miss Mary F. Brewer, daughter of John T. Brewer, of Owsley County, and they became the parents of thirteen children, Claude, Conley (deceased), Ernest, Horace (deceased), Walter, Isaac, Joe, Clinton, Ralph, Martha (deceased), Eva, Ruth and Frances Lee. Three of the sons, Claude, Ernest and Walter, were in the nation's military service in connection with the late World war, and Ernest was with his command in France at the time when the war came to a close. Claude and Ernest are actively associated with their father in the management of the splendid farm estate in Fayette County.

Capt. Brinton B. Davis for the past eighteen years a resident of Louisville, is an architect whose reputation and work are known throughout Kentucky and several adjoining states. Architecture was the work that elicited his chief enthusiasm as a boy, he took it up with earnestness as a student and apprentice, and through it has satisfied his ambition for construction achievement.

Captain Davis, who is held in high esteem in a number of civic organizations at Louisville, was born at Natchez, Mississippi, January 23, 1862, a son of Jacob B. and Mary (Gamble) Davis. His father was born in Westchester County, New York, in 1828, and died in 1874, while his mother was born in 1841, in Dublin, Ireland, of Scotch parentage, and died in 1912. Captain Davis grew up in his native city, where he attended the public schools, also Eustice Academy, a noted educational institution, but served his architectural apprenticeship in New York City. Subsequently he was associated with some of the leading architectural firms of Chicago and St. Louis, and began his real career at Paducah, Kentucky. While there he organized and became captain of a company which was a part of the Third Kentucky National Guard, and in 1898 went with the regiment when it was mustered into the United States service for the Spanish-American war. He was with his company in several training camps of the United States and participated in the Cuban campaign for four months. The war over, he returned to Paducah and resumed business, but in 1903 removed to Louisville. As an architect Captain Davis has planned and supervised the construction of many large and costly public and private buildings in Louisville, Paducah, Bowling Green and in many towns and cities throughout the state, in Illinois, Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi and elsewhere. He is a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects. He is a life member of the Louisville Board of Trade, past president of the Louisville Commercial Club and while president (1912-13) was responsible for the change in the school law governing the public schools. He is also past president of the Kentucky Chapter, American Institute of Architects, is president of the Louisville Convention and Publicity League, also director of the Pendennis Club. During the past twenty years he has contributed numerous articles to architectural journals.

Captain Davis is a prominent Mason, being a past master of Plain City Lodge No. 449, F. & A. M., at Paducah; past high priest of Paducah Chapter, R. A. M.; past eminent commander of Paducah Commandery, Knights Templar, but is now a member of DeMolay Commandery No. 12, K. T., at Louisville. He is also a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Grand Consistory and belongs to Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Politically he is a democrat.

On February 23, 1889, Captain Davis married Miss Clara Gwin Benbrook. They have two daughters, Gladys, a student in the Sargent School at Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Mildred, attending the Louisville High School.

Richard H. Menefee is a well-known Louisville business man, formerly a merchandise and grain broker, but now identified with one of the chief general insurance agencies in the city.

Mr. Menefee is a native of Louisville, born December 3, 1877, a son of Richard Jouett and Elizabeth Williamson (Speed) Menefee. His father, who was born in Lexington, Kentucky, July 25, 1836, was four years of age when his father died, and he acquired only a limited education in the Louisville schools. At the age of fourteen he accompanied his widowed mother to Chicago, and there went to work in the crockery and glassware department of H. G. Burley & Company. This company was one of the oldest of their kind in the Middle West, and he continued in their service for several years. Later, at Cincinnati, Ohio, he engaged in the commission business with the firm of McFerran & Menefee. About two years later the Civil war broke out and he was appointed paymaster in the United States army. Following the war he returned to Louisville and spent his last days retired. He died in July, 1893. His wife was born in Louisville, March 11, 1847, and died in 1917. Five of their six children are still living, Richard H. being the second in age.

Richard H. Menefee was educated in the Male High School at Louisville, graduating in 1896. For about two years he was employed as clearing house clerk by the Citizens National Bank. In April, 1898, he volunteered in the First Kentucky Regiment of Infantry for service in the Spanish-American war. He was sergeant major, later first lieutenant, then battalion adjutant at Chickamauga Park, accompanied his command from Newport News to Porto Rico, was on that island from August 1 to August 15th, on garrison duty, and was also aide de camp on Gen. Guy V. Henry's staff. Mr. Menefee was mustered out in July, 1899, and then returned to Louisville. In January, 1903, he entered the merchandise brokerage business as R. H. Menefee & Company. In 1909, with the same firm title, he engaged in the grain elevator and warehouse business, but retired from that in January, 1916, and became associated with J. S. Gray & Sons in the general insurance business, with offices in the Columbia Building.

Mr. Menefee is a member of Fall City Lodge No. 376, F. and A. M., belongs to the River Valley Club and in politics is a republican. On April 21, 1910, he married Edith Norton, a native of Louisville and daughter of George C. and Jessie (Swope) Norton. Her father was born in Georgia and her mother in Kentucky, and Mrs. Menefee is the second of five children. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Menefee are Sarah Jouett and George Norton.

William H. Harris was born at Lancaster in Garrard County, Kentucky, October 18, 1867, a member of an old Kentucky family. His father, Elijah W., and his grandfather, Elimiel, were both born in the same county. Elijah Harris was for many years a merchant at Lancaster, and for the past eight years has been police judge. The mother of William H. Harris was Catherine Adams, of Garrard County.

William H. Harris lived in his home county, acquired a common school education, and at the age of seventeen entered a railroad office to learn telegraphy. He became an employe of the Louisville & Nashville in 1887, and has had a succession of increasing responsibilities. For nearly eighteen years he was freight agent for the company at Carlisle, Kentucky. For a decade he was freight agent at Paris, and since February, 1916, has been freight agent at Lexington, where he has the management of all the traffic in the yards and the local offices, with about fifty-five employes. Mr. Harris has given his time and strength unreservedly to his duties as a railroad man. He is a republican voter, he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and she takes much part in church societies. Mr. Harris is a Knight Templar Mason, is a past master of Paris Lodge No. 2, and has sat in the Grand Lodge and attended Knight Templar Conclaves. Every vacation for a number of years he and a party of old friends from Paris have taken their outings on Georgian Bay in Canada. At the age of twenty-six Mr. Harris married Anna Scudder, of Carlisle, Kentucky.

Perry B. Miller was United States attorney for the Western District of Kentucky from July, 1914, to September, 1919, with his official headquarters at Louisville. Upon his resignation he established offices in the Marion E. Taylor Building in Louisville.

Mr. Miller was born in Logan County, February 15, 1867, a son of William Henry and Sarah Elizabeth (Price) Miller. His father was born in Logan County, and was long a man of prominence in Western Kentucky. His mother died in 1881 and his father died in 1911. They left four children surviving: John W., J. J. and Irene, Perry B. being the youngest. All the children are now living.

Perry B. Miller graduated from Bethel College at Russellville in 1886, taught school awhile and took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1889. He began practice at Morganfield and handled a large and important clientage as an individual until 1911. In that year he formed a partnership with Henry D. Allen, under the name of Allen & Miller, which continued until his appointment as United States attorney. During those years the law practically absorbed all his time and energies and fully satisfied his ambition. He was interested in politics chiefly for the sake of his friends. Early in his career as a lawyer he became an intimate friend of Senator Ollie M. James. They began practice in Western Kentucky about the same time and handled many important cases either as associates or on opposite sides. During this professional and personal association Mr. Miller discovered many of the qualities of heart and mind and statesmanship of Mr. James, later recognized by the entire nation. Senator James in turn evidently had a high admiration of the ability of Mr. Miller as a lawyer, since without the knowledge or solicitation of Mr. Miller he recommended his appointment to the president as United States attorney for the Western District of Kentucky. That appointment was made and confirmed by President Wilson, and he entered upon his official duties July 1, 1914.

Mr. Miller was city attorney of Morganfield from 1894 until 1896, was mayor from 1896 to 1900, and in 1912 was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore. He resigned his post as United States attorney in September, 1919, and has since enjoyed an extensive private practice at Louisville in the Federal and State courts.

He served as a trustee of Bethel College from 1904 to 1908, and was a member of the Educational Board of the Morganfield High School from 1908 to 1915. He is a member of the Baptist Church and is a past master of Morganfield Lodge No. 66, F. & A. M., and a member of the Royal Arch Chapter and the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite.

On April 29, 1891, Mr. Miller married Camille R. Waggener, daughter of John M. and Sallie (Hughes) Waggener. Her parents were both natives of Kentucky. Her father died in January, 1917, at the age of seventy-seven, and her mother is still living. Mrs. Miller is the second of four children. Her father was for eighteen years county clerk of Union County and for twenty-five years cashier of the Bank of Union County. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have two children: the daughter, Mary Willis, graduated from Oxford College for Women in Ohio in 1911, and is the wife of Arthur F. Shuey, a graduate of the Boston School of Technology and of Harvard University, and they now live at New Orleans. They have two sons, John Miller Shuey and Henry Miller Shuey. Henry Miller graduated from Center College in 1915, and was a soldier throughout the period of the World war. He is now in the real estate business in Louisville.

Col. Richard Menefee Redd, proprietor of "Eothen" farm, two miles north of Lexington, on the Georgetown Pike, is a cultured Kentuckian, and well known over the Blue Grass region as a former Confederate soldier, a successful planter and farmer, and a splendid representative of the sturdy and virile race of Redds who came to Kentucky almost at the beginning of its history.

The Redds are a Virginia family. Samuel B. Redd was born at Hanover, Virginia, January 4, 1779, and came to Kentucky at the beginning of the nineteenth century, settling at Lexington, in which city he died January 30, 1857. He married Dorothy Bulloch, who was born in 1783, and died about 1815. His second wife, Sarah Rodes, died in 1859, leaving no children. By the first marriage he had two sons, Waller Bulloch and Thomas S. Thomas S. Redd became an attorney, and practiced law in Texas, where he died. He had one daughter and two sons, Maj. Thomas S. and John, both of whom were Confederate soldiers, and John lost his life while in the army.

Waller Bulloch Redd was born September 16, 1806, and died in 1844. He was a graduate of Transylvania University and practiced law at Lexington. In 1831 he married Rebecca Allen, whose family owned what is now "Eothen" farm, on which stands one of the oldest residences in the county. The Allen family, including Mrs. Redd, removed to Lafayette County, Missouri, in 1857, and later Eothen farm came into possession of the Redd family.

Samuel Bulloch Redd, oldest child of Waller Bulloch Redd, was born in 1833 and died in 1911. He never married. He served as a sergeant major in the First Missouri Cavalry, under Gen. Joe Shelby, was all through the war, and afterward became a rancher in Texas. He died in Kentucky in 1911. He is remembered as a noted fox hunter, and usually kept a pack of hounds for the chase. William Allen Redd, who was born in 1835 and died in 1916, was in the same regiment with his brother, held the rank of captain, was twice captured, was confined at Camp Douglas, Chicago, and afterward returned to Missouri, where he married and where he lived until his death.

The third child, Thomas James Redd, was born in 1836 and died in 1848. The next in age was the late Oliver Frazer Redd, whose career is more particularly noted in this article. His younger brother is Col. Richard Menefee Redd. The youngest of the family, Waller Bulloch Redd, died in infancy.

Oliver Frazer Redd was born November 13, 1838, and died February 19, 1916. He was also a captain in the Confederate army on Joe Shelby's staff, was twice wounded and had three horses shot under him. At the close of the war he went to Mexico with General Shelby, but subsequently returned to Kentucky. Col. Richard Menefee Redd had served in the same regiment with his brothers and came out of the war on crutches. All the family returned to Kentucky after the war except William Redd. Oliver Frazer Redd married Miss Margaret Warren, of Missouri. By their union they had three children. Rebecca Allen died in 1920, wife of Dr. Claud Trapp, of Lexington. Mrs. Trapp is survived by three children, Catherine, wife of Capt. Alden Waite; Francis, a civil engineer at Lexington; and Marie, wife of William Brooks. Lee Warren Redd was married in 1897 to Edward J. Nally, the distinguished telegraph official who is president of the Radio Corporation of America. Mr. and Mrs. Nally have two children, Mary Lee, wife of Lieut. Frederick H. Hahn, of New York City; and Julian, a college student. Margaret Allen Redd became the wife of Thomas B. Warren and is survived by one son, Oliver Warren, now of Los Angeles, and they had two children, Fanny Frazer born in 1882, and Oliver Frazer, born in 1885.

Oliver Frazer Redd's second wife was Kate Frazer.

Oliver Frazer, father of Mrs. Kate Redd was a distinguished portrait artist who lived for many years at Lexington. He studied under Jewett, spent much time abroad in the art centers of Europe, was a co-worker with the noted Healy for four years at Florence, Italy, and afterward continued his profession at Lexington, and some of his most noted work is preserved at the family home in Fayette County. Oliver Frazer married Martha Mitchell, daughter of Dr. Alexander Mitchell, of Franklin. Oliver Frazer died in 1864, at the age of fifty-six, and his widow died at the age of eighty-seven. They reared four children: Bessie, who also was an artist of much ability and died at the age of seventy-five; Fanny; Kate, widow of O. F. Redd, the only survivor of her father's family; and Nanny.

Ruth Menefee Redd, a daughter of the late Oliver Frazer Redd, exemplifies many of the literary and artistic interests of her family. She is a violinist, is a leader in musical activities, and is active in church and Sunday School work at Belmont Chapel, being superintendent of the Sunday School. She gave practically her entire time to Red Cross work during the World war, and her life has been a continuous devotion to the welfare of her community, where she is justly popular.

Col. Richard Menefee Redd for many years held the office of county assessor. He has been one of the prominent members of the Belmont Chapel, and he and his late brother were both active in politics. For many years they carried on an extensive business as dealers in cattle and exporters of live stock. Colonel Redd is adjutant of the J. C. Breckenridge Camp of the United Confederate Veterans.

Marvel Mills Logan, whose name is familiarly associated with prominent Kentuckians as former attorney general of the state and former chairman of the Kentucky State Tax Commission, has been a lawyer for a quarter of a century, and since retiring from public office has been busied with many legal and business interests at Louisville, in which city he resides.

Mr. Logan was born at Brownsville, Edmonson County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, January 7, 1874. He is a great-grandnephew of Gen. Benjamin Logan, one of the conspicuous pioneer characters of Kentucky. His parents were Gillis Franklin and Georgiana (Houchin) Logan. His father was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, in 1832 and died in 1915, and his mother was born in Edmonson County in 1849 and died in 1911. They were the parents of seven sons and three daughters, Marvel M. being the third child, and all but one of the children are still living. The father spent his active life as a farmer. He was educated in private schools and was always very fond of books and literature, never cared for public office, was a Baptist and voted as a democrat until 1899 and after that as an independent.

Marvel Mills Logan was educated in public and private schools, and studied law with Senator J. S. Lay and A. A. Sturgeon at Brownsville. He was admitted to the bar in 1896, and engaged in practice at Brownsville from that year until 1912. In the meantime his abilities as a lawyer had commanded wider attention than in a local practice, and in 1912 he was called to the staff of the attorney general of Kentucky as first assistant. He held that post under Attorney General James Garnett until 1916. In 1917 he was elected attorney general as Mr. Garnett's successor, but resigned early in his term, on June 1, 1917, to accept the appointment as chairman of the Kentucky State Tax Commission. This office he also resigned, on December 1, 1918, and has since been busily engaged in practice at Louisville. He was associated with Eli H. Brown under the name Brown & Logan until October 1, 1920, and since then has been a member of the firm Logan & Myatt, his partner being D. O. Myatt.

Mr. Logan is vice president of the Kentucky Rock Asphalt Company and president of the Green River Oil and Mineral Company, and his law firm represents both these corporations and also the Vinson-Kolb Company and other important interests. Mr. Logan is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association, belongs to the Pendennis Club at Louisville, is a member of the Baptist Church and is a past state grand master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and present grand representative to the Grand Lodge. He retains his Masonic affiliation with the lodge at Brownsville, is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter and Knights Templar Commandery at Frankfort, and also belongs to Frankfort Lodge No. 530 of the Elks.

On September 25, 1896, he married Miss Della Haydon, of Glasgow Junction, Kentucky. She was born in Edmonson County, youngest and only surviving child of Wiley J. and Amanda (Hume) Haydon, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Logan have four children: Victor H., Agnes, Leland and Ralph Hunter.

William Richardson Belknap, who died June 1, 1914, was for many years president of the Belknap Hardware and Manufacturing Company of Louisville, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the country. It is a business founded by his father, William B. Belknap, and the family name has been prominently associated with the commercial and civic life of Louisville for eighty years.

The American history of the family goes back to the early years of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, when a Belknap came from Liverpool and settled at Lynn, Massachusetts, and later at historic Salem, where he died in 1643. His son, Abraham Belknap, became a member of the Haverhill Colony in November, 1677. Among his four sons was Samuel Belknap, who married an aunt of Robert Morris, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The next generation of the family was represented by Joseph Belknap, whose son William was born at Haverhill, Massachusetts, about 1740. His son, Morris Burke Belknap, was born in Massachusetts, June 25, 1780, and died in Livingston County, Kentucky, July 26, 1837. He married Phoebe Locke Thompson, who died in Arkansas, February 5, 1873. Morris B. Belknap left the old home in Massachusetts in 1807 and first located at Marietta, Ohio, where he was a pioneer in the development of the iron industry west of the Alleghenies. In 1816 he moved to Pittsburgh, and was influential in promoting some of the first rolling mills in that city. In 1827 he prospected the ore fields of the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers, traveling on horseback, and later organized the capital for the building of iron furnaces in Stewart County, Tennessee, and at Nashville.

His son, William Burke Belknap, founder of the business known as the Belknap Hardware and Manufacturing Company, was born at Brimfield, Massachusetts, May 17, 1811, and was educated at Pittsburgh. At the age of sixteen his father delegated him the the responsibility of transporting the household goods from Pittsburgh to Tennessee and the duty of securing new machinery for the iron furnace in the West. He embarked the property on a flatboat, which had to be unloaded at Louisville and portaged around the falls. He was associated with his father for several years in the iron business, and at the age of nineteen began his independent career at Hickman, Fulton County, Kentucky, as a general merchant. With other associates he developed a business which became well known along the Lower Mississippi, and continued to prosper until the panic of 1837.

In 1840 William B. Belknap re-established himself at Louisville as agent for a firm of Pittsburgh manufacturers of nails and boiler plate. In 1847 he and Capt. Thomas C. Coleman bought a rolling mill and began the manufacture of bar iron, an industry with which he continued to be identified for many years. He had also organized W. B. Belknap & Company as dealers in iron and heavy hardware, his business partner for several years being his brother Morris Locke Belknap. Later he acquired full control of the business and incorporated it as the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company. This corporation as wholesalers represented some of the largest manufacturers of standard hardware and metal equipment in the United States, and the company also entered the field of manufacturing and was interested in a number of manufacturing industries. It would be difficult to name one of the great commercial enterprises centered at Louisville that did more to give the city its prestige as a commercial metropolis. William B. Belknap was also at one time president of the Southern Bank of Louisville. He died February 24, 1889, at the age of seventy-eight. He was a Unitarian in religious faith.

William B. Belknap married in 1843 Mary Richardson, who was born in Lexington, June 11, 1821, and survived her honored husband many years. Her father, William Richardson, was a prominent Louisville banker, for many years president of the Northern Bank of Kentucky. One of their sons was the late Col. Morris B. Belknap, who was born in 1856 and died in 1910. He was for many years vice president of the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company and did much to promote and develop the business at home and abroad. As a youth he joined the Kentucky National Guard, and served as lieutenant colonel and as colonel of the First Kentucky Volunteer Infantry in the Spanish-American war, participating in the Porto Rico campaign. In 1903 he was the republican candidate for governor of Kentucky. He married Lily Buckner, only daughter of Gen. Simon B. Buckner, one of Kentucky's famous governors.

William Richardson Belknap was born at Louisville, March 28, 1849, and was only sixty-five years of age at the time of his death. He was educated in public and private schools. One of his early instructors was the noted Kentucky divine, Rev. Stewart Robinson. He graduated in 1866 from the Male High School, and in 1869 received the Bachelor of Science degree from Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University. He remained at Yale a year in post-graduate study, and then returned to Louisville to join his father's business, W. B. Belknap & Company. In 1880 the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company was incorporated, at which time he became vice president and in 1882 became president. He served as president of this great corporation and guided its affairs with particular attention and ability for twenty-eight years. In May, 1910, he resigned and accepted the post of chairman of the board.

He is also remembered as one of Louisville's generous and public spirited citizens. He served as vice president of the Associated Charities of Louisville, was vice president of the Kentucky Humane Society, president of the Commercial Club and honorary life member of the Commercial Club, and was a trustee of Berea College. He had much to do with building up the Louisville Young Men's Christian Association. He was a charter member and for twenty years secretary of the Salamagundi Club, and was a ruling member of the Presbyterian Church.

On December 2, 1874, Mr. Belknap married Alice Trumbull Silliman, whose father was the distinguished Yale professor, Benjamin Silliman. She died in 1890. In February, 1894, he married Juliet Rathbond Davison, daughter of Charles G. and Emily Andrews Davison. Mr. Belknap's children, all by his first marriage, were five in number: Eleanor, who became the wife of Lewis C. Humphrey; Alice S., who married Dr. Forbes Hawkes; Mary, wife of George H. Gray, an architect; William B.; and Christine, who married C. B. Onnycastle.

William B. Belknap, professor of economics of the University of Louisville, bears a name that for several generations has been prominently associated with the commercial history of Louisville, though his own life has been devoted largely to scholarship and the broad service open to the educator and man of letters.

He was born at Louisville, April 18, 1885, son of the late William R. Belknap. As a boy he attended the Louisville public schools, including the Manual Training High School, and completed his higher education both in Harvard and Yale University. He held the John Harvard Fellowship at Harvard, and his work in economics won him the Ricardo prize scholarship at the same university. He also took special work in economics at the University of Chicago.

Mr. Belknap is a member of the American Economists Association, the Yale College Club, New York Club, Harvard Club of Boston, the Pendennis Club and Louisville Country Club, Louisville Boat Club, and is a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity of Yale and of the Phi Beta Kappa. He is a trustee of Berea College, an honor and responsibility delegated to him after the death of his father. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Fall City Lodge No. 376, F. & A. M.

During the World war Mr. Belknap was a captain in the American Red Cross and had overseas duty from April to December, 1918. He then resumed his duties as professor of economics at the University of Louisville. Mr. Belknap also owns and supervises the operations of a large farm of 750 acres in Oldham County.

Charles Crooks Patrick. The Patrick family came to Fayette County, Kentucky, at the very beginning of the nineteenth century. There have been three successive generations of capable farmers and good citizens, and Charles Crooks Patrick represents the third. He is one of the largest land owners in the Blue Grass region around Lexington, and has been active as a live stock breeder, a tobacco grower and an energetic factor in a number of enterprises affecting the welfare of the community at large. Mr. Patrick lives four miles west of Lexington, on the old Frankfort Pike.

His grandfather, Charles Patrick, came from Albemarle County, Virginia, to Kentucky with his family about 1801, settling in Fayette County and buying land at $10 an acre. His place of settlement was near old Bethel Presbyterian Church, eight miles north and west of Lexington. He had visited Kentucky in 1798, spending some time at Lexington and Crab Orchard. Crab Orchard was then a central point for the meeting of prospectors preparatory to returning over the mountains. Such parties usually effected an organization sufficient to ward off danger of Indian attack. Charles Patrick arrived just too late to meet one such party, and it was waylaid by Indians and several of its members killed. Charles Patrick improved a good farm and was a planter and slave owner. He married a Miss Black, who died about a year before him. He passed away in 1852. Their children to grow to mature years were: George Moffatt, who moved to Texas and his only son was killed; Mrs. Mary Graves, who also moved to Texas; Samuel and John, who went to Illinois; William, who died at Lexington in old age; James, who was the father of Charles Crooks Patrick; Benjamin, a graduate in law who died in young manhood; Mrs. Dorcas Benton, who removed to Missouri; Priscilla, who became the wife of Ben Crenshaw and lived and died near the old home; Charles Christian, whose home was with his brother James and who died unmarried.

James Patrick was born in 1820, and after leaving the old home place he bought land at Elkchester and in 1868 acquired the Steele farm. He continued buying until he had 600 acres in a body, and carried on farm operations on a large scale. He had served as a director of the Lexington City Bank, now the City Bank of Lexington. In politics he was a whig, a Know Nothing and a republican. He supported the Bell and Everett ticket in 1860 and subsequently became a warm admirer of Lincoln and a stanch republican. He was a Home Guard during the Civil war. He was one of the Kentucky abolitionists, always had the courage to speak his opinions, and was a man of high standing in the community. He served as an elder in the Christian Church. James Patrick died in 1900, at the age of eighty years. He was born March 17, 1820. His wife was Fanny Crooks, who was born June 17, 1820, and survived her husband fifteen years, passing away in May, 1915, at the age of ninety-five, and retaining her mental faculties almost to the end. She was reared a Presbyterian and never changed her faith. She was born at Sharpsburg, Bath County, Kentucky, but before her marriage had lived with her brother William near Bethel Church, Kentucky. James Patrick and wife had four children. The daughter, Margaret D., is Mrs. William Steele, of Woodford County. Dinsmore is the widow of John Steele, who was killed in a railroad accident about twenty-four years ago, and she lives on a farm adjoining that of her brother Charles C.

Charles Crooks Patrick was born at Elkchester, July 7, 1861, and spent his boyhood on the old farm. At the age of twenty he took charge of his father's place, and still keeps the old homestead practically intact so far as area is concerned. In 1902 he bought his present place, about two miles from the old farm. There are 670 acres, and altogether his ownership extends to about 1,600 acres. His present home was erected by Hugh Asher, of Bell County, in 1900. Mr. Patrick in former years was a breeder of thoroughbred horses on a small scale and bred some fine trotting horses. The famous Prince Hermis, a great winner on the track, was sold from his farm as a yearling. On the whole his operations have been divided among the interests of general farming, and he has grown grain, tobacco, sheep and cattle. An active associate with him in his farming enterprise is his nephew, James Patrick, a stepson of William Steele. James Patrick was left $4,000 by James Patrick, Sr., and grew up in the Patrick home.

Mr. Patrick is a director of the Union Bank. He helped organize the old Burley Tobacco Company, a holding company, and was a director and member of the executive committee. He also organized the Burley Tobacco Company of Lexington, which took over the local interests of the old company. This is a warehouse company, storing tobacco and doing a strictly commission and storage business. Mr. Patrick is manager of the warehouse, which has the largest capacity of any in the world. The capacity is such as to enable 4,200 baskets of tobacco to be exposed for sale at once. The company has 500 stockholders, all tobacco growers. During 1920 the buildings were enlarged so as to double the former capacity, and the company has about sixty employes during the season. Mr. Patrick has about ninety acres in tobacco on his own land, this being cultivated by tenants.

Mr. Patrick was elected and served two terms in the State Legislature. He has never sought political honors, and after two terms declined a renomination. He was nominated as a republican, did not spend a dollar nor ask a single man for his vote, and was elected in a democratic county. His party was in the minority in the Legislature, but he did some effective work in committees. Mr. Patrick and wife are members of the New Union Christian Church. He has always been a lover of outdoor life and the sport of hunting, and some years ago, when he owned 400 acres in Oklahoma, he made many excursions to that state.

At the age of thirty Mr. Patrick married Miss Caroline Wolcott Moore, of Fayette County, who was twenty years of age at the time of her marriage. Her father, W. R. Moore, is a retired citizen of Lexington. Mr. and Mrs. Patrick have two children: Dinsmore, wife of William Conant, living at the Patrick farm. Mr. and Mrs. Conant have one child, Mary Wolcott. The only son is Charles Crooks, Jr., at home.

James S. Chenoweth, M. D. The name Chenoweth has been an honored one in medical circles in Jefferson County and Louisville for half a century or more. During thirty years of that time Dr. James S. Chenoweth has been burdened with unusually heavy duties and responsibilities as a physician and surgeon, and at the same time has done much work in behalf of medical education and advancement of medical standards.

His father was Dr. Henry Chenoweth, who belonged to one of the earliest families to settle around Louisville. His life was a continuous devotion to his profession from early manhood until his closing years. Dr. James S. Chenoweth was born in Jefferson County, November 6, 1867, and as a youth made a definite choice of the profession of medicine for a career. He was educated in Rugby School of Louisville and in 1889 received his medical degree from the University of Louisville. He followed that with further study in New York City and in Europe, and began his professional career in 1890. Recently he completed thirty years of continuous practice and service as a physician and surgeon in his home city. Doctor Chenoweth was for six years demonstrator of surgery at the University of Louisville, acted as visiting and consulting surgeon in the Louisville City Hospital, as surgeon to the Deaconess Hospital, and is one of the twelve men in his profession, with special interest and proficiency in surgery, who comprise the old Louisville Surgical Society, a society limited to a membership of twelve. Doctor Chenoweth is a member of the Jefferson County, Kentucky State and American Medical associations, and is also identified with several popular social organizations, including the Pendennis, Country and Salmagundi clubs.

Doctor Chenoweth married Mary Creel. Her father was Buckner M. Creel, of Louisville. They have two daughters, Nancy Creel and Helen Bullitt. The latter is still in school. Nancy is the wife of Alexander Heyburn, and has one daughter, Margaret L.

Isaac Wolfe Bernheim. The acknowledged prestige of Americans in almost every branch of human achievement is largely due to the spirit of advancement which urges them onward and upward. The possession of this ambition to gain imposing pre-eminence is shared by all who attain to positions of prominence. The humblest laborer may develop into a man of high standing, provided he possesses the ability to forge ahead. Many a life has been reconstructed from small beginnings, for few of the really able men of the country have been born with the proverbial "golden spoon" in their mouths. To reach the heights a goad of necessity is required, and it was this goad which, entering into the life of Isaac Wolfe Bernheim when he was a young man, imbued him with the ambition to become a leader and enabled him to develop his natural gifts, which have made him a leading capitalist, foremost citizen and prominent philanthropist of Louisville.

Mr. Bernheim was born at the old family homestead in Schmieheim, Baden, Germany, November 4, 1848, a son of Leon Solomon and Fanny (Dreyfuss) Bernheim, the former born at Schmieheim, September 19, 1808, and died in January, 1856, and the latter born at Altdorf in June, 1826, and died in 1889. Leon Solomon Bernheim passed his entire life as a merchant in Baden and was a man who was held in high esteem because of his integrity. At the age of five years Isaac Wolfe Bernheim started to attend the public schools, and when he was ten years old entered a graded school at Ettenheim, four miles from his home. This daily walk of eight miles, minus an overcoat or underclothing, in severe winter weather was a great hardship to the lad, but he manfully continued it for three years, when, in the fall of 1861, he was apprenticed to a commercial house, where he served for three years in order to lay the foundation for a commercial career. Although he worked industriously and faithfully, he received no compensation for his labor, but during the three years earned enough money through outside office work at nights and on Sundays to pay for his clothing. His term of apprenticeship ended November 29, 1864, by which time he had become imbued with a love of industry, was self-reliant and had great respect for the practice of economy.

Securing employment as clerk with a firm at Mannheim, he was granted a salary of twenty-five gulden per month, which when converted into American money would be about $11. Naturally it required genuine financial skill to make both ends meet. He soon decided that he was called upon to bear too much work for too little pay, and accordingly determined upon a change, although the opportunity did not present itself until August, 1865, when he obtained a position with Gebrueder Elkan at Frankfort-on-the-Main, wholesale dealers in knit goods and one of the leading firms in that line in that city. This position he had secured through correspondence, and his first appearance in the office of the company left an indelible impression upon his memory. Mr. Bernard Elkan, after looking the aspirant over, decided that he was both too young and too small for the position at stake, but the enthusiasm and earnestness of the youth finally won the day and he was granted his request to receive a trial. The salary in this position was greater than what he had received at Mannheim, but it was still only by the closest economy that he managed to pull through. Needing an overcoat and other clothing, he pawned his little silver watch, a gift from his grandfather, and thus, at the age of seventeen years, found the means with which to buy the first overcoat that he had ever owned. While it was the custom of the firm not to grant salary raises until the expiration of a year of service, Mr. Bernheim was given a raise on New Year's Day, 1866, and his work was evidently appreciated, as he was entrusted with more important tasks and was making rapid headway. His career was suddenly interrupted in the early summer of 1866, when Bismarck declared war upon Austria, and, Frankfort being very close to the scene of the early hostilities, felt war's grim influence, commerce being stopped and business houses cutting down expenses and discharging employes by the wholesale. Gebrueder Elkan also reduced their force to the minimum, three-fourths of the clerks being let go, but Mr. Bernheim was retained.

In mid-summer, when the battles of Langensalza and Aschoffenburg were being fought near Frankfort, and while Prussia was concentrating her forces near the Bohemian frontier preparatory to striking the terrible blow at Sadowa which resulted in the dismemberment of Austria as a separate German state, there appeared at Frankfort two Americans who were forced to stop over because the railroad had for the time being discontinued its regular passenger service. One of these, Mr. M. Livingston, an uncle by marriage of Mr. Bernheim hunted up his nephew with whom he spent part of a day and the whole of the following day. He and his companion Mr. Moses Kahn, of Paducah, Kentucky, had left Europe as young men, and the fact that they were returning rich in purse impressed the youth with the idea of making his way to America in search of his fortune. Seeing the youth's bent, Mr. Livingston offered to give him a position in his cotton and knitting yarn mills in New York, and to pay his passage fare, and in October, 1866, Mr. Bernheim resigned his position, leaving that city to visit his mother.

In March, 1867, Mr. Bernheim left home, taking passage on the 23rd of that month at Bremerhaven on the steamer Hansa. He came in sight of land April 7, 1867, and on landing at New York started out to find his uncle's factory, which was located on Spring street, near Broadway. Night came on before he could find the factory, and he accordingly went back to Castle Garden, where he remained until the next morning, April 9, when he was successful in finding the firm of M. Livingston & Company. This concern, in common with many others, had suffered reverses during the Civil war, and his uncle was unable to place him in the business, but a friend of Mr. Livingston, John Weil, of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, appeared in New York at this time and the problem of his employment was solved. His uncle bought for him on credit, agreeing to see that the goods were paid for, a stock of Yankee notions, needles, pins, spool thread, socks, suspenders, handkerchiefs and ladies' stockings, and May 3, 1867, with his newly-made friend, Mr. Weil, the lad left New York for Wilkes-Barre to start his career as a peddler.

Mr. Bernheim's affairs prospered from the start. He was ambitious, determined, industrious and courteous, made a favorable impression and big sales, and by October, 1867, was able to purchase a horse and wagon, which enabled him to carry on his business on a somewhat larger scale. When winter came on he located at Overton in Bradford County, a cross-roads town of Pennsylvania, where he remained until the following spring. On May 5, 1868, he started for Paducah, to which city his uncle had moved, and as that city had no eastern outlet by rail he made the journey via Pittsburgh and Indianapolis to Cairo, and thence by boat to Paducah, where he arrived May 7. There he met his uncle, Benjamin Weille, and at that time became bookkeeper and second salesman for his uncles, who were doing business as Livingston & Weille. In the fall of the same year Mr. Bernheim engaged with Loeb & Bloom as bookkeeper at forty dollars a month, and from that time forward his salary was raised from time to time. On January 1, 1872, with his brother, Bernard Bernheim and Elbridge Palmer, he engaged in the wholesale liquor business at Paducah, under the firm name of Bernheim Brothers, Mr. Palmer being a silent partner. After three years Mr. Palmer's interests were purchased, and in 1875 the firm name was changed to Bernheim Brothers & Uri, Nathan M. Uri having bought an interest in the business. This firm continued until 1889, when Mr. Uri withdrew.

During the first fifteen years of its life this business, from a modest beginning, developed to such an extent that it established itself all over the South and into parts of the West and Northwest. In 1888 the business was still further enlarged, when it was transferred to Louisville and more traveling salesmen were engaged, a move that helped to extend the business from Maine to Texas and from New York to California. In March, 1896, the company suffered heavy losses by fire, their distillery and bonded warehouses at Pleasure Ridge having been destroyed in a conflagration. How the business had grown may be seen in the fact that in 1888 the volume of its trade aggregated barely $350,000 per year, and in 1903, when the partnership was dissolved, there was organized the Bernheim Distilling Company, with a paid-up capital of $2,000,000, all of which was employed to take care of its tremendously increased trade. Isaac W. Bernheim, of the corporation, acted as president. As his interests grew Mr. Bernheim became identified with other large enterprises.

He has always been a temperate man himself, and April 17, 1895, while addressing the annual convention of the National Wine and Spirit Dealers' Association at St. Louis, Missouri, in his capacity of president of that body, came out in a strong plea for temperance. His charities have been numerous and his benefactions many. On September 18, 1899, he presented to the City of Louisville the Jefferson Monument, a handsome bronze statue in heroic size of Thomas Jefferson. On May 30, 1910, he presented to the State of Kentucky, at Frankfort, a bronze bust of Abraham Lincoln, and January 17, 1907, he presented the Hebrew Union College with its library building. The Jewish Hospital of Louisville has been recently endowed with a fund of $100,000. A statue of Abraham Lincoln has only recently been given by him to the City of Louisville. It will be the work of George Barnard of New York and will be unveiled during the spring of 1922. Many other benefactions also stand to the credit of this foremost citizen and philanthropist. Mr. Bernheim is now retired from active affairs. National matters have known little of his character, but his community has benefited by his residence, and in business and civic life he has worked constructively and effectively. He is a man who has made and kept friends who have been attracted to him through a likeable personality and because of his deep personal interest in their welfare.

On September 23, 1874, Mr. Bernheim was united in marriage with Miss Amanda Uri, a native of Paducah Kentucky, and to this union there have been born four sons and three daughters.

THOMAS PIATT. Brookdale Farm on Greendale Pike, seven miles northwest of Lexington, has under the proprietorship of Thomas Piatt long been one of the productive centers for some of the famous Kentucky livestock, though Mr. Piatt regards himself as a general farmer. He has handled and bred some excellent thoroughbreds, and the shipping of colts to eastern markets is still a feature of Brookdale farm industry.

Mr. Piatt was born at Paynes Depot in Scott County, Kentucky, November 4, 1877, son of A. D. and Elizabeth (Payne) Piatt. He grew up on a farm, and after the common schools finished his education with a business course in Lexington.

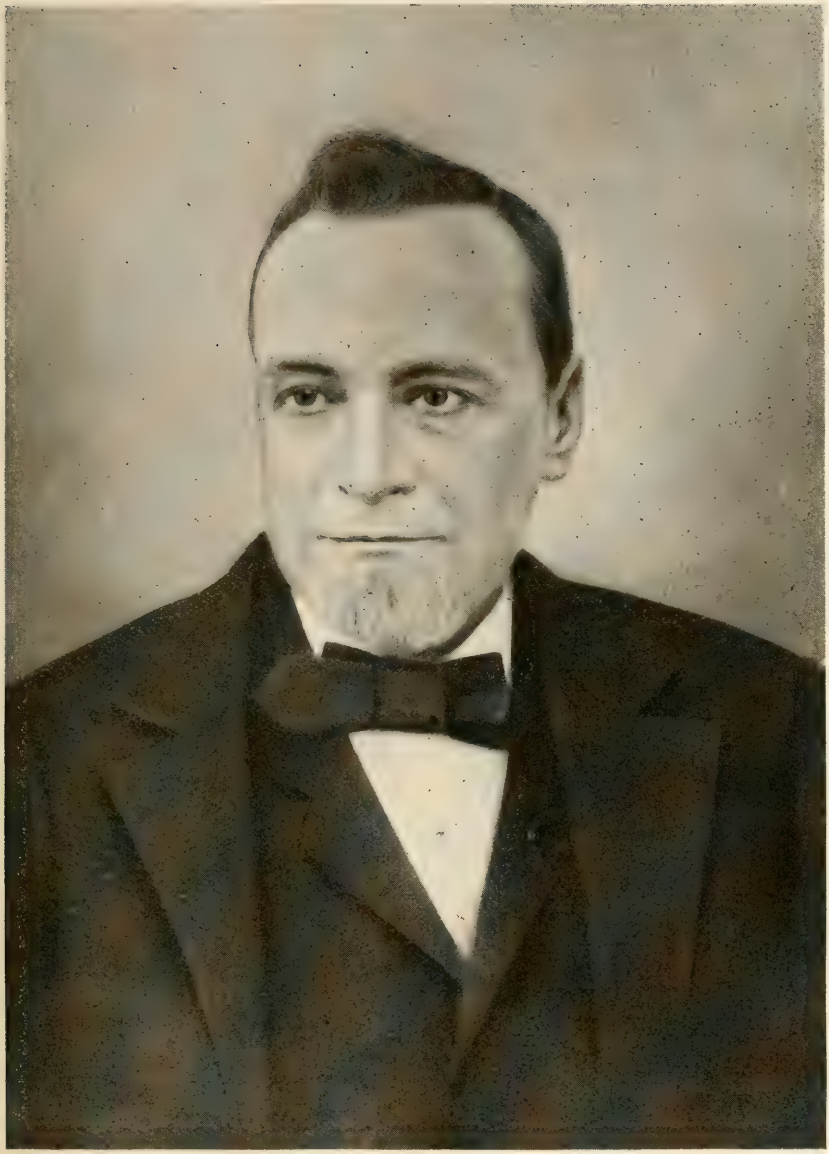
Mr. Piatt has lived at Brookdale since 1899. The main portion of this farm is 200 acres, given him by his maternal grandfather, Augustus Payne, who gave each of his grandchildren a farm. Mr. Piatt out of the fruits of his enterprise has extended the area of Brookdale Farm, and also has 150 acres four miles away, so that his total land holdings aggregate 450 acres. For several years prior to 1908 he was associated in the thoroughbred horse business with Col. Milton Young, and is now a partner with his brother-in-law, J. D. Carr, in thoroughbred breeding. The two farms, Piatt's and Carr's, adjoin, and Mr. Piatt has supplemented some of the enterprise which gives the name Carr justifiable prominence in the Kentucky thoroughbred circles. The Piatt home is located on an elevation, so that the home and grounds present a beautiful picture in the landscape.

At the age of twenty-one Mr. Piatt married Miss Nancy Carr, a sister of J. D. Carr. They have two children, Thomas Carr and Nancy Elizabeth. Thomas C., who lives on his grandmother's farm near Payne's Depot, married Jane Gorham. The Piatt family are members of the Bethel Presbyterian Church.

JOHN WEBB, JR., was a highly esteemed and widely known citizen of Lexington and of Kentucky. He was a son of John Webb, Sr., and was born in the old stone house on the Webb farm May 9, 1858. In early life he was a shoe merchant at Paris, Kentucky, and was a very genial and popular citizen with hosts of friends everywhere he went.

On November 7, 1905, he married Annie Price, member of the prominent old Price family of Lexington. They lived on the old Webb farm for a time and for four years at the Price homestead west of Lexington. Mr. Webb then went to California, making the overland trip by automobile. He started to drive back, but was taken ill in Arizona and died at Hutchinson, Kansas, May 20, 1918. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and was fond of hunting and other diversions.

Mrs. Webb, who lives in Lexington, is a daughter of John Fry Price. She still holds an interest in the old Price farm just west of Lexington, and that land was subdivided under her direction. The house is on the Price farm, and was built in 1807 from brick made on the land. It was one of the first brick residences in Fayette County. It was historic for many reasons. Lafayette was entertained at the house over night during his visit to Kentucky in 1827. The hostess was John Fry Price's grandmother Fry, who with her husband, John Fry, are buried in the yard. There was a porch all around the old house, and this was used by the local militia for drilling on rainy days. The old structure is still included in the residence as it now stands, one of the finest of the old homes.



John Fry Price was born in 1834, son of William Price, a native of London and of Welsh parentage who came to Kentucky as a youth and died at Lexington at the age of twenty-nine. He was well educated and a man of high standing in the community, deeply philanthropic and interested in the unfortunate. John Fry Price spent most of his life on the farm west of Lexington and was founder of the business now conducted as S. S. Price & Company, pork and beef packers. Mrs. Webb is an active member of the First Presbyterian Church, of the Y. W. C. A. and of the alumni of Sayre College, and belongs to the state chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She is famous for her musical ability.

ISAAC GESS. While more than thirteen years have passed since Isaac Gess, a well-known stock breeder of the Parker's Mill Pike, five miles south of Lexington, was called to his final rest, he lives in the memory of his many friends as a high type of loyal citizen and progressive, reliable business man. He never faltered in the performance of any task that was rightfully his, and in all his business transactions, far-reaching and effective as they were, he never sought to benefit by the misfortune of others. His life was actuated by high ideals and spent in close conformity therewith, his teaching and his example were ever inspiring and helpful, and his humane sympathy and charity brought men to him in the ties of strong friendship.

Mr. Gess was born February 27, 1847, on a farm on the Richmond Pike, ten miles south of Lexington, a son of John and Mary A. (Spurr) Gess, the latter an aunt of Levi Spurr, a sketch of whose career and family appears elsewhere in this work. John Gess, Sr., the grandfather of Isaac Gess, was born in Virginia, and in 1800 married Lydia Winn, coming to Kentucky in the same year. During the War of 1812 he fought as a soldier in the United States forces, and after the close of that struggle returned to his farming occupations in Kentucky, in which he continued to be engaged during the rest of his life. After his death his son, John Gess, Jr., secured the home place near Athens, and continued its operation until his death at the age of thirty-three years. His wife survived him a number of years and was sixty-six at the time of her demise. They were the parents of six children: A daughter who died in childhood; a son who died in young manhood; John Winn and James William, twins, born in 1843; Isaac, of this notice; and Anna, who married R. N. Offut, of Harrison County, Kentucky, who became a merchant of Lexington, in which city he and his wife both died, without issue.

John Abbott Jr

John F Price

John Winn Gess and James William Gess were among the best-known citizens of Fayette County. Twins, they bore such a striking resemblance each to the other that in youth and young manhood it was practically impossible for strangers, and even their intimate friends, to tell them apart. From boyhood they were inseparable, constant companions, and so intimate was their relationship that they carried but one purse between them. When the war between the states came on they joined the redoubtable Morgan and took part in the various exploits and escapades of their intrepid leader. They were captured on several occasions, at various places, and finally were imprisoned at Camp Douglas, whence John, making his escape, walked back to the old home, where he again joined his brother. For many years they lived together at the home place, being only separated by death when, in 1894, John, who had married, passed away. This separation lasted but a short time, for James felt his brother's loss so keenly that he cared to remain no longer, and several months later he too, passed away. John Winn Gess married Martha Tomblin, of Georgia, whose brother he had known while in the army, and of their children two survive: Mary Belle, the widow of William R. McDonald, residing at Mr. McDonalds' old home at Cuthbert, Georgia, with three sons, William Ross, James Winn and Marion; and Annie, the widow of Dr. Philip H. Lane, a noted neurologist of Philadelphia, who died in 1920, without issue.

Isaac Gess spent his boyhood and youth on the home farm and secured his educational training in the rural schools of his home community. He was married June 7, 1876, to Mary C. Webb, daughter of John and Margaret D. (Haynes) Webb, and a half sister of the late Thomas Haynes, a history of whose life will be found in the sketch of Miss Elizabeth Frances Haynes, elsewhere in this work. Soon after his marriage Mr. Gess moved with his bride to the farm now occupied by his widow, on Parker's Mill Pike, five miles south of Lexington, knowns as the Springbank Dairy Farm. This property at that time boasted of no improvements, and for a time Mr. and Mrs. Gess faced numerous hardships in developing a paying and comfortable enterprise. This was duly accomplished, however, through industry and good management, and under Mr. Gess' direction the farm soon became famous for its trotting horses, which Mr. Gess sold on the strength of their breeding. Likewise he kept a herd of Jersey cattle, and in both departments of his work achieved an excellent success. He continued to carry on his prosperous activities until his death, which occurred August 30, 1907. He was a man of public spirit and progressive inclinations, and while he never sought public office he took a keen and helpful interest in local matters and gave his support to worthy movements. Interested chiefly in his home and his farm, he had few outside connections in the way of fraternal or other associations, but was a man of friendliness and sociability, one who had no trouble in making or keeping friends. His loss was one which affected his community deeply.

Following her husband's death his widow took over the reigns of management, which she has handled in an entirely capable and successful manner. Known as an able business woman, she has made the dairy the feature of the farm rather than the breeding of horses and cattle, although she has maintained the fine herd of Jerseys, for which she finds a profitable market. In her dairy business she has a large retail trade among private customers, and her business transactions are carried out in a manner at once highly efficient and straightforward. In other matters she keeps well posted, and possesses a mind not only naturally active but well cultivated. Her home, while not a pretentious one, is neat, well kept and valuable, its desirability being enhanced by its attractive situation, while the 140 acres which are included in the estate are composed of some of the best land in the county.

Lawrence S. Leopold. A successful practitioner in the field of corporation law must be not only a broad and alert member of his calling, but an astute and far-sighted business man. His is preeminently the domain of practical law, in which sound fact and absolute logic, fertility of resource and vigor of professional treatment are usually relied upon, rather than ingenious theory and oratorical gifts. When to these qualities are added the graces of oratory and the humor, geniality and unfailing courtesy of a gentleman the main traits have been set forth of the prominent and popular corporation lawyer, Lawrence S. Leopold, of Louisville.

Mr. Leopold was born at Louisville, December 6, 1872, a son of Simon and Sophie (Oppenheimer) Leopold. His father, who was born in 1842, was a successful manufacturer of tobacco at Louisville until his early death in 1879, at the age of thirty-seven years. He was a democrat in politics and a member of Louisville Lodge No. 400, Free and Accepted Masons. His mother, who was born at Nashville, Tennessee, still survives her husband, as do the two children. The younger of his parents' children, Lawrence S. Leopold, secured his early education in the public schools of Louisville, following which he pursued a course at the University of Louisville, from which he was duly graduated with the class of 1893. His studies were further prosecuted at Harvard Law School, where he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1895, and in that year was admitted to the bar of Kentucky and immediately started practice at Louisville, where he now maintains offices at No. 1610 Inter Southern Building.

Mr. Leopold's practice has been mainly of a corporation character, and he has been one of the main factors in the organization of a number of leading companies. Since 1917 he has been president of the South Louisville Bank. He was one of the organizers and is a director of the Greater Louisville Savings and Building Association. In 1917 he was appointed attorney for the United States Public Health Service, and through his efforts there was established a rigid quarantine of all venereal diseases, a ruling which in its enforcement proved an extremely beneficial public service. Mr. Leopold has been attorney for the State Board of Health since 1918 and is a member of the faculty of the Public Health Board of the schools of Louisville. He belongs to the Kentucky State Bar Association. A leading democrat, he has not sought favors of his party, but was a member of the executive committee of the Democratic Central Committee of Jefferson County, and one of the strong and active members of the city and county democracy. As a fraternalist he holds membership in St. George Lodge No. 329, Free and Accepted Masons; Grand Consistory of Kentucky, thirty-second degree, and Kosair Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles Mystic Shrine; and Louisville Lodge No. 8, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He belongs also to the Harvard Club and to the Standard Club.

Mr. Leopold was married March 30, 1911, to Miss Irma Schwabacher, who was born at Louisville, and to this union there have been born three children: Helen Sophia, Katherine L., and Robert L.

William Barnfather Eagles was born on his maternal grandfather Hawes' farm in Daviess County, Kentucky, August 28, 1869. He is a son of Albert James and Kate Coleman (Hawes) Eagles. Through his mother he is descended from two old American families, the originators of which were Samuel Hawes and James Taylor. These families have long been represented in Virginia and Kentucky. Mr. Eagles' mother was born in Daviess County, October 4, 1841, and died November 6, 1906. Albert James Eagles was born in Sussex County, England, in 1835, and was educated at the University of Oxford. In 1861 he came to this country. Later he went west to St. Louis, then to Shelby County, Kentucky, and was a talented teacher in this state for several years. In Daviess County, Kentucky, he was employed as a teacher in the Hawes family. After his marriage there he became a general merchant and tobacconist at Yelvington, Kentucky. He lived retired several years before his death, which occurred June 10, 1880. He was a member of the Episcopal Church. He and his wife had three children: Hawes, William B. and Marianne, wife of William S. Luckett.

William B. Eagles grew up in Western Kentucky, but finished his college and professional education at the University of Virginia. He was graduated A. B. in 1893 and received his LL. B. degree with the class of 1894. Returning to Kentucky, he was admitted to the bar the same year and has been in continuous practice at Louisville. He has always kept to the lines of general practice, and has pursued his professional work with no important diversions into politics or business. He is a member of the Louisville Bar Association, the Kentucky State Bar association and the Lawyers Club. He also belongs to the Pendennis Club, is a Mason, a member of the Broadway Baptist Church and in politics is a democrat.

January 1, 1908, Mr. Eagles married Elizabeth Bacon Parsons, of Louisville, Kentucky. Their two children are William Barnfather, Jr., born August 26, 1910, and Julia Mayes, born November 27, 1912.

George G. Fetter. Through a period of more than a century and through four successive generations the name George Fetter has been significant of the best commercial abilities and civic character in the City of Louisville. George G. Fetter is a grandson of the pioneer George Fetter and a son of George G. Fetter, who was one of the most prominent men in the early pork packing industry of Louisville. Mr. Fetter himself is distinguished by his connection with a number of business institutions at Louisville, especially the George G. Fetter Company, manufacturing printers, binders, stationers and dealers in office supplies, a business that has been steadily growing under his direction for thirty years and in which his son George G. Fetter, Jr., is vice president and general manager.

The first George Fetter was born in New York State, of Knickerbocker and Revolutionary ancestry. He married Lydia Griffith, of Welsh descent. Leaving New York, he lived in Baltimore, then in Pennsylvania, and early in the last century came to Louisville, where his wife died in 1814, and he a few years later.

Their son, George G. Fetter, was born at Wellsburg, Virginia, October 6, 1809, was a child when brought to Louisville, and after the death of his parents was sent to college at Bloomington, Indiana, by his uncle Daniel Fetter. Before completing his college course he returned to Louisville and began his career as an employe in the postoffice under Postmaster John T. Gray, whose daughter he subsequently married. From the postoffice he became teller in the Bank of Louisville, and in 1840 established a wholesale grocery house as George G. Fetter & Company, his associates being his brothers Daniel and Roderick Fetter. But the chief field in which his activities were engaged and the source of his wealth was pork packing. For a great many years his organization contributed a large share of the tremendous volume of pork packed along the Ohio River and sent down the river to markets in the South. He continued a factor in the Louisville packing industry until his death on May 21, 1883. He contributed several inventions to the pork packing business, one of them being the circular railway, which served to speed the operation of the packing plant.

George G. Fetter married Catherine M. Gray on February 11, 1841. Her father, John Thompson Gray, previously referred to, was a cousin of James Monroe and was appointed postmaster of Louisville by Mr. Monroe when President. Her mother was Mary (Ormsby) Gray, daughter of Peter Benson Ormsby, one of Louisville's most distinguished early citizens. He was born in County Sligo, Ireland, was liberally educated, and possessed large means. He and his brother Judge Stephen Ormsby, who also became prominent at Louisville, came on to America on account of their participation in the Irish rebellion headed by Robert Emmet. Ormsby Avenue in Louisville was named for this family. Peter B. Ormsby and his daughter Mary gave the ground for Christ Church Cathedral on Second Street and also for Grace Church in Gray Street, and the family later gave ground for All Saints Church in Park Street. Mrs. Mary Gray was the founder and contributed generously to the support of the Episcopal Orphan Asylum at Louisville.

Mrs. George G. Fetter died in 1907. Her children were: Mary, who became the wife of Robert Steele; Lydia, who married Maj. James Wharton; Virginia, wife of Gen. Amos Stickney, of the United States Engineer Corps; Ormsby G., who married Fanny Smith; George G., head of the George G. Fetter Company; and Selena G., who for many years was a popular figure on the American stage and became the wife of Edwin Milton Royle, a noted actor and playwright.

George Griffith Fetter was born at Louisville, February 18, 1857. He is a graduate of the Louisville Male High School, and his active business career covers a period of more than forty years. He was first with the Louisville pig iron merchants, George H. Hull & Company, later a traveling salesman for a Cincinnati house, and in 1882 was made manager of a branch in Chicago.

Mr. Fetter having returned to Louisville, organized in 1885 the George G. Fetter Printing Company. The present George G. Fetter Company was incorporated July 1, 1891, and though the business in the first few years was entirely local in scope it has for several years been the largest concern of its kind in Kentucky. Mr. Fetter has both his sons, George G., Jr., and John B. Fetter associated with him in this company, while H. C. Wedekemper is treasurer and E. C. German, secretary of the company. In 1896 the Fetter Company was awarded the contract for public printing in Kentucky, and through the business gave capable service to the state for more than ten years.

Mr. Fetter has enjoyed many substantial relationships with finance and business and civic affairs. He was one of the organizers and president of the Majestic Theater Company of Louisville, a director of the Citizens Life Insurance Company, of the Louisville Automatic News Vending Company, and in 1907 organized the George G. Fetter Lighting and Heating Company. Through his ancestry Mr. Fetter is a member of the Kentucky Sons of the American Revolution and the Society of Colonial Wars. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, and has served as vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

He married Miss Amanda Burks, a native of Jefferson County, Kentucky, where her father, John Burks, was one of the wealthy citizens. Four children were born to their marriage, Amy and Roderick, the first two dying in infancy. The others are the sons already mentioned. George G. Fetter, Jr., married Eleanor Crenshaw, of Mississippi, and they have one daughter, Amanda B. The son John B. Fetter married Nell Herrig.

William Wesley Greathouse, one of the well-known citizens of Fayette County, had to achieve success by working hard and earnestly for it, was left an orphan, largely educated himself, and one of the chief satisfactions he has derived from his prosperity has been his ability to assist each of his large family of children to acquire the substance of a liberal education and go into professions or business well equipped for adequate and competent performance.

Mr. Greathouse, who lives on a farm three miles west of Lexington, on the Leestown Pike, was born in Brown County, Ohio, October 20, 1853, only child of Wesley and Catherine (Wallis) Greathouse. His mother was born in Ohio, of Scotch parentage, and her ancestry goes back to the famous Scotch clan of Wallace. The Greathouse family is of English origin, and one of its early members was an English earl. William Greathouse, father of Wesley Greathouse, settled in Ohio from New England.

William Wesley Greathouse was only six years old when his mother died, and his father died several years earlier. Up to the age of eighteen he lived with his maternal grandparents, and he afterward repaid their care by keeping in touch with them as long as they lived. He had a common school training, and at the age of twenty began teaching in Bracken County, Kentucky. He taught there twelve winter sessions, and all his teaching was done in two districts. In the meantime he improved his own educational facilities by attending Normal school in summer sessions at Winchester, Ohio. As a teacher he received about $40 a month, and he also boarded among his patrons. Mr. Greathouse inherited a farm in Brown County and devoted the summer seasons between school work to its cultivation. As a youth his ambition was to become a physician, but his general health did not permit of his attaining that purpose.

On January 26, 1881, in Bracken County, Mr. Greathouse married Ellen Buckley. She had been one of his pupils and was sixteen at the time of her marriage, Mr. Greathouse being twenty-seven. He had boarded at the Buckley home for two years while teaching. In the meantime he had sold his Ohio land and then bought a farm near the Buckley place in Bracken County and devoted his energies to its management for ten years. In 1889 he moved to the Blue Grass section around Lexington, bought a farm in Woodford County, and owned it and prospered while living there for nearly thirty years. In 1919 Mr. Greathouse sold his farm in Woodford County, believing that the pinnacle of high priced land had been reached, and he is now temporarily renting the farm of the late John H. Payne, three miles west of Lexington, his purpose being to reinvest his capital to good advantage when land prices have somewhat declined. He has been successful as a general farmer, and tobacco has always been a prominent crop. He is a breeder of Chester White hogs, and has the foundation of one of the fine herds of that stock. Mr. Greathouse has never participated in politics, and away from home and farm his chief interest has been church and Sunday School. He became a Sunday School worker when a boy, and out of his efforts while living in Bracken County came the organization and building of the church chapel. He has been active in both county and state Sunday School organizations.

Mr. and Mrs. Greathouse have a family of eleven children, all living and most of them established in independent careers. The oldest is a professional nurse. Elsie, who spent two years at the University of Kentucky, is a graduate nurse and the wife of R. J. Talbott, of Lexington. William Wesley, who spent four years at the University of Kentucky, is a farmer and dealer in tobacco. Joseph Felix spent four years in Kentucky University and graduated with honors in 1915 from the Northwestern University Law School at Chicago and not long afterward entered the Officers Training Camp at Fort Sheridan, where he received a lieutenant's commission. He was sent overseas and was wounded in the foot and was in a hospital at the time of the armistice. He is now engaged in the practice of law at Fort Worth, Texas. Tillie B., the next in age, is a professional nurse and a member of the faculty of the State University. Both Jessie and Tillie were army nurses in France, and Jessie was the first Kentucky nurse to be awarded medal service button. John D. Greathouse is also a lawyer, in practice at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Catherine is employed in an office at Lexington, while the next three children, Benjamin F., Elizabeth and Carrie, attend the University Model High School, while the youngest in the family is Vernon.

Lafon Allen has practiced law at Louisville, his native city, a quarter of a century. The firm Barret, Allen & Attkisson, of which he is a member, is notable for the exceptional abilities represented in its membership, and in extent and importance of its practice is one of the chief law firms of the state.

Mr. Allen was born in Louisville, August 2, 1871, son of Charles James Fox and Caroline (Belknap) Allen. His father, though also educated for the law, was for many years a leading Louisville business man. He was born at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, August 14, 1834, was a graduate of Yale University in 1855, also of the Harvard University Law School, and was engaged in practice in Louisiana until the outbreak of the Civil war. He was then commissioned a captain in the paymaster's department of the United States army, and was assigned to duty at Louisville until the close of the war, having been in the meantime promoted to major. After the war he became associated with William B. Belknap in the wholesale hardware business, and was vice president of W. B. Belknap & Company when he retired in 1900. He was an independent in politics. The death of Major Allen occurred at Louisville, June 8, 1911. His wife, Caroline Belknap, was born at Louisville in September, 1846, and died in 1897. All their five children are living, Lafon being the second in age.

Lafon Allen also claims Yale as his alma mater, having graduated A. B. in 1893. In 1894 he received the degree LL. B. from the law school of the University of Louisville, and, beginning practice, continued his professional work as an individual until 1910, when he became associated with Alexander G. Barret and Eugene R. Attkisson under the firm name of Barret, Allen & Attkisson. Mr. Allen is a prominent member of the Kentucky State and American Bar associations. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, Louisville Country Club, is a republican and a Presbyterian.

September 21, 1911, he married Emma Hunter Powell, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, and daughter of Dr. Hunter H. and Emma (Baker) Powell. The parents were both born at Winchester, Virginia, and are now deceased. Of their three children Mrs. Allen is the second in age. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have two daughters, Elizabeth P. and Caroline B.

James R. Duffin. On the basis of his achievements James R. Duffin might very properly be asserted one of the most successful corporation lawyers in the country. While he has attended to the legal matters involved in the organization or reorganization of hundreds of business concerns, he has supplied more than legal advice, and supplied much of the creative and constructive energy through which the firm or corporation has prospered. Perhaps the outstanding achievement of his career and the institution with which his name is most prominently associated is the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company, which has been the largest and most successful Kentucky company engaged in insurance. He has been president of the company for the past ten years.

Mr. Duffin was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, December 30, 1870. His great-grandfather, Randall Duffin, came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in Colonial times, and with a brother served as a patriot soldier in the Revolution. The family early became identified with the steel and iron business in Western Pennsylvania, and the grandfather of the Louisville business man, Roger H. Duffin, was president of the first rolling mill company established at Cincinnati. He was also associated with his sons in railroad contracting, and they built many sections of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

James M. Duffin, father of James Richard, was born in Cincinnati in 1841 and died July 29, 1909. He served with the rank of major in the Quartermaster's Corps during the Civil war, and his brother, Daniel O. Duffin, was also in the same war. He spent his active career as a general merchant and his last days were spent in Louisville. He married Margaret Manion, who died in 1878. Her father, R. G. Manion, was a railroad civil engineer, and at one time was associated with the Duffins in railroad contracting. Margaret Manion was born July 2, 1846.

James Richard Duffin was the second of three children, and the only one to reach mature life. He spent most of his youth in Crawford County, Indiana, where he attended common schools and four years at the Merengo Academy under Prof. J. M Johnson. He took the literary and law courses at Central Normal College, at Danville, Indiana, receiving his law degree with the class of 1890. Central Normal College has bestowed only one honorary degree, and James R. Duffin was the recipient in 1907. After graduating from college he was elected and served four years as superintendent of schools of Crawford County, and at that time was the youngest county superintendent of schools in the state and the youngest man to ever hold that position in Crawford County. He also took an active part in democratic politics while in Indiana, and from the age of twenty-one to twenty-seven was a member of the Indiana State Central Committee. After the expiration of his term as school superintendent he began the practice of law at English, Indiana, but in 1898 located at Louisville. In 1909 he formed a partnership with Augustus E. Willson, who was later elected governor of Kentucky, which necessitated a dissolution of the partnership. During their association they were regarded as among the leading firms of commercial and corporation lawyers south of the Ohio River.

During the twenty odd years he has been in Louisville the responsibility has devolved upon Mr. Duffin of assisting in the reorganization or organization of 1,284 corporations, and giving all of them a lease of life and prosperity. He became a stockholder and director in a large number of these corporations.

On January 1, 1911, Mr. Duffin effected the reorganization of the Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company, and since then has been president of the Inter-Southern. This company now stands thirty-fifth in size among all the life insurance companies of the United States, and it has steadily grown and prospered from year to year. As president of the company Mr. Duffin took the leading part in securing the construction, in 1912, of the Inter-Southern Building, as the home of the company and one of the largest and finest office structures in Louisville.

Mr. Duffin was also organizer of the old Dominion Oil Company, and made it the largest concern of its kind in the Kentucky oil territory. After promoting it to success he sold it to the Standard Oil interests. Mr. Duffin as a lawyer, business man and citizen has done much to promote the industrial progress of Louisville, and has had among his clients many of the prominent banking houses and individual capitalists, among all of which he has enjoyed the highest professional and personal esteem.

At the present time he is completing one of the most beautiful homes in Kentucky in his home City of Louisville. Since coming to Louisville he has not taken an active part in politics. He is a member of the Commerical Club, the Masonic Order and the First Christian Church of Louisville. He married Miss Clara M. Boman, daughter of John Boman, of Leavenworth, Indiana. Their two children are James Everett and Thelma M. Duffin.

Ernest B. Hillenmeyer is one of the fortunate young Kentuckians whose careers and interests identify them with the beautiful Blue Grass districts around Lexington. He is owner of a first-class improved farm in Fayette County, is one of the leading local producers of tobacco, and is a highly skillful farmer, an educated gentleman, and one of the public spirited citizens of his community.

Mr. Hillenmeyer, whose home is on Greendale Pike, four miles north of Lexington, was born in Fayette County, January 6, 1880. His father is Hector F. Hillenmeyer, the veteran nurseryman and farmer whose career is made the subject of an article on other pages of this publication.

Ernest B. Hillenmeyer attended the schools of Fayette County, and is a graduate of Assumption College at Sandwich, Ontario. For seven years he was associated with his father on the farm and in the nursery, and has a technical knowledge of the nursery business, though individual choice has largely led him into the general branches of agriculture.

Fifteen years ago he started his independent efforts as a farmer, at which time he acquired the Breck Payne farm of 125 acres. He now has 157 acres in his farm, and while he grows some stock his chief money crop is tobacco. He is a stockholder in Tattersall's Tobacco Warehouse at Lexington. Mr. Hillenmeyer and family enjoy one of the beautiful locations around Lexington, and eight years ago he erected a substantial country home on the farm.

He has been much interested in educational questions, and in 1920 was elected a member of the County Board of School Commissioners. Mr. Hillenmeyer is a republican and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus and is a member of St. Paul's Catholic Church. In 1913 he married Miss Matilda Scott, daughter of L. A. and Ellen (Curtis) Scott, the latter still living. The father, who died in January, 1916, was for many years a teacher in St. Paul's School. Mrs. Hillenmeyer is a graduate of St. Catharine's Academy. They have one daughter, Eleanor Curtis Hillenmeyer.

Charles Whitney Moore. Of Kentucky thoroughbred breeders perhaps none have been distinguished by more discriminating choice and care in the selection and handling of horses with the true qualities of greatness than the proprietor and owner of Mere Hill Stud Farm, Charles Whitney Moore. American horsemen everywhere know this farm and its proprietor directly or indirectly, since for thirty years or more he has devoted his energies exclusively to the production of the highest class of thoroughbreds.

Mr. Moore, whose noted farm is two miles from Lexington, on the Newtown Pike, was born on Russell Cave Pike, six miles from Lexington, December 27, 1857. He grew up on a farm and began his career as a breeder of saddle horses. For a time he was in the merchandise business, but for the past thirty-five years has been a breeder and owner of race horses. He has owned and occupied the Mere Hill Farm since 1886. Mr. Moore has had horses of great performance on the track. He bred Exterminator, one of the best long distance runners, whose purses aggregated more than $100,000. Other noted animals owned by him and sold as yearlings were Harron, Robert Bradley, Intense and White Plume. The sire of these is McGee, which he still owns and keeps on his farm. Mr. Moore has from twenty-five to thirty brood mares, and his annual production of colts is about twenty, most of which are disposed of at private sales and some are sent to the eastern markets. He was a part owner in the noted Sweep, a racer and stud, and he also had Ingoldsby from the Keene stables, a great sire used at Mere Hill until his death. Mr. Moore has a farm of 170 acres. He is a member of the various horse associations.

Mr. Moore married Martha Withers. Her father, Gen. W. T. Withers, late of Lexington, was noted in trotting circles, and his old home, Fair Lawn, is at the head of North Broadway. He came to Kentucky from a Mississippi plantation. General Withers owned Admont, Aberdeen and Happy Medium, all great trotting horses, two of which remained on his farm and after his death Aberdeen was sold. General Withers during his life issued an annual catalog of his horses. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have two sons and two daughters. Their daughter Virginia is the wife of Adolphus Rice, a native of Harlan, Kentucky, where his father was a banker, and Adolphus for a number of years was connected with the National City Bank in New York City and is now manager of its branch at Pernambuco, Brazil. Miss Ida Harrison Moore is at home. William Temple is a graduate of Transylvania University, a practicing attorney at Gulf Port, Mississippi, and married Miss Bell, of Mississippi. Charles Whitney Moore, Jr., now associated in business with his father, spent eighteen months in France as a member of the Three Hundred and Twenty-sixth Field Artillery.

J. D. AND T. B. CARR are the joint owners and proprietors of Cresswood Stock Farm, and personally and through their establishment have achieved a splendid reputation among American thoroughbred horse men, and some of Kentucky's finest thoroughbreds have been associated in some part of their career with Cresswood.

This noted stock farm of Fayette County is six and three quarters of a mile northwest of Lexington, on Spurr Pike. The farm itself comprises 517 acres in one body of as beautiful and fertile blue grass land as could be found anywhere in the state. With such a large body of land the business is obviously one of general farming, but the specialty for a number of years of Carr Brothers has been the breeding and raising of thoroughbreds, a business with which their name has been associated for thirty years. They sell much of their stock as yearlings at the Saratoga market, and the products of Cresswood Stock Farm commands a premium and an enhanced value because of the widely known reputation of the Carr Brothers. The brothers keep about fifty thoroughbred animals on the farm and send about fifteen to market each year. Another feature of their business is boarding horses for other breeders, and they have handled a large number of brood mares and track horses for other owners. For two years the head of the Cresswood stud was Rockview, one of Major Belmont's famous horses from Nursery Stud. Carr Brothers sold Rockview to A. B. Hancock, of Paris, Kentucky, and he is still on the Hancock farm and one of his yearlings recently sold for $14,000. The successor of Rockview and the leading sire at Cresswood is Delhi, who under the Keene colors won $116,000, more money than any other son of Ben Brush, his sire. This animal is owned by J. D. Carr and Thomas Piatt. In sales the Carr Brothers have stood as high as any other breeders in the state. They have never gone into racing, and they have developed a business that was never on a better financial basis than at present.

Both the Carr brothers were born in Fayette County. They are sons of Thomas D. and Sarah E. (Clark) Carr. Their grandfather was named Thomas Carr, son of Charles Carr, and both spent their lives near Walnut Hill, Charles dying at the age of ninety-two. Thomas Carr married Nancy, daughter of General James Dudley, the hero of the War of 1812, who lived to the age of ninety-two. Thomas D. Carr moved to what is now the Cresswood Stock Farm in 1884, and lived here until his death, about ten years ago. He was a general farmer and at one time deputy sheriff of the county. His wife, Sarah, was a daughter of Enoch Clark of New Jersey, who in company with David A. Sayre came from St. Louis to Lexington. Enoch Clark was a carriage maker in Lexington, while his companion became a banker. Enoch Clark achieved wealth, was owner of much valuable city property, and died when about eighty years of age. His carriage business was continued by his son August Clark until he died. Enoch Clark married Judith Duerson, of Virginia, and she died soon after him. Sarah E. Carr was reared in Lexington and is the mother of three children, John Dudley, Thomas B. and Nancy Cobb. The daughter is the wife of Thomas Piatt, living on a farm adjoining Cresswood, and also a well known Kentucky horseman.

J. D. and T. B. Carr have never been in politics, being democratic voters only. J. D. Carr is a bachelor, while Thomas B. married Mary Banks Brooks. The residence on Cresswood Stock Farm is a modern brick home, erected about ten years ago, and is one of the most attractive in that section of Fayette County.

JOSEPH H. LANE. Even a cursory survey of the farm estate of Mr. Lane on the Clay's Mill Turnpike in Jessamine County, eight miles south of the City of Lexington, reveals that he is an able and progressive representative of agricultural and livestock industry in this favored section of his native state. He was born at Harrodsburg, judicial center of Mercer County, Kentucky, on the 25th of January, 1845, and though he has now passed the psalmist's span of three score years and ten he retains marked mental and physical energy and finds satisfaction in giving close personal supervision to the varied activities of his farm. He is a son of Dr. Joseph Lane, who was born in the City of Dublin, Ireland, and who was a boy when he accompanied his widowed mother to America. They remained for an interval in the Dominion of Canada, but soon made their way to Kentucky. Here he was reared to manhood, and after preparing himself thoroughly for the medical profession he was for thirty years engaged in active general practice at Lawrenceburg, Anderson, County, though at the time of the Civil war local prejudice caused him to leave the state, Union sympathizers having criticized him and subjected him to indignities by reason of the fact that two of his sons entered the Confederate service. He was imprisoned for a time, and upon his release he went to Terre Haute, Indiana, where he continued in the successful practice of his profession until his death, about ten years later. His wife, whose maiden name was Malonia Vaughn, died at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, at the time of the Civil war. Of the children three sons and four daughters attained to maturity, two sons being Frank and Joseph H. The sisters all died in young womanhood, two of them having married and one, Nettie (Mrs. Utz), having formerly resided in the City of Chicago, but is now a resident of the State of Texas, her children being three in number. Frank Lane was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, in which he served as a member of the Second Kentucky Infantry. He was captured at Fort Donelson, but was soon afterward exchanged, and he resumed his place with his regiment. He was wounded while participating in the Battle of Murfreesboro, and also in the Battle of Peach Tree Creek, and his injuries caused minor disability during the remainder of his life. He was with his regiment in the command of General Johnston at the time of that officer's surrender. He was colorbearer of his regiment, and thus was in the thick of the fray in all engagements in which the command participated during his tenure of this position. After the war he married Miss Alice Bradley, but they had no children. He was for some time engaged in the retail grocery business, first at Frankfort and later at Midway, but he died in the state of Florida when but fifty-four years of age.

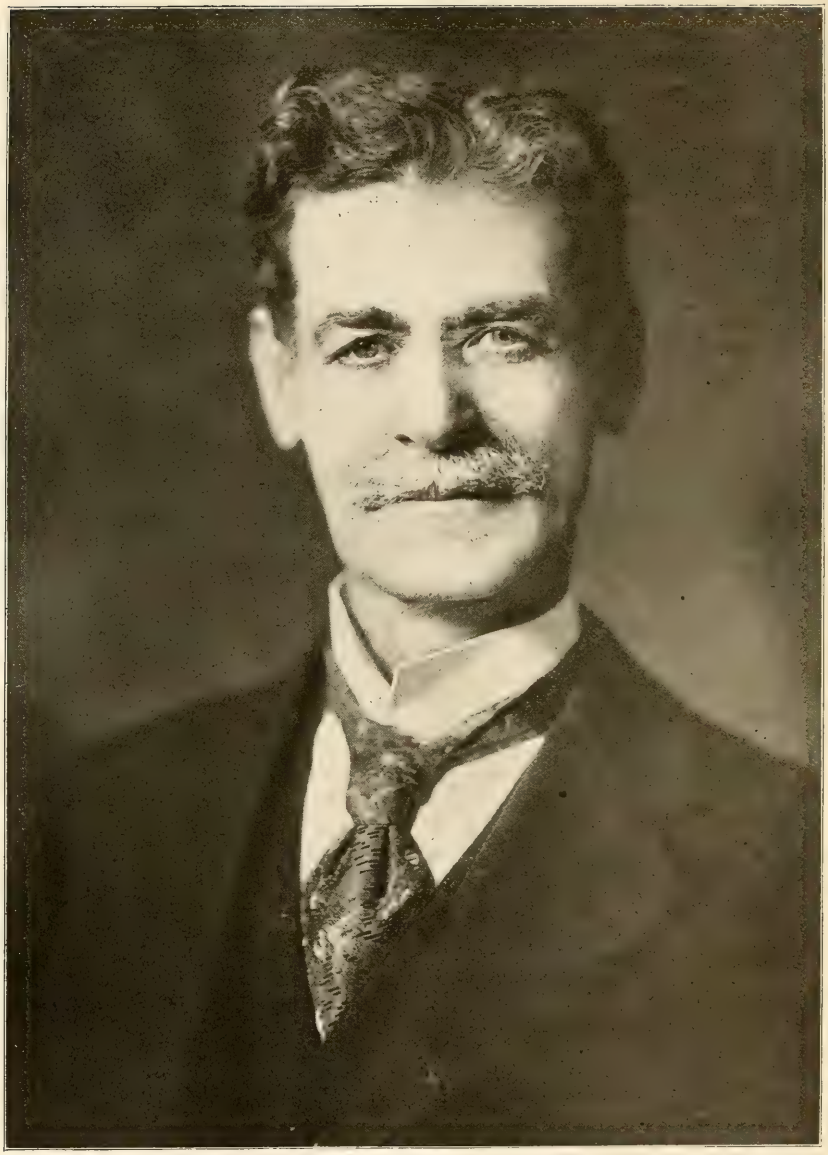
Joseph H. Lane was reared principally at Lawrenceburg and was afforded good educational advantages in his youth. When the Civil war was precipitated he could not long restrain definite expression of his loyalty to the cause of the Confederacy, and in 1862 he enlisted in the command of General John Morgan, the famous Confederate raider. In an Ohio raid Mr. Lane was captured by the enemy, July 18, 1863, and he was thereafter held a prisoner of war at Camp Douglas, in the City of Chicago, until February, 1865, when his exchange was effected and he was enabled to rejoin his regiment, which was at that time under command of General Basil Duke, the gallant General Morgan having met death in battle. After the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox the cavalry regiment of which Mr. Lane was a member succeeded in making its way in North Carolina, the hope being to join and reinforce the command of General Johnston, but that officer surrendered before the Kentucky regiment arrived.

After the close of the war Mr. Lane was associated with farm enterprise in Woodford County about six years, and he thereafter was a clerk in his brother's grocery store at Frankfort until the time of his marriage, February 25, 1875, to Miss Mattie Barkley. In the following year he removed with his bride to Jessamine County and established his residence on his present farm, the old homestead of his wife's father, the late William Barkley. The place had at that time been in possession of representatives of the Barkley family for more than a century. On this farm the original dwelling of Mr. and Mrs. Lane was a house on the Harrodsburg Turnpike, about one mile distant from the present place of residence. Mrs. Lane had received a tract of 131 acres as a hertiage from her father, and the old house which was the original family home figured as one of the landmarks of this section of the state. In this dwelling Mrs. Patsy Barkley, grandmother of Mrs. Lane, died when more than 100 years of age.

While continuing his residence on the farm Mr. Lane conducted for a period of twelve years a grocery store at South Elkhorn, two miles distant, and for six years thereafter he was engaged in the same line of business in the City of Lexington. In 1898 he returned to the farm, where he has since remained and where he has carried on successful operations as an agriculturist and stock-grower, besides which he was for a number of years a breeder of fine trotting horses, a number of which he exploited in turf events. Mr. Lane is a stalwart in the camp of the democratic party, and is actively affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans, through the medium of which he has kept in touch with his old comrades in arms and vitalized the more gracious memories of his military career. He and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church at South Elkhorn. Mr. and Mrs. Lane have two children: Frank, a bachelor, remains at the parental home and has active charge of the farm. Margaret is the widow of William Lafayette Sickles, a representative of the same family as was General Sickles, a distinguished officer in the Civil war. William L. Sickles was chief clerk in the offices of the Chicago & Alton Railroad in the City of Chicago at the time of his death, in 1906, and his widow now resides at the old home. Their only child, Lane Barkley Sickles, nineteen years of age (1920) volunteered for service in the United States Navy and was assigned to duty on the flagship Pennsylvania, on which he continues to serve at the time of this writing.

To William L. Barkley, father of Mrs. Lane, a memorial tribute is paid in the following biography.



William L. Barkley was one of the venerable native sons of Jessamine County at the time of his death and was an honored representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of this county. Here he was born on the 10th of January, 1811, and here his death occurred in 1886, when he was seventy-five years of age, his wife likewise having been seventy-five years of age at the time of death.

Mr. Barkley was a son of George Barkley, who was born in Jessamine County on the 7th of December, 1782, a son of John Barkley, who was numbered among the earliest settlers in this section of the state. George Barkley married Miss Martha E. Higbee, who was born January 13, 1780, a daughter of John H. Higbee, who built and operated one of the early saw mills and pioneer distilleries at South Elkhorn, Fayette County. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. George Barkley was solemnized in 1806, and he was but thirty-three years of age at the time of his death. His youthful widow remained on the home farm and reared her four children with the utmost maternal devotion, the two sons having been John K. and William L. Margaret, the elder daughter, became the wife of William Clark, who was engaged in the practice of law at Nicholasville for a number of years and who later resided on his large and valuable farm on the Nicholasville Turnpike, in Jessamine County, where his death occurred, his widow having passed the closing period of her life in the City of Louisville. Mary, the younger daughter, became the wife of John Lafon, a substantial farmer of Jessamine County, and she was sixty years of age at the time of her death.

John Barkley, the elder son, maintained his home at Danville and as president of the Southern Railroad, passing through that city, he was instrumental in having the fine towers erected at the high bridge over the Kentucky River where crossed by the line of this railway. He was in middle life at the time of his death, he having been killed in a runaway accident while driving a spirited team. His son William resides in the City of Louisville, and his daughter Mary became the wife of Rev. William Brown, a Presbyterian clergyman in that city.

Mrs. Martha E. (Higbee) Barkley had come as a bride to the farm now owned by her granddaughter, the wife of Joseph H. Lane, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this publication, and after the death of her husband she erected the fine old house which still adorns the homestead, the closing years of her life, however, having been passed in the home of her son William L., who then resided on the Harrodsburg Turnpike in Jessamine County. Mrs. Barkley, a gracious gentlewoman who was revered by all who knew her, passed to the life eternal at the venerable age of eighty-two years. On the walls of one of the rooms in the house which she erected, as above noted, there hangs an oil portrait of her when she was somewhat more than forty years of age, and it is needless to say that the same is treasured by her granddaughter, Mrs. Lane.

William L. Barkley was reared and educated in his native county and as a young man he wedded Miss Adaline Stout, a daughter of David R. and Delilah (Higbee) Stout, her mother having been a daughter of John H. Higbee, mentioned in a preceding paragraph. In addition to his successful association with farm industry, Mr. Barkley operated a distillery and powder mill at South Elkhorn in Fayette County. He divided his estate of 600 acres among his children, but retained 300 acres in the home farm, on which he and his wife resided at the time of their deaths. Of their children the eldest is Martha, wife of Joseph H. Lane, who is the subject of a personal sketch on other pages; Margaret C. is the widow of John Steele and resides at Nicholasville; John is a prosperous farmer in the State of Oklahoma, near Paden, and his property is well within the oil district in that section of the state; Ada became the wife of Dr. F. O. Young, of Lexington, and died at the age of fifty-one years; Eugenia.

J. T. Jackson, the wife of George Hutchison, died at the age of forty-five years; William L., Jr., who was fifty years of age at the time of his death, married Miss Prue Blackburn, who survives him, as do also their three children, Ada Belle, Louise C., and Steele.

Reverting to the genealogy of the Barkley family, it is to be recorded that John Barkley, the Kentucky pioneer, was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1747. Upon coming to America he first located in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, whence in 1798 he removed to Buckingham County, Virginia, and it was about the opening of the nineteenth century that he settled in Jessamine County, Kentucky, where he remained until his death, July 23, 1828. The maiden name of his wife was Susannah Lucas. Their son Samuel was born in 1776 and came to Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1804, in which year was here solemnized his marriage to Miss Jane Singleton, a daughter of Moses Singleton, who was another of the honored pioneers of this section of the state.

George Rowe Smith, who in a few years has gained a creditable position in the Lexington bar, started his career as a coal miner, following that occupation while paying his way through college and university.

He was born at Central City, Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, January 16, 1890, a son of George and Martha E. (Rowe) Smith, residents of Central City. His father was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, was educated in Edinburgh College, learned the art of sculpture, and was twenty-two years of age when he came to the United States. His home has been at Central City, Kentucky, since 1885, and he is still engaged as a farmer and merchant. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church and in politics a republican. Martha E. Rowe was born in Ohio County, Kentucky. She is the mother of six children: Helen D., wife of John Neil; Mabel, wife of Victor Lawton; Henry, who died in infancy; George R.; Emma, wife of A. B. Christian; and Martha M., wife of A. B. Hotchkiss.

George R. Smith during his boyhood at Central City attended public schools. His father was not a man of wealth and he could not command the funds to take him regularly through college. At the age of fifteen he went to work as a coal miner, and continued at intervals in that work until he was past twenty. While in the mines he utilized all his spare time in study, and his example was not only profitable to himself but inspired an ambition for learning in some of his fellow workmen as well. As a coal miner he paid his way through the University of Kentucky, maintaining a high standing in his classes and taking a part in athletic affairs as well. He graduated in 1915 with the LL. B. degree, and since then has been in active practice at Lexington. He is a member of the law firm Smith & Reynolds, with offices in the Trust Building.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Lexington Bar Association and the Kentucky Bar Association, is a democrat, and is affiliated with Central City Lodge No. 673, F. & A. M., and the Knights of Pythias.

November 27, 1915, he married Ella M. Clark, a native of Rockcastle County, Kentucky, oldest of the six children, five of whom are still living, of Granville W. and Maggie (Ballard) Clark. Her father is a Fayette County farmer, a member of the Christian Church and in politics a republican.

J. T. Jackson. A third of a century ago J. T. Jackson made his first modest effort as a retail lumber merchant at Lexington. He is one of the oldest lumber dealers in the state and his personal energies have been the means of broadening his business until it is now conducted on a large scale, involving manufacturing as well as distributing facilities, and also a complete organization for contracting and building.

For the past six years it has been conducted as the J. T. Jackson Lumber Company, of which Mr. Jackson is practically the sole owner. He began business in 1888. The facilities now include planing mills for the manufacture of all interior finish, moldings, sash and door and other lines of mill work. He handles all grades of lumber and builders' supplies. The business has $125,000 invested, and the range of its service and activities covers all the Blue Grass country.

J. T. Jackson was born in Bullitt County, Kentucky, December 11, 1863. His grandfather, John Jackson, was a Virginian who settled at an early day in Shelby County, Kentucky, and was a farmer in Shelby, Spencer and Bullitt counties, dying in the latter county. His son, James William Jackson, was a native of Shelby County and succeeded to the ownership of the old Bullitt County homestead. James W. Jackson died when past eighty. His wife, Sarah Holloway, was a native of Spencer County, Kentucky, and died in middle years.

J. T. Jackson grew up on a farm and lived there until he was about twenty-five years of age. He finished his education in Transylvania University, which he attended in 1883-84. He was on the farm until 1888, when he came to Lexington and opened a small lumber yard on West Short Street. He continued in business at that location for twenty-five years, but in the meantime had secured the grounds where his present plant is located. For several years past a large part of his business has been contracting. He is the contractor for the new boys' dormitory of the University of Kentucky. His building superintendent is H. G. Garner, a civil engineer. Mr. Jackson keeps from twenty to sixty men employed in his business.

At one time he served as a member of the board of education, and is a substantial citizen whose interests go out to every worthy enterprise in Lexington or his state. He is a deacon of the Central Christian Church. At the age of twenty-three Mr. Jackson married Sallie Hughes, of Frankfort, who died leaving two sons: William Hughes, now a lumber dealer at Danville, Kentucky, and J. T., Jr., associated with his father's office. Mr. Jackson married for his second wife Margaret Sellier, of Lexington, and they have one daughter, Elizabeth Holloway, now a student in the University of Kentucky.

Grover Cleveland Thompson, who was an educator before he was a lawyer, has for eight years given his undivided time to the practice of his profession at Lexington as a member of the firm of Thompson & Thompson in the Fayette National Bank Building. His earlier associations were with Lawrence County, Kentucky, where the Thompsons have been a prominent family for several generations. His grandfather, John Thompson, was a son of Martin Thompson, Jr., who was also born in Lawrence County. Martin Thompson, Jr., was a son of Martin Thompson, Sr., who settled in Lawrence County, near Yatesville, about 1800, having come from Wise County, Virginia. John Thompson was second lieutenant in the Forty-fifth Kentucky Volunteers of the Union Army, served two terms as sheriff of Lawrence County and was one of the influential democrats of that section. During his time a school was established at Caney Fork, and in that old schoolhouse Grover C. Thompson and his three brothers, Linzy, Leo and Earl, all had their first experience as teachers. John Thompson died in 1904, at the age of seventy-seven. He was the father of eleven children.

Of these the fourth in age is James Franklin Thompson, who was born in Lawrence County, July 25, 1860. He married Amanda Watson, who was born August 17, 1865. James Franklin Thompson acquired a public school education and was successfully engaged in farming and stock raising until 1918, when he retired and is now living at Ashland, Kentucky. For four terms or sixteen years he served as deputy county clerk. He is a democrat and an Odd Fellow. He and his wife had eleven children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are: Linzy O., senior member of the law firm of Thompson & Thompson at Lexington and a special agent of the United States Department of Justice; Grover C.; Everett S., who lives at Ashland, Kentucky; Leo, who was a teacher and at the time of his death, at the age of twenty-three, was a student of Kentucky University; Earl D., a resident of Akron, Ohio; Dewey, of Ashland; Ruth, Eunice and Kermit, still at home.

Grover Cleveland Thompson was born in Lawrence County, on his father's farm, January 10, 1885, soon after the first election of Grover Cleveland to the Presidency. After attending local schools he was a student in the Normal School at Blaine, Kentucky, attended a business college at Cincinnati, Ohio, and then entered the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from which he received his Bachelor of Science degree in 1907. He taught three terms in his native county and from 1907 to 1909 was principal of the high school at Gilbert, Louisiana, and then completed his law studies in Kentucky University, graduating with the degree of LL. B. in 1910 and being admitted to the Fayette County bar and before the Kentucky Court of Appeals in June of the same year. However, for three years more he continued his work as an educator, being principal of the high school at Waynesboro, Mississippi, two years, and principal of the high school at Brooksville, Mississippi, one year. In 1913 he located at Lexington, and has since been associated in practice with his brother Linzy. So far he has sought no political responsibilities or distinctions and has given all his time to his profession. He is a member of the Lexington Bar Association, the Kentucky State Bar Association, the Commercial Law League of America and the American Bar Association. He is a democrat, and a member of Immanuel Baptist Church.

May 19, 1909, he married Virginia Lee Gill, also a teacher, who was born at Clinton, Mississippi, a daughter of Charles and Mittie (Lee) Gill. Her parents are native Mississippians and living. Mrs. Thompson is the second of their eight children, three of whom are still living, William J. Gill being superintendent of the Louisiana Training Institute at Monroe, Louisiana, and the younger brother, D. D. Gill, being a physician at Gilbert, Louisiana. Her father is now a retired farmer at Gilbert, Louisiana, and is mayor of Gilbert. He is a democrat and a Baptist. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have one son, Grover C., Jr., who was born March 19, 1911, at Gilbert, Louisiana.

Charles Israel Stewart, general manager of the Lexington Herald, was born at Bunn's Level, Harnett County, North Carolina, May 14, 1869. He is the son of James B. and Mary Anne Byrd Stewart. His father, who was a farmer, country merchant and ginner, died when the son was two years old, and his mother died when he was ten. After his tenth year he was brought up in the family of an uncle, John D. Pegram. He attended local schools, Jonesboro High School and Buie's Creek Academy. At the age of eighteen he became a country school teacher, and a little more than a year later became a partner in the publication of the first newspaper ever printed in his native county. He and his partner purchased and installed the first printing office in the county. For the last half of 1889 he was employed on the Twin City Daily, now the Sentinel, of Winston-Salem. In January, 1890, he went to Charlotte as a reporter on the Chronicle, now the Observer. In August of that year he went to Roanoke, Virginia, as a reporter for the Times. He lived in Roanoke for the greater part of the period, from August, 1890, to April, 1897. He spent the greater part of 1892 in Winston-Salem on the Sentinel and in Washington as correspondent for a number of North Carolina papers. In Roanoke he served as news editor of the Times and as editor of the Evening World. He went to Kentucky in April, 1897, when the Louisville Dispatch was established, becoming managing editor. He was appointed editor of that paper in 1899, and for the last few months of its existence was editor and manager. In the spring of 1900, after the suspension of the Dispatch, he was employed as editorial writer on the Louisville Evening Post, serving in that capacity for two years. He was night editor and managing editor of the Louisville Herald for a year, and was for a year on the editorial staff of the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Mr. Stewart left the Ledger in 1905 to become associated with the Lexington Herald, remaining here until November, 1909, when he went to Enid, Oklahoma. He published the Enid Morning News for nearly six years and returned to the Herald in 1916. He planned and supervised the erection of the Herald Building and purchased and supervised the installation of the Herald plant. During the greater part of his association with the Herald he has had supervision of all departments and contributed to its editorial columns. He directed the Herald's handling of the Peace Conference and wrote a weekly analysis of the progress of the conference. He is the author of a short catechism on the Covenant of the League of Nations that was used extensively as a campaign document in the presidential campaign of 1920.

On January 11, 1910, he married Margaret O'Brien, daughter of Patrick O'Brien and a native of Clark County, Kentucky. They have three children, Charles Thomas, Mary Carolyn and Margaret O'Brien. Mr. Stewart is a Rotarian, a Fourth Degree Knight of Columbus, president of the Lexington Associated Charities, a director of the Lexington Board of Commerce, member of the Paper Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, chairman of the Paper Committee, and first vice president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association. He will probably be elected president of the latter organization at its annual meeting in the summer of 1922.

Richard Baylor Hickman, of the Baylor Hickman & Company and the Ewald Iron Company, of Louisville, has given most of the years of his active life to the iron business, both as a manufacturer and merchant. He is one of Kentucky's foremost business men, and his enterprise has been reflected in many public activities. During the World war he was a commissioned officer of the Red Cross abroad, and served the Government in several important confidential capacities.

Mr. Hickman was born at Elkton, Todd County, Kentucky, November 12, 1865, a son of Lawson B. and Georgeann (Baylor) Hickman. The Hickman family has been in Kentucky for considerably more than a century. His father was born in Fayette County in 1816, and was educated for medicine at Philadelphia. He practiced for many years, and in 1870, when his son was five years of age, located at Hopkinsville. His prominence in the profession is indicated by the fact that at one time he served as president of the Kentucky State Medical Association. A large part of his work in his profession was done gratuitously, especially among the poor. He was ardently devoted to his work, without considering its financial rewards. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, attended the Presbyterian Church, and was a democrat in politics. He died in 1891. His wife was born in 1821, in Logan County, Kentucky, and died December 10, 1918, when within three years of the century mark. Of her thirteen children Baylor is the youngest, and only two others are now living.

Baylor Hickman was educated in a private military school, and at the age of sixteen began his working career in a tobacco factory at 50 cents a day. The opening for a permanent career came at the age of nineteen when he joined the R. L. Coleman Company, pig iron manufacturers and dealers at St. Louis. He was with that firm about three years, and for a similar time with Hall Brothers, pig iron dealers at Louisville. After that experience he entered the business for himself under the firm name of Hickman, Cousen Company. After the death of Mr. Cousen in 1891 Mr. Hickman organized the Hickman-Williams Company, and was its president until 1913, when he resigned his office and sold most of his stock in the concern. He then bought the Ewald Iron Company, and has since been president of this organization. The Ewald Iron Company are iron manufacturers, specializing in the product widely known as Tennessee Charcoal Bloom Iron, a product familiar to the iron industry since 1844. Mr. Hickman is owner of the business known as Baylor Hickman & Company, dealers in pig iron, coke and other metals. He is also a director of the National Bank of Kentucky and president of the Pittsburgh Fuel Company.

He is a former president of the Pendennis Club of Louisville, serving in that office two terms, is a member of the Louisville Country Club, the River Valley Club, the Chess and Whist Club, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Louisville Lodge of Elks. He is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church and a democrat in politics.

On March 21, 1888, Mr. Hickman married Stannye Ormsby, a native of Jefferson County, Kentucky, and daughter of Benson and Eustasia (Cates) Ormsby, both natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Hickman was the second of five daughters. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hickman. The first died in infancy; Helen C., the second, is the wife of Clifton Rodes, of Glenview, Kentucky, and they have a daughter, Stannye Baylor Rodes; the third child, Stannye, died in infancy; Mary Lee is the wife of Charles S. Blakley, an officer in the United States Army now stationed at Fort Leavenworth, and they have a daughter, Stannye Ormsby Hickman Blakley. The son, Baylor Ormsby Hickman, was educated in the St. Paul School at Concord, New Hampshire, and later attended Yale University and then became associated with his father as vice president and engineer of tests in the iron industry. In 1917 he enlisted in the Marine Aviation Corps, was trained at the Boston School of Technology and at Miami, Florida, and was in the service until the close of the war. The younger child, William Ormsby, died at the age of sixteen, in 1916.

Mr. Hickman gave little thought to his private business affairs during America's participation in the World war. He was especially interested in the work of the Red Cross. While at Washington and as the result of an interview with Mr. H. P. Davison, chairman of the Council of the Red Cross, he secured permission for his two daughters to establish at Louisville the first Red Cross lunch room in the United States. His daughters made a conspicuous success of this patriotic venture, and were able to turn over to the Red Cross treasury about a thousand dollars profit every month of operation. In July, 1918, Mr. Hickman went overseas with a congressional committee for the purpose of getting special information for the use of the United States Government. During this trip he was at the battle front of the American army. Later in the same year he again returned to Paris, and was commissioned a captain in the Red Cross and remained in that service overseas until the signing of the armistice.

Mr. Hickman's home is at Glenview, formerly the Glenview Stock Farm, nine miles from Louisville. It is one of the most attractive homes of Jefferson County.

Emmett M. Dickson, who is engaged in the practice of his profession at Paris, judicial center of Bourbon County, has secured status as one of the representative members of the bar of Central Kentucky, and in his career he has achieved high reputation as a vigorous and resourceful trial lawyer and well-fortified counsellor. Mr. Dickson is a scion of patrician Southern stock, the Dickson family having been founded in North Carolina in the Colonial period of our national history and representatives of the name having later become prominently and influentially concerned with the settlement and the civic and material progress of the State of Tennessee, where the County of Dixon was named in honor of the family. The paternal great-grandparents of the subject of this review were numbered among the pioneers of what is now Dickson County, Tennessee, where the grandsire became a pioneer physician and surgeon and a citizen of prominence in community and general public affairs.

He whose name initiates this sketch was born in Tipton County, Tennessee, on the 21st of July, 1856, and is a son of Rev. Joseph A. Dickson, D. D., who likewise was born in Tennessee and who became a distinguished clergyman of the Presbyterian Church. In 1871 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Millersburg, Bourbon County, Kentucky, where he continued his earnest and effective service for twelve years. He then accepted the call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and he passed the final period of his long and gracious life in the home of his son, Emmett M., of this review. He was born September 9, 1835, and passed to the life eternal on the 18th of June, 1910,—a man who had labored long and earnestly in the vineyard of the Divine Master and who was revered by all who came within the sphere of his influence. Doctor Dickson had first prepared himself for the legal profession, and prior to his marriage had engaged in the practice of law at Covington, judicial center of Tipton County, Tennessee. His deep religious convictions and fervent zeal later led him to consecrate his life to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, which he honored alike by his ability and his worthy service. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Catherine McCain, was born in Tipton County, Tennessee, where she was reared and educated. In her gentle and kindly life she most effectively supplemented the earnest pastoral service of her husband, and she died at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, in 1892, her birth having occurred in 1837. Of the surviving children it may be recorded that Charles B. Dickson, D. D. S., is engaged in the practice of his profession at Ashland, Kentucky; that May is the wife of Wilbur Garvin, of Lawton, Oklahoma; and that Emmett M., of this review, is the eldest of the number.

Emmett M. Dickson was afforded the advantages of the Kentucky Wesleyan College at Millersburg, in which he completed a preparatory course, and thereafter he entered historic Hampden-Sidney College in Virginia, in which he completed the classical course. Thereafter he read law in the office and under the perceptorship of his uncle, W. S. McCain, a leading member of the bar of Little Rock, Arkansas, and upon his return to Kentucky he was admitted to the bar at Paris, Bourbon County, in the year 1876. He has here continued in active general practice during the long intervening years, and is now one of the honored and veteran members of the bar of Bourbon County. His first professional coadjutor was Judge John A. Prall, and their partnership alliance continued about four years—until the death of Judge Prall. Thereafter Mr. Dickson was associated in practice with Judge Quincy Ward until the latter's death in 1890. Since that time Mr. Dickson has continued in the individual practice of his profession, in which he has appeared in connection with much important litigation in the courts of this section of the state. He has been for a quarter of a century attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and has had charge of much of its legal business throughout Central and Eastern Kentucky. Mr. Dickson appeared as attorney for the contestants in the celebrated Renick will case in Clark County, and in this cause he was associated with a number of other leading attorneys of the state, the while the opposition arrayed an equally strong corps of representative lawyers. Another important will case with which Mr. Dickson was identified in a professional way was that of the estate of Thomas Woodford, of Bourbon County, Hon. Joseph Blackburn and other distinguished Kentucky lawyers having likewise been identified with this case.

Though he has been unwavering in his allegiance to and the work of his profession, the civic loyalty and public spirit of Mr. Dickson were shown effectively during his service as representative of Bourbon County in the State Legislature in the sessions of 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1895. He has proved a staunch and effective advocate of the principles of the democratic party, in behalf of which he has been a resourceful public speaker in many spirited campaigns. For three years he gave characteristically effective service as master commissioner of the Bourbon County Circuit Court. He and his wife are earnest and zealous members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

In June, 1880, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dickson to Miss Mary Blanton, daughter of Rev. L. H. Blanton, D. D., chancellor of Central University and a brother of the late Prof. Joseph Blanton. Mrs. Dickson was afforded the advantages of Miss Baldwin's Seminary for young women at Staunton, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Dickson have but one child, Lizette, wife of Durand Whipple, who is a leading lawyer at Little Rock, Arkansas, and who served two years in France as judge advocate general for the American Expeditionary Forces in the late World war.

Charles C. Stoll. In the forty years since he graduated from high school at Louisville, Mr. Stoll has concentrated his energies on one line of business, oil, acquired his early training and knowledge through a number of years of association with the Standard Oil Company, but for a quarter of a century has been an independent dealer and refiner. He built up the business individually, but in later years has had the good fortune to associate with him his four sons. The Stoll Oil Refining Company at Louisville is therefore a family business, Mr. Stoll and his sons being all actively associated with the management.

Mr. Stoll was born at Louisville April 23, 1861, son of C. Christian and Elizabeth (Acker) Stoll. His parents established a home at Louisville in 1840, and his father for many years was a fruit and vegetable merchant. Charles C. Stoll graduated from the Louisville Male High School in 1880, and the next year entered the service of the Standard Oil Company. He received many promotions in the Southern branches of that corporation, and was in the service altogether fifteen years.

In 1896 he organized an independent oil company known as the Charles C. Stoll Oil Company, and from year to year extended his trade facilities and connections over a large district around Louisville. In 1917 the Stoll Oil Refining Company was incorporated, with $500,000 of capital. The company maintains a refinery at Louisville, and manufactures a varied line of petroleum products and has distributing branches and agencies throughout Kentucky and other states. Mr. C. C. Stoll is president, and his four sons are George Stoll, vice president; Berry V. Stoll, vice president; William A. Stoll, treasurer; Charles E. Stoll, assistant secretary, while Albert S. Prinz is secretary of the corporation. The son, George J. Stoll, married Lorena Johanbeke, and Mr. Stoll has two grandsons, Charles W. and George Junior.

One of the successful business men of Louisville, Mr. Stoll is also one of the very generous and public-spirited citizens. At one time he was president of the Citizens League, was a member of the Board of Public Works under Mayor Grinstead, is a trustee of the University of Louisville, was the founder and first president of the Churchman's Federation of Louisville, was one of the organizers and is a trustee of Lincoln Institute, and is a member of the Louisville Industrial Foundation. He is also actively identified with the Board of Trade and other organizations.

Arthur Krock. Some of the larger responsibilities and some of the distinctive achievements of the "fourth estate" are properly credited to Arthur Krock. He began his career in 1906, fifteen years ago, as a police reporter at Louisville. By 1908 he had become night editor of the Associated Press at Louisville. Every successful newspaper man covets the honor and experience of Washington correspondent, and he held that post for the Louisville Times in 1909 and in 1911 for the Courier-Journal. After six years at the source of national political news Mr. Krock returned to Louisville in 1915 as editorial manager for the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times. Since then he has done much to shape the editorial and news policies of those two great papers. He is a director of both papers, and since April, 1919, has been editor-in-chief of the Times.

Mr. Krock was one of the American journalists who went to Paris at the time of the Peace Conference in 1918-19, and while there contributed a number of syndicated articles to the American press. It is significant of his standing as a journalist and his forcefulness in getting things done that he was selected as one of the three American members of the Inter-Allied Press Committee of fourteen which prevailed upon the Peace Conference to adopt a policy of open sessions.

In 1920 Mr. Krock, at the personal request of Governor James Cox, was chosen first assistant to the chairman of the National Democratic Campaign at the democratic headquarters. Mr. Krock is a member of the Associated Press for the Louisville Times, is a member of the Delta Sigma fraternity, the Pendennis and Country clubs of Louisville, and the Gridiron Club of Washington.

On April 22, 1911, he married Marguerite Polleys, of St. Paul, Minnesota. She was born at Madison, Wisconsin, a daughter of Thomas A. and Louisa (Ashby) Polleys, her father a native of Trempealeau, Wisconsin, and her mother of Newburg, New York. Her parents are still living. Her father is tax commissioner for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company. Mrs. Krock is the only child of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Krock have one son, Thomas Polleys Krock, who was born at Washington, D. C., January 21, 1912.

Arthur Krock has spent most of his life in Kentucky, and until he began his career as a newspaper man his home was chiefly at Glasgow, Kentucky, where his grandfather, a pioneer merchant, located early in the 19th century. He was born November 16, 1886, a son of Joseph and Caroline (Morris) Krock. He completed his education in the Lewis Institute of Chicago, where he received a diploma as Associate in Arts in 1906. Joseph Krock, his father, was born in New York City May 17, 1859, while the mother was born in Kentucky November 25, 1864. They were married August 11, 1885, and Arthur is their only child. Joseph Krock was educated in New York, and in 1884 moved to Louisville and subsequently lived in Chicago, Illinois. He has been an accountant all his life.

Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Wilson
Log House and Present Residence

Martin Golden Wilson, than whom there is no citizen better and more favorably known in Daviess County, is a native son of Kentucky. He was born in Bath County July 29, 1847, a son of James and Polly Ann (Golden) Wilson, both of whom were born in Virginia, but were married in Kentucky. Mr. Wilson's paternal grandfather, Uriah Wilson, was a pioneer settler in Bath County, Kentucky, but after living a few years in that county he removed to Owen County, and there continued to reside until his death. In his day he took a prominent part in the Indian warfare, for the Indians were so savage that when he first came to Kentucky he and his family had to live in the fort at Lexington for a time. The Wilsons have been noted for their longevity, but Mr. Wilson's father, who was a strong southern sympathizer, ardently espousing the cause of the Confederacy, was killed in 1861, when he was but forty-two years of age, on account of his outspoken views with reference to the war. His wife died in 1862. They had three sons, Martin Golden, William Henry and James Uriah, and one daughter, Rachel F. Wilson. The mother of these children was the father's second wife. By his first marriage he was the father of two daughters. By occupation he was a farmer, and resided in Owen County.

It was in Owen County that Martin G. Wilson was reared, and there he lived until he was thirty years of age, working as a farm hand. He also worked as such in Indiana and Missouri, sometimes not receiving more than $10 a month and his board. On March 10, 1878, Mr. Wilson was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Mullen Fightmaster, the ceremony being performed in Scott County, Kentucky. They were very poor and in debt to the amount of $600. Realizing that if they were to make good in life it would be best to strike out, and this brave young couple left Scott County on March 28, 1878, and eighteen days after they were married they reached a log cabin in the woods in Daviess County which stood on a farm now owned by Mr. Wilson. This cabin still stands, and Mr. Wilson intends that it be preserved as long as any of its timbers hold together, as a memorial of the early days of struggle and accomplishment. When they came here Mr. Wilson had a three year lease on 120 acres of land, of which only twenty-five acres had been cleared. Two years later, he bought this tract of land. He toiled unceasingly, only stopping long enough to secure a modicum of sleep, food and to keep the Sabbath, and gradually cleared the land of the dense forest. In those days the only method for draining the land was with ditches, and he dug the necessary ones, later putting in tiling, and placed it in a high state of cultivation. Not only did he improve his original farm, but other land which he later purchased, as his means permitted, until his homestead now includes 320 acres, which is in as fine an agricultural district as Kentucky affords. He has truly been a developer of farm lands, for in addition to his home farm he owns so much land as to be entitled to a place among the most extensive farmers of the county. This land has all been cleared and developed by him, and it is estimated that he has cleared more acres than any other one man in Daviess County. Beginning his career here, a poor man and in debt, the outlook would have discouraged most men, but when he and his faithful wife settled in that lonely little cabin in the woods the conviction came to him, "here we will live and die, and succeed we must." As he prospered he paid his debts and then began to invest in more land. When reverses came, as they did, he rallied with all the more vigor, and his life career plainly proves what a young man may accomplish, no matter how poor he may be, if he will but do and dare.

In addition to farming Mr. Wilson has bought and sold thousands of head of livestock, and has specialized in handling cattle, in this branch of business forming a wide circle of acquaintances in Daviess and adjoining counties. The log cabin was his home for many years, but later on he built a handsome frame residence that was burned in 1913. It was at once replaced by a modern brick structure. After forty-two years of happy wedded life Mrs. Wilson was called by death from her husband's side, in 1920. In early life they both joined the Baptist Church, but later united with the Cumberland Presbyterians. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson became the parents of the following children: Orlie Daniel, Robert Lee, James Russell, Grover Cleveland and George William.

George William Wilson is a veteran of the great war, having entered the service of his country, and been stationed at the Great Lakes Training School; but was not sent overseas, the signing of the armistice coming before the expiration of his period of training. Although not permitted to get into action, his service is none the less meritorious, for he offered himself at the time he went in defense of his government, and had the occasion demanded would have rendered good account of himself and his section of the country.

Jere P. Sullivan. A Lexington wholesale grocer, Jere P. Sullivan has had a long and active experience in mercantile affairs in his native state, and is one of the business men of the modern generation who is properly admired for his success and character.

Mr. Sullivan was born at Lexington December 7, 1864, son of Dennis and Ellen (Donovan) Sullivan. His parents were natives of County Cork, Ireland. His father lived to the age of eighty-seven and his mother to ninety-one. They were married in London, England, where their first three children were born, and the family came by sailing ship to New York City. Seven other children were born after they reached America, and altogether seven grew to adult years. For some years the family lived at Hartford, Connecticut, where Dennis Sullivan was employed by the Colt's Arms Manufacturing Company. He then removed to Lexington, Kentucky, and for thirty years was one of the earnest and hard-working citizens and later retired. He was active in the Catholic Church, and helped build St. Paul's Church at Lexington. Politically he was a democrat.

Jere P. Sullivan acquired his early education in St. Paul's parochial school, attended Transylvania University and his first employment was as driver of a delivery wagon for the grocery house of Sculley & Yates. For two years he was travelling on the road, one year for R. H. Innes & Company. Mr. Sullivan then entered the general merchandise business at Centerville, Bourbon County, and for twenty-three years was one of the live and enterprising factors of that community. In 1909 he returned to Lexington, and has since been in the wholesale grocery business. He is also engaged in farming in Bourbon County, near Centerville.

Mr. Sullivan has been a business man and has had no inclination for the honors and responsibilities of public office. He votes as a democrat, and is a member of St. Paul's Catholic Church. November 21, 1894, he married Nellie Dundon, who was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky. They are the parents of five children: Mary, wife of R. T. Thornton, of Buffalo, New York, and the mother of one son, Roger Sullivan; Ellen; Ruth, who married Henry Maloney, of Lexington; John and Agnes.

W. Logan Shearer was educated for the law, has been a member of the Kentucky bar since 1910, but his principal business has been insurance, and with offices in the Fayette Bank Building at Lexington he has done much to promote the business of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company over this section of Kentucky.

Mr. Shearer was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, August 15, 1885, son of William Francis and Mary Caroline (Frost) Shearer. His parents were both natives of Wayne County, his father born in 1847 and his mother in 1856. William F. Shearer spent his active life as a merchant and farmer at Gap Creek, thirty-five miles away from the nearest railroad. He died June 19, 1908. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, his wife was an Eastern Star, in politics he voted as a republican, and the family were members of the Baptist Church. The mother died May 2, 1901, and of her nine children four are still living, W. Logan being the fourth in age.

W. Logan Shearer acquired his early education in the public schools of Wayne County, also attended a private normal school there, and gained his advanced training in Georgetown College, Transylvania University, and was graduated from the law school in 1910 and admitted to the bar in May of the same year. He then became associated with the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, and on the basis of his proved record of efficiency was appointed associate general agent at Lexington in 1916.

Mr. Shearer also served a term in the Legislature, being elected in 1909 from the 36th District. He is a republican in politics, is a member of the Board of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the First Baptist Church, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in Masonry is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M., Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T. and Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

February 12, 1914, he married Nell Campbell McCoy, daughter of James Lawrence and Emma (Lewis) McCoy, natives of Kentucky. Her father is editor of the Pikeville News at Jackson, Kentucky, and also has a farm on Slate Creek and is a breeder of Duroc hogs. Mrs. Shearer was the second of three children, the other two being Lewis A. and Edward M. McCoy. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer have three children: Mary Lewis, Nell McCoy and William Logan, Jr.

Richard F. Brasher. While he grew up on a farm and while his people have been substantially identified with the agricultural interests of Christian County for a long period of years, Richard F. Brasher left the farm as a youth, learned telegraphy, and continuously for twenty years or more has been identified with the Louisville and Nashville Railway Company, and has risen to the responsibilities of supervisory agent at Hopkinsville.

He was born in Christian County, January 24, 1880. His paternal ancestors were Scotch and Irish and were Colonial settlers in North Carolina. His father was born near Crofton in Christian County in 1837, and has lived in that one community practically all the eighty odd years of his life, and has devoted his energies to the tasks and responsibilities of farming. During the Civil war he was a Union soldier, serving with the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry at Shiloh, where he was wounded in the neck by a minnie ball, at Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and many other campaigns and battles, and was twice again wounded before the war was over. Since the Civil war he has always voted as a republican. He has been an active worker in the Christian Church. He married Victoria Woodruff, who was born near St. Charles in Hopkins County, Kentucky, in 1847 and died near Crofton, in the old home, in June, 1917. Of her three children Richard F. is the youngest. Lula, the oldest, died in Christian County at the age of forty years, and her husband, G. C. Croft, is still living in the county as a farmer. The other son, C. B. Brasher, is a farmer in Christian County.

Richard F. Brasher attended the country schools near his old home and was on the farm to the age of seventeen. He then entered the local freight office at Crofton, learned and practiced telegraphy at every opportunity and leisure moment, and after a year was put on the payroll of the Louisville and Nashville as an extra operator and assigned duties at various places along the line in Kentucky for six months. For a year and a half he had a permanent place at Empire, Kentucky, as station agent and as an employe of the Empire Coal Company. Then came another period of eight months of work as operator and extra agent, when the company assigned him to duty at Henderson as operator and bill clerk. In 1907 he was promoted to chief clerk, and remained at Henderson until he was transferred to Earlington, Kentucky, as agent, and in June, 1916, came to Hopkinsville as supervisory agent. He has been continuously in the service of the Louisville and Nashville since he began his career as a railroad man. His offices are in the freight depot on Ninth Street.

Mr. Brasher also owns a portion of the old homestead farm near Crofton. He is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and in Masonry is affiliated with Jerusalem Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., at Henderson, Henderson Chapter No. 65, R. A. M., Henderson Commandery No. 14, K. T., and Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville.

In 1910, at Henderson, he married Miss Alice Board, a daughter of Walker and Roberta (Head) Board, her mother still living at Louisville. Her father, now deceased, was a farmer and merchant. Mrs. Brasher is a graduate of the Henderson High School. The older child of Mr. and Mrs. Brasher is Margaret Lee, born June 13, 1915, and the younger is Alice Woodruff, born April 25, 1921. The family live on a farm on Dixies Bee Line, one and one-half miles north of Hopkinsville, and operate a dairy.

William Powhatan Winfree still handles an occasional case as a lawyer, and by virtue of half a century's residence and practice at Hopkinsville is the oldest member of the local bar. For many years he has also been prominent in the real estate business.

Mr. Winfree, who is a Confederate veteran and who served as a bodyguard of General Forrest, was born at Gallatin in Sumner County, Tennessee, January 28, 1843, and is of old Virginia ancestry. There were three Winfree brothers, French Huguenots, who after the massacre of St. Bartholomew fled to Virginia, where the family has been represented for many generations. Mr. Winfree's grandfather was Woodson Winfree, who spent his life as a planter and slave holder in Powhatan County, Virginia. Shurvin Trent Winfree, father of the Hopkinsville lawyer, was also a native of Powhatan County, was born in 1819, and soon after his marriage came west and in 1842 settled in Gallatin County, Tennessee, where he was a farmer. In 1846 he moved to Christian County, Kentucky, and was a well known resident of that county the rest of his life. Before the war he owned many slaves and conducted a large plantation. He died at Casky in Christian County in 1902. He was a democrat and a Baptist. His wife bore the maiden name of Elmira Atkinson. She was born in Powhatan County, Virginia, in 1822 and died in Casky County in 1905. This venerable couple had a large family of fourteen children. The oldest is William Powhatan Winfree. Brief mention of the others in order of birth is also made herewith. John W. was a farmer and merchant with stores both at Casky and Hopkinsville, and died at Casky at the early age of thirty years. James H., who was born in 1846, is in the insurance business and a resident of Antioch, California. George W., who died at Casky at the age of fifty, was a farmer, and his death was due to accidental injuries received in a threshing machine. Virginia, who died at the home of her brother William at Hopkinsville in 1918, was a resident of California, widow of N. E. Grey, who for a number of years was a hotel proprietor in California. Irene, who died at Richmond, California, in 1919, had as her first husband Henry Durrat, a school teacher who died at Hopkinsville, and her second husband was a Mr. McMurray, a merchant also deceased. Florence, who died at Richmond, California, at the age of forty years, was the wife of Mr. Callmon, still living at Richmond, a bookkeeper. Bessie died at San Francisco, California, aged forty, wife of James M. Grey, a San Francisco lawyer. Susie, who died at Martinez, California, at the age of fifty years, was the wife of Pat Cunningham, now employed as a bookkeeper in San Francisco. M. F. Winfree is a retired farm owner at Hopkinsville. Thomas S. is constable at Hopkinsville. Alex A. is a merchant at Los Angeles, California. Carrie died at Richmond, California, aged fifty years, wife of John Boyle, who is a bookkeeper at Richmond. Julius R. was a very successful farmer of Christian County, and died at the early age of thirty-five, his widow, whose family name was Faxon, being a resident of Memphis, Tennessee.

William Powhatan Winfree was about three years of age when his parents moved to Christian County and he grew up in a country district, attended the country schools, and was prepared for college at Clarksville, Tennessee. He had been made proficient in Latin and Greek and other studies, and was ready for junior class in college when the war came on and he went into the Confederate army. October 8, 1861, he enlisted in the First Kentucky Cavalry, under Col. Ben Hardin Helm. This organization was disbanded a year later and he then enlisted in the Second Kentucky Cavalry. He was at the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, in 1862, and in the entire campaign between the two armies engaged in struggle for control of the state. He was at Chickamauga, where he served as first sergeant and a member of General Forrest's bodyguard, and was a follower of that great cavalry leader the remainder of the war. He was wounded in the arm at Winchester, Tennessee. The war over, Mr. Winfree returned to Christian County and at once took up the study of law, which he diligently prosecuted until he was admitted to the bar in January, 1866. He began practice at Hopkinsville, but soon after his marriage, in 1870, he moved to Linn County, Kansas, and practiced law and edited a weekly newspaper for two years. With that exception he has been an active member of the Hopkinsville bar for all the years since the war. A large share of his attention has been engaged by his increasing real estate business. He has owned a great deal of property in and around Hopkinsville, and owns the office building in which his own offices are situated on Court Street, also a modern residence on the corner of Virginia and Sixteenth streets, this home having been recently remodeled, and he has three other business buildings in Hopkinsville and formerly owned several farms near the city.

Mr. Winfree has been a vigorous democrat and as a member of the minority party in Christian County, has helped make political history. In 1878 he was candidate for county attorney, and while at the time the republican majority was normally fifteen hundred, he lost the election by only two hundred. In 1882 he was elected county judge, and while his opponent had previously been elected by fifteen hundred, Mr. Winfree won the election by a margin of eleven hundred votes. He also served two terms as city attorney of Hopkinsville. He is an elder in the Christian Church, is present commander of Ned Merriweather Camp of the United Confederate Veterans, and is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. and A. M.

In Hopkinsville in 1870 Mr. Winfree married Miss Carrie Bradshaw, daughter of B. W. and Juliette (Hopson) Bradshaw. Her father was a Kentucky farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Winfree had six children: Lula W., who was born in January, 1871, and is the wife of James H. Ware, a farmer near Hopkinsville; Virginia W., Mrs. Allen Hardison, living with her father; W. P., Jr., a young lawyer who had won an enviable degree of success in his profession and who died at Hopkinsville at the age of thirty; John W. an insurance man at Hopkinsville; Ben S., in the garage business at Hopkinsville; and James Bradshaw, connected with the Imperial Tobacco Company of Hopkinsville.

James Johnson Claiborne. One of the prominent county officials of Christian County is James Johnson Claiborne, sheriff, but for many years he has been well known in the county through other activities, and a stanch citizenship has made him invaluable to the substantial interests of the community.

He was born at Hopkinsville, October 4, 1886. His paternal ancestors were Irish and were early settlers in Virginia. His father, J. E. Claiborne, was born near Richmond, Virginia, in 1850, was reared in his native state, and as a young man came to Christian County, Kentucky, and settled on a farm. Farming has been his regular vocation, and he still lives on his homestead two miles north of Hopkinsville. His farm is a valuable one of 125 acres. In connection with farming for a number of years he cried sales as an auctioneer and was also a road contractor. In politics, though a native Virginian, he is a republican. For a time he was a member of the police force of Hopkinsville and necessarily lived in the city during that official service. He has owned and sold several farms in Christian County. J. E. Claiborne is affiliated with Pearl City Camp No. 5, Woodmen of the World. He married Melissa (Johnson) Anderson, widow of William Henry Anderson. She was born in 1848, six miles north of Hopkinsville, and died at the home of her son James J. in January, 1920. By her first husband she had one son, R. M. Anderson, who is a carpenter and builder at Hopkinsville. The children of her second marriage were five in number. The oldest, Hewitt Henry, died at the age of five years, and the next two were daughters who died in infancy. The fourth is James J., while Ed, the youngest, is connected with the Nortonville Coal Company of Nortonville, Kentucky.

James Johnson Claiborne lived in Hopkinsville until he was twelve years of age, and during that time had the advantages of the common schools. He is a man esteemed among all his acquaintances for his breadth of mind and cultivated intellect, but his education has been largely self-acquired and is due to study and reading of good books and contact with men of affairs. After leaving school he worked as a farm hand, and while his father was in the road contracting business handled the responsibilities of the home farm. At the age of twenty-one he supplemented his early education by one term in the McLean College at Hopkinsville. Mr. Claiborne was for seven years a member of the Kentucky State Militia, being finally mustered out with the rank of second lieutenant. He was called to active duty in 1907 during the night rider troubles, and was on duty six months, until July, 1908. He was then appointed deputy sheriff under Sheriff J. M. Renshaw, and was in that position two years and six months. The next six years he was connected with the Williamson Transfer Company of Hopkinsville. Following that he served a year as sergeant of the police force and then, returning to the home farm, operated a dairy business for a year. It was while on the farm that he was elected sheriff, in November, 1917, and has been engaged in the responsible performance of the duties of that office since January, 1918, his term being four years. Before and after his election as sheriff he took a prominent part in all local war activities. Mr. Claiborne owns a suburban home with fifty-five acres of ground near Hopkinsville, and this place is well known for its registered hogs, horses and cattle. He has sold some of his fine stock over several states. He also owns a dwelling on North Main Street in Hopkinsville, and his outside investments make him a stockholder in the McCauley Moving Picture Company of New York City and the Parker Rubber Company of Indianapolis. Mr. Claiborne is a republican, is a Baptist, and is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. and A. M., is a captain of the Uniformed rank of Knights of Pythias, is a past consul commander of the Woodmen of the World and a member of the Elks Lodge No. 545.

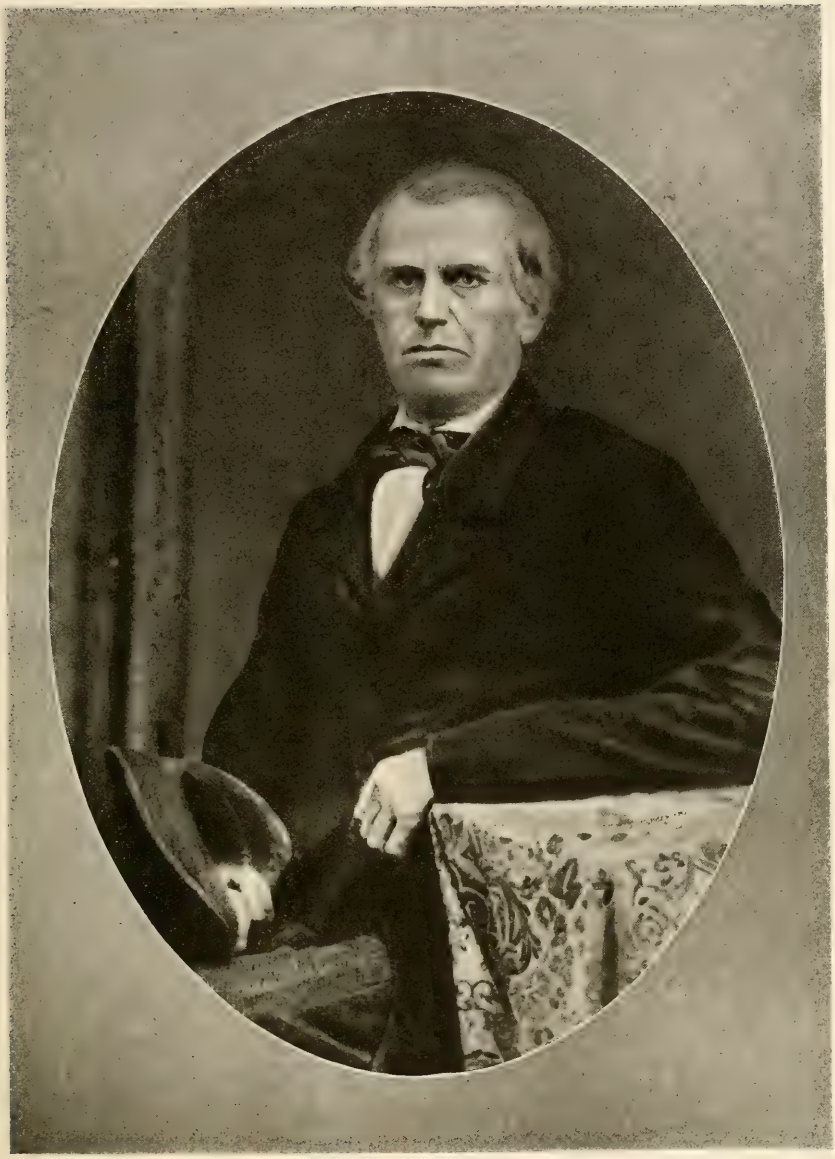
On July 8, 1912, at Springfield, Ohio, Mr. Claiborne married Miss Katherine Trimmer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Trimmer, still living at Springfield. Her father has been continuously in the service of the International Harvester Company for thirty years. Mrs. Claiborne is a graduate of Dennison University of Ohio, and came to Hopkinsville as teacher of French and Latin in the Bethel Woman's College. Mr. and Mrs. Claiborne are the parents of five children: Malissa Elizabeth, born in 1913; Muriel, who died at the age of ten months; Wilma Katherine, born February 20, 1917; Jane, born January 4, 1920, and Clarice Virginia, born March 15, 1921.

Ira Dorman Smith. Except for the time he was in the Naval Aviation Service during the World war Ira Dorman Smith has been a practicing Hopkinsville attorney for ten years, a former county attorney of Christian County, and has achieved distinctive prominence in his profession and in the citizenship of that part of Kentucky.

He belongs to an old American family, of English descent. The family for several generations lived in Virginia. His grandfather, Joseph Thomas Smith, was born in Virginia in 1830 and for many years was a successful and well-to-do farmer near Fairview in Todd County, Kentucky. At one time he owned a portion of the plantation on which Jefferson Davis was born. He retired from his farm in 1887 and moved to Hopkinsville, where he died in 1900. His wife was Mary Jane Littell, who was born in 1840 and died at the age of eighty in November, 1920, at her home, 206 East Sixteenth Street in Hopkinsville.

Ira L. Smith, father of the attorney, is a prominent Hopkinsville banker. He was born at the old homestead in Todd County in 1861, was reared there, graduated from Vanderbilt University at Nashville in 1882, and in 1884 came to Hopkinsville, where he began his banking career as a bookkeeper in the old Planters Bank and Trust Company. He was promoted to assistant cashier and after assisting in organizing the trust company was treasurer and manager of the trust department. In 1910 he became cashier of the City Bank and Trust Company, and he is now vice president of that institution. He has long been a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, serving as treasurer of the church for many years. He is teacher of the Men's Bible Class, and his leadership and enthusiasm have developed this class until it is the largest Sunday School class in Hopkinsville. He is an independent voter. His home is at 222 East Sixteenth Street. Ira L. Smith married Miss Aurine Williams, who was born in Alabama in 1863 and was reared at Uniontown in that state. Ira Dorman is the oldest of their three children. Thomas Littell Smith is assistant cashier of the City Bank and Trust Company of Hopkinsville. Mary Evelyn is the wife of Alvan H. Clark, a Hopkinsville lawyer.

Ira Dorman Smith, who was born at Hopkinsville May 17, 1889, attended the public schools of his native city, graduating from high school in 1905, and then entered his father's alma mater, Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, and received his Bachelor of Science degree in 1910. In the meantime he had also been a student in the law department, and was admitted to the bar in the year of his graduation. He is a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity. Mr. Smith began practice at Hopkinsville in 1910, and was in partnership with J. S. Bassett, under the firm name of Bassett & Smith, until 1912. In 1913 Mr. Smith entered the race for county attorney, was elected in November of that year, and began his four-year term January 1, 1914. While county attorney he continued his practice in partnership with Joseph C. Slaughter.



Not long after leaving the office of county attorney Mr. Smith entered the Government service, in May, 1919, training for naval aviation. He was given his preliminary training at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, later at the Pensacola, Florida, Flying School, and in October, 1918, was commissioned with the rank of ensign. Subsequently he was given special work with the Bureau of Standards at Washington, and in December, 1918, was relieved from active duty, but is still held as a Naval Reserve. Following the close of the war he returned to Hopkinsville, and has busied himself with a large general practice. He is now a member of the firm McKenzie & Smith, his partner being James A. McKenzie, and their offices are in the Summers Building on Main Street.

Mr. Smith is a Democrat and in May, 1920, was appointed a member of the Democratic State Central Committee for the Second Congressional District. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in 1918 served as exalted ruler of Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545 of the Elks. He is also a member of Evergreen Lodge No. 38, Knights of Pythias, is a member of the Hopkinsville Business Men's Association and the State Bar Association.

Mr. Smith now lives with his parents at 222 East Sixteenth Street. He was married at Hopkinsville in 1914 to Miss Viola Williams, daughter of Dr. M. W. and Margaret (Bell) Williams, residents of Hopkinsville. Her father for many years was a practicing dentist but is now giving his attention to the breeding of thoroughbred horses. Mr. Smith had the misfortune to lose his wife by death December 23, 1918, about the time he came out of the army.

Ethelbert D. Owen has resisted all nomadic impulses and has shown his good judgment by maintaining in his native county a close and effective alliance with the basic industries under the influence of which he was reared and of which he is now a substantial representative in Fayette County, his fine old homestead farm being situated six miles northeast of Lexington.

In the house which is his present place of abode Ethelbert Dudley Owen was born on the 24th of December, 1861, and he is a son of the late Thomas and Susan (Matthews) Owen, the former of whom was born at North Middletown, Bourbon County, this state, in the year 1806, and the latter was born in Fayette County, January 3, 1824, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Kemper) Matthews, whose marriage was here solemnized, Samuel Matthews having likewise been a native of Fayette County, within whose borders his parents settled in the early pioneer days. The father of Samuel Matthews died when a comparatively young man, and his widow later married a Fayette County man named Lowe, both having here remained until their deaths. Thomas Owen, who died in 1866, at the age of sixty years, was a son of Robert and Nancy (Foster) Owen, whose marriage was solemnized in Kentucky. Robert Owen was born and reared in Virginia and was one of the pioneer settlers in the vicinity of North Middletown, Bourbon County, where both he and his wife died when venerable in years. Of their three sons Jonathan became an extensive farmer in Bourbon County and his death occurred at Paris, that county, his daughter Nancy being the wife of Watt Gage, of Winchester, Clark County. Thomas, father of the subject of this sketch, was the next younger son. George remained on the old homestead farm in Bourbon County, and since his death the place has passed out of the possession of the family. Of the daughters, Mrs. Lydia Ellsberry removed to Missouri; Mrs. Nancy Smith went with her husband to Texas; Sally became the wife of Cameron Hearn and both remained in Kentucky until their deaths; and Mary married Greenup DeJarnet, both having been residents of Bourbon County at the time of their deaths.

As a young man Thomas Owen married Miss Emma Firman, of Bourbon County, and soon afterward they came to Fayette County, where he purchased a part of the farm now owned and occupied by his son Ethelbert D., of this sketch. Mrs. Owen died as a young woman and left no children. In 1842 Mr. Owen married Miss Susan Matthews, who was eighteen years of age at that time, he having been thirteen years her senior. A man of vigor and enterprise, Thomas Owen has signally prospered in his activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower, and to his original farm he added until he became the owner of a valuable landed estate of 800 acres, all in one body. In 1858 he erected the present substantial house on this homestead, and in that year his daughter Martha was born in the new domicile, which is now one of the venerable and attractive architectural landmarks of the county. This house, with several Doric columns extending to the height of the second story, is a pleasing specimen of pure Colonial architecture, and it faces the railroad line which was constructed through this locality in 1890. The handsome old Colonial mansion is the most imposing residential structure between Lexington and Winchester, and it has been both in the past and at the present time known as a center of gracious hospitality. Since the construction of the recent turnpike past the property this house has been left one-half mile from the thoroughfare, and a private road leads from the turnpike to the fine old home.

Thomas Owen gave special attention to stock farming and raised cattle upon a somewhat extensive scale. He was a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party, and though not formally identified with any religious organization he gave liberal support to both the Methodist Episcopal and the Baptist churches of the community, his wife having been a zealous member of the latter. Of the children of the second marriage eight attained to years of maturity: Robert remained a bachelor and continued to reside on the old homestead until his death, at the age of seventy-two years; Mary did not marry and was thirty-five years of age at the time of her death; Nancy, who is the widow of B. A. Lowe, resides on the home farm and has two children, Susie, the wife of Edwin Hisle, a farmer on the Maysville Turnpike in Fayette County, and they have two children, Owen McClure and Robert Edwin, and Miss Lena, who remains with her widowed mother; Emma remained on the old home farm until her death and was an invalid for six years prior to her demise, October 17, 1920, at the age of sixty-nine years; Miss Fannie likewise remained at the old homestead, and here she died at the age of fifty-two years; Miss Martha owns and resides upon a part of the old homestead farm; Ethelbert D., subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth and occupies the fine old home mansion of which mention has been made, the domestic economies being in charge of his widowed sister, Mrs. Lowe, and her daughter Lena; Addie, the youngest of the children, resides with her sister Martha in their own house on the old homestead, and they gave devoted care to their sister Emma during the closing years of her gentle and gracious life. The father, Thomas Owen, took into his home the five young sons of his sister Sally, who died when they were children, these boys having been Robert, John, Frank, William and James. Of the number only James is now living, and he maintains his home in the City of Ithaca, New York. The Kemper and Foster families, of which the subject of this review is a lineal representative, were founded in this section of Kentucky in the early pioneer days, and members of both families found refuge in the old fort at Bryant Station at the time when Indians were a menace to the early settlers of the locality.

Ethelbert D. Owen has remained continuously on the old homestead, received good educational advantages in his youth and is one of the enterprising and progressive representatives of farm industry in his native county, where he has a circle of friends that is limited only by that of his acquaintances. He has had no predilection for political activity but is aligned with the ranks of the republican party. In 1899 he married Miss Martha Alford, of Fayette County and their devoted companionship continued twenty years, at the expiration of which the gracious ties were severed by the death of Mrs. Owen, on the 24th of December, 1919, no children having been born of this union.

Isadore M. Bloom, M. D., who for a quarter of a century has held a chair in the Department of Medicine in the University of Louisville, is a man of distinguished attainments in both the science and profession of medicine and surgery. His career has been one of unselfish service and supplements the record of his honored father, for many years one of Louisville's foremost business men.

His father was the late Nathan Bloom, who was born in Bavaria in 1827 and came to the United States in the early '40s. At Louisville in 1851 he married Rosina Kling, who was born in the Province of Lorraine in 1827. By talents that amounted to genius and by sheer force of industry Nathan Bloom made himself one of the recognized great merchants of the Ohio Valley. For many years he was head of the firm of Bamberger, Bloom & Company, one of the largest wholesale drygoods establishments in the South. From Louisville this firm did business over all the Southern States and in Indiana and Ohio. Nathan Bloom was more than a successful business man. While he never cared for public office, he gave his sincere and liberal support to every enterprise calculated to advance his home city. A few years before his death the plan was projected of holding a great exposition at Louisville. A committee approached Mr. Bloom and asked that he head the list of subscriptions for $10,000. His response was immediate and was for just twice the sum the committee asked. That was typical of his liberality on all such occasions. He early became interested, at a critical period, in the Public Library Association, later known as the Polytechnic, serving as its vice president, and was one of the four men who preserved its existence by personally pledging a large sum of money for its maintenance as a free public library. For many years he was vice president of the Library Board. His death occurred in 1887. While thirty-four years have elapsed, his memory is still cherished by all interested in the institutions and causes with which his name was so liberally identified. He was a real constructive force in the welfare and upbuilding of Louisville. Of his nine children, six are still living, Isadore N. being the fourth in age.

Doctor Bloom, who was born at Louisville October 27, 1858, had every advantage that wealth and his strong inclination for studious pursuits could bestow. He attended the public schools, the Male High School, graduated A. B. from Yale University in 1878, and in 1881 was graduated from Harvard College of Medicine. The following four years he was in Europe in post-graduate study and research in many of the famous medical centers of the old world. He then returned to Louisville and engaged in private practice and in 1895 was elected to a chair in the Medical Department of the University of Louisville, and has given a large part of his time and talents to that work.

In 1888 Doctor Bloom was elected a member of the Louisville School Board and served four years. In 1908 he again became a member, and two years later, when the Board of Education was established by the new state law, he was one of the five members of the reorganized board elected, and that public service has been continued until he is now in his third term and is president of the board.

Doctor Bloom has served two terms as president of the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Louisville and is now an honorary member. In 1916 he was elected president of the Associated Western Yale Clubs, including all clubs between Buffalo and Denver. He is a member of the Yale Club of New York City, the Pendennis Club of Louisville, and is independent in politics.

Doctor Bloom married Miss Fannie Corinne Peixotto, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, and daughter of Benjamin F. and Hannah (Straus) Peixotto, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Kentucky. Her father was for eight years United States minister to Roumania. Mrs. Bloom, who is the oldest of nine children, had a daughter, Nathalie, who died in infancy, and her one living child is Nathan P. Bloom. Nathan P. Bloom graduated from Yale University with the class of 1913 and is now sercretary of the Adler Manufacturing Company. He married Miss Dessa Ellis, of Indiana.

Charles C. Mengel, one of the early presidents of the Louisville Board of Trade, a past president of the Pendennis Club, manufacturer and business man, has been a resident of Louisville nearly half a century, and his business interests in Kentucky and abroad and his character and activities as a citizen give him a distinctive place among the eminent Kentuckians.

He was born at Gloucester, Essex County, Massachusetts, October 29, 1856, a son of Charles C. and Jane (Potter) Mengel, the former a native of Saxony, Germany, and the latter of Massachusetts, of Scotch parentage. For many generations the Mengel family were woolen manufacturers at Gera, Saxony, carrying on the business established there by Michael Mengel during the sixteenth century. Colonel Mengel's father was born at this old manufacturing town in Saxony, and after coming to America was prominent in the tobacco industry as an exporter of seed leaf tobacco.

Charles C. Mengel was educated in the public schools of Brooklyn, New York, and was nineteen years of age when he came to Kentucky in 1875. For a time he was associated with the manufacture of plug tobacco. Since 1877 his chief business has been box manufacture and the importation of mahogany timber and lumber. One concern of which he has been president is the largest in the world manufacturing boxes, and he was vice president of one company which was foremost in the production, export handling and use of mahogany timber, its operations reaching to the west coast of Africa and Yucatan, where the company developed and owned railroads and other facilities for logging and milling the mahogany.

Colonel Mengel has also served for many years as a director of the National Bank of Kentucky at Louisville. He was for several years a director in the Louisville Board of Trade before being unanimously elected president. Under his leadership the board reached the acme of its efficiency and helpfulness in protecting and promoting the interests of the merchants and business men of Louisville. Colonel Mengel has never been a seeker for political honors. He served on the Louisville Board of Waterworks and the Louisville Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners. He is a staunch republican and prepared and circulated a pamphlet which did much to influence the working men of Louisville against the heresy of free silver.

While president of the Louisville Board of Trade Colonel Mengel reorganized the Louisville Legion. After the Cuban war this was known as the First Kentucky Regiment. He was unanimously elected its colonel, accepting the honor only temporarily, but while in command he had charge of the regiment during the bitter factional troubles in Kentucky politics through the years 1899-1900. The regiment was on duty at Frankfort during a portion of that period.

Colonel Mengel has always deeply appreciated the honor conferred upon him when he was elected president of the Pendennis Club, one of the most prominent social organizations in the South. He is also a member of the Salamagundi Club of Louisville. On January 12, 1882, he married Miss Emily Mason Tryon, who was born and reared in Louisville. Her father, Captain Frank Tryon, was a gallant Confederate officer, was captured at the surrender of Fort Donelson, but later participated in the battle of Stone River, where he was killed. Five children were born to Colonel and Mrs. Mengel: Julia Morsell, wife of Dr. Cuthbert Thompson; Jane Potter, wife of Arthur Dwight Allen; Charles C., Jr., who married Mary Anderson Kelly, a daughter of Col. Robert Kelly; Emily T.; and Frank Tryon Mengel.

William S. Vick. It is a well authenticated fact that success comes as the result of legitimate and well applied energy, unflagging determination and perseverance in a course of action when once decided upon. She is never known to bestow her largesses upon the indolent and ambitionless, and only those who seek her untiringly are recipients of her blessings. In tracing the history of the influential business man and representative citizen whose name introduces this sketch, it is plainly seen that the prosperity which he enjoys has been won by commendable qualities, and it is also his personal worth that has gained for him the high esteem of those who know him.

William S. Vick, a member and general manager of the wholesale grocery firm of W. S. Vick Grocery Company at Owensboro, was born on his father's farm in Muhlenburg County, Kentucky on April 30, 1864, and he is one of ten children who blessed the union of Jacob M. and Eliza J. (Williams) Vick. He was reared on the home farm, where he had abundant opportunity for the cultivation of physical strength, but during which period he had but a limited opportunity for a school education, having attended school but little after his thirteenth year. He remained with his parents until twenty years old, when he started out on his own account, his first employment being in a livery stable in South Carrollton, Kentucky. Later he became the proprietor of a stable at Central City, which he operated until September, 1890, when, at about the time of his marriage, he went onto the road as a traveling salesman for an Owensboro wholesale grocery concern. He proved a distinct success in that line of work and continued to represent Owensboro and Evansville, Indiana, establishments for almost thirty years. A few years ago Mr. Vick organized at Owensboro the W. S. Vick Grocery Company, in which he had a considerable interest, though he continued his work as a traveling salesman. In the fall of 1919 he sold his interest in the W. S. Vick Grocery Company, but retained the name of the company, under which arrangement he organized, in March, 1920, the present wholesale grocery concern of W. S. Vick Grocery Company, of Owensboro, of which he is the manager and which is already doing a very gratifying business. Since 1900 Mr. Vick has been a resident of Owensboro.

In September, 1890, Mr. Vick was united in marriage with Jennie Gordon, of South Carrollton, and they are the parents of two children, Gordon, who is associated with his father in business, and Helen, who is attending school.

Politically Mr. Vick was formerly a democrat, but for several years has as a rule supported the men and measures of the republican party. He is a member of the Travelers Protective Association. He has always been deeply interested in whatever tended to promote the prosperity of his chosen town and county, and because of his business ability and his excellent personal qualities of character he enjoys to a marked degree the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens.

Samuel Thomas Fruit is a well-known lawyer of Hopkinsville, is present county attorney of Christian County, and for twenty years has been well known in educational, legal and official affairs.

This is one of the oldest families of Christian County. It originated in Wales, and the Fruits were Colonial settlers of North Carolina. The great-grandfather of the present county attorney was Thomas Fruit, who settled in Christian County more than a century ago. Thompson C. Fruit, grandfather of Samuel T. Fruit, was born in Christian County in 1810, spent his life as a farmer there and died in 1889. He married Elizabeth Underwood, who was born in Christian County in 1822 and died in 1884. Her father, Samuel Underwood, was also born in Christian County, and spent his life in one of the farming communities of the county.

Capt. Samuel Thomas Fruit, Sr., father of the county attorney, was born in Christian County in 1838 and spent all his life there. For many years he carried on a large farm, and exhibited all the qualities of a successful and enterprising agriculturist. In 1862 he enlisted in the Union army, joining the 25th Kentucky Infantry, which later was consolidated with the 17th Kentucky Regiment. He was in Company G of the latter regiment, and fought at the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. He was under the command of General Grant, and for much of the time his division commander was General Thomas. He was a republican, served as justice of the peace, and died in Christian County, highly honored and respected, in 1905. Captain Fruit married Victoria Clark, who was born in Christian County in 1844 and is still living on the old homestead seven miles northeast of Hopkinsville. She was the mother of nine children. James, the oldest, was a farmer and died in Christian County in 1908. His twin brother, Albert, lived on the home farm and with his brothers, Joseph and Chester, managed it for their mother. Joseph is the third of the family. Lizzie died unmarried at the old home in 1918, and she had a twin brother who died in infancy. Georgia is unmarried and lives with her mother. The seventh in age is Samuel T. Fruit. Chester is the eighth in the family, while Mary, the youngest, died at the age of two years and seven months.

Samuel Thomas Fruit was born on the old homestead February 10, 1877, and acquired a rural school education, supplemented by advantages partly of his own obtaining, which gave him a thoroughly liberal education. He pursued literary studies in the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville and for four years was a student in the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green. In 1900 he began teaching in Christian County, but the following year was appointed and served as deputy sheriff. From 1902 to 1905, inclusive, he resumed his work as a teacher and then pursued the law course of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, graduating with the LL. B. degree in June, 1907. The fall and winter after his graduation he taught school, and in 1908 took up the practice of law at Hopkinsville, and has been busily engaged with a general civil and criminal practice since that time. From April, 1909, until January, 1910, he served as jailer of Christian County. He was selected county attorney in the fall of 1917 and began his duties in January, 1918, and the first year of his four-year term coincided with the period of the World war, and he was ex-officio identified with many local war activities. He was one of the leading speakers over the county in behalf of various war drives, and also gave much of his time cheerfully and without remuneration to the work of filling out questionnaires for drafted soldiers. He was candidate for Circuit judge of the Third Judicial District in 1916, being nominated on the republican ticket, but was defeated in this strong democratic district. He is a past grand of Green River Lodge No. 54 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Fruit, whose home is at 752 East Ninth Street, married at Nashville, Tennessee, July 23, 1912, Mrs. Delia (Myers) Johnson. She was the widow of W. W. Johnson, who at the time of his death was jailer of Christian County. Her parents, now deceased, were S. H. and Salina (Cavanah) Myers, her father a well-known farmer and stock raiser. Mrs. Fruit has one child by her former marriage, Raymond Johnson, who is a farmer living six miles southwest of Hopkinsville.

Louis Ellis. The manufacture and distribution of artificial ice is a business vitally linked with the welfare and comfort of every progressive community. Louis Ellis, of Hopkinsville, has devoted practically all the years since he left school to the business and profession of manufacturing and distributing pure ice, and is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Ellis Ice and Coal Company, an industry that was established by his father many years ago.

Mr. Ellis was born at Hopkinsville, December 15, 1882, and is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, William Ellis, was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1810, and in early life came west to Hopkinsville, Kentucky, where he was married and where for a time he followed his trade as a tailor and later was a general merchant and finally in the flour milling business with his two sons, Forest and Lee Ellis. He died at Hopkinsville in 1896, having spent his last days in retirement. He married a Miss Harrison, a native of Hopkinsville.

Forest Ellis, father of Louis, was born at Hopkinsville in 1852, spent all his life in that city and died there in 1897. At the beginning of his career he was engaged in the hardware business two years. Subsequently he was in the flour milling business with his father and brother until the mill was burned in 1888. Soon afterward he and his brother, Lee, employed their capital and their enterprise to establish and build the ice manufacturing plant at Eleventh and Railroad streets, and he was actively associated with that business until his death. Politically Forest Ellis was a republican. He married at Madisonville, Kentucky, Miss Lucy Jagoe, who was born in Muhlenburg County of this state in 1861 and is still living at Hopkinsville. She was the mother of four children: Edna, wife of W. J. Glover, a property owner at Hopkinsville; Louis; Margaret, wife of Thomas W. Smith, a tobacconist now connected with the British-American Company living at Rio de Janeiro, South America; and Lucille, wife of Robert S. Maxey, who lives at Chicago and is western representative for a wholesale underwear firm.

Louis Ellis acquired his education in the public schools of Hopkinsville and left school at the age of eighteen to enter the ice plant, and by daily work and observation learned every phase of the business, including the technical operation of ice making as well as the sale and distribution of the products. Since 1908 he has been secretary, treasurer and manager of the company, which was incorporated as the Ellis Ice & Coal Company in that year. This is the largest ice making plant in western Kentucky between Bowling Green and Paducah. J. W. Downer is president of the company, and Mr. Ellis holds the other official places of the corporation. The plant has a capacity of sixty-five tons of ice per day, while it also has 1,000 tons storage capacity. Besides supplying Hopkinsville City with ice, the plant supplies various communities from Morton's Gap on the north to Trenton on the south, and from Fairview on the east to Cerulean on the west.

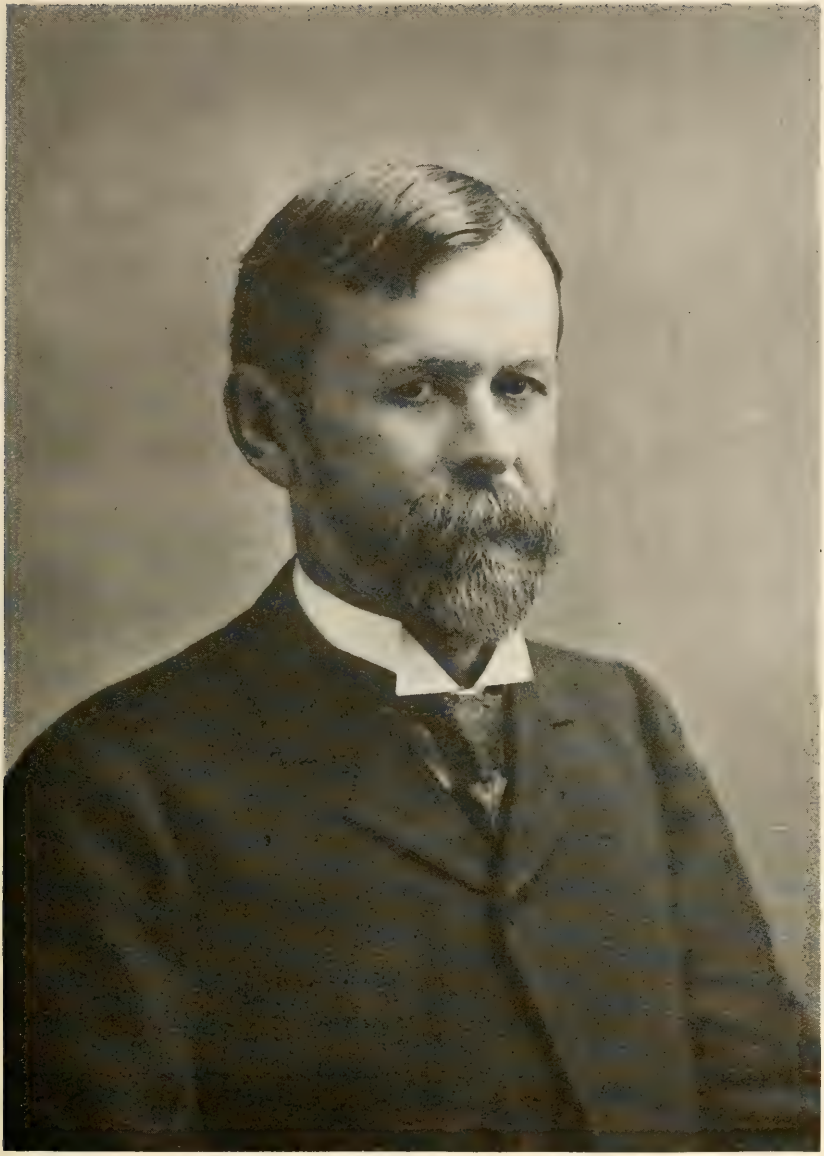
Mr. Ellis is a republican, a member of the Christian Church, the Travelers Protective Association and Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545 of the Elks. He lives with his mother at 909 South Main Street. In 1911, at Evansville, Indiana, he married Miss Elizabeth Hannon, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Elizabeth Hannon. Her mother is still living at Indianapolis. Her father was a physician and surgeon at Scotland, Indiana. Mr. Louis Ellis has one daughter, Elizabeth, born January 19, 1913.

George Byron Powell. The stanch qualities of the Powell family have been exemplified in the citizenship of Christian County for several generations, and it was only natural that the abilities of George Byron Powell were called from his regular vocation of farming to the responsibilities of public office. Mr. Powell was elected county clerk when the World war was in progress, and since his election has made his home in the county seat of Hopkinsville.

He was born near the Fruithill section of Christian County, July 26, 1863. In that community the Powells have lived for upwards of a century. His grandfather, George W. Powell, brought the family from North Carolina and acquired some of the land in the Fruithill section, where he developed a pioneer farm and where he lived the rest of his life. William H. Powell, father of the county clerk, was born in North Carolina in 1820, and was only a few years old when brought to Christian County, Kentucky. He was reared and married there, and in his mature years developed a large and profitable farm at Fruithill, and remained in that vicinity until his death in 1867. He was allied with the republican party in politics, and was one of the very active Baptists in his community. He was also affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. William H. Powell married Sarah L. Henderson, who was born in the northern part of Christian County in 1823 and died near Fruithill in 1900. Of her five children, George Byron is the youngest; Mary E., the oldest, died in 1910, wife of Z. T. Gamble, who is a farmer living near Fruithill; James Harvey was a farmer and died near Fruithill in 1873; Presley Austin combined merchandising with farming and died near Fruithill in 1879, and Delilah Jane died at the age of sixteen.

George Byron Powell spent his early life and many of his mature years in the Fruithill section of Christian County. He attended the rural schools, and after passing his majority bought the interest of his sister, Mary, in the old homestead farm, and has owned and operated this property ever since. He is proprietor of 480 acres, and directs it as a well diversified farm. His farm is a mile south of Fruithill. He lives there and gave his special attention to the work of the fields until he began his official duties at the county seat.



Mr. Powell has always been an active member of the republican party in Christian County. He has been a busy man, and has only a brief though very capable public record. He served three and a half years, from 1889 to 1892, as justice of the peace. He was elected county clerk in November, 1917, and began his official term in January, 1918, for four years. By virtue of his office he was identified with much of the war program. He is an elder of the Christian Church. At Hopkinsville he owns a modern home at 522 North Main Street. In October, 1884, Mr. Powell married at Springfield, Tennessee, Miss Parrie L. West, daughter of J. H. and Salina (Grace) West, both now deceased. Her father was a Christian County farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Powell had five children, including: Walter L., who operates the home farm for his father; George Estell, a merchant at Hopkinsville; Vernie Belle, who died at the age of eighteen; and Lucian, a railroad man living at Nashville, Tennessee.

Charles Strother Grubbs. In the field of general law, as also in his specialty of insurance and corporation law, one of the most eminent figures of the Louisville bar during the past thirty-eight years has been Charles Strother Grubbs. Judge Grubbs has fairly earned his position in the law, since he has been for many years not only an earnest student of its general principles, but also a persistent and well rewarded seeker into the details of his specialties. During his long and honorable practice at Louisville he has been a faithful conserver of all the interests confided to his care and fine judgment, and has perfected a career that deserves a lasting place in the history of the bar.

Judge Grubbs was born at Maysville, Kentucky, April 11, 1848, a son of Rev. William M. and Zerelda (Stamper) Grubbs. He comes of distinguished ancestry. His paternal great-grandfather, Higgason Grubbs, was one of the early settlers of what later became Madison County, Kentucky, coming here about 1780 from Albemarle County, Virginia. He was one of the trustees of Boonesboro (1787), at one time residing in the Fort at Boonesboro. He was a representative from Madison County in the two conventions (1787-1788) at Danville, and in 1792 in the First Constitutional Convention. In 1790-91 he was a member of the Virginia Legislature from Madison County, Kentucky, and at various times after the state was admitted into the Union was a member of the House of Representatives. He died in 1830. His wife was Lucy Harris, also a native of Virginia. John Grubbs, the grandfather of Charles S. Grubbs, was born in Madison County, but in early life removed to Logan County, Kentucky, of which he was a representive in the Kentucky Legislature for one term and was also a prominent and influential citizen of his community. The maternal grandfather of Judge Grubbs was Jonathan Stamper, a well known divine of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Kentucky for many years.

Rev. William M. Grubbs was born in 1815, and received his primary training in the public schools. At the age of twenty-one years he entered upon his labors as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and spent his entire life in that calling, dying in 1894, at the age of seventy-nine years. During the Civil war he served for three years as chaplain of the Twenty-sixth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Mrs. Grubbs was born in Kentucky in 1817, and died in 1892. Of the seven children in the family Charles S. was the fourth in order of birth, and only he and a sister, Mrs. E. L. Olcott, are living.

After securing his preliminary training in private schools Charles S. Grubbs attended Bethel College, Russellville, Kentucky, and completed his law course in the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1870. He began practice at Russellville, and in 1874 was elected county judge of Logan County, an office to which he was re-elected subsequently and in which he served two terms. In 1882, at the expiration of his second judicial term, he came to Louisville and established himself in practice, in which he has been engaged successfully ever since, and with the exception of special appointments as Circuit judge he has not since been in public life. As noted, he specializes in insurance and corporation law, and has been attorney for several large railways and other corporations. Although absolutely devoted to the cause of his client in whatever field he has worked, Judge Grubbs has never forgotten the ethics of his profession or stooped to unworthy means to gain an advantage. By close study and through his familiarity with the wide range of legal lore he has usually fortified his position with so many facts and precedents that only the leading practitioners can successfully cope with him, and he has won more than a majority of his cases. Judge Grubbs is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church and for many years has been a vestryman and warden in Calvary Church, Louisville. In politics he is a democrat.

On September 5, 1876, Judge Grubbs married Miss Nannie Rodman, a daughter of Gen. John Rodman, a distinguished lawyer of Frankfort, Kentucky. Their only child was the late Rodman Grubbs, whose brief career well deserves the tribute contained in the individual record following.

Rodman Grubbs. In the abundance of his interests and thoroughness of his service Rodman Grubbs expressed a full rounded life within the comparatively brief period of years allotted him.

He was born at Russellville, Kentucky, June 15, 1877, only son and child of Charles S. and Nannie Rodman Grubbs. He was graduated from the University of Virginia in both the academic and law courses, and entered into partnership with his father under the firm name of Grubbs & Grubbs in 1901. He at once entered into his father's large and important insurance and corporation practice with keen and marked ability.

He was a close student, an able lawyer, who, loving his profession, made no effort to enter public life. Some years ago he was for a short time judge advocate of the First Kentucky Regiment (Louisville), with the rank of captain. When war with Germany was declared, being unable to stand the physical examination required in order to enter the army, he gave much time and attention to local board work, during substantially the entire period of enlistment being Government appeal agent.

In addition to this service there was thrown upon him by reason of the absence of certain associates a large amount of work including certain intricate cases for a group of the largest life insurance companies, which work he brought to a successful conclusion.

The proceedings of the anuual meeting of the Kentucky State Bar Association in July 1920, of which he was a member, contain this reference:

"He was a clear thinker, had a love for the study of law, was successful in general practice and especially well informed in matters on insurance law. For many years he prepared the law notes for the Insurance Field of Louisville, and in the last few years of his life was engaged in the most difficult of life insurance litigation, requiring a thorough knowledge of certain actuarial intricacies, which he mastered and was regarded as more expert in than any other practitioner at the Louisville bar.

"His ideals and ethics were excellent. He enjoyed the full confidence and esteem of the bench and his brethren of the bar of Louisville and throughout the State."

The issue of the Insurance Field of April 2, 1920, closes a sketch of the life of Rodman Grubbs with this tribute:

"Mr. Grubbs was a man of high integrity and great power of application. His advice to this paper on questions of insurance law and practice was remarkably useful to inquirers all over the country. Modest, unassuming, bold in thought and skilful in procedure, he was just entering upon a very large and important practice and responsibilities when stricken. Personally he was a gentleman of wide reading and culture, and a delightful, thoughtful companion. He was a member of the Pendennis Club and of the Louisville Country Club, and had been secretary of the latter for some years. He was a famous golfer locally. In his death has passed away a gentleman greatly beloved, a lawyer of marked success and widening promise and a man of chivalrous purity of character and noble ideals."

After a long illness, but only brief disability, he died in Louisville on Sunday, March 21, 1920, of pernicious anemia, and on March 23rd, after a service at Calvary Episcopal Church, of which he was a member, was buried in the beautiful cemetery at Frankfort, Kentucky. He never married.

Louis Seelbach. One of the greatest hotels in the south dignifies and honors the name Louis Seelbach, and stands as the fruit of his genius and many years of service as a hotel man at Louisville.

Louis Seelbach came to Louisville more than fifty years ago. He is now one of that city's oldest as well as most successful business men, and his career throughout has been one of devoted loyalty, not only to his business but to the welfare and progress of the Kentucky metropolis. He was born in Rhenish Bavaria, Germany, April 12, 1852, a son of Louis and Johanna (Raquet) Seelbach. In his native land he acquired not only a common school education but also the advantages of a gymnasium or collegiate institute at Frankenthal. He was seventeen when in 1869 he came to America, and during the same year located at Louisville. His first employment in the city was in the historic Galt House, then one of the best known hotels in the South. He not only made himself a popular figure in the management during his five years there, but also extended his personal acquaintance and used his opportunities to acquire a thorough technical knowledge of hotel management. Leaving the Galt House he opened the first Seelbach restaurant and cafe, at the corner of Tenth and Main streets. His modest establishment soon had an overflowing patronage, and five years later he broadened his business and sought a new location at the corner of Sixth and Main streets, opening what was at that time hailed as the best equipped and most elaborate restaurant and cafe service in the city. This new chapter in the Seelbach hotel history in Louisville opened in 1880, and in that location new facilities were added from time to time until in 1900 the old Seelbach was thoroughly remodeled and was continued as an institution thoroughly deserving of its old and steady patronage.

However, this was not to be the climax of Mr. Seelbach's career as a hotel man. A few years later he and his two brothers, Charles and Otto, planned, organized and financed a project which began in 1903 and was completed on May 1, 1905, with the opening of the magnificent Seelbach, at that time undoubtedly one of the most elaborate hotels in the south, and even today standing as one of the very first not only in point of equipment and service but in affording all the essentials of a high class hotel. The Seelbach was constructed under Louis Seelbach's personal supervision, and exemplifies many details approved by his long experience and mature judgment. The Seelbach is a ten-story fireproof building of steel and stone, in the heart of Louisville's modern business district, and covers ground 216x105 feet.

With the opening of the new Seelbach the old house at Sixth and Main streets was re-christened the "Old Inn." The Seelbach Hotel Company, of which Louis Seelbach is president, is a corporation for the management of several of Louisville's foremost hotels. The Company acquired the old Victoria at the corner of Tenth and Broadway, remodeled it and gave it a service in keeping with the other two hotels of the company.

Throughout the half century of his residence Mr. Seelbach has been a thoroughly constructive citizen and upbuilder of Louisville, where his is one of the most honored names. He has long been a popular member of business, social and civic organizations, has served a number of years as a director of the Board of Trade, the Convention and Publicity League, and is a director of the Citizens Union National Bank. He is a democrat in politics and has served as a park commissioner for twenty years, and as such did much important and unremunerated work toward realizing the plans for a "City Beautiful."

On November 28, 1888, Mr. Seelbach married Miss Marie H. Durbeck, a native of Knoxville, Tennessee, who was reared and educated in Louisville. Her father, Capt. J. G. Durbeck, was a soldier and officer in the Union Army during the Civil war, and for many years lived at Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Seelbach have three children: Louis, Jr., William Otto and Mary Helen, all of whom are married, and there are three grandchildren.

Robert S. Ambrose. Though at the time he left high school he did not have a dollar in capital and had no wealthy family connections or influential friends to start him, Robert S. Ambrose learned the lumber business by steady and diligent application, has neglected no opportunities in his upward climb, and is now sole owner of one of the largest lumber yards in western Kentucky, with a complete equipment of buildings, sheds and offices. This business is at Hopkinsville, but for many years Mr. Ambrose was in the lumber business at Henderson.

He was born in Grayson County, Kentucky, June 29, 1874. His grandfather, Lewis Ambrose, was a native of England and as a young man came to America and settled in Ohio County, Kentucky, where in the course of time he developed some extensive holdings in farm lands. He died in Ohio County, during the Civil war. His wife was a Miss Chapman, a member of an Ohio County family of that name, where she spent all her life. Benjamin W. Ambrose, father of Robert S., was born in Ohio County in 1841 grew up there and lived as a farmer, and in 1886 moved to Daviess County, Kentucky, and in 1890 to Henderson, where he lived retired until his death in 1917. He was a Confederate soldier during the war between the states, enlisting almost at the beginning of the struggle in a Kentucky regiment at Madisonville. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Vicksburg. He was once wounded in the arm, and was in a hospital for some time. He was also taken prisoner near the end of the war, and was confined near Chicago until the surrender of Lee. In politics he was a stanch democrat, and was one of the leading members of the Baptist Church in his community Benjamin W. Ambrose married Elizabeth Paris, who was born in Ohio County in 1852 and is now living at the city of Henderson. She was the mother of the following children: Alice, the oldest, died unmarried at the age of twenty-two and the next two were twin daughters, Matilda and Edith, both of whom died at the age of nineteen. Edith was the wife of Sidney McCann, a carpenter at Henderson, now deceased. The next in the family is Robert S. Lillian, who died at Henderson at the age of thirty, married Charles Cecil, now foreman in a cotton mill at Henderson. Claude died at Henderson at the age of twenty-one and Birdie, the youngest, is the wife of Leon Busby, a railroad man living at Henderson.

Robert S. Ambrose acquired his early education in the public schools of Henderson, graduating from high school in 1893. He gained his first knowledge of the lumber industry in a planing mill at Henderson, next went to a planing mill at Owensboro, where he remained a year, for six years was foreman of H. W. Clark's planing mill at Henderson, and in 1901 set up in the lumber business for himself at Henderson. He sold lumber in that city until October, 1915, when he moved to Hopkinsville and established himself in the lumber business with a complete new equipment of yards and offices on East Seventh Street, between Clay Street and the Louisville and Nashville Railway, and extending from Seventh to Eighth streets. He is sole proprietor of this business, and handles all classes of lumber and general building supplies. He is also a large property owner at Henderson, and his substantial prosperity has all been built up and acquired through a steady working career beginning a quarter of a century ago.

Mr. Ambrose is a democrat, is a deacon in the Baptist Church at Henderson, is affiliated with Henderson Lodge of Elks and the I. O. O. F. and is a member of the Traveling Men's Association.

Mr. Ambrose first married at Carmi, Illinois, in 1893, Miss Catherine Lipp. She was born in Tell City, Indiana, and died at Henderson February 16, 1916. She was the mother of two children: Clyde S., who died at Henderson at the age of twenty-three years, and Irma, who was married in 1919 to Frank Koewler, a merchant at Henderson. On January 14, 1920, Mr. Ambrose married in Hopkinsville Mrs. Alberta (Hisgen) Moorefield, widow of Robert Moorefield and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hisgen. Her mother is still living, in Hopkinsville, where her father died. Her father was a painting and decorating contractor and a skillful artist in his line.

Charles Moore Phillips. The wide-awake operator in realty in almost any section is able to accomplish results when business conditions are normal, and that many have availed themselves of advantageous circumstances the prosperity of numerous communities and of the individuals themselves conclusively prove. If this is true in the smaller localities how much more so is it at Louisville, where the wealth and industrial activities of this section of the country are concentrated. One of those who has been instrumental in bringing about present substantial conditions is Charles Moore Phillips, who occupies a prominent place as an alert, capable and honorable operator. During his business career along this line he has handled millions of dollars worth of property, either as an individual or for corporations, and his name has been identified with the growth of the city for more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. Phillips was born December 12, 1856, in Marion County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, which had been settled by the maternal grandfather of Charles M. Phillips, William Penick, a pioneer from Virginia of the year 1811. Felix Grundy Phillips, the father of Charles M., was born in Nelson County, Kentucky, in 1818, and received a good education at Lebanon, Kentucky, which qualified him for teaching. For a number of years he followed educational work as a vocation, and among his pupils at one time was J. Proctor Knott, the distinguished lawyer and congressman, at one time governor of Kentucky. Mr. Phillips later became a civil engineer, carrying out highway projects in Marion and adjacent counties and likewise engaged extensively in general farming. For about twelve years he served as county surveyor of Marion County. In politics he was a democrat. An active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he with others organized a Sunday school at Bradfordsville during the Civil war period, and it was through Mr. Phillips' efforts that the community of Bradfordsville adopted prohibition and maintained it continuously during the years that followed, having the distinction of being the only town to be dry in this locality for many years. Mr. Phillips died in 1885. He married Fannie Penick, who was born in Marion County in 1822 and died in 1889, and of their twelve children, five sons and four daughters grew to maturity, three dying in infancy.

The next to the youngest of his parents' children, Charles Moore Phillips, attended Lebanon Academy, Columbia, Kentucky, and for three years taught school in the rural districts. He then entered the law office of Knott & Harrison at Lebanon, where he studied under the preceptorship of J. Proctor Knott and William B. Harrison, and in 1881 was admitted to the bar. For about six years he practiced his profession at Lebanon, and during this time conducted the Lebanon Standard and Times as owner and editor. Coming to Louisville in 1889, he identified himself with the real estate business, and in 1895 laid out a subdivision of Louisville, in that year also erecting the first all-residence apartment building built at Louisville. In 1900 he organized the Louisville Title Company, of which he was general manager until 1919, and in that year was elected president. He was likewise the organizer of the Louisville Industrial Foundation, the object of which was the attraction of manufacturing and other business interests to the city and the benefit of business interest in general. Mr. Phillips is a director in the Stimpson Steel Company and the Swiss Oil Company. Politically independent, he has never sought or cared for public office. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, belongs to the General Board of Missions and is a director in the National Church Insurance Company. Mr. Phillips represents a high type of citizenship and is regarded as one of the leading business men of Louisville, occupying as he does a high position in commercial and social circles. A man of broad conception of civic duty, he has proven beyond cavil his worth as a citizen and his ability and integrity as a man, and his influence reaches out far beyond his city.

On October 27, 1883, Mr. Phillips married Miss Margaret Montague, who was born at Campbellsville, Taylor County, Kentucky, a daughter of Judge Robert and Margaret (Cox) Montague, both of whom are deceased. Judge Montague was born in Harding County, Kentucky, and served for a number of years as county judge of Taylor County. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist Church, to which belonged also his wife, a native of Green County, this state. Of the seven children in their family two died in infancy and two still survive, Mrs. Phillips having been the sixth child in order of birth. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Phillips: Nannie B., the wife of H. H. Constantine, of Clearwater, Florida, who has two sons, Phillips and Joseph; Robert Montague, an electric engineer and sales manager of the Electric Control and Manufacturing Company of Cleveland, Ohio, who married Maud Martin; Charles Moore, Jr., engaged in growing citrus fruits in Florida, who married Ella Casler, of Jacksonville, Florida, and has one daughter, Margaret; William Kendrick, engaged in growing citrus fruits in Florida; Mary, who died at the age of ten years; and Margaret A., who is attending Mary Baldwin Institute in Virginia.

James C. Willson, head of the Investment Banking House of James C. Willson & Company, of Louisville, was born at Richmond, Kentucky, October, 22, 1884, a son of William M. and Agnes (Hanna) Willson. His father, born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1846, was educated at Washington and Lee University and was little more than a lad when he enlisted in the brigade of Stonewall Jackson for service in the Rockbridge Battery of the Confederate Army during the war between the states. He took part in all the engagements of his battery and served therewith until the close of the war, making a splendid record for bravery and faithful performance of duty. In 1866 Mr. Willson, still a young man, came to Shelbyville, Kentucky, where he began teaching school. Later he was one of the organizers of Central University, in which he became professor of Latin and Greek, and remained as such until his retirement in 1895, his last days being spent at Shelbyville, where he died in 1910. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church and in politics was a democrat. Mrs. Willson, who was born in Shelby County in 1859, followed her husband in death in 1911. Of their children, one died in infancy and three sons and three daughters survive, James C. having been the third in order of birth.

James C. Willson was educated in the public schools of Shelbyville, Kentucky. A republican in politics, he has taken an active interest in political affairs, and in 1919 was elected a member of the City Council, in which his work has been valuably constructive. He is a popular member of the Pendennis, Louisville Country and Chess and Whist and River Valley clubs and is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution. During the war period he was tireless in working for the various movements promulgated to assist in the success of American arms. He served as vice chairman for the Liberty Loan drives in the western district of Kentucky and took an active part in Red Cross work. Worthy civic movements have always found in him a stanch supporter. Mr. Willson's religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church.

On January 2, 1913, he was united in marriage with Miss Marion Burman, who was born at Richmond, Kentucky, a daughter of Thompson S. and Bettie (Moran) Burman, natives of Kentucky, where the former is now living, the latter being deceased. Mrs. Willson is the younger of two children. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Willson: James C., Jr., and Bettie Moran.

William Peyton Kincheloe, banker, manager of the Louisville branch of the Federal Reserve Bank, is one of the prominent figures in financial circles in Kentucky, and is a brother of Congressman D. Kincheloe of the Second Kentucky District.

Mr. Kincheloe was born in McLean County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, December 19, 1880, son of Robert McFarlin and Lucy Ann (Reeks) Kincheloe. His parents were both native Kentuckians. His grandparents, Thomas and Minerva (McFarlin) Kincheloe, were also born in Kentucky, and his grandfather spent his active life as a farmer in Daviess County, was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Kincheloe was Thomas Reeks, a well-known farmer in his time in McLean County.

Robert M. Kincheloe was born in Rumsey, Muhlenberg County, now McLean County, December 23, 1839, was educated in the schools there and for a number of years was a successful teacher in country districts. Later he engaged in farming in McLean County and was a successful breeder of harness horses. He retired from his farm in 1900, and is now living at Sacramento in McLean County. He served as county assessor of McLean County eight years, and was a member of the State Legislature during the long session of 1891-92-93. He is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a stanch democrat. His wife was born in Logan County and is now deceased. They were the parents of five sons and two daughters: Phoebe, wife of F. F. Gibson; Jennie M., widow of James R. Morgan; Thomas Thurman, who married Anna Gish; Charles Alexander, who married Margaret Bibb; David Hayes, who was born in 1877, admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1899 and has practiced at Madisonville, was elected to represent the Second Kentucky District in Congress in 1914, and was re-elected for his fourth consecutive term; William P., who is the sixth in age; and Robert Duvall.

William Peyton Kincheloe was educated in the public schools of Daviess County, spent three years in school at Frankfort, graduated in 1899 from Sacramento Academy of his home county, and completed the work of the Bowling Green Business College in 1900. For about three years he engaged in teaching and for four years was in the general merchandise business at Elk City, Oklahoma. Returning to Kentucky, he entered upon his banking career in August, 1905, with the Home Deposit Bank at Central City as bookkeeper, was promoted to assistant cashier and when the bank became the First National Bank of Central City he was made cashier. He resigned this post in November, 1913, to become a national bank examiner, and the four years he spent in that office gave him a wide acquaintance among Kentucky bankers and a thorough knowledge of banking conditions. It was with the hearty support and commendation of Kentucky banking interests that he was appointed in August, 1917, as manager and chairman of the board of directors of the Louisville branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. He handled many of the details of organization of this branch, which was opened for business December 3, 1917.

Mr. Kincheloe on November 21, 1919, was appointed aide de camp on Gov. James D. Black's staff with the rank of colonel. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is affiliated with Sacramento Lodge No. 735, F. & A. M.; Central City Chapter No. 147, R. A. M.; Owensboro Commandery No. 15, K. T.; and Mizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville.

September 11, 1911, Mr. Kincheloe married Miss Blanche Muir, who was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, daughter of John A. and Margaret O. (Hunley) Muir. Her parents were also born in Ohio County and her father died in 1917, at the age of fifty-two and her mother is still living. Mrs. Kincheloe is the oldest of three sons and two daughters. Her father for many years was in the signal department of the Illinois Central Railway Company, was a democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Kincheloe have one son, William Peyton, Jr.

James B. Brown. One of the largest banks in the South is the National Bank of Kentucky at Louisville. The president of this institution is James B. Brown, who has had a remarkable rise in business affairs from office boy through successive stages of banking until for the last twelve years he has been president or officer in half a dozen large financial and other institutions at Louisville.

Mr. Brown was born at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, November 28, 1872, son of Thornton and Paralee (McKee) Brown. On both sides of the house the family goes back to old Virginia, where his grandfather, John Benjamin Brown, was born and where his mother's grandfather, William McKee, was a native. The maternal grandfather was also William McKee.

James B. Brown was a boy when his parents moved to Shelbyville, Kentucky, where his father was a merchant many years. He was educated in the public schools and in 1887, at the age of fifteen, came to Louisville and found his first employment as an office boy with the Southern News Company. He was cashier of that company when he resigned to become cashier in the office of the city tax receiver. Four years later he was elected tax receiver, and performed the duties of that municipal office four years.

In 1906 Mr. Brown was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Louisville, and on November 5, 1908, was made president of that institution. This post he resigned to become first vice president of the National Bank of Commerce, and at the death of Samuel Cassidy became president. In February, 1919, occurred a notable consolidation of Louisville banks, including the National Bank of Commerce, National Bank of Kentucky, German Bank, and the American Southern National Bank, making the National Bank of Kentucky, of which Mr. Brown was promoted to the post of president.

For many years he has been directly identified with a number of other local business concerns. He is vice president of the Louisville Gas and Electric Company, a director of the Standard Oil Company, director of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, a director of the Louisville Food and Provision Company, and director of the Louisville Home Telephone Company. During the World war his financial and business abilities were commandeered by President Wilson, who appointed him a member of the Capital Issues Committee, and he spent nearly a year in Washington during 1918-19. Secretary McAdoo also appointed him state director for Kentucky of war savings. He was a leader in promoting the sale of Liberty Loans and the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. drives.

Mr. Brown was one of the organizers and a director in the Kentucky Jockey Club. He has served as president of the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners for Louisville, is a member of the Commercial Club and Elks, and a popular member of many local organizations. Mr. Brown married Miss Elizabeth Kennedy, whose father, Bud Kennedy, was for many years a well-known Louisville coal merchant.

Albert B. Koett was actively associated with J. Robert Kelley at the beginning of the great industry now known as the Kelley-Koett Manufacturing Company of Covington. Mr. Koett is vice president of this corporation, which owns the largest plant in the world exclusively devoted to the manufacture of X-Ray instruments and apparatus. It was started in Covington about a quarter of a century ago by Mr. Koett and Mr. Kelley, soon after the discovery of the X-Ray by the scientist Roentgen. This company has done more than any other organization to perfect the delicate and elaborate apparatus now found as an essential part of the equipment for the great hospitals, laboratories and many of the offices of individual surgeons and physicians. Apparatus manufactured by the Covington Company represents the last word of perfection in such equipment, and the fact that their machines are part of the equipment of the Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota, speaks for itself, though many other institutions almost equally well known secured similar equipments from the Kelley-Koett Company. During the World war the plant was practically turned over to Government use, manufacturing portable apparatus and other instruments on plans drawn and approved by Government experts for use in the battle area and the hospitals behind the lines.

Albert B. Koett was born in Saxe-Weimar, Germany, May 28, 1863. His father, Professor C. Koett, was born in Saxe-Weimar in 1817, and at this writing was still living, aged one hundred and four years, his home being at Geisa, Saxe-Weimar. His active life was devoted to music, and he was a professor of that art. He is a Catholic in religion. Professor Koett married Mary Stehling, who was born in Saxe-Weimar in 1828, and died there in 1904. They were the parents of a large family of children: Edmund, a wine merchant who died at Frankfort, Germany; Albert B.; Caspar, owning a furniture factory at Saxe-Weimar; Cornelia, who died at Denver, Colorado; Gustav, a modeler by trade who lives at Norwood, Ohio; Mrs. Mary Stetter, wife of a machinist living at Riverside, Ohio; Otto, a fresco painter and contractor with home at Seattle, Washington; Celia, wife of Fred Worley, a stereotype operator at Riverside, Ohio; Amand, a druggist in Frankfort, Germany; Mrs. Ida Reichard, who lives at Tacoma, Washington, where her husband owns a tailoring establishment; Leonard, a druggist at Frankfort, Germany; and Miss Josephine, who remains at home caring for her aged father.

Albert B. Koett grew up in Saxe-Weimar, attended the common schools to the age of fourteen, following which he served a four years' apprenticeship at the sculptor's trade or art. He was employed as a sculptor in Germany, but since 1884 has been a resident of the United States. For about a year he followed his profession at Cincinnati, but in 1885 entered the service of the Wurlitzer Music Company of Cincinnati, and for ten years was with that great musical instruments manufacturing concern. He left that business to join his enterprise and capital with Mr. Kelley in their venture into a comparatively new and untried field, and together they have labored and built up and perfected an organization that not only ranks high in a commercial way, but is one of a unique interest among Kentucky's industries.

Mr. Koett was for four years an active member of the Covington Board of Education. He is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Colonel Clay Lodge No. 159, F. and A. M., Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine at Frankfort. Aside from the great service rendered by his company to further the purposes of the Government in the World war he was associated with local citizens in carrying out war plans. He was one of the active canvassers for the sale of bonds and other Government securities.

Mr. Koett owns a modern home in Covington at 515 Russell Avenue. In 1887, at Harrison, Ohio, he married Miss Blanche Mott, a native of that town. She died at Covington, December 23, 1915. She was a graduate of the Harrison High School. Mr. Koett had four children: Ida, who died at the age of twenty-one the wife of K. Crockett; Irene, who is married and lives at Newport News, Virginia; Eva, married and living at Cincinnati; and Ruth, a student in the Nazareth Academy at Nazareth, Kentucky.

Graddy Cary is a native of Louisville, graduated in law twenty-one years ago, by individual work attracted attention as a successful young lawyer, and for a number of years past has been a member of the very prominent Louisville firm of Burnett, Batson & Cary, which easily ranks with the leading law firms of the state.

Mr. Cary was born in Louisville, April 6, 1878, son of Arthur and Fanny (Graddy) Cary. His father was born in Louisville, October 1, 1841, and is now living, at the age of eighty, at Lexington. He graduated from the Louisville Law School in 1868, and from that year until 1889 practiced law in Louisville. In 1889 he became general counsel for the Kentucky Union Railway Company and the Kentucky Union Land Company. Subsequently for a quarter of a century he was president of these two corporations until 1917, when on account of advancing years and with all the success that justifies it he retired from his profession and business. He is a republican and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864.

Fanny Graddy, mother of Graddy Cary, was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, in 1848, and died April 8, 1878, just two days after the birth of her only son and child. Arthur Cary, on February 12, 1895, married the widow of D. D. Bell, of Lexington.

Graddy Cary was educated in the public and private schools of Louisville, began his academic studies in Kentucky University in 1893, and in 1896 matriculated in Center College at Danville, from which he received his A. B. degree in 1898. Mr. Cary studied law in the University of Virginia, graduating with the class of 1900. For about a year he was in practice at Lexington, and on September 2, 1901, located at Louisville, where for about three years he depended on his own talents and energies to build up a professional clientele. In 1904 he became associated with Judge Homer W. Batson, under the firm name of Batson & Cary. This association has been continuous for seventeen years, and in January, 1910, Mr. Henry Burnett became head of the firm Burnett, Batson & Cary. Mr. Burnett is now practically retired, leaving the bulk of the large practice to Mr. Batson and Mr. Cary and their junior associates.

Mr. Cary has found all the success to satisfy his ambition in the strict lines of his profession, and has never cared for public honors. In 1909 he demitted from Fall City Lodge of Masons to become a charter member of Crescent Hill Lodge No. 820, F. & A. M. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha college fraternity and the Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity, and in politics is a republican.

January 17, 1907, he married Miss Marie Burnett, daughter of Mr. Henry Burnett, head of Burnett, Batson & Cary. The history of Mrs. Cary's family is given on other pages of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Cary have two children, Arthur and Henry Burnett Cary.

Oscar Fenley. As one of the chief centers of finance and commerce in the South, Louisville is the home of great institutions whose power and influence reach out far beyond the limits of this state. One such institution is the National Bank of Kentucky, one of the largest and strongest banks in the South. The president of that bank for many years and now chairman of its board of directors is Oscar Fenley, who has been identified with Louisville banking for half a century and became president of the bank after a long consecutive service of utmost fidelity and efficiency.

Mr. Fenley was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, June 25, 1855, son of John N. and Mary Elizabeth (Carr) Fenley. Mr. Fenley possesses the original deed to a farm in Jefferson County which was acquired by his ancestor, Isaac Fenley, who came from Virginia to Kentucky in 1790. This family farm is therefore one of the oldest in the continuous possession of one family in the state.

Oscar Fenley was educated in the public schools of Louisville, and at the age of sixteen became a clerk in the Citizens Bank of Louisville. In the early years his superiors recognized in him a young man of more than ordinary industry and alert comprehension, supplemented by a character that is a fundamental factor in a financial career. From 1888 for nine years Mr. Fenley was cashier of the Citizens Bank. In 1896 he accepted the office of vice president in the National Bank of Kentucky, and in 1897 became president. He was president more than twenty years, and in February, 1919, resigned and accepted the chairmanship of the board of directors.

He is a former director of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, was president of the Louisville Clearing House in 1909 and 1910, and has been president of the Bourbon Stock Yards Company, Kentucky Public Elevator Company, a director of the Fidelity Trust Company, Louisville City Railway Company, and vice chairman of the Louisville City Sewerage Commission. He has been treasurer of the Board of Trade, is an active member of the Commercial Club, the Pendennis, Country, Chess and Whist clubs, and has been treasurer of Louisville Chapter of the American Red Cross since it was organized.

In 1883 Mr. Fenley was united in marriage with Miss Alice Short, a daughter of William Short. She died in 1890, leaving one daughter, Elizabeth, who died in 1915. In June, 1897, Mr. Fenley married Miss Mary Johnston Woolley, daughter of Col. Robert W. Woolley, of Kentucky. They have one daughter, Mary Johnston Fenley, who is attending college.

Fred Forcht. Of the prominent members of the Louisville bar none has achieved a more pronounced success than Fred Forcht. Attaining in his early youth a prominence which foretold a brilliant future, he has exceeded the hopes and predictions of his warmest admirers. His ability as a jury lawyer has carried his fame beyond the limits of this state, and his name is familiar to attorneys of prominence all over the United States, while the integrity and reliability which formed the foundation stone of his career have remained to complement his legal acumen and forensic skill.

Mr. Forcht is a native son, having been born in Louisville, October 15, 1876, son of Fred and Emma (Forcht) Forcht. Both his parents were natives of Hanover, Germany, who came to these shores in order to rid themselves of that Kaiserism and Prussianism which was already making its insidious influence felt in 1854, at which time the elder Forcht arrived in Louisville. Here he engaged in the packing business and was one of the pioneer pork packers of Louisville and for twenty years held a contract to supply meat for the United States Government. He became one of the city's widely known and very successful men. He enlisted in the Union army in 1861 as a member of the Twenty-eighth Kentucky Foot Volunteers and served until discharged for disability.

Fred Forcht graduated from the Louisvile High School in 1894 and from the Law School of the University of Louisville in 1896, this being followed by post-graduate work in law at the University of Virginia. In the meantime he became connected with the law firm of O'Neal, Jackson & Phelps. In 1898 he and Mr. Phelps of this firm formed a partnership, which was terminated by the death of Mr. Phelps in 1901. Mr. Forcht was then associated with William H. Field of Forcht & Field until the election of Mr. Field to the bench in 1909, since which date his work has been that of an individual attorney engaged in wide and diversified practice.

A democrat in his political affiliations, he has served for many years without hope or desire for personal gains, having repeatedly refused to seek or accept any public office for pecuniary advantages. For eight years he served as democratic election commissioner of Jefferson County, and has aided in the work which has extended the influence and promoted the success of that organization. In 1919 he consented at a great personal loss to serve as local campaign manager for Governor Black, and when in 1920 it became apparent that Louisville's democracy had fallen into undesirable hands, he assisted materially in reorganizing the party and presided at the mass meeting in which the present city and county committee was elected.

Throughout his career Mr. Forcht has given wholehearted and capable support to the countless movements for the public good. During the war he acted as Government appeal agent in his district. He is now and has for some time served as attorney for the State Board of Health and the Jefferson County Medical Society. Fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a member of Lewis Lodge No. 191, F. & A. M., is an Elk, a Presbyterian, and a member of the County and State Bar associations.

Mr. Forcht married Anna Hafenborfer, daughter of Christian Hafenborfer, of Louisville. They have one daughter, Leota, now eighteen years of age.

Walter Pierce Lincoln, judge since 1910 of the Common Pleas branch of the Jefferson Circuit Court, has had a career of genuine distinction and service both in the private and public aspects of his profession as a lawyer. He became a member of the Louisville bar, May 30, 1877, and it was only a high sense of duty that impelled him to abandon a profitable and congenial practice to assume the responsibilities of the bench.

He is a native of Louisville, was born on the southeast corner of Sixth and Jefferson streets, December 17, 1857, son of Dennis and Catherine (Murray) Lincoln. His parents were natives of Ireland, and on coming to America lived in Boston, where they were married, and toward the close of the '40s moved to Louisville. Dennis Lincoln was for many years a merchant tailor, and at one time was a justice of the peace.

Walter P. Lincoln attended the parochial schools of his native city, the Xavierian Brothers School and the Louisville Male High School, and began the study of law under James F. Clay at Henderson. He was admitted to the bar at Henderson in May, 1877, but at once returned to Louisville to begin practice. From 1880 for a period of thirty years Judge Lincoln was a member of the firm of Lincoln & Lieber. He enjoyed his work as a lawyer, and had a dignified and successful position which he had no desire to exchange for the cares and anxieties of politics.

He first became a factor in local politics in 1907 when the Appellate Court disqualified all the officials elected by the City of Louisville and County of Jefferson. Governor Beckham had the responsibility of appointing a new set of officers, and in his search for men of recognized fitness he chose Robert W. Bingham as mayor of Louisville and three times importuned Mr. Lincoln to accept the post of county judge. The third time Governor Beckham presented the urgency of the situation in person to Mr. Lincoln, and the latter reluctantly consented to accept the appointment, which carried with it in conjunction with Major Bingham the responsibility of appointing officers to all the other county and city departments. This task was carried out to the satisfaction of all interested in local government, and Judge Lincoln served as county judge from June until November, 1907.

In 1909 he was elected to the Circuit Bench in the Common Pleas branch, and in 1915 was re-elected for the second term, in which he is now serving.

Judge Lincoln has many of the interests of a cultivated gentleman and scholar. His amateur enthusiasm in the study of chemistry brought him a Fellowship in the American Chemical Society. He was one of the charter members of the Knights of Columbus in the South, belongs to the Louisville Council of that order, is a member of the National Geographic Society, the Pendennis and Juniper Hunting clubs, and for several years has spent his winter vacations hunting in Florida.

Judge Lincoln married Ida May Adams, a native of Rockcastle County, Kentucky. Her father, Capt. Jack Adams, was a captain in the Texas Rangers when Texas gained its independence, subsequently was in the United States regular army and went through the war with Mexico. Judge Lincoln and wife have one daughter, May Adams Lincoln.

A. W. Wood. In point of age, influence, well-deserved prestige and successful management one of the foremost newspapers of Western Kentucky is the Kentucky New Era, published in Hopkinsville. It was founded half a century ago, and for thirty years of its existence A. W. Wood, present proprietor and publisher, has been actively identified with its business management.

Mr. Wood in addition to a successful career as a newspaper man has found many business and civic interests to enlist his services at Hopkinsville.

He was born in that city October 25, 1869, and his own age practically coincides with the age of the New Era. His ancestors were Virginians, of English stock, and some of the family served in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather was Dr. Alfred C. Wood, who was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1821, and died at Charlottesville in that state in 1871. He spent a long and active career as a physician and surgeon. He married Martha W. Rogers who was born in Albemarle County in 1822 and died at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, in 1908.

The father of the Hopkinsville editor and publisher was the late Hunter Wood, who as a lawyer and citizen enjoyed a place of exceptional prominence in Western Kentucky for more than half a century. He was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, November 2, 1845, and died at Hopkinsville, May 29, 1920, at the age of seventy-five. He grew up in the home of a country physician on a farm a few miles north of Charlottesville, and in the years before the war had all the advantages of education bestowed upon sons of Virginia gentlemen. Early in the war he entered the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, being too young to enlist, but before the war was over he and his fellow students volunteered and he participated in the battle of Newmarket, Virginia, May 15, 1864, under the command of Gen. John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky. After the war he took up the study of law in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and in 1867 came to Hopkinsville, Kentucky, and soon made a place for himself at the bar of that city. He practiced for more than half a century. In 1870 he was elected county attorney of Crittenden County, serving four years, was then elected and for six years was commonwealth's attorney of his judicial district, in 1884 was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention of Chicago which nominated Grover Cleveland, and early in Mr. Cleveland's administration was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Second District. He remained in that office four years, and after that devoted his time and energies almost entirely to the private practice of his profession. He was a director of the Cristian-Todd Telephone Company, was a Knight Templar Mason, Odd Fellow and Knight of Pythias, and all his life a devoted member of the Episcopal Church, serving as vestryman of the church at Hopkinsville for half a century.

On December 16, 1868, Hunter Wood married Rosalie Nelson Green, who was born in Christian County, a daughter of John R. and Elizabeth (Nelson) Green, of Kentucky and Virginia ancestry. She is still living at Hopkinsville. Hunter Wood and wife had five children: A. Walker; Elizabeth Wood; Hunter, who bears his father's name and is also a member of his father's profession as a lawyer, living at Hopkinsville; Grace, wife of E. A. Chavanne, state agent for the Royal Insurance Company, living at New Orleans; and Hugh N., a civil engineer, living at Louisville, and chief engineer for the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railway Company.

A. W. Wood graduated from the Hopkinsville High School in 1883, finished the course of the South Kentucky College in 1886, spent one year in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, and continuously since 1889 his activities and services have identified him with the newspaper business with the Kentucky New Era. In that year he became business manager of the paper and since 1900 has been sole proprietor. The New Era circulates and has a distinctive influence all over Southwestern Kentucky, though most of its circulation is confined to Christian County. It is the official paper of that county, is a democratic organ, and as a publishing plant the New Era has one of the best and most up-to-date establishments in Western Kentucky, the printing equipment including linotype, perfected presses, etc.

Mr. Wood served eight years as auditor and treasurer of the City of Hopkinsville, was a member of the city council two years, is now on the Board of Education, and is a director in the Bank of Hopkinsville He is a democrat and is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. & A. M., Evergreen Lodge No. 38, Knights of Pythias, and as a citizen and publisher has the deepest interest in every matter affecting the welfare and prosperity of his city and county.

He and his family live in a modern home at 747 East Seventh Street. He married at Hopkinsville in 1899 Miss Madge Fairleigh, daughter of Dr. Robert and Anna (Slaughter) Fairleigh, the latter still living in Hopkinsville. Her father, now deceased, was a prominent physician and surgeon at Hopkinsville, where he began practice soon after the Civil war. Mrs. Wood is a graduate of the Bethel Woman's College of Hopkinsville, receiving the B. A. degree from that institution. She is the mother of three children: A. W., Jr., in the sophomore class of the University of Pennsylvania; Thomas F., in the freshman year of Pennsylvania University; and Margaret, attending public school at Hopkinsville.

E. H. Hester. Of the men whose business abilities, good workmanship and intelligent use of opportunities have contributed to the upbuilding and development of the various thriving communities of Kentucky, one who has accomplished much for the good of his locality both as business man and citizen is E. H. Hester, the competent and reliable contractor and builder of Hopkinsville. During a career that has extended over a long period of years he has won and held the confidence of those with whom he has been associated, and the character and quality of his work evidence his pride in his craft and the public spirit which is a part of his personal make-up.

Mr. Hester was born on a farm in Trigg County, Kentucky, October 13, 1871, a son of R. W. and Ella (Savells) Hester. Like many other families of this region, the Hesters originated in England, whence the original American progenitor immigrated to this country during Colonial times and settled in Virginia. The family was founded in Kentucky by the great-grandfather of E. H. Hester, a native of Virginia, who came at an early date to Trigg County and here passed the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits. His son, Henry Hester, was born in Virginia and was a youth when he accompanied the family to Trigg County. Here he followed in the footsteps of his father as a farmer, and died in 1878, at the age of seventy-two years, after an honorable and successful career. His first wife bore the maiden name of Miss Blanks, and was the grandmother of E. H. Hester, before whose birth she died.

R. W. Hester, father of E. H. Hester, was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, in 1842, and died at Cadiz, this state, in 1884. He was reared, educated and married in Trigg County, where he passed his entire career with the exception of about two years spent in Christian County. For the greater part of his career he followed agricultural operations, but during the last four years of his life applied himself to the trade of machinist. Mr. Hester was a man highly respected, but sought no public preference over his fellows, being content to lead a quiet life and to confine his activities to an exemplification of good citizenship. He married Miss Ella Savells, who was born in 1854, in Trigg County, Kentucky, and died at Hopkinsville in 1916. They became the parents of four children: Gertrude, who died in 1900, as the wife of the late J. J. Thomasson, a carpenter of Paducah, who had been formerly a farmer in Trigg County; Hallie, who died in 1912, at Hopkinsville, as the wife of W. H. Nixon, a carpenter and builder; E. H.; and W. H., a contractor and builder of Hopkinsville.

E. H. Hester acquired his education in the rural schools of Trigg and Christian counties, his schooling ending when he was fourteen years of age, at which time he began working for his father on the home farm. He continued thus employed until he was nineteen years of age, and then began to learn the trade of carpenter in Christian County. In 1892 he came to Hopkinsville, where he applied himself to carpentry and building, and this city has continued to be his home and the scene of his activities and success. In 1905 he began to devote himself to building and contracting, and in this field has built up the largest individual contracting business in Christian County. His offices are situated at 106 South Virginia Street. Among other structures Mr. Hester has built the City Bank of Hopkinsville, the First National Bank of this city, the Rex Theatre and many large business houses, residences and factories. He is the owner of a farm two miles southwest of Hopkinsville, on which he carries on general farming and stockraising, and where his home is located. Mr. Hester is a director of the Building and Loan Association and has other connections. During his earlier years he served as chief of the Hopkinsville Fire Department for four years, and his support has always been given to worthy measures. This was particularly apparent during the World war, when he gave unstintingly to the various causes and worked personally in their behalf. Mr. Hester is a member of the Christian Church, and for some years has acted in the capacity of deacon therein. As a fraternalist he is affiliated with Green River Lodge No. 54, I. O. O. F., and Evergreen Lodge No. 38, K. P.

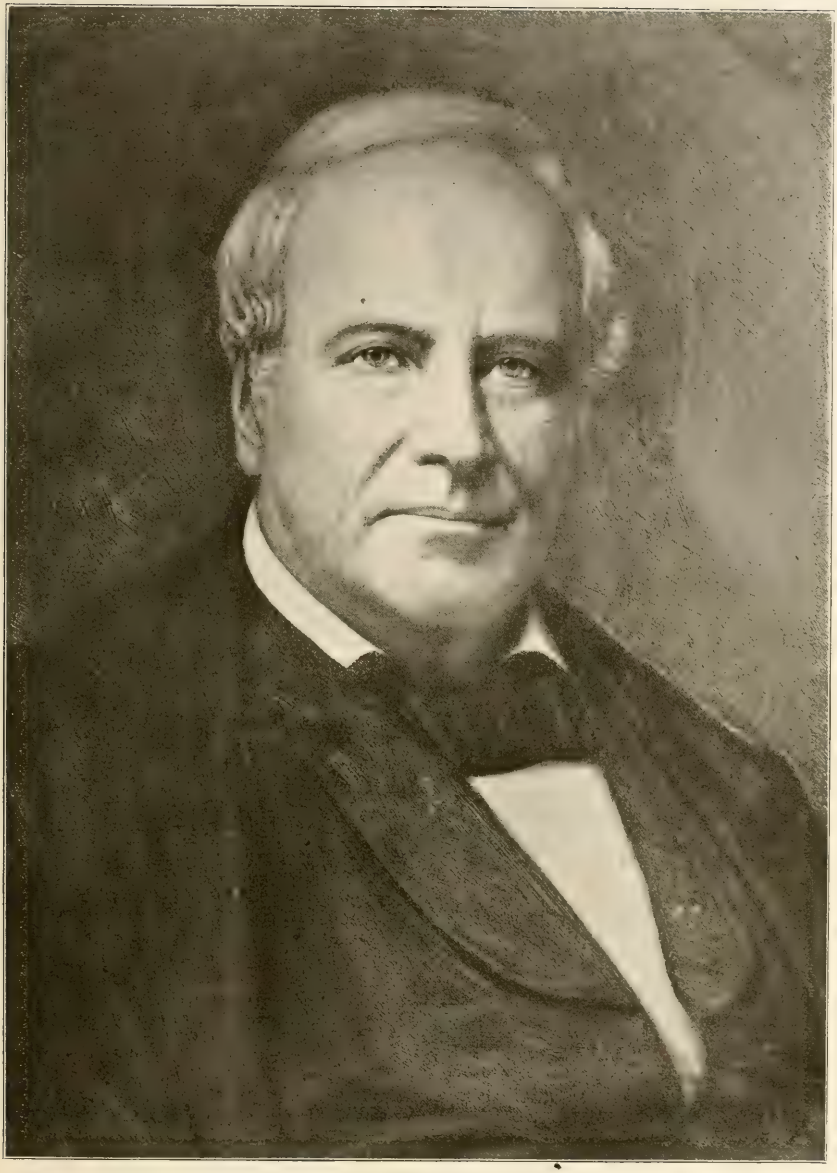
In 1903 he was married in Trigg County, near Cerulean Springs, to Miss Verna Brandon, daughter of John and Helen (Phillips) Brandon, farming people of that community, both of whom are now deceased. To this union there have been born five children: Edward, born April 7, 1904, a sophomore at the Hopkinsville High School; Gertrude, who is a member of the freshman class of that school; and William, Harry and Dorothy, who are attending the graded schools of Hopkinsville.

James Hunter Bell, one of the enterprising farmers and highly esteemed citizens of Daviess County, lives two miles east of Owensboro. He was born in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, December 6, 1844, and is a son of William and Louisa (Ewing) Bell. William Bell was born at Glass Loch, County Monahan, Ireland, in 1790, and died in Daviess County, Kentucky, in 1865. He was a son of John and Elizabeth (Dobbin) Bell, the former of Irish and latter of French origin, and both of them lived and died in Ireland. The name Bell is of Scotch origin, and Adam Bell having emigrated from Scotland to Ireland as early as 1689.

William Bell came to the United States when he was nineteen years old, and first lived at Reading, Pennsylvania, but later moved to Harrodsburg, Kentucky. Still later he resided at Shelbyville and Louisville, Kentucky. At Harrodsburg and Shelbyville he was engaged in merchandising, and when he went to Louisville became interested in the wholesale dry goods trade, and from 1827 until 1844 remained in that line. In the latter year he sold his business and came to Daviess County, where he bought a farm of 1,000 acres of land to the East of Owensboro, and here he lived out the remainder of his life, a period of twenty-one years, during that time devoting himself to the pursuit of agriculture. He was twice married, his first wife having been Mary Allison, whom he married at Shelbyville, and she bore him the following children: John, Robert, William and Mary E. For his second wife, William Bell married at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Louisa Elizabeth Ewing. She was born at Trenton, New Jersey, May 24, 1804, and died December 3, 1888. Her parents were Maskell and Jane (Hunter) Ewing, the former, born in 1758, serving as a soldier in the American Revolution. He later became a lawyer and died in 1825. His parents were Maskell and Mary C. (Paget) Ewing, and his grandparents were Thomas and Mary (Maskell) Ewing. Thomas Ewing was the American progenitor of the family, having come to this country from Glasgow, Scotland, in 1718, after a period of some years spent in Ireland. Upon his arrival in the American Colonies he located at Greenwich, New Jersey. The Bells and Ewings have been Presbyterians in religious faith and are noted for strong force of character, high standards in living and thrift and industry.

James Hunter Bell and a sister, Louisa, his senior, were born of the second marriage of William Bell, and he was only a month old when his parents moved to Daviess County, and since then he has made it his home. He received a good elementary education, and was a student in college when his father died in 1865. Leaving his studies, he came home and assumed charge of the homestead, and has never been without farming interests since that time, although for eight years he was one of the owners and the manager of the Daviess County distillery, and from 1896 to 1904 was a buyer, rehandler and exporter of tobacco.

On November 5, 1872, James Hunter Bell was united in marriage with Elizabeth Woolfolk, of Daviess County, who died in 1880, having borne her husband four children. On October 17, 1882, Mr. Bell was married to Miss Emily Craig, a native of Daviess County, and a daughter of Robert and Mary Jane (McHenry) Craig. Her father was a native of Scotland and her mother of Ohio County, Kentucky. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bell: Mary, who died in 1920, and Nannie, James Hunter, Ewing Craig, Elenor C., (now Mrs. Birk), Robert Maskell, Edward Hobbs Luckett, all of whom are living.



Mr. and Mrs. Bell are members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a democrat. Their house is one of the oldest in Daviess County, and is a hewn-log structure, plastered and weather-boarded, of Colonial style, and here a generous hospitality is extended to the many friends of the family. Mr. Bell is a progressive man both in his business and civic ideas, and is proud of his family, community, state and nation.

Richard H. Holland. In 1916, after a career of great activity, varied accomplishment and signal usefulness, Richard H. Holland retired from business affairs at Hopkinsville, the city which had seen the birth of his business career in 1881. For many years Mr. Holland was the owner and operator of the Holland Opera House, and in addition to that enterprise his name was identified with numerous other concerns, all of which benefited by the strength of his ability and the wisdom of his judgment.

Mr. Holland was born on a farm in Christian County, Kentucky, February 26, 1857, a son of John S. and Lucy (Palmer) Holland, being a member of an old family of Colonial Virginia. His father was born in 1831, in the Old Dominion state, and was a child when brought by his parents to Christian County, where he grew to manhood and was married. For some years Mr. Holland was engaged in farming in the same county, 2½ miles from Pembroke, and while he was still comparatively a young man when he died, in 1867, had already become successful and was the owner of a 350-acre property. He was a stalwart democrat in his political views and a strong churchman of the Presbyterian faith. Mr. Holland married Miss Lucy Palmer, who was born in 1833, in Kentucky, and died on the home farm in 1858. There were only two children in the family: Lynn McCauley, who died when young in Christian County, and Richard H.

Richard H. Holland received his education in the rural schools of Christian County and in Bethel College, Russellville, Kentucky, and following his graduation from the latter institution he was unemployed for one year. From 1875 until 1881 he operated the home farm and in the latter year came to Hopkinsville, where he built the Holland Opera House, a two-story structure situated at 108-110-112 Main Street, which he still owns. This he operated with success until 1916, at the close of which season he retired from activity and ceased to rent his house for the purpose of presenting performances. During the many years that Mr. Holland was connected with theatrical ventures he furnished the people of Hopkinsville with the best of entertainment securable, and was instrumental in having many high-class performers and companies visit the city.

He is a director in the Hopkinsville Milling Company and treasurer and director of the Pennyroyal Fair Association, which holds the biggest annual fairs in Kentucky outside of the City of Louisville. The

William Bell

Pennyroyal Fair Grounds are situated on the forty-acre property belonging to Mr. Holland, adjoining Hopkinsville on the south. He is also the owner of 500 acres of land, including the old home place, situated 2½ miles west of Pembroke, at the site of Salubria, Kentucky, widely famed for its healthful sulphur springs. Mr. Holland is a democrat in politics, and formerly served for four years as a member of the city council of Hopkinsville. He is unmarried.

Dennis B. Blackford. A farm eight miles southwest of Lexington, in the northern part of Jessamine County, now owned and occupied by Dennis B. Blackford and his mother, has for many years been noted for its livestock and agricultural enterprise. It is also a landmark in Kentucky history, its original owner having been one of the companions of Daniel Boone, and Dennis B. Blackford is a descendant of that pioneer ancestor.

The great-grandfather of Dennis B. Blackford was Benjamin Blackford, who was born in Ohio Territory in 1760. He was an early settler in Kentucky and died near Nicholasville in Jessamine County in 1842. Benjamin Blackford married Katherine Sadusky, whose father was Anthony Sadusky, and her grandfather was a native of Poland and an early settler in Virginia. Nathaniel Blackford, son of Benjamin and Katherine, was born near Nicholasville, Kentucky, December 18, 1799, and died February 1, 1877. He married Rebecca Sadusky, who was born in Jessamine County in 1812 and died in November, 1897. Her parents were Ephraim and Anna (Evans) Sadusky, both life-long residents of Jessamine County. Jacob Sadusky, father of Ephraim, was a Virginian and was a companion of Daniel Boone, above referred to. For his services in surveying Kentucky lands Jacob Sadusky received a grant of 2,000 acres on the waters of Stinking Creek, and that original grant includes the Blackford farm mentioned at the beginning of this article. Jacob Sadusky lived and died on this tract and was buried on the farm. He married Jemima Voss, a native of Virginia. In the pioneer times she was captured by Indians, was held a prisoner for several days, and to her death carried on her head a scar caused by an Indian tomahawk. Jacob Sadusky died when past ninety years of age. Ephraim Sadusky's first wife, Anna Evans, died when her daughter Rebecca was a child. He married for his second wife Hettie Collins. Rebecca Sadusky was born December 21, 1812, and died November 3, 1897, and for many years her welfare was looked after by her son John H. Blackford. The old home on the Blackford farm was erected in 1843 by Nathaniel Blackford.

John H. Blackford was born on that farm August 5, 1841, and during his life he became one of Kentucky's famous horsemen. He devoted his chief time and energies to the breeding of trotting stock. He also trained and raced his horses, had a training track on his farm, and for a number of years had a string of horses that followed the Blue Grass circuit. One of his noted horses was Hindu Wilkes, with a record of 2:20¼, and which sold for $10,000, one of the highest prices then paid for a trotting horse. John H. Blackford married Ellen Tilford Burns. Mrs. Blackford was born in Fleming County, Kentucky, August 5, 1853, daughter of Dennis and Mary A. (Wilson) Burns. Her parents both died in Fleming County in 1877. Her grandparents were Enoch and Susan (Rice) Burns. Enoch's father, Dennis Burns, was a native of Scotland and died in Bath County, Kentucky.

John H. Blackford died January 4, 1898, at the age of fifty-seven. He and his wife had only one son, Dennis B. Blackford, who was born on the present farm January 12, 1876, and has lived in one house practically all the days of his life. He inherited his father's love for horses and as a young man entered upon a program of breeding and training for the track on an even more extensive scale than his father had conducted operations. Once on driving a first-class horse in a race and being distanced, he went home very despondent, and was greeted by his mother, who had seen the race, with a smile. She said she was delighted he was shut out as she had prayed for that very outcome. Realizing the earnestness of her opposition, Mr. Blackford at once abandoned racing, sold his race stock at a sacrifice, and since then has devoted himself entirely to substantial farming interests. For a number of years he has been a wheat dealer, not engaged in the speculative trade, but buying wheat outright and storing for an advance in price, and his operations in this market have on the whole been very profitable.

Mr. Blackford now owns 750 acres of the original Sadusky grant of 2,000 acres, and this land has never been out of the Sadusky family and its heirs for 140 years. The farm is devoted to general agriculture and live stock. Mr. Blackford for a number of years has been a Kentucky hog grower. In early years he sold hogs at 2¾ cents a pound, though an offset for the low price was the fact that labor cost only 50 cents a day. Out of his efforts at farming and business he has acquired the generous acreage above noted, frequently going in debt for his additional purchases. He has usually grown tobacco on from twenty-five to forty acres, the crop being handled by tenants. Mr. Blackford sends to market annually about fifty head of cattle and from 100 to 150 head of hogs. He is a director of the Farmers Exchange Bank of Nicholasville.

He has never married and has always shared the home of his mother, who has long been a member of the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church. The family have always been democrats. Mr. Blackford is a Knight of Pythias. His vacations are usually spent with rod or gun in the mountains.

Clyde H. Whaley. The value in business of concentrating one's forces upon a given line of activity, of correctly gauging its importance among the needs of the world and keeping pace with the ever-changing conditions surrounding it, is confirmed anew in the career of Clyde H. Whaley, a successful wholesale grocer of Hopkinsville. While he has been identified with his present business only since 1917, Mr. Whaley has had broad and practical experience in lines closely allied with his present one, and is known well and prominently to the trade in this part of Kentucky.

Mr. Whaley was born at Waupun, Wisconsin, July 9, 1883, a son of Frank and Emily (Holden) Whaley, and a member of a family which originated in England and was founded in America during Colonial times when the first ancestor in this country settled in the State of New York. The first American ancestor on the maternal side was Jonathan Fayerbank, who came to Dedham, Massachusetts, in 1633 and built the Fairbanks House in 1636, which still stands, being the oldest frame building in America today. William Whaley, the grandfather of Clyde H. Whaley, was born in New York State, in 1820, and during a long period of years was engaged in farming in his native commonwealth. In later years he removed to Ladoga, Wisconsin, where he became the proprietor of a hotel and where his death occurred about 1880. Frank Whaley was born in New York, in 1844, and as a young man engaged in farming in the vicinity of Oneida, that state. In 1876 he removed to Waupun, Wisconsin, where he resumed agricultural operations and where he became an extensive and successful farmer and prominent and influential citizen. He died there in 1893. Mr. Whaley was a republican and was fraternally affiliated with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. He married Miss Emily Holden, who was born in New York State in 1847, and who survives him as a resident of Long Beach, California. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Whaley: Florence, the wife of Arthur Pynch, a retired business man of Spokane, Washington; Leila, the wife of William Herne, foreman in a knitting mill at Long Beach; George H., half-owner and manager of the Portland Tire Company, of Portland, Oregon; and Clyde H.

Clyde H. Whaley received his primary education in the public schools of Waupun, Wisconsin, where he was graduated from the high school with the class of 1902, following which he entered the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, and completed his junior year. In 1906 he entered upon his business career in the advertising department of the National Biscuit Company, where for one year he had charge of a crew of men, and then went on the road for this big corporation. It was while thus employed that he first came to Kentucky, in 1907, and the state made such a favorable impression upon him that he adopted it as his own and it has been the scene of his subsequent activities and successes. On leaving the National Biscuit Company's employ Mr. Whaley identified himself with a brokerage business at Hopkinsville, and while thus connected gained a comprehensive knowledge of commercial conditions. When the opportunity presented itself, in 1917, he took immediate advantage of it and launched himself upon a career as a wholesale grocer, a field of activity in which he has attained distinctive and well-merited success. The business has enjoyed a constant and steady growth and at this time is the largest enterprise of its kind in Christian and the surrounding counties. The offices and warehouse are situated at 110-112 East Sixth Street, in a building owned by Mr. Whaley, he being also the owner of a comfortable home on Walnut Street, corner of Seventeenth, one of Hopkinsville's modern residences. In politics Mr. Whaley is a democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Christian Church, while fraternally he holds membership in Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, B. P. O. E. He was a liberal contributor to and active worker in behalf of all war movements during the time of his country's great need.

In 1908, at Hopkinsville, Mr. Whaley married Miss Hallie Johnson, a graduate of the Hopkinsville High School and a daughter of William and Eliza (Boyd) Johnson, who reside on Seventeenth Street, Hopkinsville, Mr. Johnson being identified with the Forbes Manufacturing Company. Mr. and Mrs. Whaley are the parents of three children: Clyde H., Jr., born August 1, 1909; Emily, born February 16, 1914; and Hallie Helen, born February 23, 1921.

W. A. Long learned the carpenter and general contracting business as a young man, and for the past thirty-five years has been identified as a technical expert with all the manufacturing and contracting interests of the Forbes Manufacturing Company of Hopkinsville. He is general superintendent of this company, a business that employs several hundred men, and includes the manufacture of lumber, building supplies, mill work, wagons and also a general contracting business.

Mr. Long, who is one of Hopkinsville's most substantial and public spirited citizens, was born near that city in Christian County, December 20, 1857. His father, George W. Long, was born in the same county in 1835. He learned the carpenter's trade, and did some building work in the county prior to the Civil war. During the Civil war period he lived in Macoupin County, Illinois, but in 1866 returned and located at Hopkinsville, where he was actively identified with his trade and business until his death in 1910. In politics a democrat, he had the distinction of being the first member of that party elected to office in Christian County following the Civil war. He served twelve years as county jailor. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and was a charter member of Green River Lodge No. 54 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Hopkinsville. George W. Long married Mary C. McGlasson, who was born in Virginia in 1836, and died at Hopkinsville in 1912. W. A. Long is the oldest of the three children living at this writing (1921). There were three of the family who died in childhood. Georgia is the wife of John W. Tunks, a carpenter and builder at Hopkinsville, and Nellie is the wife of Stonewall Morris, a Hopkinsville shoemaker.

W. A. Long acquired most of his education in the rural schools of Christian County, attending school regularly to the age of eighteen. He also worked with his father and, possessing a real mechanical instinct, he became thoroughly proficient as a carpenter and builder before reaching his maturity. In 1885 he became superintendent of works for the old firm of Forbes & Brothers, lumber manufacturers and contractors, and has been with that business, now the Forbes Manufacturing Company, ever since. He is a director as well as general superintendent of the company, is a director in the Hopkinsville Realty Company, and a director in the Hopkinsville Building and Loan Association. He has supervised an immense amount of construction in Western Kentucky, and at Hopkinsville was a contractor for all but one of the modern school buildings, including some of the very best in the state. He was builder of the fine new high school for colored children, one of the most attractive in design and construction in the state.

The public school system of Hopkinsville owes a great debt to Mr. Long, not only through his services as a builder, but by his sincere interest in the schools, officially expressed during the fifteen years he was trustee. For two terms he was chairman of the board of trustees. He is a democrat in politics, and is a prominent member of the First Baptist Church, being senior deacon. He is affiliated with Green River Lodge No. 54, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Evergeen Lodge No. 38, Knights of Pythias. He is a trustee of the Jennie Stuart Memorial Hospital. He was a subscriber of his personal means and otherwise influential and helpful in behalf of the various war activities. He and his family reside at 814 East Seventh Street, where he has a neat and substantial home erected through his own facilities as a contractor.

At Hopkinsville in 1886 he married Miss Maggie E. Wiley. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Wiley, live at Hopkinsville, her father being a retired cattle dealer. Mrs. Long is a graduate of the South Kentucky College of Hopkinsville. They have one son, Herschel A., born August 9, 1888, one of the honored ex-service men of Hopkinsville. He graduated from the high school in his native city, received the A. B. degree from Center College at Danville, and was in the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis. He left there with a lieutenant's commission and saw eleven months of overseas duty, and while connected with the Army of Occupation reached Berlin. He received his honorable discharge as a first lieutenant in February, 1920.

Bethel B. Veech. In business and financial circles of Louisville the name of Bethel B. Veech is associated with enterprises of importance and magnitude, to the management and directorship of which he has devoted his marked and distinctive capabilities. His connections are numerous, but he is perhaps best known because of his identification with the United States Trust Company, of which he was one of the organizers, and of which he has been president since 1904.

Mr. Veech was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, on the old family homestead which was the birthplace of his father, April 12, 1861, a son of Richard Snowden and Mary (Nichols) Veech. The Veech family was founded in Kentucky by the great-grandfather of Bethel B. Veech, who was born in Ireland and was an early emigrant to Virginia, whence he came to Kentucky. He was one of the early civil engineers of the state, became a man of prominence and wealth, and founded in Jefferson County a family whose members have taken an important part in the development of the industries and institutions of the state. The grandfather of Mr. Veech was John A. Veech, who was born at an Indian fort, on Bear Grass Creek, Jefferson County, Kentucky, known as Dutch Station, and the property is now the home farm of his grandson, Bethel B. John A. Veech married Olivia Winchester, who was also born in this county, and they became the parents of two daughters and one son.

The only son of his parents, Richard Snowden Veech was born on the old home place, April 21, 1833, and received good educational advantages as became the son of a rich planter, attending the local schools and Center College, Danville, Kentucky, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1852. On leaving collegiate halls he engaged in farming, with which he concerned himself until 1869, and at that time organized the Farmers and Drovers Bank at Louisville, an institution of which he acted as cashier up to 1881. In that year, with other men of foresight and courage, he reorganized what was then known as the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, now the Monon Route, of which he was president until 1885, when he disposed of his holdings and retired as president. At that time he had bought some 3,000 acres of land, on which he indulged his love of country life at the same time applying himself to the breeding of fine horses, he being an admirer of these animals. His farm became one of the most famous stock farms in the country and its animals were in great demand from all over the country. Mr. Veech was a stanch democrat until 1896, when he cast his vote for William McKinley. He was a lover of home and the country life, so that politics did not appeal to him and he never sought public office. He was a practical churchman and one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church located at Crescent Hill. He was likewise one of the founders of the United States Trust Company and a member of its board of directors up to the time of his death, which occurred September 18, 1918. Mr. Veech married Miss Mary Nichols, who was born at Danville, Kentucky, in 1833, and died in 1905, and to this union there were born six children, all living, Bethel B. being the third in order of birth.

Bethel B. Veech attended the private schools of Louisville and Center College, Danville, and after his graduation from the latter in 1882 engaged in farming on his father's property. He was thus occupied until 1897, in which year he became manager of the real estate department of the Louisville Trust Company, a position which he retained until 1902. With his father and others Mr. Veech then perfected the organization of the United States Trust Company of Louisville, which threw open its doors for business April 1, 1902, and Mr. Veech at that time became vice president. He discharged the duties of that office until 1904, when he was elected president, and has retained that office to the present time, directing the affairs of the institution in a manner that has contributed materially to its success and to his own prestige as a financier. He is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, and has several social and fraternal connections, including membership in the Pendennis and Louisville Country clubs. In matters of a political nature he maintains an independent attitude.

Mr. Veech was married October 22, 1885, to Miss Eliza Quigley, who was born at Louisville, a daughter of Edward and Fannie (Elston) Quigley, natives of Kentucky, and both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Veech is the second in order of birth in a family of four children. Mr. Quigley was a well-known banker of Louisville, being senior member of the firm of Quigley & Morton. To Mr. and Mrs. Veech there have been born three children: Elston, the wife of William M. Otter, with three children, Bethel B., Ann M. and Elston; Eleanor, who died at the age of twelve years; and Mary, who died in infancy.

Henry Stites Barker has had a range of service and honors such as are seldom bestowed even upon members of the legal profession, which has long been looked to for leadership and inspiration in business as well as in civic affairs.

Judge Barker was born in Newstead, Christian County, Kentucky, July 23, 1850, son of Richard Henry and Caroline M. (Sharp) Barker. The Barkers were of English ancestry, settled in Virginia, and soon after the close of the Revolution came to Kentucky. Richard H. Barker was a native of Todd County, Kentucky, and a successful lawyer in Christian County, where he died in 1853. Caroline Sharp was a native of Christian County, and her father Dr. Maxwell Sharp moved to Kentucky from Virginia.

Henry Stites Barker was only three years old when his father died, and he grew up and acquired his early education in the public schools of Louisville. He also attended Kentucky University at Lexington, and following his university career returned to Louisville and studied law. He was admitted to the bar in 1874 and at once engaged in practice at Louisville. For several years he was associated with his brother M. S. Barker and later as a member of the firm Kohn & Barker until 1888. He had securely established himself as an able and successful lawyer before he accepted any of the honors open to his profession. In 1888 he was elected city attorney of Louisville, was twice re-elected and held that office until 1896. In 1897 he was elected judge of the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, and from the Circuit Bench was elevated to the Court of Appeals by election in 1902. Judge Barker was one of the able Appellate judges of the state until 1911, when he was called to the unusual role and the difficult administration of the University of Kentucky as president. He became president of the university and moved to Lexington January 1, 1911, and guided the institution through an important period of its development, until September, 1918. On retiring from the university Judge Barker resumed his residence at Louisville and his active practice as a lawyer in that city.

Judge Barker is a republican in politics and a member of the Christian Church. May 22, 1886, he married Kate Sharp Meriwether of Clarksville, Tennessee, daughter of Capt. Edward Meriwether. Mrs. Barker was born and reared in Todd County, Kentucky.

James Clark, Jr. Trained faculties and an enlightened understanding gained through long association with a certain line of endeavor in these modern days contribute materially not only to individual growth and success but to the development of large enterprises. In manufacturing circles of Louisville the name of James Clark, Jr., head of the James Clark, Jr., Electric Company, is synonymous with dignified capability and sterling integrity. From small beginnings he has built up an enterprise of recognized importance, and while so doing has also been a factor in bringing about the development of an important line of industry.

Mr. Clark was born at Louisville, August 29, 1869, a son of James and Jessie (La Nauze) Clark, and a grandson of William and Isabella (Stevenson) Clark. The grandparents were natives of Scotland, where William Clark was known as a laird or landholder. James Clark, the elder, was born at the old home near the Shutterflit, near Beith, County Renfrew, Scotland,

May 25, 1830, the sixth in a family of thirteen children. He was about eight years of age when he accompanied his parents to America, and after a short stay in the United States went with them to Canada, where the grandfather was also a landholder, having a large farm. James Clark secured his education in the schools of Canada, but when seventeen years of age decided to make his own way in the world and accordingly left home. When he had been only a lad he had shown the traits of thrift and originality. A bitter childhood experience was his failure to collect the money for a crop of turnips which he had raised for a man in town. When he was thirteen years of age it was his duty to do the churning of the butter, a long and arduous task for which he had little liking. Putting his ingenuity to work, he fashioned a treadmill, and, making use of the power generated by his several dogs was able to churn the butter in much quicker time and without the expenditure of personal effort. On leaving home he spent some time at Erie, Pennsylvania, where he was interested in the tobacco industry, and in 1849 went to Pittsburgh, and then made his way down the Ohio River to Louisville. Here he engaged in the banking and tobacco business, and was the first vice president and one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Louisville, which was the first national bank to be organized south of the Ohio River, its number being 109. It is still in existence. He was also one of the organizers of the Ohio Valley Telephone Company, with which he continued to be identified until his retirement in 1898, and his death occurred at Louisville in April, 1902. He was a prominent member of the old Louisville Legion, later the First Kentucky Regiment, was president of the Pendennis Club one term, and for many years was a member of the Board of Trade. Originally a whig, he later adopted the principles of the republican party. Mr. Clark's chief recreation was fishing, although he was a great lover of nature in all its aspects and had a passion for flowers. A man of kindly impulses and large heart, he won the devotion and affection of his associates, and his death was mourned by a wide circle of sincere friends. The wife of James Clark was born at Ellichpur, Deccaen Brenka, India, in 1837, a daughter of George La Nauze, an officer in the British Army, who died in India. She left her native land in a sailing vessel, and, going around the Cape of Good Hope, landed with her mother in Ireland, where she spent her girlhood from her third year. For her education she went to Edinburg, Scotland, where for a time she was a pupil under Professor Bell, the father of Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the Bell telephone. As a young woman she resided in Beith, Scotland, where she met and married Mr. Clark. She died November 19, 1908, the mother of seven children, of whom two died in infancy.

James Clark, Jr., the fourth in order of birth of his parent's children, attended the public and private schools of Louisville and graduated from the Boston Technical College in 1890. At that time he secured a position with the Ohio Valley Telephone Company, with which he remained two years, then embarking in the electrical business with L. H. Cooper, under the firm name of Cooper & Clark. When Mr. Cooper retired from the business Mr. Clark reorganized the concern as James Clark, Jr., & Company, and in 1907 incorporated the business as James Clark, Jr., Electric Company, its present style. The store and office of this concern are located at 520 West Main Street, while the factory is at Shelby and Bergman Streets. The business is the manufacture of electrically-driven tools, motors, generators and supplies, and Mr. Clark has been successful in building up a large and profitable business, in the management of which he is exercising splendid judgment and recognized ability. He is a member of the Pendennis, Louisville Country and Rotary clubs and the Board of Trade. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church, and in politics he is a republican.

On October 14, 1903, Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Lucinda Hardin Helm, who was born at Louisville, a daughter of James Pendleton and Pattie A. (Kennedy) Helm, natives of Kentucky, the former deceased and the latter still a resident of this city. Mrs. Clark is the third in a family of four children. She and her husband have two sons: James Clark III, and Kennedy Helm Clark.

Joseph Lazarus. Among the men re-elected to the Kentucky Legislature in 1919, one whose previous record, general qualifications for ability and character gave every ground for constructive work was Joseph Lazarus, who has been engaged in the practice of law at Louisville since 1911. Mr. Lazarus, a veteran of the World war, has the reputation of being an indefatigable worker, combining scholarship with active energy and forceful personality. These qualities have been much esteemed in the legislative body, where Mr. Lazarus is now majority floor leader.

He was born at Lewisburg, Tennessee, November 8, 1891, a son of Simon and Flora (Rossett) Lazarus. His father, born at Cincinnati April 21, 1859, was educated in the public schools of his native city, where he first engaged in the manufacture of clothing in partnership with his father, David Lazarus. Later he removed to Columbia, Tennessee, where he was engaged in the merchandise business until 1904, then coming to Louisville, where he has since concerned himself with the same line of business activity. Mr. Lazarus is one of the substantial merchants of Louisville, and is held in general esteem because of his integrity and sterling traits of character. He is a republican in his political allegiance, but has not sought public office. He belongs to Louisville Lodge No. 14, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and is a member of the Congregation Adath Israel. Mr. Lazarus was married at Memphis, Tennessee, to Miss Flora Rossett, who was born at Nashville, Tennessee, October 1, 1866, and to this union there have been born four children: Louis, who died in infancy; Etta, the wife of Edward L. Klein, an attorney of New York City; Joseph; and Leah, the wife of A. J. Schanfarber, an attorney of Cleveland, Ohio.

After attending the public schools of Louisville Joseph Lazarus enrolled as a student at the Jefferson School of Law at Louisville, from which he was duly graduated with the class of 1911. He was admitted to the bar in that year and at once engaged in the practice of his profession at Louisville, continuing therein until he enlisted, August 27, 1917, in the United States army for service in the World war, and went to Fort Benjamin Harrison. Indianapolis, Indiana, where he was commissioned a first lieutenant. Transferred to Camp Funston, Kentucky, he became a member of the Eighty-ninth Division, and went overseas with the Eight Hundred and Sixth Regiment, Pioneer Infantry, landing at Brest in September, 1918. He then went forward to the advance sector of the Meuse-Argonne, where he was stationed with his command when the armistice was signed, following which he returned to the United States and at Camp Dix, New Jersey, received his honorable discharge April 28, 1919. He is an active and valued member of Jefferson Post of the American Legion.

After he had enlisted in the army, and while he was in training, Mr. Lazarus was elected, in November, 1917, state representative from the Forty-eighth Legislative District of Kentucky, and in 1919 was again sent from the same district, now the Fifty-fifth Legislative District, to the Kentucky Legislature, at this time being elected majority floor leader. His work in that body has been constructive in character and he is accounted one of the active and result-obtaining representatives who work with clear minds and far-seeing judgment for the attainment of laws and measures that will benefit the state and its people. Mr. Lazarus is a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to the Grand Consistory of Kentucky and to Louisville Lodge No. 400, A. F. & A. M.; Louisville Lodge No. 8, B. P. O. E.; and Louisville Lodge No. 14, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. He holds membership also in the Standard Club, the Louisville Bar Association, the Kentucky Bar Association and the Congregation Adath Israel. He is a republican in politics. Mr. Lazarus maintains offices at No. 817 Inter-Southern Building, and has a large, growing and important law practice.

Earl Stimson Gwin is one of the prominent financial figures in Kentucky and Southern Indiana, has been an executive officer in banks at New Albany and Louisville for a dozen years or more and is now first vice president of the National Bank of Kentucky. While his financial and business connections make him widely known all over the Ohio Valley, he also has many personal friends who have followed with admiration his rising fortunes from messenger boy to bank president.

Mr. Gwin was born in an attractive and historic country village in Sullivan County, Indiana, the Town of Carlisle, on September 7, 1875, son of Charles Polk and Isadora (Alsop) Gwin. His father was a native of New Albany, Indiana, and spent the greater part of his active business career in that city. He was interested in public affairs, was a Methodist and a democrat. He died at Augusta, Georgia, in 1913, at the age of sixty-eight. Isadora Alsop was born at Carlisle in Sullivan County in 1848 and is still living. Earl S. is the third of four children, three of whom are living.

The first public school he attended was in his native Village of Carlisle. Later he was in school at New Albany. In 1890, at the age of fourteen, he began his real career as a messenger with the Second National Bank of New Albany. His salary was $3 a week. From the first he regarded his services as indispensable to that institution, and in time the bank came to the same view, evidenced in successive promotions until February, 1908, when he was chosen as president. He remained as president of the New Albany Bank until June, 1914. While a resident of New Albany he served nine years on the Board of Education.

Mr. Gwin came to Louisville to become president of the American National Bank, which one year later absorbed the Southern National Bank and continued under the name of the American Southern National Bank. On February 3, 1919, the American Southern was consolidated with the National Bank of Kentucky and National Bank of Commerce, and at the reorganization Mr. Gwin was elected first vice president of the National Bank of Kentucky, one of the largest and strongest financial institutions in the South.

Mr. Gwin was honored with election to the office of president of the Indiana Bankers Association in 1911-12. He was a member of the Executive Council of the American Bankers Association in 1913-14. Mr. Gwin is a director of the Louisville Railway Company, Inter-Southern Life Insurance Company, is vice president and director of the Tennessee Jellico Coal Corporation, a director of the New Albany Veneering Company, a director of the Navco Hardwood Company of Mobile, Alabama, and vice president and a director of the Gwin Motor Sales Company, New Albany, Indiana.

During the war he was a member of the Kentucky State Council of Defense and was Kentucky state chairman of the Liberty Loan organization of the Eighth Federal Reserve District throughout the war. Mr. Gwin is a democrat in politics, is a member of the Pendennis, Louisville Country, the Rotary Club and the Old Colony Club, being on the National Advisory Council of the last named club. He is a member of the Board of Trade, the Transportation Club, Jefferson Lodge No. 38 F. & A. M., and the Second Presbyterian Church.

November 5, 1896, Mr. Gwin married Martha A. Cadwalader, of New Albany. She is the only living child of John H. and Maria A. (Brewer) Cadwalader, both natives of Indiana. Her father died in 1920, after a long and active career as a dry goods merchant at New Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Gwin have one daughter, Jewett C.

Lewis Yarborough Johnson, who is manager of the Louisville branch office of the American Surety Company of New York, is widely known at Louisville and over the state as a former newspaper man long associated with the Courier-Journal and also for his sometime active part in republican politics.

Mr. Johnson was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, December 13, 1878, son of Charles V. and Virginia (Headley) Johnson. His father was born at Louisville in 1847 and his mother in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1849. Charles V. Johnson is one of Louisville's veteran business men. Educated in the Male High School, he was in the tobacco business for a number of years after leaving school. Subsequently he established an important business at Louisville as an importer of woolen goods from England and for a number of years this has been the chief business of its kind in Louisville. Charles V. Johnson is a republican without aspirations for office, is a member of the Episcopal Church, and his favorite recreation is fishing. He and his wife have three children: Virginia; Margaret, wife of David E. Murray; and Lewis Y.

Lewis Y. Johnson also attended the Male High School of Louisville, graduating with the class of 1897. He was then eighteen, and almost immediately he sought an opportunity to break into the field of journalism, and for about a year was a reporter for the Louisville Evening Post. He was then taken on the staff of the Courier-Journal, and for about fifteen years was reporter and copy reader for that great southern newspaper. In 1912 Mr. Johnson left the Courier-Journal to become an active associate with his father in the woolen cloth business. In 1914 he resumed his duties with the Courier-Journal for about nine months, and then for about a year was connected with an insurance paper.

In 1916 Mr. Johnson was assistant to A. T. Hert, western manager of the republican campaign of that year. The following year, in November, 1917, Mayor George W. Smith appointed Mr. Johnson as chairman of the Board of Public Safety of Louisville. He has been in charge of the branch office in the Lincoln Savings Bank Building as manager of the American Surety Company since February 1, 1918, and handles the business of this corporation for Kentucky and Tennessee.

Mr. Johnson is a member of the Pendennis Club, Chess and Whist Club, Wranglers Club, Louisville Automobile Club, and is a republican and an Episcopalian.

Maurice H. Thatcher. For more than three years of the period when construction work was at its height in the digging of the Panama Canal, Maurice H. Thatcher was head of the Department of Civil Administration of the Canal Zone. He was the youngest member of the Isthmian Canal Commission. This was a great honor and responsibility, but with his name there have always been associated qualifications for large responsibilities, and a tirelessness of effort and loyalty to duty that have enabled him to distinguish his incumbency in many official relations, and also his career as a lawyer.

Mr. Thatcher, whose home has been at Louisville since 1900, was born at Chicago, August 15, 1870, the son of John C. and Mary T. (Graves) Thatcher, during the temporary domicile there of his parents. The Thatcher family was established in New England as early as 1630. John C. Thatcher was a native of New London, Connecticut, while his wife was born in Davidson County, near Nashville, Tennessee, her parents being Tennesseeans who, shortly after her birth became residents of Kentucky.

During the youth of Mr. Thatcher his father died, and his mother made her home in Butler County, Kentucky, the home of her parents. Mr. Thatcher was brought to Kentucky during his infancy, and has resided in Kentucky practically the whole of his life, except for the period he resided on the Isthmus of Panama. He spent his early years on the farm in Butler County, engaged in farm work and attending the country schools of his community At the age of fourteen he left home and at Morgantown, in Butler County, learned the printer's trade; and followed this work for a while; and then, until his majority, alternated in work on the farm and in the county offices of his home county, and in attendance at school at Morgantown. Shortly after reaching his majority he was nominated for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court of Butler County, and was thereupon elected, and served in this position from January 1, 1893, until the summer of 1896, when he resigned to accept an appointment in the office of the Auditor of Public Accounts at Frankfort, Kentucky. He served under this appointment about two years, and continued his law studies, theretofore begun. Upon examination before judges of the Kentucky Court of Appeals in 1898, he was admitted to the bar, and from 1898 to 1900 was Assistant Attorney-General of Kentucky.

In the fall of 1900 Mr. Thatcher removed to Louisville and entered upon the practice of his profession. In May, 1901, he was appointed Assistant United States Attorney for Kentucky. Later in the same year the state was divided into two Federal Court districts, and he remained as Assistant United States Attorney for the Western District until August 1, 1906, when he resigned and resumed, in Louisville, the general practice. While Federal attorney, among other duties, he had in charge the investigation and successful prosecution of a number of very important cases of violations of the Interstate Commerce and Civil Service laws.

In 1907 he was chairman of the Kentucky Republican State Legislative Committee, and was also a member of the Republican State Campaign Committee and a member of the Louisville Republican Campaign Committee, and was active in all the work of these committees, and materially contributed to the sweeping Republican victories in Louisville and Kentucky that year. As a recognition of this work, Governor Willson, upon his election in that campaign, offered Mr. Thatcher the appointment of State Inspector and Examiner for Kentucky. Mr. Thatcher accepted the appointment, and served in this office from March, 1908, until the spring of 1910, and rendered notable service. He is said to have collected from public officers of the state during the two years of his tenure as State Inspector and Examiner, more money due the state than his predecessors had collected during all the years of the history of the office before. He also made exhaustive investigations of the penal and charitable institutions of the state and filed exhaustive reports of his work, with the result that many wrongs and defects in the conduct of these institutions were cured. His work was of such efficient character that he is said to have put the office of "State Inspector and Examiner" on the map of Kentucky. Mr. Thatcher, just prior to his appointment to this position, was manager of the campaign of Governor Wm. O. Bradley for the United States Senatorship, which campaign resulted in Governor Bradley's election in one of the most stirring and stubborn political fights ever waged in Kentucky.

On March 28, 1910, President Taft selected Mr. Thatcher for appointment as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and his appointment was confirmed by the Senate on April 12, 1910. By direction of the President he was immediately placed in charge of the Department of Civil Administration of the Canal Zone, as its head, and thus served throughout his incumbency, which extended to August 8, 1913. The popular title of his office was "Governor of the Canal Zone," and that title will describe his work, which included the general supervision of all of the civil divisions of the Canal Zone Government, including the police and prisons, fire protection, posts, customs, and revenues, public works, schools, steamvessel inspection service, law enforcement, collection, assessment, and disbursement of the taxes and revenues of the Canal Zone Government, the drafting of laws for the Canal Zone, etc.

A published comment on his work as Governor of the Canal Zone, while he was still in office, is as follows: "During his administration of the civil affairs of the zone the schools have been consolidated and their efficiency increased; a system of grading zone prisoners has been installed with beneficial results; roads, streets, trails, and other public improvements have gone forward as rapidly as public funds permitted; the work of the divisions of police, fire protection, and posts has been marked by high efficiency; law and order among the seventy or eighty thousand people of the zone, made up of every race and tongue, have been maintained, while the great work of 'digging the ditch' has proceeded; and throughout the various branches and offices making up the Department of Civil Administration economy has been practiced, and the expenditures have been judiciously made."

In addition to the general duties just indicated, Governor Thatcher represented the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Canal Zone Government in all of their relations with the Republic of Panama, and with the diplomatic and consular officers of other countries accredited to, and residing in, the Republic of Panama. This branch of his work was discharged in such a manner as to fully protect the interests of the American Government, and, at the same time, so as to win the esteem and affection of the Panamanians and the foreign representatives in Panama.

For over three years Governor Thatcher resided in the Canal Zone. When he went to the Zone to begin his official duties he took with him his bride, whom he married May 4, 1910, the day he left Kentucky for his Isthmian work. She was Miss Anne Bell Chinn, of Frankfort, Kentucky. Her father, Mr. Frank Chinn, is a prominent lawyer of Frankfort. Mrs. Thatcher, during her Isthmian residence, learned to speak the Spanish language with great fluency, and this fact, together with her unusual social charms, rendered her very popular with the Spanish-speaking Panamanians.

After his return from the Canal Zone, Governor Thatcher resumed the practice of law at Louisville, where he has offices in the Realty Building. However, since his return to Louisville he has not pursued an uninterrupted professional career. From November, 1917, to March 1, 1919, he was a member of the Board of Public Safety for Louisville, and since March, 1919, he has been Department Counsel for the city.

Edmund Francis Trabue has been a Kentucky lawyer many years. His life has been devoted to his profession undisturbed by participation in politics and the responsibilities of public office. His talents have commanded for him a prestige as a lawyer that is recognized beyond the borders of his home state.

His father, Stephen F. J. Trabue, was also an eminent lawyer. He was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, September 19, 1819, was educated in Transylvania University, and for upwards of half a century was a member of the Frankfort bar. He retired from practice in 1897 and died December 13, 1898. He was a Knight Templar Mason, a democrat, and a member of the Episcopal Church. He married Alice E. Berry, who was born in Henry County, Kentucky, November 2, 1835, and died August 13, 1893. They were married June 1, 1854, and the oldest of their six children, five of whom are still living, was Edmund Francis.

Edmund Francis Trabue was born in the family home "Wehawken" in Franklin County, Kentucky, March 25, 1855. His education was carefully directed from youth. He received his A. B. degree from Kentucky Eclectic Institute of Frankfort in 1874, graduated in law at the University of Louisville in 1875, and in 1878 attended the summer school of the distinguished John B. Minor at the University of Virginia. Admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1875, he has practiced at Louisville, and for some years past has been senior member of the firm Trabue, Doolan, Helm & Helm.

In 1911 Mr. Trabue served as a member of the commission of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit to revise the Federal Equity Rules. He has been a member of the American Bar Association since 1881, and is also a member of the American Society of International Law, the International Law Association, Kentucky State Bar Association and the Louisville Bar Association. He is an independent democrat in politics. He is a successful lawyer who has cultivated many interests outside his profession. He is one of the popular members of the Pendennis Club, the Salmagundi Literary Club, the Lawyers Club, Louisville Country Club, is a member of the Society of the Cincinnati of the State of Virginia, the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Sons of the American Revolution.

October 1, 1883, Mr. Trabue married Caroline Bullitt Cochran, of Louisville. Their only child, Lucinda, is the wife of Dr. John Rowan Morrison, of Louisville.

John McDougal Atherton. The many distinctions accorded John McDougal Atherton of Louisville rests partly upon his successful business career, but even more upon the sound judgment, constructive influence and work in public affairs and politics.

He was born in LaRue County, Kentucky, April 1, 1841, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father was born in Virginia in 1771. His maternal great-grandfather, Alexander McDougal, was in the army of General Washington during the Revolution. John M. Atherton finished his work in the common schools at the age of thirteen, then entered Georgetown College in Kentucky, graduated at the age of seventeen, and for one session attended the law department of the University of Louisville. As his subsequent career proved he had the qualities of mind and judgment well fitted for the highest responsibilities of the legal profession. However, ill health compelled him to abandon his ambition for a legal career and for a number of years, including the Civil war period, he lived on a farm. In 1867 he built a distillery in LaRue County, and the distillery was the nucleus of the Village of Athertonville. He was one of Kentucky's prominent distillers until he sold his interests in 1899. In 1886 he became president of the National Protective Association organized at Chicago to oppose the adoption of statewide prohibition, and at this time it will be interesting to recall the statement he subsequently made in the following words: "The association, at my urgent solicitation, advocated and secured the adoption of the policy of open discussion of prohibition on broad grounds, and every dollar expended by the association went to defray the legitimate expenses of this open discussion. Not a cent was spent during the existence of that association in any unlawful or improper way."

Mr. Atherton became a resident of Louisville in 1873 and in 1881 was elected director of the Bank of Kentucky, now the National Bank of Kentucky, and eventually became the oldest member of its board and served both as president and vice president of the bank. He was also at one time a director of the Louisville Gas Company. In 1905 he was elected a director of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and served until the railroad passed into the control of the Atlantic Coast Line.

Soon after coming to Louisville he was made a member of the State Democratic Committee, was its chairman, was a member and chairman of the City Democratic Committee and also chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee. While for so many years a power in the state party, he held only one elective office, as member of the Legislature from 1869 to 1871, and during that time became associated with such distinguished Kentuckians as John G. Carlisle, James B. McCreary and others. He was a member of all the state conventions of the party down to and including that of 1895. At that convention he opposed the adoption of the platform for free silver, and the platform as constructed contained a sound money plank, though the convention proved its inconsistency by nominating P. W. Hardin, who in his opening speech advocated free coinage, thereby introducing dissension in the ranks of his party and permitting the election of W. O. Bradley as a republican governor. In 1896 Mr. Atherton was Kentucky delegate to the Democratic Sound Money Convention at Indianapolis, and actively supported the Palmer and Buckner ticket during that year. It will also be recalled that Mr. Atherton strenuously opposed the adoption of the constitution of 1891, on the grounds that its taxing provisions were inequitable in the distribution of burdens between personal property and real estate.

Mr. Atherton participated actively in politics for a reason that most Americans will deem as sufficient today as when he explained it in the following words some years ago: "I do believe that the mass of bad government everywhere is the logical result of the indifference of active business men to the affairs of the community, state and nation; as business expands the quality of government deteriorates as a rule over the country because business men take too little unselfish interest in party matters and in the selection of candidates."

Mr. Atherton married a daughter of Professor Farnam, a member of the faculty of Georgetown College.

His son, Peter Lee Atherton, has for many years been prominent in Louisville business life. He is president of the Prestonia Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of high-grade cabinet work, is a director in the Federal Chemical Company, has been vice president of the Lincoln Savings Bank & Trust Company since 1918, and is president of the Louisville Realty Association.

Peter L. Atherton has been one of the men most prominent in the promotion of Kentucky highway improvement. From 1911 to 1915 he served as president of the Central Lincoln Road Association, and in 1911 took part in the rebuilding of the Kentucky State Road. He was president of the Jackson Highway Association from 1915 to 1919. In November, 1913, he was elected a member of the Legislature from Louisville, serving one term. He was a tax commissioner in 1912-13, and from 1906 to 1912 was chairman of the Sewerage Commission of the City of Louisville. Mr. Atherton is a stockholder in the Louisville Industrial Foundation and a member of the Louisville Lodge of Elks.

By his first marriage Mr. Atherton has a daughter, Mrs. Kelley Graham, whose husband is vice president of the Irving National Bank of New York City. May 23, 1914, Mr. Atherton married Cornelia S. Anderson, a native of Louisville, daughter of Dr. Turner and Sarah (Simrall) Anderson. Her parents were both native Kentuckians and are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Atherton have three children, Sarah A., Cornelia and John M. second.

George Allison Holland has earned a high place at the Kentucky bar, has practiced uninterruptedly for a quarter of a century and for many years at Lexington. Apart from his high merits as an able lawyer Mr. Holland is doubtless best known over the state at large through his many distinctions and services in Masonry, and for many years he has held important offices in the state bodies of Masonry.

He belongs to a branch of the Holland family that has long been distinguished in medicine and letters and in other learned professions. One of the prominent members of the family in England was Philemon Holland, not only a physician of great reputation who took his degree at Cambridge, but a scholar whose fame has not diminished with the lapse of years. He was born at Chelmsford about the latter end of the reign of Edward VI. He was admitted a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and took his degree of M. A., in which he was incorporated at Oxford in 1557. He made many translations and earned the title of "Translator General of the Age." It was in his fortieth year that he took his M. D. degree. Dr. Philemon Holland died February 9, 1636, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. Among his translations was one of Livy, to which was added a supplement of the Second Decade of Livy which had been lost. This translation was printed in London in 1659, some years after the death of Doctor Holland, and an original copy is now in the possession of George Allison Holland of Lexington. A son of Philemon Holland, Henry Holland, acquired no little fame in the literary world. Only one of his works can now be found, although several are in the public libraries of London but are carefully guarded. Henry Holland edited "Heroologia Anglicana," a valuable collection of lives and portraits. Of this collection Hazlitt, author of "The Book Collector," says in connection with a number of other books named along with it: "How passing rich one would be with all these, and no more—rich beyond the greatest Bibliomaniacs, and beyond the possessors of the rarest and costliest treasures in book form." Among other early members of the family in England was a Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and several who held prominent political positions in the English Government in the 16th and 17th centuries.

The motto of the Hollands is "Respice, Aspice, Prospice." It is worth the time of students of the history of the Holland family to read "The Lancashire Hollands," a most interesting book issued in 1917 in London, England, and written by Bernard Holland, C. B., of Harbledown, near Canterbury. It will be found that the Holland family in England was a very distinguished family. Richard II, King of England, was a son of Joan Holland, Princess of Wales. His brother, John Holland, was exceedingly prominent during Richard's twenty odd years' reign. The Hollands of Upholland, of Sutton, of Denton, of Clifton, and Cheshire, of Wales, of Mobberly, of Conway, of Sussex, etc., were leaders in the political and historic life of England during their time. Among them were earls, dukes, and men of renown in the field of letters and medicine. With one King of England to head the historic line, the Hollands of the present day have much to be proud of in the point of name and ancestry. The younger sons were generally ministers, doctors and men and women of remarkable literary tendency, and it was from the lines of younger sons that the Hollands in America descended.

It was during the Colonial period that three Holland brothers came from England and settled in Maryland, Virginia and South Carolina, from whom are descended the Hollands of three states. The celebrated author and poet, Dr. Josiah Gilbert Holland, belonged to the Virginia branch. The great-grandfather of George Allison Holland was John Holland, a native of Baltimore, whose father was one of the three brothers mentioned. His son, George B. Holland, gained high distinction as a Methodist minister, and was a brother of Dr. John W. Holland of Indianapolis, Indiana, a man of rare scholarly attainments and of professional skill. George B. Holland was born at Wellsburg, in what was then Western Virginia, July 26, 1806. He married Rebecca French, who was born in Ohio, August 9, 1808, her parents Samuel and Elizabeth French, being natives of Pennsylvania.

The father of George Allison Holland was William Allison Holland, who was born at Edinburg, Indiana, March 24, 1828, and was long prominent in journalism in Kentucky. He established in 1868 "The Constitutionalist" at Newcastle, and in 1872 removed that paper to Eminence, where it was published for many years under his ownership and absolute control until his death in 1903. On November 29, 1854, William Allison Holland married Eliza Jane Van Nuys. She was born at Campbellsburg, in Henry County, Kentucky, December 1, 1838, a daughter of Denis Bois Van Nuys and Sarah Ann (Sams) Van Nuys. Of her family an old record reads as follows: "The name of Van Nuys was taken from the name of a village in Holland. The Van denotes noble rank. Auk Jansen Van Nuys, whose ancestors' birthplace was Nuys in Groutgen, Holland, came from Amsterdam in 1651 to New Amsterdam, now New York, and afterwards settled in Flatbush in 1669. He was made Magistrate in 1673 and in 1674 was a delegate from the Dutch towns to confer with Governor Colve. His first wife was Magdalene Pieterse, who was buried in the burial ground of the Dutch Reformed Church in Brooklyn (now Fulton Street) and from whom descended, among others upon whom no stain rested, Isaac Van Nuys, who married Vrouchie Quick, whose son, James Van Nuys, served in the War of 1812 and who married Tiny Bois, daughter of Denina Bois and Anna Sebren. Their son Denis Bois Van Nuys married Sarah Ann Sams, and their daughter Eliza Jane Van Nuys married William Allison Holland. Auk Jansen Van Nuys married (second) Elizabeth Jans, widow of Jacob Clausens. Of the Van Nuys family, five were assassinated by the British during the War of the Revolution. These were Margareta, Magdalena, Elizabeth, Maria and Jacobus, all children of Janache Aukurts Van Nuys." The family records all speak of the Castle Van Nuys on the Rhine in Holland as having been built by Count Van Nuys and still belonging to this family.

Another line of the Holland maternal ancestry includes Joseph Kelly, who was born in Spottsylvania County, Virginia, January 29, 1767, and came to Kentucky in 1824. He was a captain in the War of 1812 under General George Rogers Clark and General William H. Harrison, and took part in the battle of the River Raisin. Captain Joseph Kelly married Elizabeth Mallory, who was born March 24, 1771, and died March 30, 1850. Their daughter Parmelia Kelly married James Sams, of Virginia parentage, and their daughter Sarah Ann Sams became the wife of Denis Bois Van Nuys, as noted above.

William Allison and Eliza J. Holland had nine children, one of whom died in infancy. In addition to George Allison Holland a brief record of the others is as follows: 1: Mrs. Mattie (Holland) Homer, wife of W. H Homer, of New Albany, Indiana. 2: Edward Ramsey Holland, who married Minnie Wheat, and died leaving surviving him his widow and two children, Edward R. Holland, Jr., captain in the Anti-Air Craft

Allison Holland

Service, (who married Miss Dorothy Gage, of San Antonio, Texas), having spent the entire term of the war after the United States entered it in France and Belgium, and a daughter Jean. 3: Claude Van Nuys Holland, who married Emma, daughter of the late Governor Ira J. Chase of Indiana, and has two children: Chase Holland of San Angelo, Texas, (who married Miss Gladys McFarland, of San Antonio, Texas), and Lorena (Mrs. Henry Seeligson) of Dallas, Texas. 4: Clarence S. E. Holland, a leading banker of Houston, Texas, married for his first wife Elizabeth Traylor, by which union there were four children: Beulah Elizabeth Holland, who married Ernest Kingswell Smith, of Austin, Texas, now residing in New York City; Ora Vivian Holland, who married Oscar M. Lander, living on a ranch sixteen miles south of Victoria, Texas, and they have two children; Frank B. Lander, Jr., and Clarence Lander; Clarence Raymond Holland, who married Flora Stubbs, of Galveston, Texas, now residing at Victoria, Texas, and they have one son, James Holland; and Marjorie Holland, not married. His second wife was Miss Sarah Handy, of Mississippi. 5: Guy Percival Holland, married a widow, Mrs. Rose (Callaway) Wilson, and they have one son, George Percival Holland. 6: Harold D. Holland who married Alma Fisher, now deceased, and his two children are Glover Allison Holland and Louise Holland. 7: Mrs. Elizabeth Van Nuys (Holland) Cassity is the wife of Dr. John Cabell Cassity, a successful and skilled physician. They have one son, Dr. John Holland Cassity, who is just entering upon the practice of his profession.

George Allison Holland was born in Henry County, Kentucky, was well born and well reared, and the lives of his ancestors on both sides have been an inspiration in his individual career. His primary education was obtained at the Henry Male and Female College at New Castle and his collegiate training at Eminence College, at that time one of the leading educational institutions conducted under private management, which eventually succumbed before the competition of the State University, backed by unlimited public funds. Mr. Holland gained his A. B. degree from Eminence College, and several years later the institution conferred upon him the degree Master of Arts. He also graduated from the Law Department of the University of Louisville. Mr. Holland was trained in the newspaper business under his father at Eminence, and for two or three years was engaged in newspaper work, beginning with the old Louisville Commercial and later with the Courier Journal in the days when Emmett G. Logan was its managing editor, Henry Watterson, the editor, and that able and lovable gentleman, Walter N. Haldeman, its publisher.

For the practice of his profession Mr. Holland first located at Chattanooga, Tennessee, and remained in that city several years. Though he opened a law office, he soon returned to newspaper work and established the Chattanooga Sunday Argus, which he published for several years, until compelled to go West on account of his wife's health. While at Chattanooga he married Miss Jean Neilson Gillespie, daughter of Dr. Joseph S. and Penelope (Whiteside) Gillespie. Mrs. Holland finished her education at Vassar College.

In January, 1895, Mr. Holland opened his law office at Eminence, Kentucky, and since that date has devoted himself exclusively to law practice there and at Lexington. He was twice elected a member of the Kentucky Legislature from Henry County, but held no other office except that after locating in Lexington he served four or five years as a member of the City School Board. He has been a successful lawyer, and many years of practice have brought a prosperous condition of his affairs. He has frequently sat as special judge of Circuit Courts in various counties through appointment by the governor. He was appointed special judge of the Fayette Circuit Court, and other Circuit Courts by Governor Beckham, and subsequently by Governors McCreary and Stanley.

Mr. Holland is a member of all the Masonic bodies in Kentucky, both York and Scottish Rites. He is a past master of Eminence Lodge No. 282, A. F. and A. M., at Eminence, Kentucky, has his present lodge membership in Lexington Lodge No. 1; is past high priest of Eminence Chapter No. 121, R. A. M.; is past master of J. P. Foree Council, R. and S. M., at Eminence; is past eminent commander of Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, at Lexington; is past grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky and at this time is grand secretary of the Grand Chapter, and grand recorder of the Grand Council of Kentucky, R. and S. M., and is a permanent member of the General Grand Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons of the United States. He is also a past potentate of Oleika Temple of Mystic Shrine at Lexington and is a member of the Grand Consistory of the Kentucky Scottish Rite at Louisville. He is also affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks.

Mr. Holland was chairman of a committee of five prominent Masons from the Grand Masonic Lodge of Kentucky, which committee raised among Kentucky Masons, one million dollars for the purpose of constructing new buildings for the Masonic Widows and Orphans Home in Louisville. This was a feat unparalleled in the history of Kentucky Masonry.

Homer Ward Batson. Among the law firms of eminence and recognized strength at Louisville, few are held in greater respect than that of Burnett, Batson & Cary. A worthy member of this concern who has contributed to its prestige and success is Homer Ward Batson, whose career in the legal life of Louisville has been one of constant advancement and noteworthy achievement. Mr. Batson was born on his father's farm in Harrison County, Kentucky, February 20, 1876, a son of Robert Henry and Mollie Nancy (Robertson) Batson, natives of the same county.

Robert Henry Batson was born in 1856. He attended the public schools of Harrison County, and afterward became a teacher in the rural districts and continued to be thus engaged for six or seven years. When he gave up his work in the schoolroom he turned his attention to the general merchandise business at Lancaster, where he still carries on a large business in drygoods and is one of the substantial merchants of the city. He is likewise prominently known in political circles and has served as chairman of the Republican County Central Committee of Garrard County. He is a leader of the Lancaster Christian Church, to which Mrs. Batson also belongs. They are the parents of four children: Lula M., wife of J. W. Sweeney, of Lancaster; Homer Ward; Bessie, wife of Guy W. Davidson, of Lancaster; and Cecil, who is unmarried and resides at home.

The public schools of Lancaster furnished Homer Ward Batson with his early educational training, after which he attended a private school for college preparatory work. He then enrolled as a student at the University of Kentucky, from which he received his Bachelor of Arts degree with the class of 1897, his law studies being prosecuted at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated in 1900, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the bar of Kentucky in 1900, at that time he became associated with Governor W. O. Bradley, under the firm style of Bradley & Batson, and this partnership continued until 1905, when Mr. Batson associated himself with Henry Burnett and Graddy Cary in the present firm of Burnett, Batson & Cary, which has become one of the leading law firms of Louisville. Mr. Batson has reached a merited position of distinction in his calling, has a large and representative clientele and stands high in the confidence of his associates and the esteem of his fellow practitioners in the city and state.

In 1907 Mr. Batson was appointed by Governor Augustus E. Willson as Circuit judge of the Common Pleas branch, First Division of the Jefferson Circuit Court, to complete the unexpired term of the late Judge Emmett Field. Mr. Batson has served as election commissioner for a number of years. He is a member of the Louisville Bar Association and the Kentucky State Bar Association, and in politics is a republican. He has a number of social and civic connections and holds membership in the Michigan University Alumni Association and the Louisville Country Club. With Mrs. Batson he belongs to the First Christian Church of Louisville, and he is a member of the Board of Trustees thereof.

On October 31, 1907, Mr. Batson was united in marriage with Miss Mary L. Welch, who was born at Nicholasville, Kentucky, a daughter of Dr. Squire and Nancy (Phillips) Welch.

Henry Burnett performed all the duties of a busy lawyer for almost half a century before he relieved himself of the heavier burdens of professional life, and thereafter until his death on June 21, 1921, his name was nominally carried as senior member of the firm Burnett, Batson & Cary, one of the ablest law firms of Louisville. His own career was a notable contribution to the record of a Kentucky family of achievement for upwards of a century.

His grandfather was Dr. Isaac Burnett, who was born in King and Queen County, Virginia, and came to Kentucky in 1830. A graduate of Transylvania College, for many years he practiced medicine, first in Christian County and later at Cadiz, and was a member of both branches of the Kentucky Legislature. His wife was Martha Garnett, of an old and prominent Virginia family.

Henry C. Burnett, father of the Louisville lawyer, was born in Virginia in 1825, was educated in Hopkinsville, Kentucky, admitted to the bar in 1849, and for over ten years was one of the leading members of the Kentucky bar. In 1856 he was elected to Congress, and by re-election served until the outbreak of the war. He resigned his place in Congress, returned to Kentucky, where he joined Col. W. C. P. Breckenridge in organizing the Eighth Kentucky Cavalry, and was an officer in that regiment during the siege of Fort Donelson. Following the surrender he and General Floyd made their escape. At the session of the Provisional Legislature of Kentucky at Russellville in 1861 he and William E. Sims were chosen Kentucky's representatives in the Conference States Senate, and he served in that body at Richmond until the close of the war. On his return to Louisville he was indicted for treason, but the case was never prosecuted by the Federal authorities. He died September 28, 1866. During the brief period between the close of the war and his death he practiced at Louisville with Judge John R. Grace, under the name Burnett & Grace. Senator Burnett married Mary A. Terry. Her father was a prominent merchant of Cadiz. She was born in 1830, and now in her ninety-first year still enjoys remarkable health. She has two living children: Muscoe Burnett, of Paducah, and Mrs. W. B. Pace, of Louisville.

Henry Burnett, oldest of the four children of his parents, was born at Cadiz, Kentucky, March 23, 1849. About the time he was ready to attend school the family moved to Washington, D. C. During the war period he was placed in the famous Bingham School in North Carolina, and in 1866 entered the University of Virginia, where he pursued his studies two years and received the A. B. degree. Only a short time before his death he declined on account of ill health an invitation to be president of his class during the Centennial at the University of Virginia. For about two years he taught Latin in the Bellevue High School near Lynchburg, Virginia, and while there studied law under the eminent Virginia lawyer and educator, James P. Holcomb. Mr. Burnett was admitted to the Kentucky bar in July, 1870, and for twenty-nine years was engaged in practice at Paducah. During that time he made his reputation as a lawyer practically state wide, and much of his legal clientage followed him to Louisville in 1900, where he succeeded George Davie in the firm of Humphrey & Davie, which until 1904 was Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey. Then for a time he was alone, and subsequently was joined by Homer W. Batson, who after his retirement became the active senior partner of the law firm of Burnett, Batson & Cary. Mr. Burnett finally retired from active practice in 1918.

He was eminently successful in all branches of law work, was known for his many brilliant efforts as an advocate and as a speaker on general occasions, and while never concerned with the honors of politics he was devoted to the democratic party. He was a delegate to the National Convention of 1880 when Hancock was nominated for President, was chairman of the State Democratic Convention which nominated Mr. Luke P. Blackburn for governor, and for years was a member of the Democratic State Executive Committee. He was a member of the Louisville, Kentucky and American Bar Associations, and was a director of the American National Bank, the Lincoln Savings Bank and the United States Trust Company of Louisville.

Outside of his profession many of his associates and friends were of a literary character. He was a member of the Pendennis Club, and until a short time before his death was a member of the Louisville Country Club and the Salmagundi Club. He was a past master of Paducah Lodge No. 127, F. and A. M., a member of Paducah Chapter, R. A. M., Paducah Commandery No. 11, K. T., was a past eminent commander of the Knights Templar and was a member of the St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

In 1882 he married Miss Suzanne Henderson Dallam, daughter of L. Clay and Susan (Soaper) Dallam, of Henderson, she being the oldest of their five children. Her father was at one time president of the Henderson National Bank. Her grandfather, William Soaper Henderson, was the distinguished Kentuckian for whom the City of Henderson was named. Mrs. Burnett and three children survive: Elizabeth is the wife of W. P. Dale, a Louisville lawyer, and their son, W. P., Jr., is one of the five grandsons surviving Henry Burnett. Marie Burnett is the wife of Graddy Cary, junior member of the law firm Burnett, Batson & Cary, their two sons being Arthur and Henry Cary. Suzanne, the youngest child, is the wife of George A. Robinson, Jr., well known in Louisville fire insurance circles, their two sons being George A. and Burnett.

Alfred Brandeis. Brandeis has been a name of commercial and social prominence in Louisville nearly seventy years. The only representative of the second generation of the family still in Louisville is Alfred Brandeis, a veteran grain merchant, head of a business that was established by his father and one of the oldest and most extensive grain firms in the South. Alfred Brandeis is a brother of the distinguished Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who was also born in Louisville, and whose career, though he left his native city at the beginning of his professional career, is appropriately sketched on the following pages.

Alfred Brandeis was born at Louisville March 23, 1854, son of Adolph and Frederica (Dembitz) Brandeis. His father was born in Austria and his mother in Prussia, and both came in the same year, 1849, to America. Adolph Brandeis located at Louisville in 1852 and became a member of the pioneer grain firm Brandeis & Crawford. The business was later conducted as A. Brandeis & Son, and after the death of Adolph Brandeis in 1906 it was continued with his son, Alfred, at the head. Alfred Brandeis was one of four children and acquired a substantial education in private schools at Louisville. He was twenty-four years of age when he was taken into partnership in the firm of A. Brandeis & Son, and for over forty years has been active in the management of the increasing fortunes of that widely known grain firm. The great volume of business transacted by this firm has probably contributed more than anything else toward making Louisville a great grain market. Mr. Alfred Brandeis was one of the organizers of the Louisville Board of Trade, and has been one of the directors and leading members of that organization for thirty-four consecutive years.

On account of his prominence in the grain trade early in America's participation in the World war he was one of the business men associated with war administration measures, and from 1917 until August 23, 1920, gave his time without compensation and defraying his own expenses to the duties of chief of the cereal enforcement division of the United States Food Administration at Washington.

Mr. Brandeis was one of the organizers of the Lincoln Savings Bank & Trust Company, and was a director of that institution until 1918, when he resigned. He is a stockholder in the Louisville Industrial Foundation, a member of the Pendennis Club, the Louisville Country Club, Traffic Club and Quindecim Club. His favorite recreation is supervising his farm six miles from Louisville, known as the Ladless Hill Farm. It is a place with all the modern improvements and attractions of a country home, and is noted for its full-blooded Duroc swine and other fine stock.

In 1884 Mr. Brandeis married Miss Jennie Taussig, of St. Louis, Missouri. Her father was William Taussig, builder of the St. Louis bridge over the Mississippi, of the Union Station at St. Louis, and one of the organizers of the St. Louis Terminal Railway Association. Mrs. Brandeis is a sister of the distinguished scholar and foremost American authority on political economy, F. W. Taussig of Harvard University. Mr. and Mrs. Brandeis have four daughters, Adele, Amy, Frances and Jean. The daughter, Amy, is the wife of Professor William H. McCreary of the Louisville High School, and they have two sons, Alfred B. and Bruce McCreary. The daughter, Jean, is the wife of Charles G. Tachau, a rising young business man of Louisville and very prominent in social welfare work.

Louis D. Brandeis, justice of the United States Supreme Court, was born in Louisville and received his early education there, though he gained his great distinctions after leaving his native city. His brother, Alfred Brandeis, is one of Louisville's foremost business men.

Judge Brandeis was born at Louisville November 13, 1856, and was educated in the grammar and high schools of his native city. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1878, was admitted to the bar in 1879, and from 1879 until 1916 practiced as a lawyer at Boston. Most Americans are familiar with some of the most conspicuous interests in which Judge Brandeis' role as an advocate and counsellor has been involved. As a lawyer he achieved national and international fame as attorney before State and United States Supreme courts in behalf of an advanced program of social and industrial legislation. He was counsel in 1910 for Mr. Glavis in the celebrated Ballinger-Pinchot investigation and in the same year was chairman of the Arbitration Board in the New York Garment Workers' strike. From 1900 to 1907 he was employed in preserving the Boston Municipal Subway System and establishing the Boston sliding-scale gas system. For a period of seven years, from 1907 to 1914, he was one of the leading counsel for the people in proceedings involving the constitutionality of the Oregon and Illinois women's ten-hour laws, the Ohio nine-hour law, the California eight-hour law and the Oregon minimum wage law. Other important cases in that period of his career involve the Massachusetts Savings Bank insurance and in opposing the New Haven monopoly of transportation in New England. In 1911 he was counsel for shippers in the advance freight rate investigation for the Interstate Commerce Commission, during 1913-14 was special counsel for the Interstate Commerce Commission in the second advance freight rate case, and in 1915 was special counsel for the Government in the Riggs National Bank case.

January 28, 1916, President Wilson sent to the Senate the appointment of Louis D. Brandeis as an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court. The Senate delayed confirmation of the appointment several months, and Judge Brandeis did not assume office until June 5, 1916. Judge Brandeis has been a prominent leader in the Zionist movement. He is author of "Other People's Money," "Business a Profession," and numerous articles on public franchises, scientific management, labor problems, railroads and trusts, savings bank insurance. Judge Brandeis married Alice Goldmark, of New York, March 23, 1891.

W. B. Anderson, president of the Acme Mills, Inc., is one of the substantial men of Hopkinsville, and his corporation ranks among the leaders in its line in this part of the state. Mr. Anderson was born at Clarksville, Tennessee, July 14, 1892, a son of W. B. Anderson, Sr., and a member of an old American family of Scotch-Irish descent.

The elder W. B. Anderson was born at Springfield, Tennessee, in 1845, where he was reared and lived until he moved to Clarksville, Tennessee, where he still lives. For a number of years he was actively interested in the tobacco industry and served as president of the Northern Bank of Clarksville, but is now retired from active participation in business affairs. Politically he is a democrat. He married Lula Pointdexter who was born in 1861, at Clarksville, Tennessee. Their children were as follows: Kate, who married H. L. Daniel, a grain merchant of Nashville, Tennessee; Sarah, who married I. J. Roseborough, a dealer in men's furnishings at Hopkinsville; Louise, who married J. L. Von Glahn, a civil engineer, resides at Spartanburg, South Carolina; W. B., Jr., who was the fourth in order of birth; B. H., a veteran of the great war, in which he served as a first lieutenant, and who resides at Clarksville, Tennessee.

W. B. Anderson, Jr., attended the public schools of Clarksville, Tennessee, and then took a three years' course in the Southern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, but left it in 1910 to go into the grain business at Nashville, Tennessee, and was there for two years, but in January, 1913, came to Hopkinsville to become president of the Acme Mills, Inc., which position he still holds.

The Acme Mills, Inc., were built in 1905 and are the largest flour mills between Evansville, Indiana, and Nashville, Tennessee, and Lexington, Kentucky, and Memphis, Tennessee, and south to New Orleans, Louisiana. This company is incorporated, and the present officials are W. B. Anderson, president; J. M. Neblett, secretary and treasurer. The mills and offices are located on Campbell Street, and they have a capacity of 1,000 barrels per day, and 150 tons of molasses feed. Employment is given to sixty people.

Mr. Anderson is a democrat. He belongs to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, B. P. O. E. His residence is on Hopper Court. During the late war he took a public-spirited interest in the local war work, and was a liberal subscriber to all of the drives.

In April, 1914, Mr. Anderson was married at Clarksville, Tennessee, to Miss Lilly Ferguson, a daughter of P. T. and Anna Ferguson, residents of Clarksville, where Mr. Ferguson is carrying on a men's furnishings business. Mrs. Anderson was graduated from Fairmont College, Washington, District of Columbia. There are no children.

J. M. Neblett, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Acme Mills, Inc., of Hopkinsville, is one of the most alert and dependable business men of Christian County, and is a moving factor in the flour industry of this part of the state. He was born near Clarksville, Tennessee, November 15, 1869, a son of Joseph R. Neblett, and grandson of Mac Neblett, who was born in Virginia, where the family was established in Colonial days, when representatives of it came to America from Scotland. While a young man Mac Neblett came west into Tennessee and became one of the early farmers of Montgomery County, where he died prior to the birth of his grandson, and his wife, whose family name was Keesee, died about the same time.

Joseph R. Neblett was born in Virginia February 6, 1844, and died at Clarksville, Tennessee, February 5, 1919. When he was a boy his parents moved to Montgomery County, Tennessee, and he was there reared, educated and married, and spent practically all of his life in that region, becoming one of the most extensive and successful farmers. In politics he was a democrat. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held his membership, and he was one of the most active supporters of the local congregation. For many years he belonged to the Knights of Honor. During the war between the two sections of the country his convictions led him to enlist in the Confederate army, first in a Tennessee regiment, but he was later transferred to one from Virginia. He was wounded during the campaign against Atlanta and severely injured, and he took part in other important engagements earlier in the war, including the battles at Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga. Joseph R. Neblett was married to Anna Mary Staton, who was born in Virginia in 1847, and died at Clarksville, Tennessee, December 11, 1918, having spent her entire life in and about Clarksville. Their children were as follows: J. M., who was the eldest born; Emmett, who is engaged in the timber and logging business, lives at Little Rock, Arkansas; Emma, who is the widow of Rev. W. T. Thorburn, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, resides in Texas; Clara, who married Arthur Moore, proprietor of a butchering business at Clarksville, Tennessee; Pearl, who married William Ussery, died near Clarksville, Montgomery County, Tennessee, in 1896, being survived by her husband, who is engaged in farming in that county; Dee, who died in 1896, when seventeen years old; Marvin, who died in 1902, when twenty-one years old; Nina, who is unmarried and lives at Clarksville, Tennessee; Richard, who lives in Oklahoma; Anna, who married Sydney Lyle, a farmer of Montgomery County, Tennessee; Mattie, who married Walter Corlew, a farmer of Montgomery County, Tennessee.

J. M. Neblett attended the public schools of Clarksville, Tennessee, and was graduated from its high-school course in 1887, following which he went to Dyer County, Tennessee, and for three years clerked in a country store. Returning to Clarksville, he was bookkeeper for a wholesale and retail grocery store, and in 1902 became bookkeeper for the Dunlop Milling Company and also acted as assistant manager and secretary. In this connection he gained a thorough knowledge of the milling business, and when he came to Hopkinsville, in 1913, to assume his present responsibilities, he was able to do so in a highly capable manner, and to bring about almost immediate results. The Acme Mills, Inc., are the largest of their kind in a territory which extends from Evansville, Indiana, to Nashville, Tennessee, and from Lexington, Kentucky, to Memphis, Tennessee, and thence to the Gulf. This company, which is incorporated, owns the mills, erected in 1905 on Campbell Street, Hopkinsville, where the offices are also located. In addition to the daily capacity of 1,000 barrels of flour per day, the mills also put out 150 tons of molasses feed each day. Mr. Neblett and W. B. Anderson, the president, constitute the officials. The company employs sixty persons at all times, and this is one of the leading industries of Christian County. Mr. Neblett is a director of the Forbes Manufacturing Company of Hopkinsville and the Mogul Wagon Company of the same city, and owns a farm two miles south of Hopkinsville.

In politics he is a democrat. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for the past eighteen years has been a steward. His residence is on Alumni Avenue. During the late war he took an active part in all of the drives for funds, and was chairman of the Christian County Committee for the Fourth Liberty Loan. He made a direct appeal for voluntary subscriptions, and the quota of $654,000 assigned the county was not only raised, but when the campaign was closed the amount subscribed was found to be $800,000. This is the only case of a campaign for the bonds being successfully carried out without solicitations, and reflects credit alike upon Mr. Neblett's management and the generosity and patriotism of his fellow citizens. He also served as chairman of the Christian County Committee having charge of the drive for the Salvation Army, and this, too, was fully subscribed.

On February 6, 1896, Mr. Neblett was married at Adairville, Kentucky, to Miss Nell Simmons, a daughter of Dr. D. G. and Alice (Moss) Simmons, who reside at Hopkinsville. Doctor Simmons is a retired physician and surgeon of high standing. Mr. and Mrs. Neblett have the following children: Brenda, who was born December 20, 1896, married Oscar L. Bass, secretary and manager of sales of the Mogul Wagon Company, and lives at Hopkinsville; Walter, who was born July 13, 1899, is attending the Chicago Art Institute; and Robert T., who was born July 13, 1902, holds an office position with the Acme Mills, Inc., and lives at Hopkinsville.

Mr. Neblett is not only a practical millman, but he has a firm grasp of affairs generally and a high sense of civic responsibility. While his time and attention are occupied with the many duties pertaining to his business, he is never too busy to take up matters relative to the city, and it is safe to say that no wholesome movement is put on foot without he gives it due consideration and his generous support. He is proud of his city and anxious to see it expand in every direction, and therefore willing to exert himself to assist in bringing about such a desirable state of affairs. His energy and practicality in his business relations have resulted so favorably that the Acme Mills are recognized as being synonymous for high quality and dependability in point of service.

Cromwell Adair. Few Kentucky lawyers are still living who handled their first professional cases before the war between the states. One of these is the venerable Cromwell Adair of Morganfield, who was a member of the bar of Union County in 1859, and practiced almost continuously until comparatively recent years.

His own life has been one of usefulness and distinction, and he is a grandson of Governor John Adair of Kentucky. John Adair was born in South Carolina in 1757, came to Kentucky in 1786, settling in Mercer County, was a leader in the Indian wars, commanded the Kentucky troops in the battle of New Orleans at the close of the War of 1812, and in 1820 was elected governor of the state.

Cromwell Adair was born in Harrodsburg, Mercer County, July 18, 1831, a son of William and Elizabeth (Cromwell) Adair. His father, who spent his active life as a physician, was a native of Harrodsburg, and his wife was a native Virginian. When Cromwell was six years of age, in 1837, his parents moved to Union County, and he grew up on a farm in Western Kentucky. He acquired a high school education at Henderson, spent four years in Hanover College in Indiana, where he graduated in 1854, and for two years following was a teacher at Caseyville, Kentucky.

Mr. Adair was admitted to the bar in 1859. He remained in the county seat of Union County engaged in practice until 1864. He was a southerner in sympathy, though not in favor of the war and secession, and on account of the turmoil occasioned by the great strife he removed from Kentucky in 1864 and spent about a year at Watertown, New York. Returning to Morganfield in 1866, he resumed the practice of law, and for many years was closely associated with much of the important litigation in Union County.

He has always been a stanch democrat in politics. He was elected a member of the Legislature in 1876 and re-elected. Some years later he was twice elected a member of the State Senate, and was in the Senate when the present Constitution of Kentucky was adopted. As a citizen he upheld the best interests of his home community and state, has been a successful lawyer, and has had much to do with farming and banking in his section of the state.

On November 13, 1860, Mr. Adair married Miss Kate Cromwell. They have traveled the journey of life together for over sixty years.

Chesley Hunter Searcy. His fellow members of the Louisville bar and an important share of the public know and appreciate the exceptional abilities and the very able work performed by Mr. Searcy as a lawyer. He has been active in general practice for over fifteen years at Louisville. With his professional reputation secure Mr. Searcy has given much time latterly to politics, not for himself but for the good of his party, and was one of the leaders most prominent in republican campaigns, both in 1919 and 1920.

Mr. Searcy was born at Louisville, December 14, 1881, son of John and Rosa (Colter) Searcy. His father, who was born in Anderson County, Kentucky, in 1844, enlisted as a youth in the Union army in the 58th Indiana Infantry, and served with that regiment in all its campaigns and battles, and when he was mustered out he was first lieutenant of his company. After the war he came to Louisville and for a number of years was in the wholesale grocery business. He died in 1906. John Searcy was a republican and took an active part in the Masonic Order, being affiliated with DeMolay Commandery of the Knights Templar. He was a member of the Christian Church. Mrs. John Searcy is now past seventy, having been born in Washington County, Kentucky, in 1850. Chesley Hunter is the fourth of her seven children, all living.

Chesley Hunter Searcy was educated in the grammar and high schools of Louisville, attended Vanderbilt University at Nashville, and in 1904 received his law degree from the University of Louisville. He acquired his first knowledge of public men and legislative affairs while serving as a page in the Kentucky State Legislature in 1896, at the age of fourteen.

From 1915 to 1917 Mr. Searcy was chairman of the republican organization of Louisville. The splendid results secured in the campaign of 1919 are largely credited to his effective labors as chairman of the Republican State Central Committee. In the spring of 1920 he was elected chairman of the State Central Committee and in July of that year chairman of the Republican State Campaign Committee.

In Masonry Mr. Searcy is affiliated with Excelsior Lodge No. 258, F. and A. M., King Solomon Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., DeMolay Commandery No. 12, K. T., Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville, Louisville Lodge No. 8 of the Elks, and is a member of the Sigma Chi College fraternity of Vanderbilt. He is also a member of the Pendennis Club and the Pasttime Boat Club.

February 16, 1906, he married Mary Lillia Black, a native of Henry County, where her parents, Charles A. and Fannie (Seebolt) Black, also were born. Her mother is still living, Mrs. Searcy being her only child. Her father, who died April 1, 1913, at the age of fifty-five, was a farmer in Henry County, a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Christian Church, and in politics was first a democrat, but finally a republican.

James A. McKenzie has been established in the practice of law in the City of Hopkinsville since 1908, and has secured a good standing at the bar of his native county. He was born in Christian County, of which Hopkinsville is the chief town and judicial center, on March 17, 1878. He is a scion of one of the old and influential families of the county, and his father was a distinguished citizen, whose character and achievements conferred honor upon the old Blue Grass commonwealth. James A. McKenzie, Sr., father of the subject of this review, was born in Christian County, in the year 1840, and became familiarly known as "Quinine Jim," owing to his strenuous advocacy of the bill removing the tariff on quinine. His father, William Washington McKenzie, was born in North Carolina, in 1803. He became one of the substantial agriculturists and landholders of this county, and was one of the county's most venerable and honored citizens at the time of his death, in 1894. He represented the county as a member of the State Legislature, was a leader in the local councils of the democratic party, and served many years as justice of the peace. The original representatives of the McKenzie family in America came from Scotland to this country prior to the war of the Revolution. As a young man William W. McKenzie wedded Miss Sophia Stevenson, who passed her entire life in Christian County, where the family was founded in the pioneer days. The late Hon. Adlai Stevenson, of Illinois, who served as vice president of the United States, was a first cousin of James A. McKenzie, Sr., father of the subject of this review. After the death of his first wife William W. McKenzie married Miss Elizabeth Ewing, who was born in Christian County in 1805, and who here remained until her death, in 1868. Of this union James A. McKenzie, Sr., was a son, and on the maternal side he was a first cousin of Hon. James S. Ewing, who served as United States minister to Belgium under the administration of President Cleveland. Mr. McKenzie was also a nephew of Hon. Andrew McCormick, who served as judge of the United States District Court in the State of Texas. William Washington McKenzie was a son of Andrew McKenzie, who was born at Dingwall, Scotland, whence he immigrated to America and established his residence in North Carolina, where he passed the residue of his life and where he became a prosperous agriculturist and extensive land-owner.

An able advocate of the principles of the democratic party, James A. McKenzie, Sr., became one of its leaders in Western Kentucky and was called to serve in many positions of distinctive public trust. He was for two years representative of Christian County in the State Legislature, was secretary of state under the administration of Governor Proctor Knox, and served three terms as a member of the United States Congress, besides which he was a member of the Kentucky commission representing the state at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893 at Chicago. Further honors came to him, as he served as United States minister to Peru, under the administration of President Cleveland. He was a man of fine character and exceptional intellectuality, and was well qualified for the leadership which he long held in the formulating and directing of popular sentiment and action in his native state. He was affiliated with Longview Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Long View, Kentucky, and served at one time as grand master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Kentucky. He was a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church. When the Civil war began he entered the Confederate service as a member of a Texas regiment, and he continued with his command until he was wounded in the battle of Fort Donelson, which incapacitated him for further service in the field.

As a young man James A. McKenzie, Sr., married Mrs. Amelia (Parrish) Blakey, who was born in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1839, and whose first husband was a practicing physician and surgeon at Montgomery, Alabama, at the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie became the parents of ten children. Parrish was twelve years of age at the time of his death; William died at the age of eight years; Gilmer, at the age of three years; and Atherton, at the age of ten years; Mary Louise became the wife of Hubert P. Potter, who was engaged in the banking business at Bowling Green, Kentucky, at the time of his death, and she is now the wife of Professor J. B. Browder, who holds the chair of classical languages in Chestnut Hill Academy in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Katherine Amelia is the wife of H. Lamar Monarch, who is engaged in the wholesale coal business in the City of Richmond, Indiana; James A., Jr., immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth, and is the youngest of the children.

James A. McKenzie, Jr., is indebted to the rural schools of Christian County for his preliminary educational discipline, and later he attended Major Ferrell's High School for young men in the City of Hopkinsville. He then entered Centre College, at Danville, and in this institution he was graduated in 1898, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1900 he was graduated in the law department of the same institution, which conferred upon him at this time the supplemental degree of Bachelor of Laws. While a student at Centre College he became affiliated with the Kappa Alpha fraternity. His graduation in the law schools was virtually coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state, and for five years thereafter he was engaged in active practice at Bowling Green. He then made a radical change of environment by removing to the City of Seattle, Washington, where he continued in practice two years. He then, in 1908, established himself in practice at Hopkinsville. Mr. McKenzie maintains his well appointed offices in the Summers Building, at the corner of Court and Main Streets, and has as his partner Ira D. Smith, under the firm name of McKenzie & Smith.

Mr. McKenzie has never faltered in loyal allegiance to the cause of the democraatic party, in the council and campaign activities of which he has been a prominent factor in Christian County. He holds membership in the Kentucky State Bar Association, in which he is serving as a member of the committee on membership, is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and also with the local organizations of the Masonic fraternity, and both he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. McKenzie's attractive and hospitable home is situated at 200 East Sixteenth Street, and in his native county he is the owner of two fine farms, with an aggregate area of 400 acres. He has taken most lively interest in the promotion of agricultural progress in Christian County, as he has also in all other matters tending to advance the civic and material welfare of the community. He is secretary and treasurer of the Christian County National Farm Loan Association, representing the Federal Farm Loan Bank at Louisville. During the nation's participation in the World war Mr. McKenzie engaged in advancing the various governmental loan drives and in the furtherance of other measures for the upholding of war activities. He made a tour through various parts of Kentucky to urge and advance the ultimate production of food crops, and did much to advance this important industrial adjunct during the climacteric war period. He is at the present time one of the most progressive members of the Christian County Farm Bureau.

In the year 1907, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McKenzie to Miss Mary J. Willis, daughter of George and Sarah (Potter) Willis, the former of whom was a representative banker and citizen of Bowling Green at the time of his death, and the latter still resides in that city. Mrs. McKenzie was graduated in Potter College at Bowling Green, and her gracious personality has made her a popular figure in the representative social life of Hopkinsville. Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Mary Willis, March 22, 1908; James A. (III), April 5, 1911; and Sarah Amelia, September 25, 1918.

Shelby Lewis Peace. The personal influence and financial stability of Shelby Lewis Peace, of Hopkinsville, are the result of industrious application to business affairs. During an active and diversified career he has been identified with several lines of business industry, and at present finds himself at the head of the largest concern of its kind in Christian County, the Foulks Coal Company.

Mr. Peace was born at Hopkinsville, November 11, 1885, a son of W. H. and Sallie B. (Foulks) Peace. The family is of Scotch origin and has been established in America since Colonial times. Henry Shelby Peace, the grandfather of Shelby L. Peace, was born near Nashville, Tennessee, and spent his life in that state, where he was the owner of a large plantation, on which a part of the City of Lebanon now stands. This he operated with slave labor, he being the owner of over 100 blacks, and his operations were greatly successful. He died at Nashville before the birth of his grandson, as did also his wife, who prior to her marriage was a Miss Taylor, of North Carolina.

W. H. Peace, father of Shelby L. Peace, was born at Lebanon, Tennessee, in 1852, and was reared in his native city, where he secured employment with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. For a number of years he was a station agent and operator with this company at various points from Nashville to Henderson, Kentucky, but was still a young man when he settled at Hopkinsville, where he was married. This city continued to be his home during the remainder of his life, for the greater part of which he was freight agent for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. He died at Hopkinsville in 1912, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he had been a life-long member. Mr. Peace married Miss Sallie B. Foulks, who survives her husband and is a resident of Hopkinsville. Mrs. Peace was born in 1861, at Hopkinsville, and belongs to a family which originated in England and the American ancestors of which settled in New Jersey and Pennsylvania prior to the outbreak of the Revolutionary war. E. L. Foulks, the maternal grandfather of Shelby L. Peace, was born in 1821, at Belleville, Illinois, and as a young man applied himself to the art of photography. In 1858 he settled at Hopkinsville, as a pioneer business man, and opened a studio. He continued his connection with that line of enterprise until some years after the close of the war between the states, in 1870 becoming identified with the coal business. He was the founder of the Foulks Coal Company, and continued as its active head until his death in 1917, at Hopkinsville. He was one of his city's stable and reliable men of business, and one who was held in the highest esteem by his associates and contemporaries. Mr. Foulks married Miss Sarah Browder, who was born in 1823 at a rural point in Logan County, Kentucky, and died at Hopkinsville in 1899. Two children were born to W. H. and Sallie B. (Foulks) Peace: Shelby Lewis; and Addie, the wife of C. O. Wagner, a veterinary surgeon of Elkton, Kentucky.

The educational training of Shelby L. Peace was acquired in the public schools of Hopkinsville, where he was graduated from the high school with the class of 1902, when seventeen years of age. Following in the footsteps of his father, he secured employment with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, worked his way up from the bottom, was station agent at Springfield, Tennessee, for one year, and then was made cashier at Hopkinsville. After six years with that company he went to Philadelphia, in 1908, and during that and the following year was cashier for a brokerage firm. Coming back to Hopkinsville, in 1910 he took charge of the business which had been founded by his maternal grandfather, E. L. Foulks, in 1870, and is now owner of the Foulks Coal Company, the largest concern of its kind in Christian County, with yard and offices situated at Fourteenth Street and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad tracks. Mr. Peace is accounted one of the energetic and capable business men of his city and is widely and favorably known to the coal trade, being president of the Retail Coal Dealers' Association. He is independent in his political views and has no aspirations for political preference, but is a citizen of public spirit and a supporter of all worthy movements. During the war period he was very active in local affairs and liberally supported the measures which were inaugurated to assist the country in its time of need. He has several fraternal and social connections, and resides in a modern home at No. 712 South Clay Street, Hopkinsville.

In 1907, at Springfield, Tennessee, Mr. Peace was united in marriage with Miss Hazel Dean, daughter of James and Lizzie (Kirke) Dean, both now deceased, Mr. Dean having been formerly a member of the Board of Trustees of Robertson County, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Peace are the parents of three children: Harold, born February 6, 1912; Marshall, born June 17, 1914; and Marguerite, born April 10, 1920.

James Pendleton Helm, who died at Louisville March 30, 1910, was one of a family group whose name for over a century has been synonymous with unselfish public leadership, lofty character and distinguished attainments in Kentucky.

His great-grandfather, Thomas Helm, after his service as a lieutenant with Virginia troops in the Revolution, came to Louisville in 1780, and the following year established Helm Place in Hardin County, on land granted him by Virginia. George Helm, his son, was born in 1774 and devoted his active life to his farm and plantation in Hardin County. He was also a member of the Legislature. His wife was Rebecca Larue, of a pioneer Kentucky family, and one of their nine children was John La Rue Helm.

John La Rue Helm, who was twice governor of Kentucky, was born at Helm Place, July 4, 1802. He studied law under Ben Tobin, was admitted to the bar in 1823, and for sixteen consecutive years was county attorney of Hardin County. Elected to the Legislature in 1825, he served eleven years, and for five sessions was speaker of the House. From 1844 to 1848 he was in the State Senate, after which he was elected lieutenant governor, and when Governor John J. Crittenden resigned in 1850 to become attorney general under President Fillmore, Mr. Helm succeeded him, being the eighteenth governor of Kentucky. He resumed private practice in 1851, and in 1854 was chosen president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. He effected a complete transformation in that road's financial affairs, also rehabilitated the material equipment and laid the basis for its subsequent prestige as one of the great Southern transportation systems. He left the office of railroad president in 1860. During the war he maintained a neutral position. His son, Ben Hardin Helm, was killed at Chickamauga while a brigadier general in the Confederate army. Governor Helm was again sent to the State Senate after the war. In 1867 he was elected by an overwhelming majority as governor. On account of illness he was inaugurated at his home, Helm Place, September 3, 1867, and five days later his distinguished career was ended by death, so that he never entered upon the active duties of his term.

In 1830 Governor Helm married Lucinda Barbour Hardin. Her father, Benj. Hardin, of Bardstown, was one of Kentucky's great lawyers. She died in 1885, leaving two sons, John L. and James P. One of the daughters became the wife of Judge Horatio W. Bruce of Louisville.

James Pendleton Helm was born at Helm Place January 7, 1850, and graduated with the law degree from the University of Louisville in June, 1870. He practiced law nearly forty years, and for over twenty years of that time had as a partner his nephew, Helm Bruce, and after 1897 his son, Thomas Kennedy Helm.

His service as a lawyer and citizen can most appropriately be reviewed by quoting from some of the many articles that appeared in Louisville newspapers after his death.

"Mr. Helm won success early," to quote from the Evening Post. "To an unrivaled knowledge of the law and unwearying application and strong common sense he united the business qualities which, if he had devoted himself to business alone, would have made him a giant in finance or a great railroad builder. He won a position as attorney for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and for more than thirty years he acted as one of the chief legal advisers of this finely managed Kentucky corporation. Mr. Helm represented the Louisville & Nashville Railroad in the state courts, before the Court of Appeals and in many important cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. In fact, no small part of the great success of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad has been due to the work of James P. Helm as its legal adviser.

"Mr. Helm's unusual abilities early attracted to him all the business he could handle, and many of the large corporations and banks of the city contended with each other for his services as counsellor. In banking law Mr. Helm was noted as one of the foremost authorities of the country, and it is said that no banker in the United States was more familiar with every phase of the banking system than was he. He was repeatedly employed by the State Bankers' Association, for which he did fine work, and of which for many years he was general counsel. He was also for years the attorney for several of the largest banks in the city; he had for many years been the general counsel of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railroad. He acted as attorney for the Kentucky Heating Company in all its long fight with other corporations. He was attorney for both the Louisville Home Telephone Company and the Kentucky Wagon Works and for scores of other corporations. He was a director of the Fidelity Trust Company from the time of its organization until his death.

"As a lawyer Mr. Helm was noted for his wisdom in counsel, his caution, his sound judgment and his unvarying fairness. When once the lines of battle were formed, however, he was a stern and unyielding fighter. He never knew what it was to quit. He fought for his client as if his life was at stake, and he frequently came back to his office from the court room worn out by his fiery energies. In pleading Mr. Helm was noted for his extraordinary lucidity, his grasp of the real point at issue, his ability to cover a complicated case in a few points. These qualities were frequently noted by the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, by whom Mr. Helm was highly esteemed for a quarter of a century.

"James P. Helm was reared a democrat of the old school, and he remained a democrat until 1896, when he declined to support Mr. William J. Bryan. In 1899 he was one of the leaders in the campaign against the election of Governor Goebel. After 1899 for a time his chief interest in politics centered in an effort to secure honest elections."

A tribute that expresses in condensation many of the opinions voiced by individuals and bar associations is the following taken from an editorial at that time:

"Much as we may admire James P. Helm's attainments at the bar, his spotless character, the keenness and breadth of his intellect, the lucidity of his mind and his brilliant professional success, his services to the public must be ranked higher than anything else. This service was not rendered in office nor for office. Politics and the business of government were not of themselves attractive to him, but he never hesitated even after ill health had fallen upon him to take his place, and it was always the first place, in any serious fight his fellow citizens were making for better government.

"None of Mr. Helm's works will survive longer or will be of such endearing benefit as that last splendid fight of his as senior counsel for the fusion contestants and chairman of the Committee of One Hundred in the litigation following the election of 1905. To that service he gave many months of his time and not a little of that vitality which was slowly worn away by his unceasing activities. His was the master mind that directed that remarkable piece of litigation, his the voice that in words of classic simplicity finally laid before the highest court in the state the full story of that election in such terms as could not be resisted. The final victory in that case was the climax of James P. Helm's career. He won many cases that were financially more important, but in the contest cases he acted as the spokesman and leader of disfranchised citizenship, and he gave to that leadership the best work of a singularly broad and useful life.

"Mr. Helm was a great lawyer, a great advocate, a wise counsellor and one of the best business men that ever lived in this community. Had he given his entire attention to business he would have ranked with any of the great captains of commerce. He understood not only the banking laws but the system of banking as do none but the most successful financiers. At the bar he made his client's cause his own, and he did for his client everything that he would do for himself and no more. No one ever heard of James P. Helm advising a corporation how to break the law or to evade legal requirements. His professional career was as pure and free from blame as his personal life. His was an honored name that grew more honored by his life and work.

"No one ever wore more worthily the hard earned honors of a noble profession. He was a great lawyer because he was a great man first, and a good man before greatness ever seemed to him a hope or a possession. Today let the young men at the bar honor his memory and emulate his character, for character is more than greatness, more than fame, more than anything else attainable."

January 14, 1874, Mr. Helm married Miss Pattie A. Kennedy, who was born at Louisville March 18, 1854, and is still living in that city. Her father was Thomas S. Kennedy. James P. Helm and wife had four children: Thomas Kennedy Helm, whose career as a lawyer is sketched following; Katharine H., wife of Dr. Samuel H. Halley, whose home is near Lexington, their children being Alice B., Anne, and Samuel H., Jr.; Lucinda H., who is the wife of James Clark, of Louisville, and has two children; and James P., Jr., who married Dorothy Walker, of Brooklyn, New York, and has three children, James P., III, George C. and Jean.

Thomas Kennedy Helm. For almost 100 years Helm has been a conspicuous name in the bar of Kentucky, and for almost 150 years as builders in Kentucky's development.

Thomas Kennedy Helm was born November 18, 1874, in Jefferson County, at the homestead of his maternal grandfather, Thomas S. Kennedy, and was reared and educated in Louisville, attending the Rugby School from 1885 to 1891, Washington and Lee University from 1891 to 1895, and after taking the summer law course at the University of Virginia studied during the two following years in the law office of Helm & Bruce, and attended and graduated from the law department of the University of Louisville in 1897, being awarded the Edward Thompson Prize for the best thesis on a legal subject and the Faculty Prize for the highest class standing.

On July 1, 1897, he became a member of the firm of Helm, Bruce & Helm, which continued until 1907, when with his father the firm was continued as Helm & Helm, and after the death of James P. Helm in 1910, James P. Helm, Jr., became a partner, and this firm consolidated July 1, 1918, with that of Trabue & Doolan under the style of Trabue, Doolan, Helm & Helm. All of these firms have held a front rank in the bar of Kentucky.

November 14, 1900, Mr. Helm married Elizabeth Tebbs Nelson, who was born on the family homestead in Clark County, Kentucky, daughter of George B. and Katherine Tebbs Nelson. Her father is a lawyer at Winchester, Kentucky, and is well known for his services both at the bar and on the bench. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Helm are Patty Anderson, George Nelson, Katherine Tebbs and Thomas Kennedy, Jr.

Mr. Helm's activities have been unusually diversified. As a lawyer he has appeared in much of the most important litigation of his time in Kentucky and elsewhere, covering a wide range of subjects. In connection with corporate organizations and reorganizations, the court in sustaining one of them said: "It was brilliantly conceived and boldly executed"; and of another, "In such circumstances something had to be done, and we can conceive of nothing which would have been fairer or more advantageous to all concerned"; a testimonial presented to him is inscribed: "A slight token of appreciation of services rendered a Free Press in numerous libel suits 1897-1903"; and to these might be added countrywide litigation involving United States patents, Kentucky land law and all phases of railroad litigation, the banking law and a victory for warehousemen of Kentucky by which the Supreme Court held unconstitutional an act which imposed upon them taxes amounting to about $15,000,000. He is general counsel of the Kentucky Bankers Association, the Kentucky Wagon Manufacturing Company, and many of the corporations hereafter named of which he is director; and is also local attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railway Company; an associate district attorney for the Illinois Central Railroad Company and the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway Company.

Mr. Helm has justified the reputation of his ancestors for combining business acumen and legal ability, and is much sought after as business adviser. He is director in and also on the executive committees of the following successful corporations: Louisville Trust Company, Federal Chemical Company, Louisville Public Warehouse Company, Rome Railway & Light Company, Indiana Cotton Mills, Puritan Cordage Mills, Liberty Coal & Coke Company, Louisville Title Company, and a director in several other corporations.

Mr. Helm is independent in politics and has always declined to accept public office, except for serving in 1907 as chairman of the Board of Public Works of Louisville, but his response to civic duty has always been generous. From 1899 to 1917 he was secretary and director of the Newsboys' Home of Louisville and took an active part in the forming of the Juvenile Court laws and the laws relating to delinquent and dependent children. He was one of the organizers and for many years the president of the Tavern Club and later vice president of the Pendennis Club, and in 1916 and 1917 was a director of the Board of Trade of Louisville, and in 1921 a member of the City Government Committee of Louisville to suggest reforms in the city charter. Since 1914 he has been an active member of the Chapter of Christ Church Cathedral and a member of the Diocesan Council of Church Extension. During the war times he was an active member of the Legal Advisory Committee and chairman of the Home Service Section of the American Red Cross, succeeding to the chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Louisville Chapter.

Mr. Helm is a member of the Louisville Bar Association, the American Bar Association and the Kentucky Bar Association, the latter of which elected him its president in 1907, he being the youngest member ever to be so honored; and also a member of the Phi Kappa Psi; the T. N. E.; Louisville Commandery No. 1, K. T.; Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine; and of the Pendennis Club; Louisville Country Club; Les Cheneaux Club, Michigan; Salamagundi Literary Club; and various hunting, fishing and gun clubs. He is also a member of the Society of Colonial Wars, having entered upon both paternal and maternal lines, and of the Sons of the American Revolution, as well as several patriotic organizations.

Helm Bruce. In the thirty odd years since his admission to the bar, Helm Bruce, of Louisville, has achieved most of the substantial honors open to the able lawyer who confines himself strictly to his profession. His success and dignified standing in the bar and the ranks of citizenship would seem to justify the laws of inheritance, since his name indicates his relationship with some of the oldest and most illustrious families of Kentucky and kinship with some of the state's greatest lawyers and public men.

He is of Scotch ancestry and his first American ancestor was a Scotch merchant who settled in Virginia before the Revolution. A son of this Virginia merchant was John Bruce, great-grandfather of the Louisville lawyer. John Bruce came from Virginia to Kentucky and died in Garrard County, at the age of seventy-nine in 1827. He married Elizabeth Clay, daughter of Henry Clay, Jr., of Virginia. Alexander Bruce, his son, was a farmer, merchant, lawyer and mill owner in Lewis County, Kentucky, and represented his county in the Legislature in 1825-26. Alexander Bruce married Amanda Bragg, a native of Lewis County. Horatio W. Bruce, their son, and father of Helm Bruce, was one of Kentucky's ablest lawyers and public leaders. He was born in Lewis County February 22, 1830, and died at Louisville January 22, 1903. He was educated in private schools, and while he never attended college or university his unflagging study gave him a mastery of many subjects of learning, including Latin and mathematics. From the age of sixteen until 1849 he clerked in a general store, then taught school and studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1851 and began practice at the age of twenty-one. His early years as a lawyer were spent in Fleming County, which he represented in the Legislature in 1855-56, and was then elected commonwealth attorney for the Tenth Judicial District. He resigned this office and removed to Louisville in December, 1858. For several years he was active in the whig party, supported the candidacy of Bell and Everett in 1860, and at the beginning of the war was identified with the State's Rights party. He was a member of the Southern Conference at Russellville, Kentucky, in October, 1861, following which he attended the Sovereignty Convention in November of the same year, and helped organize the provisional state government under which Kentucky was admitted to the Confederacy. In January, 1862, he was elected to the Confederate Congress, and was re-elected in January, 1864. When the war was over he resumed practice at Louisville, and in 1868 was elected circuit judge of the Ninth Judicial District. He was appointed chancellor of the Jefferson Chancery Court in January, 1873, and soon afterward elected for the unexpired term and re-elected for a full term in 1874. He resigned in March, 1880, to become attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and at the time of his death, twenty-three years later, was general attorney for that corporation. One evidence of his broad scholarship is the fact that he was elected in 1872 to a professorship in the law department of the University of Louisville, and was a member of the faculty about eight years.

Judge Bruce married Miss Elizabeth Barbour Helm on June 12, 1856. She was born in Helm Place in Hardin County and was a granddaughter of Ben Hardin, of Bardstown, and a descendant of Elizabeth Barbour, a double first cousin of Governor James Barbour of Virginia and Justice Philip Barbour of the United States Supreme Court. Mrs. Bruce was born in Hardin County in 1836, and died in 1913. Of her two sons and six daughters, five are still living, Helm Bruce being the third child.

Through his mother Helm Bruce is a grandson of Governor John L. Helm of Kentucky. As one of the oldest and most distinguished of Kentucky's families only brief reference may be made to the family of Governor Helm. His grandfather, Thomas Helm, was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war, serving with Virginia troops, and in 1780 came to Louisville and the following year established Helm Place in Hardin County, on land granted him by the State of Virginia. His son, George Helm, was born in 1774 and married Miss Rebecca La Rue, of another noted pioneer Kentucky family. Their son, John La Rue Helm, was born at Helm Place July 4, 1802, studied law under the pioneer character, Ben Tobin, was admitted to the bar in 1823, served for sixteen consecutive years as county attorney of Hardin County, was elected to the Legislature in 1825, and served eleven years altogether, five sessions as speaker of the House. He was a member of the State Senate from 1844 to 1848, and was then elected lieutenant governor, and when Governor John J. Crittenden resigned in 1850 to become attorney general under President Fillmore, Mr. Helm succeeded and was the eighteenth governor of the state. After his term expired in 1851 he resumed practice and in 1854 was elected president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. That road was practically bankrupt, but he reorganized its financial affairs and rehabilitated the material equipment and laid the basis for its subsequent prestige as one of the great Southern railroads. He resigned as president of the railroad in 1860. His son, Ben Hardin Helm, became a brigadier general in the Confederate army and was killed at Chickamauga. After the war he was again sent to the State Senate, and in 1867 was elected by an overwhelming majority as governor. On account of his illness he was inaugurated at his home, Helm Place, September 3, 1867, and five days later his distinguished career was ended by death. Governor Helm married Lucinda Barbour Hardin in 1830. Her father was Ben. Hardin, one of Kentucky's great lawyers. She died in 1885. The four sons of Governor Helm were: Ben Hardin, George, John L. and James P. The latter was for many years a leader in the Kentucky bar and died at Louisville, March 29, 1910.

Helm Bruce was born at Louisville, November 16, 1860. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, and then entered Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. He was graduated with the A. B. degree in 1880, and while in the university won two scholarships and was also orator of the University Literary Society. Returning to Louisville, he studied law in the university, was graduated LL. B. in 1882, and admitted to the bar in the same year. In law school he received a medal on his thesis "Contributory Negligence." Mr. Bruce in 1884 formed a partnership with his distinguished uncle, James P. Helm, mentioned above, and their firm continued twenty-two years, until 1906. For the following four years Mr. Bruce practiced alone and in 1910 became senior partner of the firm Bruce & Bullitt, his partner being William Marshall Bullitt.

Mr. Bruce is a director of the First National Bank of Louisville and of the Kentucky Title Savings Bank & Trust Company. He is independent in politics. He is a former trustee of his alma mater, Washington and Lee University.

December 17, 1886, Mr. Bruce married Miss Sallie Hare White, who was born at Lexington, Virginia. Her father, Prof. James J. White, for many years held the chair of Greek in Washington and Lee University. Mrs. Bruce is also a descendant of Samuel McDowell, the pioneer Kentuckian, who was president of the convention that adopted the first constitution of Kentucky in 1792. Mr. and Mrs. Bruce had four children: James W., who married Edith Campbell; Louise Reid, who died in 1904, the wife of John W. Price, Jr.; Elizabeth B. and Helm, Jr.

William Allen Bush, M. D. During the fifteen years that William Allen Bush, M. D., has been a member of the medical profession of Clark County he has emphasized in his life and work not only the thoroughness of his training and profundity of his knowledge, but also those characteristics which must be possessed by a physician if he hopes to succeed. Doctor Bush's professional experiences have included service in war and peace, a general private practice and community labor as proprietor of Bush's Hospital at Winchester, and in each direction has achieved results that have stamped him as one of the skilled and learned practitioners of this county.

Doctor Bush was born August 21, 1870, in Clark County, at Ruckerville, a son of Jonas R. and Sally (Webber) Bush. Nelson Bush, the great-grandfather of Dr. W. A. Bush, was born at Orange, Culpeper County, Virginia, and as a lad of five years was brought by his parents to Kentucky, the family settling near the old fort at Boonesboro, although on the north side of the river, the fort being on the south side of the stream, in Madison County. Nelson Bush secured a property three miles east of Ruckerville, upon which he followed farming throughout his life, being succeeded in its ownership by his son, grandson and great-grandson, the last named, Dr. Enoch R. Bush of Winchester, being the present owner. He is a brother of Dr. W. A. Bush. Allen W. Bush, grandfather of Dr. W. A. Bush, was born on this farm, on which he spent his life, and in addition to carrying on agricultural pursuits was one of the prominent auctioneers of his day. He was large in physique, weighing 300 pounds, had a forceful personality, and possessed a great voice, which could be heard for a long distance. In his early years he served as sheriff of Clark County. His death occurred on his farm when he was fifty-four years of age. Mr. Bush married Polly Robinson, and among their children was Jonas R. Bush, who was born on the home farm, December 7, 1849. Like his father, he engaged in farming and as an auctioneer, having inherited the latter's great voice, and in 1901 came to Winchester. He was later elected clerk of the Circuit Court of Clark County, but died in office six months later, June 26, 1910. He was the father of five children: William Allen, of this notice; Nora, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, as the wife of J. B. Conkwright, leaving one daughter, Bessie, who is society editor of the Lexington Leader; Elton, who died at the age of nineteen years; Wheeler, who died in childhood; and Enoch Robinson, M. D., a practicing physician of Winchester, a biography of whose life appears elsewhere in this work.

After attending the public schools, William A. Bush took a course in a private school at Winchester, taught by Prof. Tate Irvine, under whose instruction he derived a new insight into life and received inspiration and encouragement that decided him to make every endeavor to succeed, in spite of all obstacles. To the lessons which he received under this tutelage and the magnetic personal influence of that remarkable teacher he credits much of his subsequent success. Of twenty boys who were his classmates all have made their mark in life, and of these seventeen have become professional men.

From the time he was nineteen years old Doctor Bush taught school for twelve years, including a period in the graded school at Ford, Kentucky, at that time an important lumbering village. He then pursued his medical studies in the medical department of Transylvania University (the Kentucky University) at Lexington, and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1905. He at once entered upon his medical and surgical practice at Winchester, and from 1906 until 1911 was associated in practice with his brother, Dr. Enoch R. Bush. In 1916 he opened Bush's Hospital at Winchester, a modern structure with twenty-four rooms and accommodations for fifteen patients. Doctor Bush took a clinical course at Chicago, in the American Hospital, and in Mayo Brothers' Hospital, Rochester, Minnesota, and not a little of his success dates from these excellent clinical courses. The perfect system of the Mayo's gave him an insight into the most advanced thought as applied to diagnosis, treatment and hospital conduct. When the United States entered the World war Doctor Bush was appointed a member of the draft board of Clark County, as medical examiner, but subsequently enlisted in the United States Army Medical Corps, and was sent to Camp Greenleaf November 1, 1918. At Chickamauga Park he was assigned to military surgery and ordered to the Hoboken port of embarkation, being assigned later to Debarkation Hospital No. 3, New York City, where the returned wounded were given care. He received his honorable discharge May 27, 1919, with a captain's commission, and at that time returned to Winchester, where he reopened his hospital in July, 1919. He was appointed by the chief medical examiner at Washington, District of Columbia, as examiner for the discharged soldiers to determine upon compensation, and also for vocational training, and is in charge of this work at Winchester. He is now acting as assistant surgeon, under the civil service commission, as officer in charge of the United States Public Health Service at Winchester.

Doctor Bush holds membership in the Clark County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, Wm. A. Brooks, M. D.

the Southern Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Association of Military Surgeons, and is a life member of the Surgical Club of Minnesota. He is a past master of the Masonic Blue Lodge, high priest of Royal Arch Masonry, eminent commander of the Knights Templar, a Scottish Rite Mason of the Consistory of Louisville and a member of the Mystic Shrine. He has allied himself with movements which have had for their object the advancement of the general welfare, and has affiliated himself with other public-spirited citizens in civic enterprises making for higher education and better citizenship. He is a member of the Christian Church.

At the age of twenty years Doctor Bush, although not possessed of a dollar, eloped to be married to Miss Pora Oliver, daughter of Simpson and Betty (Emerson) Oliver, pioneer farming people of Clark County, who are now both deceased. Again, when he graduated from medical college, Doctor Bush spent his last money to buy a cigar. But he had one of the kindest and most sympathetic of fathers, who stood ready to assist him and who all through life was a companion and kind counsellor, whose worth can never be fully appreciated or estimated. Four children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Bush: Ruth, Dora and Jonas, who reside with their parents; and Ella, who died at the age of twenty-four years.

Samuel B. Kirby, for seventeen years chancellor of the Jefferson County Circuit Court at Louisville, has been known as one of the able lawyers of the city forty years, and his life has been one of unusual honor and service both in and out of his profession.

Judge Kirby was born in Brunswick County, Virginia, March 9, 1859, of English and Scotch-Irish lineage. The family came to America in Colonial times and several of the Kirbys were soldiers in the Revolution. Samuel T. Kirby, father of Judge Kirby, was a native of Brunswick County, Virginia, served in a Virginia regiment in the Confederate army and after the war moved to Louisville, where he remained an honored citizen until his death in 1893, at the age of seventy. He married Ellen Alice Colgan, a native of Baltimore, Maryland. She died in 1895, and they were survived by five children, four sons and one daughter.

Samuel B. Kirby was about six years of age when the family came to Louisville, and all his early education was acquired in the local public schools. At the age of nineteen he began the study of law under Judge Emmet Field, for many years judge of the Common Pleas Division of the Jefferson Circuit Court. He continued his studies in 1879 in the University of Louisville Law Department, graduating LL. B. in 1880, and the subsequent years have been marked by an earnest devotion to the most exacting professional standards and successful experience covering a wide field of general law practice. Judge Kirby had long been securely established in his profession before he entered public life. He was elected and served from 1901 to 1903 as county attorney of Jefferson County, and in 1903 was chosen judge of the Chancery division of the court. He was re-elected in 1909 for another six year term, and in 1913 was elected for the term which in 1921 will give eighteen years of consecutive service as chancellor.

Judge Kirby has also been vice president of the Commonwealth Life Insurance Company of Louisville and of the John P. Morton Company. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, the Commercial Club, the Kentucky Consistory of Scottish Rite Masons and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine, is an Elk and in politics always a stanch democrat. He is a member of the Baptist Church, while Mrs. Kirby is an Episcopalian.

April 27, 1897, Judge Kirby married Miss Harriet Griswold. She was born and reared in Louisville, and her father, Alexander Griswold, for many years was president of the John P. Morton Company. The three children of Judge Kirby are Samuel, Alexander G. and Mary Ellen.

Charles Gibson Middleton is a native of Louisville, born February 22, 1883, and was reared and educated in that city.

John Middleton, the father of Charles G., was born in 1842, in Henry County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming. For about ten years he concerned himself with tilling the soil, and while thus engaged became interested in the raising of tobacco. Going to Louisville, he applied himself to manufacturing tobacco, but subsequently went into the soap business as a manufacturer, being president of the Louisville Soap Company for many years. In 1919 he disposed of his holdings in that industry and became president of the Middleton Preserving Company, a position which he holds at this time. He is one of the influential and highly respected business men of Louisville. He belongs to the Pendennis and River Valley clubs, and to Christ Episcopal Church, and in politics maintains an independent attitude. Mr. Middleton married Bettie Summers, who was born at Louisville, and who still survives, as do their three children: Charles Gibson, Arthur H. and John S.

Charles Gibson Middleton was educated in the graded and high schools of Louisville, and for his more advanced mental training entered the University of Virginia, where he pursued both academic and law courses and graduated in 1905. He at once entered upon the practice of his profession at Louisville, and after some years became a member of his present firm, Humphrey, Crawford & Middleton. The firm is engaged in the handling of corporation business largely, and offices are maintained in the Inter-Southern Bank Building. Mr. Middleton is generally accounted a lawyer of fine talents and much energy. He is a director in the Standard Oil Company, and personally is of a social nature and greatly popular with his fellow-members in the Pendennis, Louisville Country and River Valley clubs. He is a republican in his political affiliation.

On June 6, 1912, Mr. Middleton was united in marriage with Miss Anita Gheens, who was born at Louisville, a daughter of Charles W. and Mary (Figg) Gheens, her father being a capitalist of this city. Mrs. Middleton is the youngest of four children, and she and her husband have two children, Charles Gibson, Jr., and Edwin Gheens. During the World war Mr. Middleton joined the United States Naval Flying Corps, May 11, 1918.

William Wait Crawford, a member of the law firm of Humphrey, Crawford & Middleton, has been actively connected with the Louisville bar for twenty years, during which period he has gained a substantial reputation as a close student of the law and a painstaking, able and strictly reliable lawyer. At various times in his career he has been honored by election to the high offices in the organizations of his calling, and during the past ten years has been treasurer of the Kentucky State Bar Association.

Mr. Crawford was born at Louisville, September 2, 1878, a son of William Wait and Mary (McCallum) Crawford, natives of this state, where the latter resides. There were five children in the family, of whom William W. is the third in order of birth, and of whom three are living. William W. Crawford, the elder, was engaged in the iron business for a number of years and for a long period was secretary and treasurer of the Sneal & Company Iron Works, but at this time is retired.

William Wait Crawford, the younger, received his early education at Louisville, and after his graduation from high school entered the law department of Louisville University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1901. At that time he entered upon the practice of his profession at Louisville, later becoming a member of the firm of Gibson & Crawford, subsequently becoming associated with one of the oldest law firms in the city, Humphrey, Crawford & Middleton, his associates being ex-Judge Alexander P. Humphrey and Charles G. Middleton. The offices of the firm are in the Inter-Southern Bank Building. In addition to his regular practice Mr. Crawford has given a large portion of his time to corporation work, and is attorney for the Pennsylvania Railway, the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, the American Tobacco Company and other large concerns. Few men are more widely known among the general practitioners of the state than is Mr. Crawford, who is a past president of the Louisville Bar Association and a vice president of the American Bar Association, and who for the past ten years has been treasurer of the Kentucky State Bar Association. He is a past master of Louisville Lodge No. 400, F. & A. M., and a member of the Pendennis and Louisville Country clubs. His political affiliation is with the republican party.

Mr. Crawford was married September 23, 1903, to Miss Mary LeClair Lovelace, who was born at Slaughtersville, Kentucky, daughter of Samuel H. and Dora Ashby Lovelace, and the second in order of birth in a family of five children. Mrs. Crawford's father is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal faith. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crawford: Malcolm, Loraine and William Wait, Jr.

Rogers Clark Ballard Thruston. The possessor of this name has long enjoyed enviable distinctions in the business, professional and social affairs of his native City of Louisville. His interests as a scientist, historian and officer of patriotic organizations have afforded him a wide scope of influence throughout his home state and even nationally.

He was born at Louisville, November 6, 1858, son of Andrew Jackson Ballard and Frances Ann Thruston. In 1884, at his mother's request, he added her family name to that which he previously bore.

Mr. Thruston is descended from men who fought as soldiers on both sides in the American Revolution. One of his ancestors was an officer (not a Tory) in the British army, stationed at Fort Pitt at the time of his marriage. Later he returned to England and died on his estate there. Six other ancestors fought in the war for independence on the side of the Colonists, and one of them was only eleven years and seven months old when he served in his father's command at the battle of Piscataway, near Perth Amboy, New Jersey.

Mr. Thruston's great-grandfather, Bland Ballard, was a pioneer Kentuckian and was killed by the Indians in 1788 near Shelbyville.

The grandfather of Mr. Thruston was James Ballard, who was born in Spottsylvania County, Virginia, in 1763, was a member of the expedition of George Rogers Clark in 1779 against the British and Indians in the west and later was stationed at the falls of the Ohio, at the present site of Louisville. James Ballard married in 1788 Amy Leman, and had seven children by that union. In 1803 he married a second time, wedding Susannah Cox, who was born in 1785 and died in 1858. James Ballard died in 1849. By his second marriage he had ten children, the seventh being Andrew Jackson Ballard.

Andrew Jackson Ballard was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, in 1815, and died at Louisville in 1885. He was reared on his father's farm in Shelby County, was educated for the law, and practiced at Louisville. At the beginning of the Civil war, as a Union man, he was appointed in 1861 clerk of the United States Circuit and District courts at Louisville, and held that office until he resigned in 1870. His brother, Bland Ballard, was at the same time appointed judge of the United States District Court for Kentucky, and served as such until his death in 1879. A. J. Ballard was also in the Kentucky Legislature one term as a republican, and declined a renomination. In politics he was first a whig and later a republican, and was a member of the Episcopal Church. His wife, Frances Ann Thruston, was born in Louisville in 1826, and died in 1896. They were married in 1848, and of their four sons and one daughter all but one son reached mature years, Rogers Clark being the youngest child.

Mr. Thruston graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College, now Yale University, with the class of 1880, and then took a post-graduate course of one year. For a time he was engaged in business at Louisville, but soon abandoned that for a life of scientific pursuit. Nearly all of his time since 1882 has been devoted to geology, mine engineering, metallurgy and historical work. In 1882 he became metallurgist and assistant geologist of the Kentucky Geological Survey, resigning that post in 1887 to engage in private work. In 1889 he became superintendent of the Land Bureau of the Kentucky Union Land Company and in 1895 became manager of the Big Stone Gap Iron Company. He is a director of the United States Trust Company and also of the Ballard & Ballard Company, both of Louisville.

Mr. Thruston never married and devotes his time to scientific, historical and patriotic work. He became a member of the Kentucky Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, January 17, 1890, was elected its president in 1911, and president-general of the National Society in 1913, and re-elected in 1914.

Besides this unusual distinction and service Mr. Thruston served from 1909 to 1911 as governor of the Society of Colonial Wars in the Commonwealth of Kentucky. He is a member of the Virginia Society of The Cincinnati. Mr. Thruston has undertaken on his private initiative and as a member of several organizations much work of an historical nature. His studies have given him distinction as an authority on the history of the United States flag. He is vice president of the Filson Club and a member of several national, territorial, state and local scientific and historical societies and social clubs.

Mr. Thruston has twice been honored with election as president of the Yale Alumni Association of Kentucky and is a member of the Executive Committee of the Alumni Advisory Board of Yale University. He was the first chairman of the Louisville Chapter of the American Red Cross for Kentucky in 1917, serving during the first year of the war, and resigning to become assistant manager of the Lake Division of the American Red Cross for Kentucky in January, 1918.

Charles Franklin Ogden is one of Kentucky's republican congressmen in President Harding's administration, and qualified for his second term in March, 1921, as representative of the Fifth Kentucky District, including his home City of Louisville. Mr. Ogden began his first term in 1919, when the control of Congress shifted from the democrats to the republicans, and was one of the able members from the Middle West during that time. He takes to Congress the experience of a highly qualified lawyer and a citizen who has enjoyed much prestige at Louisville, where he has practiced law for a quarter of a century.

Mr. Ogden represents an old Kentucky family, though he was born at Charleston, Indiana, February 4, 1874. His parents, Floyd G. and Mary (Pounds) Ogden, were both born in Jefferson County, Kentucky. His grandfather, Edmund Ogden, was a native of New York City and early established a home at Gilman's Point in Jefferson County. The maternal grandfather was Squire Hezekiah Pounds, who was born in Spencer County, Kentucky. Floyd Ogden for the greater part of his life lived on a farm and was engaged in farming activities, and is remembered as a successful inventor. Among other devices which he patented were the corn dropper and a churn. He had removed to Indiana when about thirteen years of age, but at the time of his death was a resident of Louisville. He died April 21, 1907, in his sixty-seventh year.

Charles F. Ogden grew up in his mother's native community, Fishersville in Jefferson County, and acquired a high school education both at Louisville and at Jeffersonville, Indiana. In 1896 he received the LL. B. degree from the University of Louisville. In 1894 he had become a law student in the office of A. E. Willson, later governor of Kentucky, and remained in that office as a student and practicing attorney for seven years. He began practice in 1897, and in 1901 formed a partnership with James P. Edwards under the firm name of Edwards & Ogden. This firm in 1907 became Edwards, Ogden & Peak, the additional member being Judge R. F. Peak.

Mr. Ogden served as a non-commissioned officer in the old Louisville Legion, and in 1898 was commissioned captain of Company H of the Eighth United States Volunteers and was on duty for eleven months during the Spanish-American war. For many years he has been active in the republican party, and in 1897 was elected on the republican ticket to represent Louisville in the Legislature, serving during the session of 1898-99. He was republican candidate for county attorney in 1901 and for the Senate in 1902. During succeeding years his reputation as an able lawyer steadily grew, together with a widening appreciation of his exceptional qualifications for public leadership. In November, 1918, as candidate for Congress from the First Congressional District, he won the election by a majority of 1,084. On November 2, 1920, he was re-elected for the Sixty-seventh Congress by a majority of 12,600.

Mr. Ogden is a member of the Christian Church. His home in Kentucky is at Anchorage and his law offices are in the Realty Building at Louisville. In 1898 he married Miss Lulu Whiteside, of Bloomfield, Kentucky, daughter of Albert Whiteside. They have a son, Willson, born in 1902.

John Alexander Serpell was educated as a civil engineer, was associated with his father, an eminent engineer in railway construction, for a time, but has most nearly approximated his ambition for achievement and has doubtless done most for the world as owner and developer of the famous Colonel-Orion herd of Duroc hogs. Wherever the Duroc strain has achieved recognition and appreciation there is also some knowledge of the splendid work done by the Mayfield Farm at Lexington, Kentucky, as a source of some of the finest representatives of this strain.

Mr. Serpell is a native Kentuckian, born August 31, 1884, a son of John Rogers and Alice (MacDougal) Serpell. His father was born in Maryland near the City of Washington in 1847, and is now living retired at New Albany, Indiana. The mother was born at Louisville, Kentucky. They had two children, John A. and Alice May. The latter is the wife of J. W. Barnett, Jr., of New York City. John R. Serpell was largely self educated, trained himself as a civil engineer, worked for railroads, did railway construction on different lines, and at the age of thirty-three had progressed so far in his profession that he had the contract for building the Denver and Rio Grande Railway through the peculiarly difficult Marshall Pass, where are exemplified some of the finest achievements of railroad engineering. Later he carried out extensive contracts for other roads, including the Virginia Railway, the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Louisville & Nashville, the Norfolk & Western. He was a railway engineer and contractor until 1909, when he retired. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and in politics was independent.

John Alexander Serpell was educated in Center College at Danville, Kentucky, and in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. At the age of nineteen he became associated with his father in railroad building, and continued that line of work until his father retired from the profession in 1909.

Mr. Serpell's achievements as a hog breeder have been the result of a little more than ten years of experience, close study, and courageous and foresighted enterprise. He began this work on the Georgetown Pike in Fayette County. He probably derived at least one advantage from not being a practical hog man, in that his enthusiasm and courage were not dimmed by experience. He believed that there was a good opening for pure bred stock of the highest qualifications, and he founded his herd by paying an unprecedented price of $3,000 for a pure blood boar. Many practical men derided him as a reckless young man indulging in a fancy regardless of expense. But that was the real beginning of the great Colonel-Orion herd on the Mayfield Farm of today. This herd is now headed by two of the greatest Duroc boars, Ultimus and Golden Orion King. Competent judges have pronounced Ultimus one of the most perfect representatives of the Durocs and the truest breeder and perpetuator of the Duroc characteristics. Mr. Serpell has refused $40,000 for this great boar.

He remained on his farm on the Georgetown Pike until 1918, when he bought the old Tom Moore homestead, one of the historic places of Fayette County, on the Russell Cave Pike, 6½ miles from Lexington. The house is representative of the best period of old Kentucky Colonial architecture, a prominent feature being the Colonial pillars in front, while most of the interior finish is priceless black walnut. The home was built in 1833, and it was in the continuous ownership of the Moore family until 1912, when it was acquired by the noted Kentucky horseman, the late J. B. Haggin, who in 1917 sold to John E. Madden, also a prominent turf man. Mr. Serpell bought the home from Mr. Madden in 1918, and since then has invested large sums in re-equipping it as a hog breeding ranch, and in that respect it is regarded as one of the most complete hog farms in the United States. Hog breeders all over the United States know the Mayfield Farm at least by the reputation of its products, and hundreds of visitors from different states attend twice each year the sales, one of which is held in January and the other in August. At the August sale in 1920 a bred sow sale, a total of forty-five lots, brought over $13,000, an average of $290, the highest price for an individual being $950. The buyers at this sale came from widely scattered portions of the Union, some from Florida and others as far away as Minnesota, from which it is possible to calculate in a measure the tremendous influence exerted upon the hog raising industry by the Mayfield Farm.

On July 6, 1916, Mr. Serpell married Jane Matilda Farrell. She was born in Lexington, a daughter of Hon. Edward P. and Jane (McCarty) Farrell. Her mother is still living. Her father was long a prominent member of the Lexington bar. Mrs. Serpell is the second of three daughters, the other two being Josephine and Judith. Mr. and Mrs. Serpell have two children: John Alexander, Jr., and Edward P.

A. F. Wheeler. Among the mercantile concerns of Lexington the A. F. Wheeler Furniture and Home Furnishings store at North Limestone and Short Street is a notable institution in itself and is interesting for its history of development and the personality and business genius of the man who has promoted and built it up from modest beginnings.

Mr. Wheeler entered the furniture business independently at Lexington in 1901 and the first year his sales totalled about $10,000. The sales for 1920 reached the satisfactory volume of $300,000, and every year there has been some advance and enlargement, and the business and stock now represent an investment of about $150,000. There are twenty-five employes in the large store at Lexington. Mr. Wheeler also has a branch store at Paris, Kentucky, and is owner of half an interest in the Wheeler Brothers furniture business at Indianapolis, Indiana, a concern that was established twelve years ago, his brother F. B. Wheeler having personal charge of that store.

A. F. Wheeler was born on a farm near Cynthiana, Kentucky, August 4, 1871. His father George M. Wheeler is one of the good farmers of that county. He was born in the county at the old Wheeler homestead. In the yard of that old homestead he saw when a lad a small maple switch planted, which is now a broad-spreading sugar maple tree. George M. Wheeler served in the Union army as a soldier.

A. F. Wheeler left the farm at the age of eighteen, and coming to Lexington went to work for his half-brother J. T. Wheeler, a local furniture merchant. The first four weeks his wages were $2.00 a week and he boarded himself. His salary was then raised to $5.00 a week, and the highest salary he ever received was $8.00 a week. While on the farm he had been taught economy and thrift, and he put these lessons to good use in his work at Lexington and impossible though it may seem saved $250 from his wages. In 1897 he and Frank Ott and J. A. Barlow formed a partnership, each putting up $250, and establishing the Blue Grass Furniture Company. They were in business together for several years, the company being dissolved in 1901 and each partner starting independently.

Mr. Wheeler is a progressive merchant and has been a student of conditions and has always endeavored to furnish utmost satisfaction in the quality of goods and in the service to his customers. At first he did largely an installment business but this has been modified since until his store is now conducted on the standard plan.

Mr. Wheeler married Miss Jimmie Thompson of Bourbon County, daughter of a well known farmer of that county J. H. Thompson. They have one daughter, Loraine. Her first husband was Henry Fearing and by that marriage she has one daughter Helen Cecil Fearing who is now Mrs. A. V. Smith. Mr. Wheeler is one of the public spirited men of Lexington. While he has never indulged in breeding or the owning of horses, he has been much interested as an outsider in the performances and fine qualities of Kentucky trotting stock.

James Calvin Milam grew up on a Kentucky farm, and almost as soon as he left school became interested, so far as his capital and experience would permit, in the thoroughbred industry. While he has done a great deal of business as a buyer and seller, he has become famous among horsemen as a breeder, trainer and owner of a string of horses whose achievements are known from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. Milam was born at Sheffield, Alabama, July 17, 1872, a son of William A. and Martha (Winfrey) Milam. His father was born at Cartersville, Georgia, and was a cotton planter and dealer in cotton. He died in 1895, at the age of fifty-four. He was a Baptist, a member of the Masonic Order and Knights of Pythias, and a democrat but never a seeker for public office. His wife, Martha Winfrey, was born in Rome, Georgia, and died in 1899, at the age of forty-nine. James C. Milam was the third in a large family of fourteen children, nine of whom grew up and seven of whom are still living.

James C. Milam attended public school at Sheffield, Alabama, also the Miss Mary Bibbs private school at Corinth, Mississippi, and at the age of nineteen established his first real relationship with the thoroughbred industry. He began breeding in 1900. He has handled the product of some of the greatest racing stables in the United States. Mr. Milam was the fortunate purchaser of Extramont, who won the Kentucky Derby a week later, in 1917. Another horse he owned was Merrick, winner of sixty-four races and for the past seven years has been enjoying an honorable retirement on Mr. Milam's farm. Another horse was Komurasaka, winner of the Sea Gull handicap at Brighton Beach in 1898, being the only filly entered in that race. Another of his horses was Red Leaf, winner of many handicaps. Some others whose achievements are well known on the American turf were Loreta M., Commodore, Embroidery, the only horse to win the St. Leger cup and the Louisville cup in the same year, and Loraine, winner of the Oaks at Churchill Downs in 1920. His Star of Danube took some of the valuable stakes at Latonia in 1912. Other horses trained or owned by Mr. Milam were Prince Gal, Bell Clem, Midnight Sun and Dan McKenna.

Mr. Milam has served on the board of directors of the Kentucky Racing Association, is a member of the Kentucky Jockey Club, the Lexington Club, and is owner of one of the most highly equipped and attractive general farms in the Blue Grass region, located 3½ miles from Lexington. He has 300 acres and is an extensive grower of tobacco, corn, hay, cattle, sheep and hogs. Mr. Milam is a democratic voter and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

On October 12, 1904, he married Miss Bell Scott Simpson, who was born in Fayette County, a daughter of James and Bell (Scott) Simpson. Her parents were both born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, and her father in early life was a carriage maker at Nicholasville, was a director in the bank at Nicholasville, and subsequently became a well known farmer in Fayette County. He died October 12, 1913, at the age of seventy-two. Mrs. Milam was one of two children and the only one to reach maturity.

John Robert Hagyard. Among the horsemen, cattle raisers and stockmen generally of the Blue Grass section of Kentucky the name Hagyard signifies the highest degree of skill in veterinary surgery. The first veterinary of that name was brought here on a special mission more than forty years ago, and remained to practice his profession, and for many years was associated with his two sons. One of these sons, John Robert Hagyard, who rather recently retired from the active work of his profession, is now giving all his time to what has long been his chief enthusiasm and hobby, the breeding and raising of fine horses at his farm, the Seldmer Farm, five miles from Lexington on the Russell Cave Pike.

John Robert Hagyard was born in County Peel, Ontario, March 16, 1855. His parents, Edward Thomas and Esther (Horsley) Hagyard, were both born in Yorkshire, England, his father July 24, 1822, and his mother in 1827. They were married after coming to Canada, and of their nine children five are living. The mother died in 1880 and the father in 1902. Edward Thomas Hagyard finished his education in Edinburgh, Scotland, where he attended Professor Dick's Veterinary College. He practiced for several years in Yorkshire, and in 1849 came to County Peel, Ontario, where his reputation became established as a successful veterinarian. He continued his work there until 1875. In that year he was called to Kentucky on an important case by B. B. Groom. Mr. Groom some years previously had paid $8,000 in England for a Shorthorn bull, known as the 8th Duke of Geneva. This valuable animal was stricken with some puzzling malady and its owner had called in the ablest veterinaries of Kentucky, also the well-known Professor Smith from Toronto, Canada, but all failed to restore the health of the bull. It was as a final alternative that Edward T. Hagyard was summoned, and in a reasonable length of time the animal had recovered under his treatment. Thus by one case his reputation as a veterinary became widely known among Kentucky stockmen, and from 1876 he remained in the state, practicing at Winchester until 1878 and after that living at Lexington. For many years he was employed on a regular salary by leading cattle breeders, and every two weeks visited their farms and inspected their cattle. For a number of years he was associated with his sons, E. W. and John R. Hagyard, under the name E. T. Hagyard & Sons, and did not give up the active work of his profession until a short time before his death. While living in Canada he held a chair in the Ontario Veterinary College at Toronto. He was a liberal in English politics and a member of the Episcopal Church.

John Robert Hagyard early made a choice of his father's profession. He attended the public schools of Canada, the high school at Brompton, and graduated from the Ontario Veterinary College with the class of 1875. For a year he practiced at Georgetown, Ontario, and then, in 1876, came to Kentucky with his father and, as already noted, was associated with the elder Hagyard in practice for many years. In 1878 he was also the chief veterinary surgeon for the celebrated Kentucky horseman, the late J. B. Haggin, and after Mr. Haggin's death continued in charge of the health of the Haggin stock until 1916. At the same time he continued a general practice and gave up the heavy demands of his profession only in 1918. Since then he has lived on his farm on the Russell Cave Pike, known as the Seldmer Farm. He has bred some notable horses, many with established records, including Bessie Bonehill, 2:05¾, a world record for mares. Lotts Watts, a trotting mare with a record of 2:06¼; Lula Arion, 2:08¼; Doubling Lodge, 2:09¼; Sledmere, a stallion with a record of 2:10 and winner of thirty-six races; and Sir Tattam, 2:12¼, besides many others.

Mr. Hagyard is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks and in politics is a democrat. On January 10, 1883, he married Miss Ella B. Nichols, who died in 1899. On December 25, 1901, he married Lula D. Potts. Four children were born to their marriage, and the two now living are Mary Potts and Helen Horsley.

Andrew Applegate Baxter, M. D. The medical profession of Meade County has as one of its ablest exponents Dr. Andrew Applegate Baxter of Brandenberg, whose skill and position are unquestioned. He was born near Corydon, Harrison County, Indiana, on the farm of his parents, September 17, 1866, a son of John R. and Jane (Applegate) Baxter, both of whom were natives of Indiana. The name Baxter is of Scotch origin, and its representatives came to Virginia at a very early day from Scotland, and later to Indiana. Many Baxters, who trace back to the same family, reside in Kentucky and Indiana. The Applegates have been represented in Indiana for some generations. John R. Baxter was a farmer of Harrison County, and lived to be seventy years of age. His wife died at the age of sixty-six years. They reared a family of seven sons and two daughters, all of them growing up on the homestead.

Doctor Baxter attended the country schools and then took a business course in the normal school at Valparaiso, Indiana, for which he earned the money by teaching school. He earned money in the same way so as to take a scientific course in the Holbrook Normal College at Lebanon, Ohio, and then took up the study of medicine at the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, and was graduated therefrom in June, 1890, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. On August 1, 1890, he located at Concordia, Meade County, Kentucky, where he remained until February 1, 1891, on that date moving to Paynesville, Kentucky, and there spent three years. For the subsequent twenty-four years he was at Guston, Meade County, and in April, 1918, came to Brandenberg, where he has since remained. He belongs to the County, State and National Medical associations, and is now secretary of the Meade County Board of Health and surgeon of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railroad. During the late war he was war examiner of the soldiers, having volunteered for the service, but was not accepted. He is a Royal Arch Mason, an Odd Fellow, and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and Royal Neighbors. In poltics he is a republican and is very active locally, now being chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, of which he has been a member for the past quarter of a century. He is a member and ruling elder of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1888 Doctor Baxter was married to Miss Ella S. Lopp, of Harrison County, Indiana, and they have two children, namely: Elsie May, who is the wife of Ernest Stith; and Andrew Edwin, who is attending the Brandenberg High School. Doctor Baxter is a man of steadfast character and high principles, and his rise in his profession has been steady and legitimate. All his life he has manifested great interest in the progress of his community where he has been living, and has never shirked any responsibilities which have been placed in his capable hands. Personally he is well-liked, and both as a professional man and citizen holds the full confidence of all who know him.

Frazier Lawson Hamby. The importance of good roads is now generally recognized, and every progressive community has set on foot movements for securing the building and maintenance of highways which will be a credit to them and a source through which they may benefit by being brought into contact with the great centers of industry and commerce. In order that this work may be carried on systematically and according to modern standards there are specifically designated officials who are placed in charge of the movement, and one who has won approval for what he has accomplished as such is Frazier Lawson Hamby, road engineer of Christian County, and one of the leading men of his part of the state, now an honored resident of Hopkinsville, but for a number of years closely identified with the agricultural life of his county, where he still retains large holdings of farm lands.

Frazier Lawson Hamby was born in Christian County, Kentucky, September 20, 1880, a son of L. W. D. Hamby and grandson of Philip Hamby, who was born in North Carolina in 1799. At a very early day he came to the farm where his son was born, in Christian County, being the pioneer of his family into Kentucky. Here he was married to a Miss Croft, a native of North Carolina, and both died in Christian County, he passing away in 1885. The Hambys are of Scotch-Irish descent and came to the American Colonies long before the American Revolution, in which some of them participated, going into the Colonial army from North Carolina, where the family had been established.

The father of Frazier Lawson Hamby, L. W. D. Hamby, was born in Christian County, in 1832, and died in this county in 1902, having been reared, educated and married here, where his entire life was spent. He developed into one of the successful farmers, operating upon a large scale, and for many years was a tobacconist. A republican, he was elected on his party ticket a justice of the peace and held that office for two terms. A Universalist, he was a strong and earnest supporter of the local congregation of that faith, and lived up to its highest ideals just as he did those of Masonry, he being a zealous member of the local lodge of that fraternity.

L. W. D. Hamby was married to Cynthia Renshaw, who was born in November, 1838, in Christian County, on the old home farm of her parents. She survives her husband and is residing on her farm, which is located eight miles north of Hopkinsville. The children born to L. W. D. Hamby and his wife were as follows: Omar, who died in Christian County at the age of twenty-two years; Frank, who went to Sulphur Springs, Texas, when a young man, was married there and became a large cotton farmer, and there he died when forty-six years of age; Harvey, who has been an invalid for the past thirty years; George, who is in the employ of the American Glass Company, lives at Elgin, Illinois; Harrison, who was a farmer of Christian County, died in this county when thirty-six years old; Belle, who married J. M. Cansler, a farm operator, lives at Hopkinsville; Laura, who married T. M. Walker, an employe for the past twenty years of the St. Bernard Mining Company, lives at Earlington, Kentucky; Elizabeth, who married Louis Hamby, a farmer, resides in Christian County; and Frazier L., whose name heads this review.

Frazier Lawson Hamby attended the rural schools of Christian County and the Southern Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky, and was graduated from the teachers' training course in 1900. For the subsequent ten years he was engaged in teaching in the rural districts of Christian County, and then from 1910 to 1914 was engaged as a contractor and builder in Christian County. For the following four years he devoted himself exclusively to farming, although prior to that had been interested to a more or less degree from the time he was twenty-one years old, at which time the control of his father's homestead was turned over to him, and he now owns that property. In January, 1918, he was appointed county road engineer for a term of two years, and was re-appointed for another term in 1920. His offices are in the county building. From 1913 to 1917 Mr. Hamby rendered efficient service as a member of the Christian County Fiscal Court. In November, 1917, he was elected to the Upper House of the State Assembly, but lost out through a technicality, as he had not resigned the office of justice of the peace before the election. He carried both Christian and Hopkins counties, being the only republican to carry the latter for the office of state senator. Mr. Hamby is also a Universalist. He belongs to Larkin Camp No. 12482, M. W. A. Mr. Hamby owns a modern suburban residence just north of the city limits, set in a three-acre lot, in which are beautiful shade trees, and here he maintains a comfortable home.

In February, 1906, he was married at Clarksville, Tennessee, to Miss Vida Walker, a daughter of J. M. and Nancy (Grant) Walker. Mr. Walker is a retired farmer and makes his home with Mr. and Mrs. Hamby, but Mrs. Walker is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hamby became the parents of the following children: Lyman, who was born January 27, 1912; Mary Lee, who was born November 3, 1913; Rolla Evan, who was born January 2, 1918; and Edwin P., who was born November 26, 1919.

Mr. Hamby is one of the thoroughly representative men of his neighborhood, and takes a deep pride in it and everything pertaining to its welfare. Practically all of the mature years of his grandfather's life were spent in Christian County, and he and his father found in it ample opportunity for congenial employment and satisfactory development, so it is but natural that he should feel as though it were the garden spot of the world. A man of strong convictions, he has never been afraid to live up to them, and his sturdy independence, sterling integrity and earnestness of purpose have won for him the confidence and respect of all with whom he is associated, even though all of them may not agree with his opinions.

Jesse Crawford Waller has made a prominent name for himself in Western Kentucky as an educator, and for two years has been superintendent of the city school system of Hopkinsville. He represents an old family of Louisiana, though the Wallers on first coming from England settled in Spottsylvania County, Virginia.

His grandfather, Harris Waller, was born and spent his life as a planter in Tangipahoa Parish, Louisiana, and owned and cultivated a large estate there. He married Olive Watson, who was born in 1806 and died in 1888, having likewise spent her life in Tangipahoa Parish.

It was in that parish and on the old plantation that Jesse Crawford Waller was born December 1, 1878. His father, Jesse Crawford, Sr., was born there in 1834 and died in November, 1878, as a victim of the yellow fever. His death occurred, it will be observed, about a month before his son and namesake was born. He had spent his rather brief career as a planter on the old homestead. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. The maiden name of his wife was Fannie Magee, who was born in Tangipahoa Parish in 1846 and died there in 1886. She was the mother of four children: Homer, who represents the third generation in the ownership and management of the old plantation home in Tangipahoa; Harris, who died in infancy; and a daughter who also died in infancy; and Jesse C., the youngest.

Jesse C. Waller attended public schools in his native parish, also an academy, and has been a successful teacher from the time he was twenty-one years of age. The first three years he taught in the rural schools of his native parish. At intervals of his school work he has taken advanced studies until he holds several degrees. He spent one year in Mississippi College at Clinton, another year at Tulane University, New Orleans, and for four years was a student of Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky. He received his A. B. degree from Georgetown in 1907. After a year of residence he was graduated with the A. B. degree from the University of Chicago in 1908, and in that year was elected superintendent of schools of Georgetown, Kentucky, thus returning to the city where he had spent several of his delightful student years. For nine years he was active head of the Georgetown schools. In the meantime for four successive summers he went East to Columbia University in New York, and in 1914 his advanced studies were rewarded with the Master of Arts degree by Columbia. In August, 1918, Mr. Waller was elected superintendent of schools at Hopkinsville. He is at the head of one of the largest city school systems in the state, having four school buildings, a staff of thirty-nine teachers and with 1,200 scholars enrolled.

Mr. Waller takes a prominent part in the activities of the State Educational Association, is a member of the National Education Association, is a democrat in politics, and is a teacher of the Men's Bible Class in the Baptist Church at Hopkinsville, and for five years was on the board of deacons of the church at Georgetown. He is affiliated with Mt. Vernon Lodge No. 14, A. F. & A. M., at Georgetown. During the war he was a member of various local committees assisting in Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and other campaigns.

Mr. Waller, whose home is on East Ninth Street, married at Georgetown Miss Nora Lee Pullen, daughter of W. E. and Mary Ellen Pullen, residents of Georgetown. Her father is a retired merchant. Mrs. Waller is a graduate of Mrs. Sallie Burgin's School of Music, and is a skilled instrumentalist and prominent in musical circles at Hopkinsville. Mr. and Mrs. Waller have two children: Eleanor, born August 17, 1908; and J. C., Jr., born December 23, 1918.

Simon Wolf. Without force of character no man can hope to achieve eminence, regardless of what path he chooses in life. His aims may be high, his principles excellent and his plans brilliant, but unless he possesses the characteristics of vim, energy and strength to make practical his ventures his efforts will be in vain. Lexington has given to the State of Kentucky some of its most virile men, and numerous branches of industrial industry have been developed by them to large proportions. The dry goods trade is one that has attracted a number of individuals possessing the characteristics noted, and among them one who has won deserved prominence and success is Simon Wolf, senior member of the firm of Wolf, Wile & Company, and a leader in various movements pertaining to the betterment of civic conditions.

Mr. Wolf was born at Hall, Wurtemberg, Germany, March 23, 1865, a son of L. and Jettie (Strauss) Wolf, natives of that country, where the father spent his life as a merchant and died in 1888, at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs. Wolf survived her husband two years and was sixty-six years old at the time of her demise. Of the nine sons and three daughters in the family, six sons and one daughter are living.

The ninth in order of birth of his parents' children, Simon Wolf secured a private and high school education, and at the age of sixteen years, in 1881, came to the United States and located at Owensboro, Kentucky, where his elder brother, Aaron, was engaged in business. Simon served as bookkeeper and clerk for his brother for about seven years, and then became bookkeeper for Wile Brothers, an Owensboro concern. After 1½ years, in June, 1890, he came to Lexington, where he became a partner in the firm of Kaufman, Straus & Company, this being the firm style until 1912, when Mr. Wolf and Dolph Wile, who had entered the same business in 1902, bought the enterprise, the business having since been known as Wolfe, Wile & Company. The business was started at 256 West Main Street, in a small store, where it continued to be located for twelve years, then being moved to 322 West Main Street. On January 11, 1921, the establishment was completely destroyed by fire. Since then temporary offices have been located in the Leader Building. They have closed a long time lease on what is considered the choicest piece of business property in Lexington. The new location will be the Hernando Building, directly adjoining the Phoenix Hotel, of this city. Improvements are now being made and the building, in part, will be ready for occupancy by September, 1921. In the near future the company expects to make considerable building additions, which will give them a store size 61 by 247½ feet, with four floors and a selling basement. When these additions are complete the firm will have a modern and up-to-date department store that will compare favorably with anything in this section of the country. It will be approximately twice the size of their former structure.

Mr. Wolf is widely known as a substantial business man, and his judgment is sound, while his sagacity is of the keenest. While he never sacrifices a safe conservatism to personal ambitions, he has always sought honorable advancement. Few men can speak with more authority upon the dry goods business, and he has proven his ability on more than one occasion to handle the grave problems which arise in the conduct of large enterprises. He is generally recognized as a man of force of character. His business connections are numerous, and he is a director in the First and City National Bank of Lexington and a stockholder in the Lexington Hydraulic and Manufacturing Company. Mr. Wolf has always been interested in civic affairs, and has never hesitated to advocate those measures and principles that he has believed are best for his city and country. Accepting modern ideas, he gives his support to movements along material, intellectual and moral progress, and his charities are many. He is president of the Lexington Federation of Jewish Charities and a member of the board of trustees of Good Samaritan Hospital. Politically he is a democrat, and fraternally is affiliated with Devotion Lodge No. 160, F. & A. M.; Phantom Lodge No. 15, K. P.; Lexington Lodge No. 89, B. P. O. E.; and the Order of B'nai B'rith, holding membership also in the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

Thomas Floyd Smith, whose entire mature career has been devoted to the paper business, wholesale and manufacturing, is president of the Louisville Paper Company, and a man justly prominent in civic and business affairs.

He was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, August 31, 1868, a son of Captain Thomas Floyd and Blanche (Weissinger) Smith. His great-grandfather, Colonel Thomas Floyd Smith, married Emelie Chouteau daughter of August Chouteau, who was one of the conspicuous pioneer citizens of St. Louis, Missouri. The Chouteau home was one of the first established in that city. The grandfather of the Louisville business man was also Colonel Thomas Floyd Smith, who married a relative of Colonel John Floyd, one of the historic characters of early Kentucky. Grandfather Smith was an intimate friend of Jefferson Davis and Zachary Taylor.

Captain Thomas Floyd Smith was born in Missouri in 1835, was reared in that state and in Kentucky, and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the United States Army by Jefferson Davis, then secretary of war. At the outbreak of the war between the states he was commissioned a captain in the Confederate army. He was one of the organizers of the Washington Guards, a famous military company of St. Louis, Missouri. After the war Captain Smith located in Oldham County, Kentucky, where he devoted the rest of his years to farming and planting. He was a lover of fine horses and had some noted stock on his place. He was also an ardent sportsman, and found his recreation in hunting big game. He was a democrat, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Captain Smith died in 1890. His wife, Blanche Weissinger, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, in 1848 and died in 1897. Of their six children two died in infancy, and the four still living are: Amanthis Bullitt Smith; George Weissinger Smith, present mayor of Louisville; Anna, wife of Frank C. Carpenter; and Thomas Floyd, youngest of the family.

Thomas Floyd Smith was educated in the schools of Oldham and Jefferson counties, and the first money he ever earned was picking grapes at fifty cents a day. He became connected with a wholesale paper concern at Louisville at the age of nineteen, and subsequently was one of the organizers of the Louisville Paper Company, of which he has been president and acting head for many years. This is one of the largest wholesale paper concerns in the South, and has branch offices in many southern cities. Mr. Smith served two terms as president of the Central State Paper Dealers Association, and also is a past president of the National Paper Trade Association, which includes in its membership all the large paper manufacturers of the United States.

For many years Mr. Smith has been associated with Louisville's business and civic affairs. He served three terms as president of the Louisville Board of Trade. He was one of the organizers and vice president of the Louisville Industrial Foundation. He was one of the commission appointed by the mayor to raise a million dollars for the building of a Memorial Auditorium and had active charge of the financial campaign for that purpose. He is a trustee of two schools in Jefferson County, the Rogers Clark Ballard School, and the Jacobs (Colored) School. Mr. Smith is a republican voter, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

On April 26, 1898, he married Mary Bruce, a native of Louisville, and daughter of Horatio W. and Elizabeth (Helm) Bruce. Her mother was a daughter of Governor John Helm of Kentucky and granddaughter of Benjamin Hardin, the eminent Kentucky lawyer. Judge H. W. Bruce was chief attorney for the Louisville and Nashville Railway at the time of his death. He was elected by the Provision Legislature of Kentucky to a seat in the Confederate Congress. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have two children: Bruce, a student at Yale University; and Thomas Floyd, the fourth of the name in as many successive generations.

Rev. Robert K. Massie. Occasionally there comes into the world a modest but intensely earnest man who wrests from his every-day surroundings the victory of noble achievements. This has been the fortune of Rev. Robert K. Massie, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, who during the years that he has held this pastorate has won a firmly-established place in the affection and reverence of his parishioners and gained merited recognition as a constructive force in movements of civic importance.

Dean Massie was born at Charlottesville, Virginia, in 1864, a son of Nathaniel Hardin and Eliza Kinloch (Nelson) Massie. His parents, natives of Virginia, are both deceased, his father having passed away in 1880, when fifty-six years of age, and his mother dying in 1887, when sixty-five years old. Nathaniel H. Massie was a graduate in law of the University of Virginia and was one of the prominent members of the bar at Charlottesville, where he was also well and favorably known in banking circles as president of the Charlottesville National Bank. Of the five children, of whom Robert K. is the youngest, two are living.

Robert K. Massie attended private schools in Charlottesville, and after further preparation enrolled as a student at the University of Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1888. He spent the following three years in preparation for the Episcopal ministry at Virginia Theological Seminary, and was a member of the graduating class of 1891, a class noted for the brilliancy of its members. Dean Massie then secured valuable and interesting experience as a missionary to Shanghai, China, but in 1895 was forced to return to the United States, the climate of the Orient not having agreed with Mrs. Massie's health. After two years as rector of Meade Parish, Upperville, Virginia, he was appointed to the chair of Ecclesiastical History, Canon Law and Christian Missions in his theological alma mater, where he remained until his appointment to the pulpit of Christ Church Cathedral of Lexington, being inducted into office February 2, 1913, by Bishop Lewis W. Burton.

Dean Massie, as noted, has been a strong and result-attaining force in various movements pertaining to the elevation of Lexington's moral and civic spirit. His work in connection with his church and with the Parish House, which has become a great institution under his guidance, has been of a nature demanding his attention and energies to a great extent, but he has found the time and the inclination to associate himself with other men of public spirit and enlightened views in work of civic improvement. He has held the presidency of the Lexington Ministers' Union for one term, was chairman and leading spirit of the Vice Commission, which after a year's work succeeded in closing the segregated district of Lexington, and was vice president and a member of the executive committee of the Associated Charities of Lexington and Fayette County from 1914 to 1917. He was one of the charter members of the Community Service Association of Lexington and Fayette County, and is a former president of the Kentucky Conference of Charities and Correction.

Soon after his gradution from the Virginia Theological Seminary Dean Massie was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Ross Milton, of Clark County, Virginia, who, like her husband, belongs to one of the oldest families of Virginia and one which has given the Episcopal Church some of its most distinguished ministers. Two children have been born to this union: Robert K., Jr., M. A., graduate of the University of Virginia, 1916, who has recently established a school for boys at Lexington; and Francis M., M. D., 1919, University of Virginia, who was an interne at St. Luke's Hospital, New York City in 1920 and 1921.

Charles A. Segner. The life of a professional or literary man seldom exhibits any of those striking incidents that seize upon public feeling and fix attention upon himself. His character is generally made up of the aggregate of the qualities and qualifications he may possess, as these may be elicited by the exercise of the duties of his vocation or the particular profession to which he may belong. Charles A. Segner, managing editor of the Louisville Herald, may not form an exception to this general rule, but it is known that since he has attained maturity, his life has been one of laborious professional duty, and the high distinction he has attained as a journalist is evidence enough that these qualities have not been planted on barren soil.

Mr. Segner was born at Lafayette, Indiana, October 17, 1878, a son of Joseph and Isabelle (VanAllen) Segner. He secured his education in the public and high schools of Lafayette and for a short time attended Purdue University, leaving that institution to join the staff of the Lafayette Evening Call, of which paper he was city editor one year. Subsequently he was city editor for one year of the Muncie (Indiana) Star, but returned to Lafayette as managing editor of the Call, a position which he retained for two years. Mr. Segner then went to Indianapolis, where he spent ten years with the Indianapolis Star, at various times holding the positions of state editor, night editor and assistant managing editor, and from Indianapolis came to Louisville in 1913 to become managing editor of the Herald, succeeding W. K. McKay.

Mr. Segner was married August 16, 1903, to Miss Clara E. Weyher, daughter of Dr. R. F. Weyher, professor of German at Purdue University. Mr. Segner is a member of the Masons and of Louisville Lodge No. 8, B. P. O. E. He makes his home in the Charmant Apartments.

Charles Raphel Thompson, a member of an old and well known Kentucky family, was a practical farmer in Fayette County for several years, but his chief business connections have been as a buyer and shipper of mules, and he is one of the prominent men in this line of business in the South.

Mr. Thompson was born on his grandfather's farm in Fayette County, August 20, 1872, a son of Malcolm and Bettie (Royester) Thompson. His parents were both born in Kentucky. His father was born in Lexington, September 21, 1842, was educated in the common schools at Lexington, for a number of years was profitably engaged in agriculture, but for about thirty years was a general merchant at Payne Depot in Scott County, Kentucky. He finally retired and lived at Lexington until his death in April, 1918. He was for many years a deacon in the Baptist Church, a republican in politics, and a man of a distinctive influence in every community where he lived. His wife, Bettie Royester, was born in Boyle County, Kentucky, December 8, 1851, and is still living. She was the mother of four children: William R., Charles R., Clifton L., and Malcolm, Jr., who died in infancy.

Charles R. Thompson spent his boyhood days chiefly in Scott County, where he attended the Bethel School. He was trained to farm work, and at the age of seventeen took the direct responsibility for handling a farm and a stock business in Fayette County. During the next six years his interests were chiefly identified with his farm. Since then he has been buying and shipping mules, and for several years found his principal market at Atlanta and Augusta, Georgia. In 1901 he located his business headquarters at Lexington, and he is associated with the noted Gentry brothers, and in 1903 the firm became Gentry & Thompson. This is an organization well financed and equipped for the buying and handling of mules, and their connections reach out to nearly all sections where mules are raised. As a firm they have been extensive shippers to Cuba and all through the Southwest and eastern states. During the World war this firm bought and sold for the English and American governments a number of thousands of mules for army purposes.

Mr. Thompson has been an interested citizen of Lexington, a worker for its welfare, and for two years was a member of the City Council. He is treasurer of the First Baptist Church and in politics a republican. He has been a director of the Lexington Dry Goods Company since its organization. On June 14, 1908, he married Miss Coralee Nunnelly, a native of Georgetown, Kentucky, and daughter of Hayes and Margaret (Porter) Nunnelly. Her parents were born in Missouri, are still living, and of their four children Mrs. Thompson is the oldest. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have two daughters, Margaret Porter and Mary Elizabeth.

Edward W. Hagyard has given more than thirty years to the practice of veterinary medicine, and in that time has cared for many of America's most famous race horses, and is well known among horsemen and stock raisers generally. In recent years he has given his time to his veterinary hospital in Lexington.

Doctor Hagyard was born in County Peel, Ontario, Canada, March 24, 1863, and his father before him was a distinguished veterinary. His parents, Edward Thomas and Esther (Horsley) Hagyard, were both born in Yorkshire, England, his father July 24, 1822, and his mother in 1827. They were married after coming to Canada, and of their nine children five are living. The mother died in 1880 and the father in 1902.

Edward W. Hagyard was about thirteen years of age when his parents came to Lexington to live. In the meantime he had attended public schools in Ontario, was also educated in the Lexington schools and was sent for his professional preparation to the Ontario Veterinary College of Toronto. He was graduated with the class of 1888, and at once joined his brother, John R., and his father in practice at Lexington under the firm name of E. T. Hagyard & Sons, veterinary surgeons. He remained a member of the firm until 1896, when his skill and reputation secured for him the rather distinctive honor of being appointed chief veterinary surgeon at the celebrated race horse ranch at Hamilton, Montana, owned by the late Marcus Daly. He remained in charge of Mr. Daly's famous string of horses until 1902, when he returned to Lexington, and since then has established and developed what is known as the Hagyard Veterinary Hospital at 226-228 South Short Street. He has equipped this with all the facilities representing the most advanced thoughts and practice of veterinary surgery, and gives to it his personal direction and also has a competent staff of assistants. He is a member of the Kentucky State and American Veterinary Association. He is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks and in politics is a democrat.

On July 22, 1899, Mr. Hagyard married Miss Louise Elliott, who was born at Hamilton, Montana, daughter of Lynde and Mary (Harris) Elliott. Her parents were natives of Illinois and pioneers in Montana. Her father was a ranchman, and lost his life in a noted Indian battle, known as the battle of the Big Hole in Montana in 1877. Mrs. Hagyard, who died in 1900, was the mother of three children, named Charles E., Esther Louise and Ruth V.

James H. Cate, president of the Cate Milling Company of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, has been identified with the business here since 1897, and during the long period of his connection with flour milling has become one of the best known figures in the industry in this part of the state. His career has been one of great industry and worthy accomplishment, and his business, in its growth from a modest beginning to its present large proportions, has reflected his untiring energy and high ideals of business honor.

Mr. Cate was born at Owensboro, Kentucky, June 29, 1864, a son of James and Mary (Phipps) Cate. The family originated in Wales, whence the first American ancestor came during Colonial times and settled in New York, and it was in that state, at Rochester, that James Cate was born in 1835. He was reared there, but in young manhood moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where he put up a woolen mill, subsequently starting the first power loom south of the Ohio River. Later Mr. Cate removed to Hartford, Ohio County, this state, where he was married, and then went to Owensboro and engaged in business as a manufacturer of woolen goods. In 1868 he went to Rumsey, Kentucky, where he conducted his own woolen mill until 1892, in which year he formed a partnership with R. Monarch and built a woolen mill at Owensboro, two years later retiring and disposing of his interests. He has since made his home with his son James H. at Hopkinsville. Mr. Cate is a democrat, a strong churchman of the Methodist Episcopal faith and a zealous Mason. He married Miss Mary Phipps, who was born in 1838, in Ohio County, Kentucky, and died at Rumsey in 1871, and they became the parents of three children: Frances, who died as the wife of the late Dr. L. A. King, a dental practitioner of Henderson, Kentucky; James H.; and Sarah Phipps, the wife of W. M. Armistead, an insurance man of Nashville, Tennessee.

James H. Cate was given his educational training in the public schools of McLean County, Kentucky, and at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, from which institution he was graduated in 1887 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. During his college career he joined the Kappa Sigma Greek letter college fraternity, in which he still retains membership. Following his graduation Mr. Cate engaged in the sawmill and lumber business in McLean County for ten years, and in 1897 came to Hopkinsville and bought a flour mill situated on East Ninth Street, adjoining the present city limits. His elder son, James Cate, was later admitted to partnership and the business was operated as James Cate & Son until the mill was destroyed by fire September 2, 1918, following which an incorporation was effected to succeed the original incorporation of 1907, the articles of corporation were amended, and the business adopted the present style of Cate Milling Company. The present officers of the concern are: James H. Cate, president and general manager; James Cate, treasurer; and George Cate, secretary. The present modern mills have a daily capacity of 100 barrels of flour, 600 bushels of corn meal and ten tons of feed.

Mr. Cate is a democrat, although not an active politician. He has always supported worthy movements, particularly during the World war period, when he subscribed liberally and worked effectively in behalf of the local and national activities, and for six years has been a member of the Hopkinsville Board of Education. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and superintendent of the Sunday School. The comfortable Cate residence occupies one of the finest residential locations of Hopkinsville, at 1010 East Ninth Street.

In 1887, at Nashville, Tennessee, Mr. Cate was united in marriage with Miss Anna Armistead, daughter of G. W. and Annie M. (Harrison) Armistead, the latter of whom resides with her son-in-law, while the former, who was an editor and lecturer, is deceased. Mrs. Cate died in 1896, leaving five children: Annie, residing with her father, the widow of Frank King, Jr., a former cotton buyer in the South; James H., Jr., who enlisted in July, 1018, in the United States army, was sent to Camp Taylor and commissioned a second lieutenant, and was given his honorable discharge in December, 1918, since which time he has been connected with the freight department of the Nashville, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad at Nashville; John M., who enlisted in the United States army in May, 1918, was sent to Camp Taylor and detailed to an artillery corps, and was mustered out of the artillery service in November, 1918, since which time he has followed the profession of law at Nashville; Dr. William R., a practicing physician and surgeon in charge of Ivey Hospital at Sougdo, Korea, a Methodist institution; and George H., who enlisted in the United States Navy, in May, 1918, was placed on the training ship New Orleans, and mustered out of the service in November, 1918, since which time he has been secretary of the Cate Milling Company at Hopkinsville. In 1899, at Nashville, James H. Cate, Sr., married Miss Mary Lucenia Armistead, a younger sister of his first wife, and to this union there have been born the following children: Wirt M., a student at Emery University, Atlanta, Georgia; Mary Lucenia, Elizabeth and Margaret, who are attending Hopkinsville High School; Margaret, Dorothy, Wilbur and Frances, who are attending the graded schools; and Randolph and Martha, at home.

Charles F. McKee, the efficient and popular cashier of the Bank of Hopkinsville, judicial center of Christian County, has gained this important executive position through his own ability and effective service, and is one of the representative business men of the younger generation in his native city. He was born at Hopkinsville on the 17th of August, 1888, and is a son of L. H. and Nannie (Ellis) McKee, the former of whom was born in Christian County, in 1854, and the latter was born in the State of Missouri, in 1856. Charles McKee, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born and reared in Virginia and became one of the pioneer settlers of Christian County, Kentucky, where he improved and developed a valuable farm five miles south of Hopkinsville, and where he and his wife remained until their deaths, when well advanced in years, both having been zealous members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and his political allegiance having been given to the democratic party. Charles McKee died prior to the birth of his grandson, Charles F., of this sketch.

L. H. McKee was reared and educated in his native county and after his marriage he engaged in the grocery business at Hopkinsville, where he continued as one of the representative merchants of the city for twenty years, and where he has lived virtually retired since 1908. He is a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party, has long been known as a loyal and public-spirited citizen and has manifested deep interest in all things pertaining to the well-being of his home city. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. J. E., the eldest of their three children, is engaged in the banking business at Jonesboro, Arkansas; Miss Jean remains at the parental home; and Charles F., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

In the public schools of Hopkinsville Charles F. McKee continued his studies until his graduation in the high school as a member of the class of 1906, and he then assumed the position of collection clerk for the City Bank of Hopkinsville. Six months later he took a similar post with the Bank of Hopkinsville, and his fidelity and effective service led to his promotion to the position of bookkeeper, of which he continued the incumbent until January 1, 1918, when he was chosen cashier of this substantial and important financial institution of Christian County. In this executive office his administration has fully justified his advancement thereto, and his personal popularity in his native city is of unequivocal order—enhanced appreciably by the honor which he conferred upon the community by his service in the World war, as will be more fully detailed in a later paragraph. Mr. McKee accords unfaltering allegiance to the democratic party, is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and, as a bachelor, he remains at the parental home, 940 South Main Street.

Mr. McKee entered the nation's military service on the 15th of June, 1918, and after remaining three months at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, he was transferred to Camp Mills, in the State of New York. With his command he sailed for France on the 27th of September, 1918, and upon his arrival, on the 16th of the following month, he was assigned to the Seventy-eighth Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, stationed at Torcy. He continued in service in France, as a sergeant of his regiment, until he returned with his regiment to the United States, his arrival in his native land having occurred June 6, 1919, and his honorable discharge having been given on the 10th of that month. He then returned to Hopkinsville and resumed his interrupted service as cashier of the bank.

Asa White Nickell, M. D. A specialist in internal medicine, Doctor Nickell by reason of an active professional experience extending over a quarter of a century, by his personal attainments, his contributions as a worker, teacher and writer on medical subjects, is easily one of the foremost physicians in Kentucky today. For the past fifteen years he has enjoyed a large practice and many interesting social and civic connections with the City of Louisville.

He was born at Ezel in Morgan County, Kentucky, August 16, 1872, son of John Smith and Lou Ellen (Maxey) Nickell. His parents were born in the same locality, his father in 1848 and his mother in 1850. His mother died in 1881, and of her three children Doctor Nickell is the oldest. All are living except one. John S. Nickell was a farmer in early life and later became a merchant at Ezel. He served a term as sheriff of Morgan County, and while in office he effected the capture of an escaped prisoner who had taken refuge in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri. For this capture he received a reward offered by Governor Blackburn. He is now living on his farm in Morgan County. He is a leader in the Christian Church at Ezel, is a past master of Ezel Masonic Lodge No. 550, having served as secretary of the Lodge for the past thirty-five years, and in politics is a republican.

Asa White Nickell grew up in Morgan County, attended school there, and first fitted himself for the role of teacher. Altogether he taught seven years in the public schools. Doctor Nickell graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine with the class of 1896. He distinguished himself as a student, receiving the honor award, consisting of gold medals of his class in 1895 for work in anatomy and in 1896 the honors for obstetrics. Doctor Nickell began the practice of medicine at Weston in Lewis County, West Virginia, and remained there attending a large practice in the city and central section of the state some six or seven years. While there he also served as a member of the Congressional Executive Committee for the First Congressional District of West Virginia. Also city and jail physician for that city. Doctor Nickell has always been a close student, and after his graduation he attended the New York Polyclinic and the Chicago Polyclinic.

His home has been at Louisville since June, 1905. For several years Doctor Nickell was associate professor of anatomy and diseases of women at the Kentucky School of Medicine. He has done post graduate work in his profession in Johns Hopkins University of Baltimore. He is a member of the Jefferson County, Kentucky State, Southern Medical and American Medical associations, is a member of the American Congress of Internal Medicine and has been a frequent contributor to medical literature. As a specialist in internal medicine he is frequently engaged for consultation work.

Doctor Nickell is affiliated with Daylight Lodge No. 760, F. and A. M., King Solomon Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., Louisville Lodge No. 8 of the Elks, is a member of the Louisville Board of Trade, Rotary Club, and a number of other fraternal, social and civic organizations. For the past ten years he has been an elder and chairman of the Official Board of the Edenside Christian Church, is one of the trustees of church property, and a member of the Central Committee of all Christian Churches at Louisville, serving that body as treasurer. Incidentally Doctor Nickell has acquired extensive real estate in Louisville.

In May, 1905, he married Mary Louis Flanagan, daughter of Captain James and Laura (Plummer) Flanagan. Her parents were born at Grafton, West Virginia, where her mother is still living and where her father died in 1919, after a long and active career that made him one of the most prominent and beloved men in that city. Mrs. Nickell is the oldest of five children, four of whom are still living. To the marriage of Doctor and Mrs. Nickell were born nine sons and daughters, two of whom died in infancy. The names of the seven living children are Minnie Louise, Dorothy White, Alice, Asa White, Jr., John Harold, Marjorie Lucille and James Newton.

Joe McCarroll, Jr., who is giving very effective service as cashier of the City Bank & Trust Company of Hopkinsville, Christian County, was born in this city on the 18th of April, 1887, and is a representative of an honored old family whose name has been identified with the history of Christian County for more than a century, as is evident when it is recorded that Charles Alexander McCarroll, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born at Hopkinsville in the year 1818, his parents having been early settlers in this favored section of the Blue Grass State. Charles A. McCarroll became one of the substantial agriculturists and influential citizens of his native county, attained to patriarchal age and passed the closing years of his life on his old homestead farm seven miles west of Hopkinsville, where he died in the year 1904. He was a stalwart in the local ranks of the democratic party, served at one time as deputy sheriff of his native county, became a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1847, and continued his affiliation therewith until his death, and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. McCarroll organized a company for service in the Mexican war, but the command was not called to the stage of conflict. As a young man Charles A. McCarroll wedded Miss Ann Ellis, who was born in Sussex County, Virginia, in 1828, her family moving to Kentucky in 1831, and her death here occurred in the year 1893. Dr. John McCarroll, father of Charles A., was born in 1790, and reared in Botetourt County, Virginia, where the family was founded in the Colonial days, and he became one of the early settlers in the vicinity of Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Prior to coming to Christian County he had lived for a time in Lincoln County, this state, and in 1803 removed to Clarksville, Tennessee, where in 1814 he entered the Government military service under Gen. Andrew Jackson, and took part in a vigorous campaign against the Cherokee Indians. He was a man of fine intellectual attainments, was a successful school teacher in earlier years, and eventually he prepared himself for the medical profession, of which he became a pioneer representative in Christian County. Here he continued in active practice as a physician and surgeon for many years and here he died at a venerable age. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Kelly, was born in the Blue Grass section of Kentucky and she likewise was well advanced in years at the time of her death. Dr. John McCarroll was a son of John and Elizabeth (Graeme) McCarroll, the lineage of both tracing back to staunch Scotch origin. The McCarrolls removed from Scotland into the north of Ireland and from the Emerald Isle came the original representatives in America, settlement having first been made by them in Pennsylvania in the early Colonial period of our national history. John McCarroll, born in 1757, went forth as a patriot soldier in the Continental line in the War of the Revolution, in which he served through three campaigns in Pennsylvania. He later established his home in Virginia, from there moved to Lincoln County, Kentucky, in 1803 moved to Clarksville, Tennessee, where he lived twenty years and from there moved to Dover, Tennessee.

Judge Joe McCarroll, father of him whose name initiates this review, was born near Hopkinsville, in the year 1848, and is now one of the venerable and distinguished native sons of Christian County, where he still resides on his farm estate of 225 acres six miles west of Hopkinsville. Judge McCarroll studied law in the Louisville Law School and was admitted to the bar in March, 1873. He engaged in the practice of his profession at Hopkinsville, and has long been one of the representative members of the bar of his native county, of which he is now the dean in matters of years of continuous practice. He has been a leader in the local councils of the democratic party, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Knights of Pythias, and is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also his wife, who passed to the life eternal in the year 1917. Mrs. McCarroll, whose maiden name was Mary T. Holloway, was born near Henderson, this state, and in her gracious personality represented the fine type of womanhood for which the old Blue Grass State ever has been celebrated. Judge and Mrs. McCarroll became the parents of eight children: Ann died at the age of three years and John at the age of twenty-one years; Charles, a mining engineer by profession, resides at Helena, Alabama, where he is associated with the Eureka Coal Company; Joe, Jr., immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Bascom died at the age of three years; Robert holds a position in a bank at Van Nuys, California; Graeme died at the age of six months; and William S. has active charge of his father's old homestead farm.

Joe McCarroll, Jr., acquired his early education in the public schools of Hopkinsville, where he also attended South Kentucky College for one year. In 1905 he became a messenger for the City Bank & Trust Company of Hopkinsville, in which institution he won advancement to the position of bookkeeper and teller, of which he continued the incumbent until 1918, when he was promoted to the office of assistant cashier. In 1921 he was promoted to his present office, that of cashier.

In political allegiance Mr. McCarroll is found aligned in the ranks of the Republican party, and he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the faith of which he was reared. He is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with Oriental Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons. He gave effective service in the furtherance of the various war activities in his native county during the nation's participation in the World war, and was treasurer of the second Red Cross drive in the county. Mr. McCarroll's name is still found enrolled on the roster of eligible and popular young bachelors in his native county.

C. W. Hisgen, who is the leading painter and decorator of Hopkinsville, is a man who combines his perceptions of the beautiful and artistic with his practical knowledge of his trade, with very satisfactory results, and in consequence of his skill has a very large patronage and has had some of the most important contracts in his line in this locality. Mr. Hisgen was born at Hopkinsville, September 25, 1866, a son of C. H. Hisgen and grandson of Charles Hisgen, who was born in Germany in 1827 and died at Albany, New York, in 1910. He was a portrait painter, and coming to the United States in the '70s, located at Albany, where he found appreciation for his art and attained to considerable local reputation.

C. H. Hisgen was born at Leipzig, Germany, in 1844, and died at Hopkinsville in 1917. When he was seventeen years old he came to the United States, and upon landing, enlisted, as did so many of his countrymen at that time, in the Union army and fought during the war between the North and the South, serving as a bugler. After the close of the war he came as far west as Evansville, Indiana, and there he made practical use of the artistic talents he inherited from his father and became a painter and decorator, specializing in frescoing. A good business man, he succeeded, and invested some of his earnings in a steamboat enterprise. About 1864 he moved to Hopkinsville to decorate the new buildings for the State Asylum for the Insane, and continued to follow his trade as a painter and decorator, becoming the leading man in his line. First a democrat, he later became a republican. The Presbyterian Church held his membership, and he was a zealous member of Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. & A. M. C. H. Hisgen married Emma Balsover, of English parentage, who survives him and lives at Hopkinsville. She was born at Evansville, Indiana. Their children were as follows: C. W., who is the eldest; Florence, who married Flavius Turner, an oil operator of Houston, Texas; Victor Hugo, who is a painter and paper hanger and proprietor of Saint Charles Court, the leading apartment house of Hopkinsville, resides in this city; Q. L., who is in partnership with C. W., lives at Hopkinsville; Alberta, who married R. S. Ambrose, a lumber dealer of Hopkinsville; and John, who is a photographer of Valparaiso, Indiana.

C. W. Hisgen first attended the public schools of his native city and then took the regular course at the South Kentucky College, from which he was graduated in 1885. Following this he entered the painting and decorating business, and has built up the leading business of its kind in Christian and surrounding counties. His workshop and offices are at 4½ South Main Street, and he owns his modern residence at 611 North Main Street, where he maintains a comfortable home.

In 1888 Mr. Hisgen was married at Petersburg, Indiana, to Miss Ella Russ, born at Petersburg, a very highly educated lady. Mr. and Mrs. Hisgen have two children, namely: Lolla, who is married and lives at New Orleans, Louisiana, where her husband is an electrical engineer for the telephone company of that city; and Olivia, who is unmarried and lives at home. Mr. Hisgen is a democrat, but has not participated actively in politics. He is a Presbyterian. Fraternally he belongs to Pearl City Camp No. 5, W. O. W., at Hopkinsville.

Joseph Addison Stucky, M. D. Through the versatile gifts and abilities of the family the name Stucky has long been prominent in the field of medicine and surgery in Kentucky, and Lexington is the home of two specialists in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, father and son, the attainments and reputation of the senior Doctor Stucky having given him distinctive prominence among the great body of American specialists in this field.

Joseph Addison Stucky was born at Louisville, September 6, 1857. His great-grandfather, John Stucky, was one of the very earliest settlers of that section of the state. Frederick Stucky, a son of John, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, in 1801. In the same community was born in 1827 Harry Stucky, who in 1846 moved to Louisville, and for a number of years was prominent in the affairs of that city, serving a long term as clerk of the Chancery Court and also treasurer of the Sinking Fund. Harry Stucky married Sallie Kemp Sweeney, of Jeffersontown, Jefferson County. Both of their sons, Joseph A. and Thomas H., became physicians.

Joseph A. Stucky graduated in medicine from the University of Louisville in 1878. He had attended the Louisville High School. For over forty years he has been in practice at Lexington. For nine years he was a general practitioner of medicine, and since then has given his attention and talents exclusively to the eye, ear, nose and throat and has been a recognized authority in that field. His prominence has been recognized by members of the profession in general, and he is a former president of the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology, is a former president of the American Laryngological, Rhinological and Otological Society, former president of the Lexington Medical Society and Fayette County Medical Society, and is president of the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley Medical Society, Southern Medical Association and American Medical Association. He is author of many articles that have been published in medical journals, and for years has been a lecturer on public health and social welfare subjects, a Y. M. C. A. worker and lecturer. He is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, and was a delegate to the International Congress of Surgeons in London in 1912. Doctor Stucky is a Mason and affiliated with other fraternities at Lexington and in various social and civic organizations. During the war he served as consultant on Medical Reserve Corps. He is an independent democrat and prohibitionist, is an active member of the Church of the Disciples, and belongs to the Lexington and Fayette County clubs and the Kiwanis Club.

At Lexington in 1881 Doctor Stucky married Miss Nellie McGarvey, whose father, Rev. Dr. John W. McGarvey, was a pioneer minister of the Church of the Disciples and at one time president of the Bible College of Transylvania. Six children were born to Doctor and Mrs. Stucky, one dying in infancy, the others being: John McG.; William S.; Lillie Estell, who married Harold Williamson; Nellie McGarvey, wife of Arthur Chapman; and Harry Clarke, who married Mary Ellen Evans.

Rev. Isaac Jesse Spencer. The clergy of the Christian Church numbers among its members men of broad education, religious zeal and enlightened views, whose example and teaching exercise an influence for morality that must be counted as constructive factors in advancing the interests of any community. Not alone are these men spiritual guides of their people, but they are also called upon to possess a large measure of the practicality that enables them to assist and teach in the ordinary events of life and to protect the interests of their parishioners. Much, in fact, is demanded of those who choose the unselfish life of the Christian ministry. Not all, as in other walks of existence, are fitted by nature for the same sum of responsibility, and perhaps few have exerted a wider or more beneficial influence than has the Rev. Isaac Jesse Spencer, whose ministerial labors have extended over a period of nearly half a century, and who has been pastor of the Central Christian Church of Lexington for twenty-six years.

Reverend Spencer was born in Belmont County, Ohio, a son of George and Elizabeth (Hogue) Spencer, natives of Ohio, the former of whom, an Ohio farmer, died in 1863, at the age of forty-six years, the latter surviving until 1912 and attaining the remarkable age of ninety-eight years. Isaac J. Spencer is the fifth in order of birth of a family of four sons and two daughters. Two of the sons, Joseph and William, served in the Union army during the Civil war as members of the Ninety-eighth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and both died of sickness contracted in the army camps. George Spencer, the father, was a Quaker, but, while a man of firm religious faith, was far from the popular conception of men of that meek and saintly creed. He was a great lover of fine horses, some of which were bred by him on his farm, was an expert rifle shot, and, having a strong affection for the chase, kept the best fox hounds in the county. Originally a whig in politics, he later adopted the principles of the democratic party.

Isaac Jesse Spencer was given good educational advantages, first attending the local public schools and later Hillsdale (Michigan) and Bethany (West Virginia) colleges. He taught country schools two sessions before he entered Bethany College. He began his ministerial labors when still a youth, in April, 1872, at Bellaire, Ohio, although he did not graduate from Bethany College until three years later. His college career was a brilliant one, prophesying his subsequent distinguished career, and he was valedictorian of his class. During this time he continued as pastor of the Christian Church at Bellaire, Ohio, where he built up and developed a strong congregation, and in later years returned to that city three times to hold Gospel meetings. In the autumn of 1877 he accepted a call to the First Christian Church of Baltimore, Maryland, where he spent two years, and, having impaired his health, he went farther south, to Augusta, Georgia, later to Clarksville, Tennessee, and still later to Richmond, Virginia. During his service at Baltimore he was associated with the famous evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, for four months, and this association had a great influence upon his subsequent career and work, particularly in his evangelistic services and in the great value he came to place upon the Scriptures.

In 1882 Doctor Spencer answered a call to become editor of the Missionary Weekly, published at Gordonsville and later at Richmond, Virginia, a capacity in which he remained ten years, in the meantime preaching for country churches and conducting evangelistic meetings in various cities. In 1892 he accepted the pastorate of the First Christian Church of Winchester, Kentucky, with health restored, where he remained two years, going then to the Broadway Christian Church, Louisville. In January, 1895, he was called to the Central Christian Church of Lexington, where he is now serving his twenty-seventh year as its minister, with a congregation of approximately 1,700 people and with church buildings, including a fine educational plant, unsurpassed for beauty and convenience. He occupies an established position in the affection and reverence of his people, who not only look upon him as their spiritual guide, but as their instructor, advisor and friend. He is assisted by Rev. H. L. Pickerill, who is director of the church school and of the young people's organizations.

During the entire period of his ministry Doctor Spencer has made a strong feature of evangelistic work, and has held over 100 meetings of this character in Kentucky, Ohio, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Texas, California, Mississippi, Tennessee and Missouri. He has also found the time and inclination to take an active, effective and constructive part in local public affairs, and has exerted a wide and lasting influence through the labors of his pen, his virile and interesting contributions to the religious press and the local newspapers finding an attentive and receptive audience. He has attended and spoken many times at national conferences of the Christian Church in various cities, and has often been in demand at national interdenominational gatherings. He has been honored by either election or appointment to many positions of trust and responsibility, local and national, being a curator of Transylvania University and Hamilton College; a director of the Good Samaritan Hospital; a member of the Board of Trustees of the National Board of Ministers' Relief, with headquarters at Indianapolis, Indiana; a member of the board of the Christian Board of Publication, with headquarters at St. Louis, Missouri; and a member of the Board of Managers of the United Christian Missionary Society, with headquarters in the same city. For fifteen years he served as a member of the Executive Committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and for twenty years was superintendent of the Sunday School of his own church.

Doctor Spencer was married September 19, 1878, to Miss Louise Pendleton, who was born in Louisa County, Virginia, daughter of Dr. Philip B. Pendleton, a physician, farmer and merchant, and a member of one of the old and prominent families of the Old Dominion State. She was a niece of Dr. W. K. Pendleton, president of Bethany College. Mrs. Spencer has been an active and effective factor in church life and work. In 1908 she established the Workers' Monday Bible Class at the Central Christian Church, and for several years has held the Bethel Bible Class on Friday afternoons. Hundreds of mature and younger women have thus been taught and influenced by her. These classes are largely attended by women of all denominations, and the effect of their influence is something that, while it cannot be measured, can be felt in various ways in the betterment of civic, social and moral conditions. In 1895 Mrs. Spencer established what was known as a Missionary Bible Class for young men and women, and out of this class there have come numerous ministers and missionaries, who continue to express their appreciation of her valuable services as their instructor.

Reverend and Mrs. Spencer have three daughters and one son: Jessie Pendleton, secretary of the Hanover Avenue Christian Church, and superintendent of the Elementary Department of the school of that church at Richmond, Virginia, who is a writer of talent, doing special work in the field of the proper training of children; Howard Gale, a graduate of Richmond Law College and Transylvania Bible College; Evelyn Holladay, a graduate nurse of the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, who saw active service during the World war in France and later was stationed at Coblenz, on the Rhine, Germany; and Julia Hogue, the wife of William B. Ardery, a lawyer and farmer of Bourbon County, Kentucky, with three sons, William S., Winston B., and Philip P. Under the preaching and teaching of Doctor and Mrs. Spencer thousands have been brought into the kingdom of Christ. They both regard the Bible, and their constant study of its teaching, as the chief secret of whatever success has attended their united ministry.

More than a thousand couples have been joined in the marriage covenant by Doctor Spencer in his residence next door to the church to which he ministers.

JOHN STITES, since 1913 has been president of the Louisville Trust Company and has other official relations with some of the leading financial and business concerns of the state, gained his early prominence as a practicing lawyer, and comes of a prominent family of Kentucky lawyers. The name Stites has had a dignified place in the Kentucky bar for more than a century.

The first records of the Stites family go back to Holland, but for several generations they lived in England. Dr. John Stites was a follower of Oliver Cromwell, and with the restoration he left England and in 1658 landed at Plymouth, Massachusetts. The American branch of the family is therefore nearly three centuries old. John Stites' great-grandfather was a soldier of the American Revolution and was a physician and surgeon by profession. The grandfather, Abraham Stites, was born at Elizabeth, New Jersey, October 8, 1782, became a lawyer, and his license to practice was signed by Governor DeWitt Clinton and Chancellor James Kent of New York. He practiced for several years in New York City, but early in the nineteenth century came to Kentucky and earned a high place in the early bar of the state. The wife of Abraham Stites was Ann Johnson.

Their son, John Stites, father of the Louisville banker, was born in Georgetown, Kentucky, January 16, 1812, and became a highly accomplished lawyer and practiced for many years at Hopkinsville. He died July 10, 1896, at the age of eighty-four. He married Elizabeth Hunt, who was of English lineage, though her ancestors lived in Ireland before coming to the United States.

John Stites of Louisville was born at Hopkinsville in Christian County, October 9, 1850, and with the example of his father and grandfather before him had no difficulty in making a choice of a profession. He attended school in Hopkinsville, studied law at the University of Louisville, graduating in 1874, and for twelve years was busied with the affairs of a general practice in that city.

August 1, 1887, he became connected with the Fidelity Trust Company as vice president, and later served as president and chairman of the board until January 7, 1911. At the latter date he became vice president, and in May, 1913, became president of the Louisville Trust Company, and in addition to the heavy responsibilities devolving upon him as head of this institution he has also served in recent years as president of the Eastern Park Land Company and the LaGrange Land Company, Ad Interim president of the Kentucky and Louisville Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and a director of the Louisville Railway Company, the Louisville Interurban Railway Company, the National Bank of Kentucky, Broadway Investment Company, Proctor Coal Company, and the Bourbon Stock Yards Company.

Mr. Stites is one of the prominent laymen of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. He is treasurer of the executive committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, is director and treasurer of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky, is director of the Central University of Kentucky, and from 1908 to 1911 served as president of the International Sunday School Association. He is a sound money democrat, a member of the Civic League, and belongs to the Pendennis and Conversation clubs of Louisville. He is a trustee of the Louisville Free Public Library, was a member of the Board of Public Safety under Mayor Brigham, and for a number of years was a member of the School Board.

On October 4, 1877, he married Mildred Ann Chenoweth, of Louisville, a daughter of Dr. Henry Chenoweth. To their marriage were born nine children; seven of whom are living. The oldest, Helen C., is the wife of Dr. John G. Gill, and they live in the Panama Canal Zone. Their three children are Mildred A., John G., Jr., and Susan B. Gill. Mildred B. Stites is the wife of Joseph Gant, of Kansas City, Missouri, and is the mother of two children, named Elizabeth Lee and John S. John H. Stites, connected with the Louisville and Nashville Railway, married Louise Patterson, and is the father of Sarah Parkhill and Louise P. The fourth child, Susan B., died at the age of eighteen, while the fifth, Harry B., died at the age of twenty-eight. Elizabeth H. is the wife of William M. Hannah, Louisville manager for the interests of the General Electric Company, and they have a daughter, Frances. Francis B. Stites is in the milling supply business at Atlanta, Georgia. Ann Lenox is the wife of Dr. Charles Karraker, of Louisville, and their children are Charles W., Jr., and Ann C. The youngest of the family, James W., is a student in the University of Virginia.

JOHN WILLIAMSON PRICE. Almost any individual can earn money, many save it, but those who can invest it wisely and conserve the interests of the community developing therefrom are considerably in the minority. Yet it requires considerably more ability to conduct large enterprises, upholding certain standards, safeguarding investments and protecting those dependent upon the operations of such concerns than it does to merely acquire money without any outside responsibility. In these days of heavy competition and the heavy concentration of capital, there is a demand for wise financiers that far exceeds the supply. One of these sound, reliable business men of Louisville, who has proven himself capable of every demand made upon his energies and abilities, is John Williamson Price, first vice president of the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Price was born October 4, 1854, at Lebanon, Tennessee, a son of John Williamson and Parthenia (Donoho) Price. John W. Price, the elder, was born in 1820, near Danville, Virginia, and for many years was a prominent merchant and planter at Lebanon, where he was held in the highest esteem by his associates. In his death, which occurred April 22, 1874, when he was fifty-four years of age, his city lost one of its honorable, upright and public-spirited citizens. He was a democrat in political affairs, but never cared for public office. His religious faith was that of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Price married Miss Parthenia Donoho, who was born near Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and died at Lebanon in 1882, at the age of sixty years. Of the fourteen children in the family, six sons and six daughters grew to maturity.

The seventh in order of birth of his parents' children, John Williamson Price, the younger, secured his education in the private school at Lebanon, Tennessee, and his introduction to business methods and affairs came from his experience as a clerk in the hardware store of his father. When he had about reached his majority his father died, and the young man assumed ownership of the store, which he conducted with marked success until 1881. In that year Mr. Price came to Louisville and purchased an interest in the hardware business of W. B. Belknap Company, then a comparatively small but very ambitious wholesale concern. This has developed into the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company, Inc., of which Mr. Price is at this time first vice president, his associate officials being William Heyburn, president; Harry S. Perkins, second vice president; Richard I. James, third vice president; Joseph H. Scales, treasurer; Charles W. Allen, secretary and general manager; Frank Cassell, assistant secretary; Wiley B. Bryan, assistant treasurer; D. E. Cross, comptroller; and Arthur D. Allen, W. C. Gibson and Luther R. Stein, directors. This business was founded in 1840 and incorporated in 1880, and now maintains eleven warehouses, including harness factory, pipe, bolt and forge shop, and other buildings, covering a floor space of some twenty-four acres. The office of the concern is at No. 127 West Washington Street.

Mr. Price is very heavily interested in coal lands and has large holdings in the mines of the Nelson Creek Coal Company in western Kentucky. He is a director in the Louisville Trust Company. Politically he maintains an independent stand, and has never cared for nor sought public office, while his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church and he is a deacon in the Second Presbyterian congregation. He holds membership in the Board of Trade and belongs to the Louisville, City and Pendennis clubs.

On December 4, 1878, Mr. Price was united in marriage with Miss Violet Baird, who was born at Henderson, Kentucky, daughter of William D. and Catherine (Ready) Baird, both natives of Tennessee and both deceased. Mrs. Price is the second of three children born to her parents. To Mr. and Mrs. Price there have been born two sons and one daughter: Katherine, the wife of Henry B. Spencer, of Washington, D. C., president of the United Fruit Express Company and former vice president of the Southern Railway Company, who has three children, Violet, Louise and Samuel; John Williamson, Jr., a graduate of the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, and now the leading surgeon of Louisville, who married Louise Bruce, who died leaving one son, Helm Bruce, after which Doctor Price married Barbara T. Atwood, daughter of L. R. Atwood, and has a daughter, Caroline; and Charles B., a graduate of Yale University, and now buyer for the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Company, of Louisville, who married Florence Haldeman, daughter of Bruce Haldeman, for many years publisher and owner of the Courier Journal and Times newspaper. They have two children, Ann and Charles B. Price, Jr.

Eugene R. Attkisson, a prominent member of the Louisville Bar, is a lawyer of fine attainments, with a large practice, and is also a man of broad culture and of the highest social standing.

Mr. Attkisson was born in Madison County, Tennessee, October 31, 1873, son of John Rufus and Elizabeth M. (Lanier) Attkisson. His grandparents came to Tennessee from Virginia. In the paternal line his English and Scotch ancestry included a number of ministers and lawyers. Through his mother he is of French and Irish stock, and that branch of the family included several physicians and individuals of literary and artistic taste. In his ancestry might be found soldiers in the Revolutionary, Mexican and Civil wars.

Concerning his father, who was a prominent physician and planter, the following is copied from the Conferedate Veteran of Nashville: "Dr. J. R. Attkisson answered the last roll call at his home in Lavinia, Tennessee, on December 29, 1905. He was born in Carroll County, January 8, 1845, and enlisted as a Confederate soldier in Company B, Fifty-fifth Tennessee Infantry, in July, 1861. His first service was at Columbus, Kentucky, and he was in the fort on the bluff during the battle of Belmont, Missouri. When Columbus was evacuated he went with his regiment to Island No. 10, and at the surrender of that place they were sent to a northern prison (Madison Wisconsin). After several months he was exchanged and was in all the fighting around Vicksburg, Port Hudson and Jackson, Mississippi. His regiment was made a part of the Army of the Tennessee at Dalton, Georgia, and until the 28th of July, 1864, he was in that memorable campaign of skirmishing and fighting in front of Atlanta, where he received a wound which rendered him unfit for field service. He was placed on hospital service and remained in that until the close of the war. He then returned home, studied medicine, and was graduated from the Nashville Medical School in the spring of 1867. From the date of graduation he practiced his profession in his native town and surrounding country until his death, and was considered one of the best posted physicians of the state.

"Doctor Attkisson was married to Miss Bettie Lanier in 1867, and his wife, two sons and three daughters are left. He was a charter member of Preston Smith Camp U. C. V. of Lavinia, of which he was a commander from its organization. He was also a prominent Mason and a consistent member of the church, leaving to his family a heritage of good deeds."

Eugene R. Attkisson was reared at the old home at Lavinia, Tennessee, and acquired a classical and professional education by contact with several leading colleges and universities. He attended Dixon Normal College, Vanderbilt University, and the University of Tennessee, from which he received his Master of Arts degree in 1898. Mr. Attkisson holds his law degree from the University of Louisville, graduating in 1901, since which year he has been in active practice. In the meantime for seven years he was an instructor in Latin, Greek, German and French in various schools and colleges. During his professional career he also acted as professor of Kentucky Civil Code in the post-graduate course of the Jefferson School of Law.

Mr. Attkisson has offices on the thirteenth floor of the Lincoln Bank Building. Besides his law practice he is a director in the Henry Vogt Machine Company and in several mercantile corporations. He is a member of the Louisville, Kentucky State and American Bar Associations, a member of the Board of Trade and Kappa Sigma fraternity, and president of the Louisville Alumni Association. He is affiliated with Lewis Lodge of Masons, King Solomon's Chapter, R. A. M., Louisville Council, R. & S. M., the Order of Rameses, DeMolay Commandery, K. T., the 32d degree of Scottish Rite and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine and St. Barnabas Conclave, Knights of Constantine. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Knights and Ladies of Security, and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Filson, Pendennis and Louisville Country clubs, is a Methodist, and in politics a democrat.

Mr. Attkisson and family reside at 1445 Third Avenue, Louisville. In 1901 he married Grace C. Dorney, daughter of William M. and Fannie Dorney, of Baltimore, Maryland. Their two children are William Rufus and Frances Lanier Attkisson.

Benjamin F. McClaid. Any man who can establish and build up a flourishing business in any line is a benefactor to his community, in that he has added to its prosperity and commercial and industrial importance, and proves that he is possessed of more than ordinary attributes. Benjamin F. McClaid, senior member of the firm of McClaid & Armstrong, owners of the largest monumental works between Louisville and Paducah, Kentucky, is one of the substantial and successful men of Hopkinsville.

Mr. McClaid was born at Kenton, Ohio, October 21, 1869, a son of Elias McClaid, who was born in Scotland in 1828, and died at Kenton, Ohio, in 1900. He was brought to the United States when a boy by his parents, who located in Pennsylvania, and there he was reared, but went to Kenton, Ohio, after he had reached his majority, and there he was married and spent the remainder of his life, directing all of his efforts in the direction of farming. He was a democrat in his political faith. The Methodist Episcopal Church held his membership, and he was a strong supporter of the local congregation. Elias McClaid married Nancy Draper, who was born near Kenton in Hardin County, Ohio, in 1839. She died near Kenton in 1874. Their children were as follows: Anna, who died at the age of two years; Benjamin F., who was second in order of birth; William F., who is a cabinet maker of Toledo, Ohio; and Roy, who is a farmer and resides at Paris, Ohio.

Benjamin F. McClaid attended the rural schools of Hardin County until he was fifteen years old, at which time he started to work, and since then has been self-supporting. He learned the carpenter trade in Hardin County, and worked at it as an apprentice for three years. For five terms he taught school in this same county, having improved himself by study, and then, in 1883, began working as a millwright, traveling all over the United States and for ten years visited every state in the Union. He then became a contractor and builder, and as such came to Kentucky, and from 1887 until 1897, when he came to Hopkinsville, he was at Elkton. After coming to Hopkinsville he was foreman for the Forbes Manufacturing Company for six years, and then for ten years was city engineer. In 1912 he and E. H. Armstrong formed their present firm, with offices and yards at 509 North Main Street, which they own, and here they are carrying on the leading monumental business in this part of the state. Mr. McClaid is a democrat, and was clerk of Buck Township while a resident of Hardin County, but aside from that has not held public office. He is a member of the Baptist Church. A Mason, he belongs to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, A. F. and A. M. He owns his modern residence at 505 North Main Street, where he maintains a comfortable home, and also a dwelling on First Street. During the late war Mr. McClaid was a zealous participant in the local activities and subscribed to the limit for all of the drives and to the different bond issues.

In 1887 he was married at Elkton, Kentucky, to Miss Ella B. Stinnett, a daughter of William and Sarah (Foqurean) Stinnett, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Stinnett was a farmer, operating in the vicinity of Elkton. Mr. and Mrs. McClaid have no children.

William Thomas Woolfolk, head of the Woolfolk Coffee Company, Incorporated, of Lexington, is a business man of long and active experience in various Kentucky localities, and represents the old and prominent Woolfolk family of Garrard County, where his people were influential in molding and shaping the business and political affairs for a long period of years.

Mr. Woolfolk was born in Garrard County, August 11, 1865, son of Thomas Alexander and Mary Elizabeth (Tudor) Woolfolk. His mother is a native of Madison County and is still living, and of four children two survive, William T. being the oldest.

Thomas Alexander Woolfolk was born in Cynthiana, Kentucky, September 1, 1814, and was two years of age when his mother died, after which he was reared by his grandparents in Garrard County. His grandfather, Mr. Noel, had a negro boy, a slave, and the two being about of the same age became playmates and very fond of each other. Thomas A. Woolfolk acquired his lasting aversion to the institution of slavery because he had to witness the whipping of this slave boy. Consequently though of an old southern family and one imbued with the traditions of slaveholding, he came to manhood in every sense an abolitionist and in 1860 he and three other men in Garrard County cast their votes for Abraham Lincoln They were soon informed that they would be punished by the Night Riders, and although ready for such a visitation he never had to defend himself. His influence steadily extended until in 1864 President Lincoln carried Garrard County, and that county has been steadily republican ever since and is the only county in Kentucky of which that can be said. In different elections a number of the precincts have gone democratic, but the precinct containing the old home of Thomas A. Woolfolk has always cast enough republican votes to overcome the majority in other parts of the county. Thomas A. Woolfolk was a man of exceptional character, as these incidents prove, and qualified himself for public leadership. At the age of twenty-one he was given a horse and saddle by his grandfather. He sold these possessions to pay for his further education. He acquired most of his training by study at home by candle light at night. He also taught school, and as a man of superior education was often employed to write letters for the neighbors and make out deeds for the farms when sold. His chief occupation was farming, and he lived on one farm in Garrard County for fifty years. He was an active member of the Christian Church, and before he became affiliated with the republican party was a whig.

William Thomas Woolfolk spent his early life on his father's farm in Garrard County, attended public school there, the Elliott Institute at Kirksville in Madison County, and left the farm at eighteen to become a teacher. He taught school three years, clerked in a grocery store at Lancaster, and in 1886 entered the general merchandise business for himself at Bryantsville. He was there about two years, then moved to Paint Lick and continued general merchandising until 1892, when he sold out and went to Winchester, where he was a furniture dealer and undertaker. Disposing of his interests at Winchester on February 1, 1894, he moved to Lexington, where he has been actively identified with the commercial affairs for over a quarter of a century. For about two years he was a retail grocer, and then entered the wholesale grocery business associated with E. L. Martin under the firm name of Martin & Woolfolk. Subsequently selling his interests to Mr. Martin, he founded and carried on the Woolfolk Grocery Company, also wholesale, but eventually preferred to do business along more special lines and organized the Woolfolk Coffee Company, Incorporated, which maintains a plant and does an extensive business in the handling of coffees, and the roasting and preparation of a number of well known and popular grades of coffee. To this business Mr. Woolfolk directs his active attention.

He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, and fraternally is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T., Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family are active in the Central Christian Church, and in politics he is a republican, like his father.

May 2, 1888, Mr. Woolfolk married Miss Mary Hogan, who was born at Bryantsville, Kentucky, a daughter of William J. and Margaret (Baughman) Hogan. Her parents were natives of Kentucky and her father died at the age of seventy-five. Her mother is still living, and of three children Mrs. Woolfolk is the second and one other is living. Her father was a well known farmer in Garrard County, and was a captain in the Union army during the Civil war. However, after the war he voted as a democrat, and was a member of the Methodist Church.

Rev. Edward Garnett Batson Mann has given thirty-five years of consecutive service to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Kentucky. He has been pastor, presiding elder, evangelist, a prohibition leader, has participated in many conventions of his church in this country and abroad and has manifested an apparently inexhaustible energy which has enabled him to sustain his power and effectiveness of service through increasing responsibilities every year.

Rev. Mr. Mann is a son of Rev. Milton Mann, one of the great Methodist ministers of Kentucky in his day. Rev. Milton Mann was born in Kentucky, November 28, 1828, and died in 1903. The mother of Rev. E. G. B. Mann was Jennie Ricketts, who was born in 1843 and died in 1866.

Edward Garnett Batson Mann was born at Oddville in Harrison County, October 3, 1863, was educated in the public schools of Nicholas County, in the high school at Carlisle, attended the Carlisle Academy three years, and under Colonel Charles May took special training for three years. He attended Kentucky Wesleyan College during 1879-80. This college was then at Millersburg, and its seat is now Winchester. He also graduated at Smith's Business College at Lexington. In 1909 was given the degree Doctor of Divinity. Rev. Mr. Mann joined the Kentucky Conference at the session of September, 1885, and his first charge was the Irvine Circuit in Estill County. His successive posts of duty as pastor or presiding elder have been: Pastor at Irvine, 1886-88; Vanceburg, 1888-89; Petersburg, 1889-90; Walton, 1890-91; Middlesboro, 1891-92; Newport, 1892-96; Paris, 1896-1900; Nicholasville, 1900-02. He served his first term as presiding elder of the Maysville district in 1902-03, was then presiding elder of the Lexington district from 1903 to 1907, and from 1907 to 1911 was pastor of the First Church of Lexington. He then served again as presiding elder of the Maysville district from 1911 to 1913. During his four years with the First Church at Lexington the beautiful stone church used by the congregation was erected.

Rev. Mr. Mann was a delegate to the Interchurch Conference on Federation at New York in 1908, was a member of the Ecumenical Methodist Conference at Toronto, Canada, in 1911; and was four times elected a delegate to the General Conference, which meets quadrennially and legislates for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was chosen a trustee of Kentucky Wesleyan College in 1899, and for many years served that body as president. During 1913-14 he served as president of the Southern Methodist Press Association.

Mr. Mann in May, 1909, became editor of the Central Methodist Advocate, the official paper of the Louisville, Kentucky and Western Virginia Conferences. He was owner of the paper for a time, and besides editing it for eight years he, at the same time, engaged in his work as pastor or presiding elder. Each year in addition he held ten evangelistic meetings, making a total of eighty such meetings during the eight years. These meetings were held in places as different as North Dakota and Michigan, and one as far south as Tampa, Florida. Those were strenuous years, requiring travel of between seven and ten thousand miles annually, and the preaching of between three hundred and fifty and four hundred sermons. Only a steadfast purpose, an abounding vitality and love of work could sustain a man through such tremendous exertions.

Rev. Mr. Mann has always been active in civic and social reform movements, particularly in behalf of prohibition. He was the only minister in Kentucky who served as a member of the Democratic Forward League, an organization devoted to prohibition, and performing notably effective service in promoting the state prohibition amendment and the national prohibition enactment. Rev. Mr. Mann married Catherine Friend, of Irvine, Kentucky, November 26, 1887. She died June 10, 1895. On July 12, 1901, he married her only sister, Ida May Friend.

John William Gaines. In due proportion as the standards of living have risen so have those relating to the requirements for educators, and today this country leads the world with reference to the erudition and careful training of those who have been placed at the head of its colleges and universities, as well as those composing the faculties of these same institutions. It is now such a generally admitted fact that the future of the student is determined by his training and the influence exerted upon him by his educators that much care is exercised in the selection of those to whom this training is to be entrusted. Mere educational prowess and degrees are not deemed sufficient by the careful men composing the boards of these institutions. They insist upon the highest order of personal character, dependability, public service, and the power to win confidence and inspire regard. Therefore, when a man is picked out from his fellows and offered the presidency of an old and long-established educational institution in a neighborhood noted for its learning and the high character of its people, an honor has been conferred upon him and the stamp of approval has been placed upon his former work. That all of this is true of John William Gaines, president of Bethel Women's College of Hopkinsville, no one who knows him or has the privilege of examining into his methods will deny, and his admirers are still more enthusiastic, and all of them are convinced that under his wise and experienced supervision this favorite college of Kentucky is entering upon an era of remarkable development and progress.

John William Gaines was born in Anderson County, South Carolina, June 1, 1870, a son of John A. Gaines and grandson of Milton Gaines, a native of Virginia, where the Gaines had settled upon coming to America from Wales during the Colonial epoch of this country. Milton Gaines was a civil engineer, and brought the family into South Carolina, founding a home in Anderson County, where he died.

John A. Gaines was born in Anderson County, in January, 1833, and died in that county in November, 1916, having spent his entire life there, and devoting himself to merchandising, in which line of endeavor he not only achieved a fair measure of success, but he also won prominence as a man of high character and public spirit. As a democrat he not only voted his party ticket, but gave careful consideration to the principles supported by it, just as he did to the Baptist Church, of which he was a consistent member. He was a zealous Mason and lived up to the highest conception of the ideals of that fraternity. With the outbreak of war between the two sections of the country he cast his lot with the south, and fought bravely and honorably for the "Lost Cause" throughout the period of the war. John A. Gaines was married to Susan Jane Cox, who was also born in Anderson County, South Carolina, in February, 1843, and she survives her husband and still lives in her native county. Their children were as follows: J. T., who is a farmer and merchant, and lives at Marietta, Georgia; Dora, who died at the age of twenty years; John William, whose name heads this review; Victoria, who is the widow of L. S. Dobbins, a farmer, and resides in Anderson County, South Carolina; Janie, who is unmarried, lives with her mother; Stonewall Jackson, who died at the age of seven years; and Lee, who is a farmer and business man of Anderson County.

John William Gaines first attended the rural schools of his native county, and then became a student of Furman University, Greenville, South Carolina, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the degrees of Bachelor of Science and Master of Modern Philosophy. During the subsequent year he took post-graduate work, specializing on mathematics, in the University of Virginia at Charlottsville, Virginia, and for another year he attended the University of Chicago at Chicago, Illinois, continuing his special work in mathematics.

In the meanwhile Mr. Gaines had entered upon his chosen profession, teaching during 1888 in the rural schools of Anderson County. He was then made principal of the Williamston High School at Williamston, South Carolina, and held that position for a year. His next position was that of principal of the public schools of Westminster, South Carolina, and he remained there for three years, leaving there to become principal of the Bamburg public schools at Bamburg, South Carolina. Closing two years of usefulness in that community he went to Welsh Neck Academy at Hartsville, and for nine years remained its principal, during that period accomplishing some very effective work and leaving his impress upon the institution. He was then offered and accepted the position of superintendent of the city schools of Newnan, Georgia, and held it a year, when, in 1907, he was made president of Cox College, College Park, Georgia, and conducted its affairs for three fruitful years, leaving it to serve as dean of Shorter College at Rome, Georgia, where he remained until 1918.

With the entry of this country into the great war Mr. Gaines felt that, although he was beyond the draft age, his duty called him into the service, and he joined the Young Men's Christian Association in March, 1918, and going to New York City was placed in charge of training "Y" secretaries for overseas duty. On January 1, 1919, he went to Paris, France, where he continued his work, which was at all times arduous, for every secretary connected with this organization passed under his instruction. In the early summer of 1919 he went to Italy, where he continued the same line of work, not returning to the United States until in August, 1919. As soon as he was discharged he came to Hopkinsville to accept the presidency of Bethel Women's College, which had been tendered him by the Board of Trustees, who were anxious to secure the services of a man of his capabilities and distinction.

In occupying this chair President Gaines may feel certain that his life of sincere endeavor is meeting with the reward his efforts deserve, for this is one of the institutions of the highest type, and the outcome of years of cooperation between the Baptists of Hopkinsville, Bethel Asscciation and the various eminent men and women connected with it since the initial movement in 1853. Associated with President Gaines are Miss M. E. Lindsay, A. B., dean; Mrs. B. F. Eager, A. B., principal, and a number of earnest educators in general and special lines, all of whom have the welfare of "Bethel" before them as their main object in life.

President Gaines was reared a democrat, and when he came to man's estate found that his convictions were in accordance with his father's teachings. From boyhood he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and he has served as a deacon. He belongs to the college fraternity Chi Psi, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. His place of residence is at Bethel College on Fifteenth Street.

In 1892 President Gaines was united in marriage at Westminster, South Carolina, to Miss Cora Matthewson, who was born at Walhalla, South Carolina, a most accomplished and cultured lady, a graduate of Greenville College for Women, from which she received her degree of Bachelor of Arts. Her father, R. A. Matthewson, was a merchant of Westminster, South Carolina, but he is now deceased, and his wife has also passed away. President and Mrs. Gaines have three children, namely: Carl Alexander, who was graduated from Mercer University, Macon, Georgia, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, took the full medical course at Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and is now engaged in practice as head resident physician of Garfield Hospital, Washington, D. C.; Harold Matthewson, who is a student of the Colorado School of Mines, Golden, Colorado; and Frances Marian, who is a student in the Hopkinsville public school.

President Gaines is a man who demonstrates in every act the value of proper education and training. Fully realizing that a sound education strengthens the moral consciousness and tempers the soul for life, he has always sought to awaken in his pupils a love for study and an appreciation of the benefits of honest application. From the day he opened his first school in Anderson County he has been an inspiration for intellectual activities of the best kind, and has steadily risen from one post of responsibility to another, always proving himself able to discharge the added responsibilities. His work during the war was of such a character that justice cannot be done it in so brief an article as this, but the record he made will always stand to his credit and reflect favorably upon him as a man of high civic and patriotic ideals, as well as an educator and organizer of unusual parts. During his student days he learned to work for knowledge and hold on to what he learned, and he has never lost the habit, but is a close student to this day and a voluminous reader. He has the tact, courtesy, intelligence, sound judgment, the broader sense of community responsibility, great mental resourcefulness, combined with carefully trained faculties and a thorough knowledge of his work, and all of these characteristics, natural and acquired make him the right man in the right place, and one whose influence over plastic minds is powerful and always directed toward further achievement.

Elijah H. Armstrong, junior member of the monumental firm of McClaid & Armstrong, is one of the reliable business men of Hopkinsville, and one who holds the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. He was born in Christian County, eight miles northwest of Hopkinsville, on his father's farm, July 1, 1863, a son of Elijah Armstrong and grandson of Ben Armstrong, a native of South Carolina, who died in Christian County, Kentucky, before the birth of his grandson. It was he who brought the family into Kentucky from South Carolina, and he developed valuable agricultural interests in Christian County. He married Jean Brasher, who was born in South Carolina and died in Christian County. The Armstrongs came from England to South Carolina in Colonial times.

The elder Elijah Armstrong, better known as Squire Armstrong, was born in Christian County in 1811, and died on his farm in 1889. Always a farmer, he spent the latter half of his life on the farm on which his namesake son was born, and was the owner of 500 acres of land at the time of his death, having been very successful. He was a democrat, and served as a magistrate for several terms. The Christian Church had in him a faithful and zealous member. He married Cinderilla C. Hamby, who was born in Christian County in 1819, and died on the same farm as her husband in 1864. Their children were as follows: C. C., who died in Texas when seventy-six years old, having been a farmer and stockraiser at Abilene, that state; Narcissa, who married I. A. Cook, a farmer residing six miles west of Hopkinsville; Carrie Ann, who married T. J. Owen, a farmer now deceased, died at Patonville, Texas, in 1910; Melissa Jane, who married John Marquess, a farmer, died in 1918, and her husband is also deceased, both of them passing away in Christian County; W. W., who is a farmer of Christian County; B. P., who was a farmer of Christian County, died in 1912; Margaret A., who is the widow of Finis Renshaw, lives near Patonville, Texas, although her husband died in Christian County, where he was a farmer; Sarah A., who is deceased, married John Cotton, a farmer, who is also deceased, both of them dying in Christian County; and Elijah H., who was the youngest.

Elijah H. Armstrong was reared on his father's farm, where he lived until he was twenty-five years of age, and during his youth he attended the rural schools. He then began farming for himself, and was so occupied until 1898, when he moved to Hopkinsville and served as chief of police for two years, and then for two years more was a policeman. Once more he was made chief of police, and so served for two years. In 1904 he embarked in a transfer business and carried it on until 1910, when he was appointed city jailer and held that position two years. In 1912 he and B. F. McClaid formed the firm of McClaid & Armstrong, and since then have conducted the monumental works at 509 North Main Street, the leading marble and granite works between Louisville and Paducah, Kentucky. The firm own their plant. Mr. Armstrong is a democrat and served as a member of the City Council for four years and as county oil inspector for six years, and has always taken a deep and abiding interest in the welfare of his city. He belongs to the Baptist Church, and is active in it. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He owns a modern residence at 411 North Main Street, which is a large, comfortable brick house.

On April 1, 1888, Mr. Armstrong was married at Clarksville, Tennessee, to Miss Alice V Perkins, a daughter of Capt. A. R. and Caroline (Renshaw) Perkins, both of whom are deceased. Captain Perkins commanded a company in the Union Army during the war between the North and the South, and later on was a tobacco buyer, merchant and prominent business man of Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Mrs. Armstrong died at Hopkinsville September 17, 1896, having borne her husband the following children: Erma, who lives with her father; Garnett, who is a post office clerk at Albuquerque, New Mexico; Cecil P, who is deceased; and Cinderilla C., who married D. W. Ledford, a flour miller of Louisville, Kentucky.

The star on the service flag of the Armstrong family turned to gold with the death of the gallant young officer, Cecil P. Armstrong, while he was in the service of his country. He enlisted in the United States service in 1914, participated in the Mexican Border Campaign and later was stationed at Lexington, Kentucky, where he died September 20, 1917. At that time he was acting major, although his rank was that of second lieutenant. The cause of his death was appendicitis. His was deeply deplored not only by his fellow officers and men, but by those in his old home who had taken a pride in him and his military service.

William Rodes Estill is a son of William W. Estill, owner of the noted Elmwood Farm in Fayette County. Elmwood adjoins Elmhurst Farm, whose proprietor is Robert C. Estill. These farms are owned by brothers, long distinguished among Kentucky horsemen, and the farms have produced some of the most notable of Kentucky trotting stock. The careers of these men and something of what they have done to elevate the standards of livestock in Kentucky have been told elsewhere in this publication.

Some years ago William W. Estill practically retired and turned the operation of Elmwood Farm over to his sons, William Rodes and J. S. Estill. The latter son is now deceased and William R. is superintendent of the farm. He was born on that farm, and has had a life-long interest in the breeding and training of horses. So great an authority as John E. Madden says that William R. Estill is one of the best drivers of trotting horses who ever appeared on a track in Kentucky.

Henry Harvey Fuson, principal since 1914 of the First District School at Covington, was born and reared in the shadow of the Cumberland Mountains, near the Cumberland Gap in Southeastern Kentucky, and throughout his notable career as an educational leader he has exhibited those admirable qualities long associated with the sturdy mountaineer of pure undiluted American stock.

Mr. Fuson was born, August 21, 1876, on Little Clear Creek in Bell County, five miles from Pineville, at the old homestead in the Fuson settlement. The family name is of French origin, but the family for a number of generations lived in Scotland, where the name was spelled Fuzon. They first settled in Virginia and then moved over the mountains to Nashville, Tennessee, where many of the family still reside. In various generations there have been lawyers, doctors and planters. The great-grandfather of the Covington educator was Thomas Fuson, who moved from Tennessee to Bell County, Kentucky. He came over the mountains as a companion of Boone. On the journey he was lost from his family, and being found by some hunters returned to his home near Nashville. When he came to Kentucky he settled at the head of Bear Creek, not far from the present Town of Chenoa. In his old age, while attempting to visit his people in Tennessee, he was frozen to death on the top of Log Mountain.

James R. Fuson, grandfather of Henry Harvey, was born near Nashville, in 1822, and married Lucinda Evans, who was born February 15, 1819, at the old Fuson settlement on Little Clear Creek. Their children were James A.; Letitia, Mrs. Elijah Smith, William Lafayette, John Thomas, Beth A., Henry Jeff and Eliza Jane. James A. Fuson, of this generation, was one of the first surveyors of Bell County, lived on his farm in the Fuson settlement, and the last years of his life were devoted to the raising of bees on an extensive scale. He died September 28, 1918. His brother, Beth A. Fuson, now a resident of Indianapolis, Indiana, for many years was a prominent merchant and in public affairs at Pineville, and is a former county judge of Bell County.

John Thomas Fuson, father of Henry Harvey, was born in 1854, at the Fuson settlement, and married Sarah Jane Lee, who was born in 1856, on Big Clear Creek in Bell County. She was a member of the well known Virginia Lee family, and her grandfather, Hancock Lee, was the founder of Lee's Station near Frankfort. Sarah Jane Lee was the fifth among the ten children of Philip and Mary (Bray) Lee. Her father died at the age of eighty-two and her mother at forty-five. Her brother, James Lee, was the first County Court clerk of Bell County when the county was organized in 1867, was a school teacher, surveyor, and a man of thorough education and very systematic and orderly in everything he did. He was a private in the Union army, was in the battle of Lookout Mountain and in Sherman's march to the sea.

Henry Harvey Fuson is the oldest of eleven children. The others are: Thomas Sewell, a physician at Cumberland Gap, Tennessee; Cora Lucinda, who died of typhoid fever at the age of eighteen; Mary Lee, Mrs. Willet Almy, and she died at the birth of her first child, Lee Almy; Bertha Letitia, wife of D. H. Howard, of Harlan, Kentucky; Arthur Luther, a physician at Cumberland Gap; Verda Ray, living in New Mexico; Van Whorton, with his father on the farm on Little Clear Creek; Effie, Mrs. Morris Adler, of Indianapolis; Maud, of Indianapolis; and Clara, teacher at Harlan.

Up to the age of eighteen Henry Harvey Fuson lived on his father's hillside mountain farm, and as his strength permitted participated in the routine of its work while attending school. He was a pupil of the rural schools from 1883 to 1894, then spent one session in the Williamsburg Institute at Williamsburg, during 1895-97 attended the Pineville High School, and from 1897 to 1905 spent the winter and spring terms at Cumberland College at Williamsburg, usually teaching during the fall months. He graduated with the A. B. degree in 1905. Having determined to make education his life work, Mr. Fuson never regarded his own education as complete and while handling many important responsibilities has continued his studies both privately and in higher institutions. The summer of 1912 he spent in the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. Beginning in 1912, he attended both afternoon and evening sessions in the University of Cincinnati, and his work brought him the Bachelor of Science degree from that institution in 1920, and he has since received twelve credits leading to the Master of Arts degree from the same university.

Mr. Fuson has a record of more than a quarter of a century as a teacher and school administrator. He taught in the rural schools of his native county from 1895 to 1901, was county superintendent from 1902 to 1910, and for the following two years was superintendent of the city schools of Pineville. He was then principal of the district school at Covington in 1912-1914. After 1914 he was principal of the First District School, and since 1918 has been principal of the First District School.

Mr. Fuson was census enumerator of Bell County in 1900. He has important business interests in Pineville, Kentucky, and from 1907 to 1910 was secretary-treasurer of the Central Coal Company, an operating company at Pineville. From 1911 to 1921 he has been secretary of the Martin Fork Coal Company, a leasing company at Harlan, and during 1917-18 was secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Fort Branch Coal Company at Fusonia in Perry County.

During the last two months of the war he was a private in the Military Training Camps Association in the Division of Southern Ohio, and from 1918 until mustered out in 1921 he was private, corporal and sergeant in Company D of the Kentucky State Guards. Upon being mustered out he was immediately mustered in as sergeant of the Kentucky National Guard, Tank Corps.

Mr. Fuson is affiliated with Washington Council No. 3, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Covington Lodge No. 109, F. and A. M., a member of the First Baptist Church at Covington, of the Kentucky Folk Lore Society, the Covington Industrial Club, Covington School Masters Club and Parents and Teachers Association of the First District School.

He helped organize the County Superintendent's Section of the Kentucky Educational Association during its convention at Winchester in 1907, was elected in 1909 vice president of the Kentucky Educational Association, and has been a member of the Reading Circle of the association for a number of years.

In this brief sketch it would be impossible to do justice to the high-minded, disinterested and capable record of Mr. Fuson. Some of his most interesting achievements were the result of his work in his home county. While at the head of the Pineville school system during 1910-12 he raised the teaching force from six to thirteen, doubled the school enrollment, and increased the building facilities to four instead of one, and also secured a bond issue for $30,000 for a new school building, which was erected after he came to Covington. When he was elected county superintendent in 1902 he went into the office determined that the schools should be conducted in the interest of the children and not at the will of local political factions. One of his first acts was to require real qualifications for the teachers. He revised the course of study, built many new schoolhouses, and was constant in his personal supervision and interest in behalf of every school district. During his second term as superintendent, from 1906 to 1910, he established the first consolidated schools in the county, three in all, also the county high school, and was instrumental in holding the only quadri-county institute ever held in the state, being represented by Laurel, Knox, Whitley and Bell counties. The First District School of Covington is the oldest school in the city, and the present building was erected in 1863, and is in the heart of the business district. As principal of this school Mr. Fuson has set many new standards and realized most of them in bringing the school system to a point where it compares favorably with the modern ideals of school management. He has perfected in modified form a system of pupil self government, has improved and broadened the course of study, and has secured the cooperation of a very effective Parents and Teachers Association, so that the school has come to be regarded as a real community interest.

On May 25, 1906, at the Phoenix Hotel in Lexington, Mr. Fuson and Sara Ellen Watson were united in marriage. Their only child, Ruth Maurine Fuson, is now in the fifth grade of the Covington public schools. Mrs. Fuson for ten years before her marriage was a successful teacher in Southeastern Kentucky, teaching schools in Pulaski and Whitley counties and in Montana, and also had her home at Belgrade, Montana. Her father, John Watson, was formerly a resident of Somerset, Kentucky, was sheriff of Pulaski County, and died July 5, 1921, at the age of eighty-five years, at Three Forks, Montana.

It would be difficult to find a man in Kentucky with a keener and more enthusiastic interest in things outside of his daily routine of common life than Henry Harvey Fuson. He is an ardent fisherman and hunter, and has pursued these sports not only in the woods and streams of his native state, but in the woods of Michigan and on both coasts of Florida. He has found constant inspiration in the natural rugged beauty of Eastern Kentucky, and for years has expressed his observation and his sentiments in poetic form, and is the author of more than eighty poems, largely dealing with mountain scenery and pioneer events and personalities. For years he has collected material bearing on the history and legends of Southern Kentucky, and in his scrap books of fifteen volumes, each covering a year from 1905, he has preserved data that will go far toward constructing an appropriate picture of the historic section with which his own earlier life was identified.

Milton Sanchez is a commercial genius, his record since coming to Lexington having fully demonstrated ample claims to such distinction. He is a merchandise broker, came here with practically no capital, and by his energy and remarkable knowledge of mercantile conditions has developed a business that aggregates values several times a million dollars annually.

Mr. Sanchez was born at Donaldsonville, Louisiana, May 17, 1872, and was handicapped in early life by the death of his father when he was but a small boy. He is a son of Antoine and Dolores Sanchez, who were also natives of Donaldsonville, and both are now deceased. His father died at the age of thirty-five and his mother at forty-four. Milton was the second among five children, three of whom are still living. His father was a railway contractor, and helped build the Texas and Pacific Railway. He was a democrat in politics and a Catholic.

Milton Sanchez had the advantages of public schools in his native town only until he was about twelve years of age and then had to go to work to help support his widowed mother and two sisters. He clerked in stores, and managed to save enough from his earnings and also secure the necessary time to attend the Donaldsonville Business College. From the age of eighteen to twenty-three he was the responsible manager of a Louisiana sugar plantation, and following that became traveling salesman for a packing company and was in that business until 1909.

In 1909 Mr. Sanchez came to Lexington with only $35 in capital, and entered the merchandise brokerage business. He soon obtained recognition for himself, established an office and broadened his business, and has since built and still owns the largest general warehouse and storage building in Lexington at the corner of Merino and Vine streets. This business does an aggregate of $3,000,000 worth annually. He has also been one of the organizers and is vice president of the Lexington Candy Manufacturing Company, organizer and vice president of the Lexington Syrup Canning and Manufacturing Company, and an organizer and vice president of the Lexington Wholesale Drug Company. Thus he is identified in a most substantial manner with the commercial life of Lexington and the state.

Mr. Sanchez is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, is a democrat and a Catholic. December 21, 1897, he married Odile Buquoi, also a native of Donaldsonville, Louisiana.

James Thomas Looney. For thirty years a large part of the citizenship of Lexington looked to one store and one location under one proprietor to supply their households with groceries and meats. This landmark in the commercial district is at Main and Deweese streets, and the proprietor of the business is James Thomas Looney, one of the veteran merchants of the city.

Mr. Looney has achieved success after a lifetime of effort, beginning as a boy when he was given the responsibility of running a railway locomotive before he reached his majority. He was born at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, June 17, 1867, son of Patrick and Margaret (Dorsey) Looney. His parents were both born in County Clare, Ireland, but were married in Mount Sterling, Kentucky. His father was born in 1836 and came to this country when a young man by sailing ship. From New York he drifted west into Kentucky, and for several years worked at his trade as a stone mason. Later he became a contractor in railroad construction, and had the building of the first mile of railway out of Mount Sterling for the Louisville and Nashville, and also built the first mile of the K. & S. A. Railway, a narrow gauge line out of Mount Sterling. Some years later he resumed his business as a stone mason, and finally retired and spent his last years in Lexington, where he died in 1901 at the age of sixty-five. His wife was born in 1838 and died in 1910. They were very devout and sincere Catholics and the father was a democrat. They had a large family of eleven children, six sons and five daughters, and four sons and three daughters are still living.

James Thomas Looney lived at Mount Sterling with his parents and made good use of the advantages of the schools in that town. The first money he earned was as water boy with a section crew for the E. L. & B. S. Railway. He was paid $6 a month. Later he worked in the sawmills in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky, and was an office boy for the K. & S. A. Railway at Mount Sterling. He was still only a youth in years when he was made a locomotive fireman with the K. & S. A. Railway, and served in that position for three years. Following that for about a year he conducted a restaurant at Mount Sterling, and then resumed work as a locomotive fireman with the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, and at the age of twenty was promoted to locomotive engineer. For two years he remained in the service of the Chesapeake and Ohio and resigned to come to Lexington and begin his long service as a grocery merchant. After a short time he established his store at Main and Deweese streets, and that has been his location now for thirty years. In addition to his well-managed and prosperous mercantile business Mr. Looney is a director in the Phoenix and Third National Bank, is president of the Mycoca Bottling Works, is a stockholder in the Lexington Brewing Company, stockholder in the Lexington Wholesale Bakery Company, and is a trustee of St. Paul's Catholic Church and in politics a democrat.

January 10, 1893, he married Miss Hannah Cecelia Houlihan. The two sons of their union are Raymond James and Leo Lawrence, both now associated with their father in the grocery business.

Bailey Russell, cashier of the First National Bank of Hopkinsville, has had thirty-two years' experience with the uncompromising and accuracy-compelling methods of monetary science as revealed behind the counters of Kentucky institutions. As are all successful and reliable cashiers, he is methodical in his habits and practical in his ambitions. Steadiness of life's aim has been imparted to him by progenitors who braved the hardships and dangers of pioneer life in the state, and he himself is a product of the agricultural communities, having been born on a farm at Olmstead, Logan County, Kentucky, June 9, 1867, a son of John M. Russell.

The Russell family is of Scotch origin, and the original ancestor of the family in this country settled at an early date in one of the states on the Atlantic Coast, where in 1797 was born George W. Russell, the grandfather of Bailey Russell. He married a Miss Bailey, and became the pioneer of the Russell family into Logan County, where he settled three miles southwest of Adairville and there was engaged in farming on a tract of about 600 acres of land until his death in 1880. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Russell, Beverly Crumbaugh, was the owner of the old Crumbaugh homestead, which was divided subsequently among his children. He was a pioneer of Logan County, rounded out an honorable career, married a Miss Bailey, and died before the birth of his grandson.

John M. Russell, father of Bailey Russell, was born in October, 1839, in Logan County, Kentucky, where he was reared and married and passed the active period of his life as a farmer, a vocation in which he achieved much success through industry and good management. In 1914 he retired from active pursuits and moved to Adairville, where his death occurred in May, 1915. Mr. Russell was a man highly esteemed in his community, and was a stanch democrat in politics, while his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he was an active and liberal supporter. He married Alice Crumbaugh, who was born in Logan County in 1846, and died in 1883, and they became the parents of three children: Bailey; Lillie, who is the wife of a farmer, C. P. Riley, residing at Olmstead; and Victoria, who married first James Gunn, a farmer, and after his death married James Pike, a railroad engineer of Adairville, Kentucky. For his second wife John M. Russell married Miss Mattie Townsend, who survives him as a resident of Adairville, and they had one daughter, Mary, the wife of S. H. Shields, an electrician of Nashville, Tennessee.

Bailey Russell was educated in the rural schools of Logan County and the South Kentucky College, Hopkinsville, but after spending one term in that institution, gave up his studies at the age of twenty years and entered the City Bank of Hopkinsville, commencing his banking experience at the bottom of the ladder in the position of collection clerk. This he filled from June, 1887, until March, 1888, and in April of the latter year accepted a position as bookkeeper with the First National Bank of Hopkinsville, a concern with which he has been identified ever since. In 1905 Mr. Russell was promoted to assistant cashier, and in January, 1914, was made cashier of this institution, one of the strongest in the state for cities the size of Hopkinsville, and one which bears an excellent reputation in banking circles of the South and Middle West. Mr. Russell is known as a man of expert financial ability and has the full confidence of his associates, who rely upon his judgment in matters of importance. He is treasurer of the Hopkinsville Building and Loan Association and treasurer of the Associated Charities of Hopkinsville. While he retains an interest in the old home farm in Logan County, he makes his home at Hopkinsville, having a residence at 420 West Seventh Street. Mr. Russell's political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he served two years as representative of the Seventh Ward in the city council. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, and, in addition to being junior warden and a vestryman, is a member of the Board of Church Trustees. Fraternally he is affiliated with Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, B. P. O. E. He is a promoter of stable and conservative interests, and as a citizen and banker maintains standards in keeping with the best welfare of the community. During the World war era he took an active part in all local movements, and as recognition of his efforts in putting the Victory Loan "over the top" in his community was the recipient of a Liberty Loan medal, awarded by the United States Treasury Department.

Mr. Russell was married January 28, 1903, at Hopkinsville, to Miss Katherine Bachman, who was born at Hopkinsville. They have no children.

Thomas Whitlock Morris, manager and treasurer of the Hopkinsville Water Company, is one of the worth-while men of Christian County, whose public-spirited ideas have found practical expression in his present business undertaking, but he has had a wide and varied experience which aids him in being one of the most useful members of his community. Mr. Morris was born twelve miles southwest of Hopkinsville, on a farm in Christian County, June 23, 1868, a son of Edgar F. Morris, grandson of Augustus Morris, great-grandson of Eddin Norris, and a direct descendant of Robert Morris, an American financier and signer of the Declaration of Independence, born in Lancashire, England, January 20, 1734. Coming to America at an early age, he established himself as a merchant at Philadelphia, and became one of the very wealthy men of the Colonies. With the outbreak of the American Revolution he backed the patriot cause with his wealth, was elected to Congress in 1775, and in 1781 was appointed superintendent of finance. He died at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 8, 1806. Eddin Morris was born in that part of Virginia now West Virginia, in 1790, and died on his farm in Christian County, twelve miles from Hopkinsville, Kentucky, in 1875. He came to Christian County in 1816 and developed large farming interests. He married Miss Sallie Edgar, a daughter of Capt. Thomas Edgar, of Virginia, and she was born in Virginia in 1790, and died in Christian County in 1872. Augustus Morris was born on his father's farm in Christian County, and died on this same farm, when only twenty-two years of age. He married a Miss Johnson, of Danville, Kentucky. It is claimed that the first of the Morris name in the Colonies was an orphan boy who came over as a stowaway, and was landed in New York City. He was adopted by a rich New York physician. Later he married and had ten sons, who scattered to different parts of the country.

Edgar F. Morris, father of Thomas Whitlock Morris, was born on the same farm as was his father and his own son in Christian County, in 1847, and he died at Hopkinsville in 1915. He was reared, educated and married in Christian County, where he was engaged in farming until 1881, but in that year moved to Clarksville, Tennessee, and had agricultural interests in its vicinity, and also carried on a teaming business, but in 1883 returned to Christian County and spent two more years on his farm. Moving then to Hopkinsville, he was engaged in teaming for two years, and then went to work for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company as baggageman and watchman, and operated the pumping station for five years. He was then appointed lockkeeper, and for four years was stationed at Greencastle, fifteen miles below Bowling Green, on Barren River, but was then transferred to Rough River, and held the same position for three years at the lock, eight miles above Livermore, Kentucky. Once more he was transferred, and placed at Lock No. 5 on Green River, sixteen miles from Bowling Green, and while there was stricken with paralysis, and his son brought him to Hopkinsville, where he lived for the remaining four years allotted to him. He was a democrat. The Southern Presbyterian Church held his membership, and he always gave a strong support to the local congregation. During the war between the states he enlisted in the Confederate army, although not old enough to do so until near its close, and fought bravely for the "Lost Cause." He was married to Miss Bettie Northington, who was born in Kentucky in 1848, and died at Hopkinsville in 1893. Their children were as follows: Eugene Augustus, who was a printer, died at New York City at the age of twenty-two years; Thomas Whitlock, whose name heads this review; Hugh, who died at the age of three weeks; Alcyone, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Augusta, who died at the age of twenty-two years. As his second wife Edgar F. Morris married Miss Madge Ellis, who survives him and lives at Hopkinsville. They had one daughter, Eunice, who is the widow of Ed O'Brien, a veteran of the Spanish-American war and lockkeeper on the Green and Barren rivers. Mrs. O'Brien resides with her mother.

Thomas Whitlock Morris attended the rural schools of Christian County and the graded schools of Clarksville, Tennessee. He then took an electrical and mechanical course with the International Correspondence School of Scranton, Pennsylvania, from which he received the degree of Electrical Engineer in 1910. Mr. Morris also had the advantage of three terms in the South Kentucky College. At different intervals between his school courses he worked on his father's farm, but after completing his collegiate course he came to Hopkinsville and pumped water for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad for several months and then at different intervals spent four years working at the printing trade with the Hopkinsville Kentuckian and the Kentucky New Era. For two years he was with the Clarksville Tobacco Leaf Chronicle. Mr. Morris then went with the Kentucky State Hospital at Hopkinsville as engineer, and held that position until 1897, when he was made engineer of the Hopkinsville Water Company. From time to time he was advanced, and is now manager and treasurer of the company. This is a private corporation and supplies Hopkinsville and vicinity with water. The officers of the company are as follows: W. T. Tandy, president; H. D. Fitch, of Bowling Green, vice president; T. W. Morris, treasurer and manager; Max B. Nahn, of Bowling Green, secretary. The offices are situated on South Main Street. A democrat in his political views, Mr. Morris has served on the School Board of Hopkinsville, and has done much to raise the standards of education in this locality. Early joining the Southern Presbyterian Church, he has always taken an active part in the local congregation and is now serving it as deacon and treasurer. Having long ago decided to make Hopkinsville his permanent home, he bought his comfortable modern residence on East Ninth Street. During the late war he was one of the zealous workers for the cause, and not only subscribed generously for Liberty Bonds himself, but solicited subscriptions from others.

In 1895 Mr. Morris was married, in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, to Miss Ella B. Hurst, who was born in that county. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have two children, namely: Edith Elizabeth, who lives with her parents; and Mary W., who is attending the public schools of Hopkinsville. Mr. Morris is a man who takes a deep pride in his company and his city. No worthy measure calculated to prove of benefit to his community ever lacks his hearty support, and he has inaugurated a number of movements of this nature and helped to carry them through to a successful completion.

William Griffith McClintock in a business way is prominent in Bourbon County as member of the firm Caywood & McClintock, stock dealers and stock shippers, who have been responsible for the development of a large and important market centering in Paris for the handling of all classes of livestock. Mr. McClintock in a public way is known as the present efficient sheriff of Bourbon County.

He represents an old and prominent family of this section of Kentucky and was born near Millersburg November 18, 1867, a son of Thomas and Addie (Griffith) McClintock. Thomas McClintock was born in 1836, in the same house as his father, William McClintock. William McClintock and Sarah Patton were married in Kentucky, and they owned the old homestead which later was owned by their son, Thomas. Thomas McClintock spent his life in the same community, but for twenty-five years owned and occupied another farm nearby. He was an extensive mule dealer, buying mules and driving them to various points in the South, and usually spent his winters at Atlanta. He died at Millersburg in 1914, at the age of seventy-eight, and his widow is still living in that town. They were neighbors in the same community before their marriage. Her father, William Griffith, was a stockman at Millersburg. Thomas McClintock and wife had eight children, seven of whom are still living: Lizzie, Mrs. Turner Perry, of Owensville; Cora, who died in childhood; William G.; Miss Anna James, who is a prominent educator, proprietor of the McClintock School for Children at Hagerstown, Maryland; Bert, a livestock dealer at Paris; Lela, wife of Charles R. Jones, and they live near the old homestead in Nicholas County; Julian Allen, a minister of the Methodist Church at Richmond, Kentucky; and Ruth Shannon, who lives at home with her mother.

William G. McClintock acquired a good education in the local schools, and at the age of nineteen began his career as a trader and during the past thirty or thirty-five years has handled $1,000,000 worth of cattle, hogs, horses, mules and sheep. For two years he was in partnership with his father in business, but for the past ten years has been associated with Henry S. Caywood, of North Middletown. This firm pays out more than $1,000,000 annually for livestock, and their operations have given Paris a special distinction as a livestock market. They ship in many carloads for feeding purposes, frequently as high as 100 carloads of cattle. In connection with their business they operate a feeding farm of 100 acres near Paris.

As the age of twenty-five Mr. McClintock, who from boyhood had manifested a keen interest in local affairs, was elected county assessor, and filled that office one term of four years. After an interim of eight years he was again elected to the same office for four years. Following that he became deputy sheriff under W. F. Talbott, and at the end of four years was elected Mr. Talbott's successor, and his present term as sheriff expires January 1, 1922. He has done some effective work as a campaign manager in behalf of several democratic candidates.

At the age of thirty Mr. McClintock married Ida Collier, of Millersburg, daughter of James and Rebecca Collier. Her father was a coal and grain dealer at Millersburg. While on a tour in Mexico, near Tampico, where he acquired 1,500 acres of land, he died, and his family still own that property. Mr. and Mrs. McClintock have three children: Thomas, Vallette, who is a student in the University of Chicago, and James, a high school boy. Mr. McClintock is a Presbyterian, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, Elks, Knights of the Maccabees and the Eagles.

Patrick Henry Callahan. Stenographer at twenty, branch manager at twenty-five, general manager at thirty, president and proprietor at forty, president of the National Paint, Oil & Varnish Association at forty-five. A very plain and simple story illustrating like innumerable other instances of our country being still the "Land of Opportunity," for Mr. Callahan, regardless of his success and activities, lays no claim to any exceptional abilities or virtues.

In thirty years the Louisville Varnish Company has been developed from the smallest to one of the very largest in the varnish business, with branches in New York, Chicago and San Francisco, its output also going to South America and Africa and doing business in all parts of the world. Its most notable products are its famous "Fixall Finishes" for household and miscellaneous work, and "Varnall," A-Varnish-For-All-Work, either inside or outside, to be used equally satisfactorily on pianos and furniture as well as on automobiles and railway coaches, which is the acme of triumph in varnish making skill.

While a success in business of this magnitude required close study and application, nevertheless it is in matters outside of business, all his friends agree, his greatest success has been obtained, for, after developing a highly trained organization for his company, he laid down his own lines as to how best to be a useful citizen. These plans include a methodical spending of half his time for business and the other half for matters outside his business, an enumeration of which activities might easily fill a volume, but a brief reference will show a useful career of service to his community and country, most of the work being along new lines of endeavor, all of which were his own initiative.

Among the pioneers, who were employers, for a recognition of the human rights of employees so they would also have more of an interest in the management and profits of industry than they enjoyed with the old wage system, with his idea "Man was not made for Business, but Business was made for Man," Mr. Callahan in conjunction with Dr. John A. Ryan, author of "The Living Wage" and "Distributive Justice," worked out the Ryan-Callahan Plan of Partnership which was put into practice in his own manufacturing plant some years ago. This plan, which has been adopted by many progressive employers, is well known throughout the United States, as Mr. Callahan has lectured and presented papers on this most interesting subject of the day before the leading universities, colleges, economic clubs and societies, has written articles, booklets and brochures galore on the subject, and has been asked to arbitrate and settle many of the important labor disputes in recent years. This economic industrial question and its proper solution, which means so much to the peace and prosperity of our country, and Mr. Callahan's prominence in this field of endeavor for years, was the reason given by William Jennings Bryan in San Francisco in 1920 for presenting the name of Mr. Callahan as one of his nominees for the Presidency of the United States on the democratic ticket.

President of the National Paint, Oil & Varnish Association 1913-14. The association included in its membership all the leading members of his profession and business, during which time it increased in membership and usefulness, and in a public manner Mr. Callahan launched the movement in all the large cities of the country to take the tariff out of politics, and his name and activities were so linked with this subject that in 1917, when a Tariff Commission was created by Congress, President Woodrow Wilson tendered the chairmanship to Mr. Callahan, which was regretfully declined in order to take up war work.

Chairman Commission on Religious Prejudices 1915-16. This was a movement by the Knights of Columbus, which Mr. Callahan feels was the most important of all his undertakings and was directed solely by him. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of the Outlook, said editorially that it was the most valuable and necessary commission of the day entering into a field and taking up a work that was so essential to the welfare of our country. It was altogether non-sectarian in its scope and not conducted for the benefit of any religion, its purpose being to improve the relationship between citizens of all creeds, the surveys, reports and recommendations being highly complimented by societies and citizens everywhere.

Chairman of the Commission on War Activities, Knights of Columbus, 1917-18. This work probably brought Mr. Callahan more renown than any of his activities. Going to Washington and laying plans before the War and Navy departments, he outlined a plan of welfare work to meet certain delinquencies in the existing program and assumed personal direction and supervision of creating and developing the "K. C. War Work" in this country and abroad, which in sixty days compared favorably with the work of agencies that had been going sixty years, and inside of one year it was universally admitted to have surpassed in service all other agencies engaged in war work.

Chairman the United War Drive—Knights of Columbus Division, Fall, 1918. The largest sum of money ever contributed for any purpose was for the United War Drive, covering the requirements of the seven agencies engaged in welfare work, which idea and plan was first presented to the War Department by Mr. Callahan, representing the Knights of Columbus, and after participating in conferences in Washington and Chicago, undertook personally the organization of the State of Kentucky, making it a very great success.

Chairman Kentucky High Cost of Living Commission, 1919. The Department of Justice had no plans or suggestions; and the Kentucky Division, headed by Mr. Callahan and his staff, worked out a plan of action entirely and altogether their own, and while it resulted in a great deal of embarrassment to the leading merchants of the city, nevertheless, through publicity and public opinion, every store on the principal streets, without exception, reduced their prices, and the Government and other states and cities sent representatives to Louisville to learn and adopt this plan.

Chairman Administrative Committee of the Kentucky Democratic Organization, 1920. The state having gone republican by over 40,000 the previous fall, all leaders and factions of the party agreed upon Mr. Callahan to reorganize the state for the Presidential election, and in the very beginning he secured his friend, the late Marion E. Taylor, to be the joint chairman with him in a movement for this purpose. Mr. Taylor, who had been a large distiller, and Mr. Callahan a recognized leader of the dry forces, made such a coalition as to remedy the principal dissension, and this detailed work, which covered a period of several months, including conferences and banquets, was so successful that Kentucky was the only state in the Union to show a political reversal, and in the fall of 1920 went back into the democratic column.

While Mr. Callahan has never offered for nor held office he has always been a staunch democrat and a colonel on the staff of the late Governor James B. McCreary, whom he accompanied for personal and official reasons to different parts of the country, notably the Baltimore Convention and the Perry Centennial at Put-In-Bay.

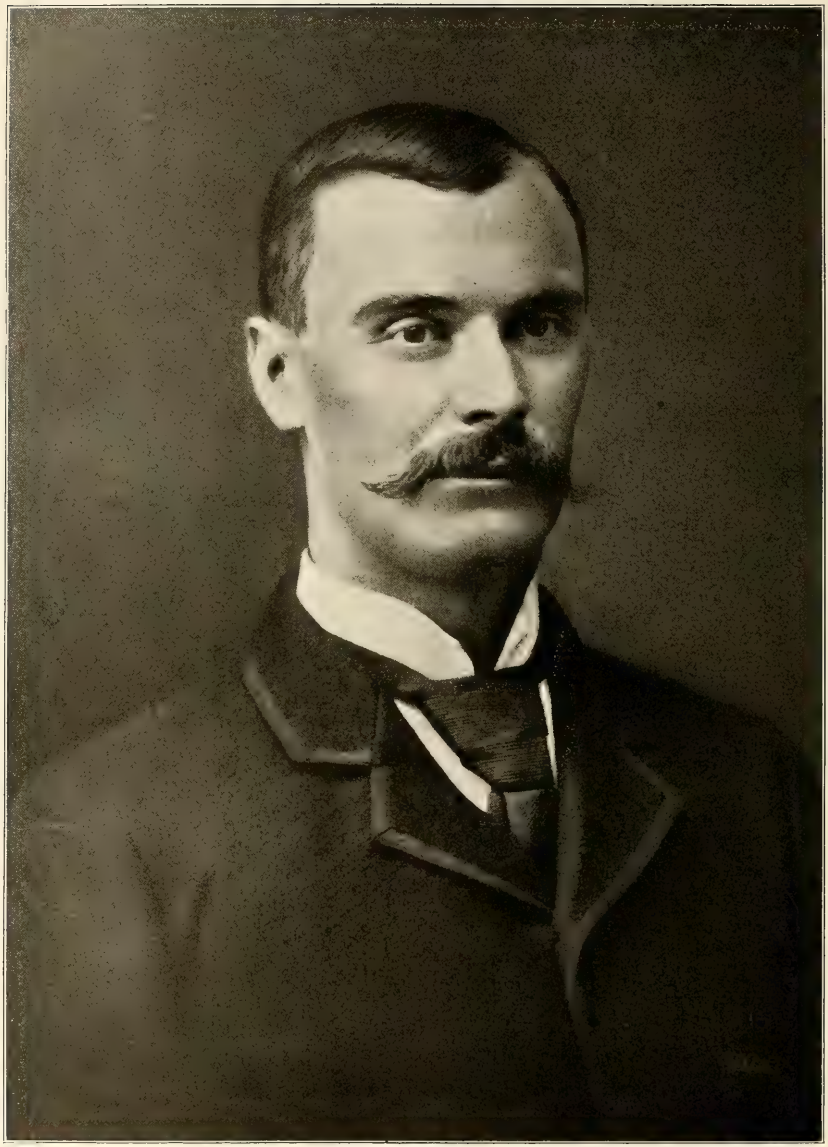
In the prohibition movement Mr. Callahan took an active and leading part from the very beginning in the State of Kentucky and in his own City of Louisville, bringing Bryan and other temperance leaders into the state and speaking and campaigning himself for many years, so that President Warren Harding recently sent him an appointment to represent the United States, at the expense of the Government, at an International Anti-Alcohol Congress held at Lausanne, Switzerland, August, 1921, which was also declined.

Mr. Callahan was born at Cleveland, Ohio, October 15, 1866, a son of John Cormic and Mary Connolly Callahan. Mr. Callahan, Sr., was of the firm of Scheuer & Callahan, dealers and shippers of livestock, but early in life, when President Abraham Lincoln issued his call for volunteers at the outbreak of the Civil war, he was among the very first to respond, his name being in gold on the famous Cleveland Monument.

On January 20, 1891, Mr. Callahan was united in marriage with Miss Julia L. Cahill, who was born at Fremont, Ohio, and to this union there have been born three children, John M. and Robert E., both of whom are engaged in their father's business, and Edith Dee, who had the distinction of being one of the very few ladies at the Paris Peace Conference, attending the opening and subsequent conferences, representing the Catholic Press Association of the United States and Canada, her weekly letters reaching as high as 2,000,000 copies a week, which correspondence has since been put in a bound volume called "Glimpses of the Peace Conference."

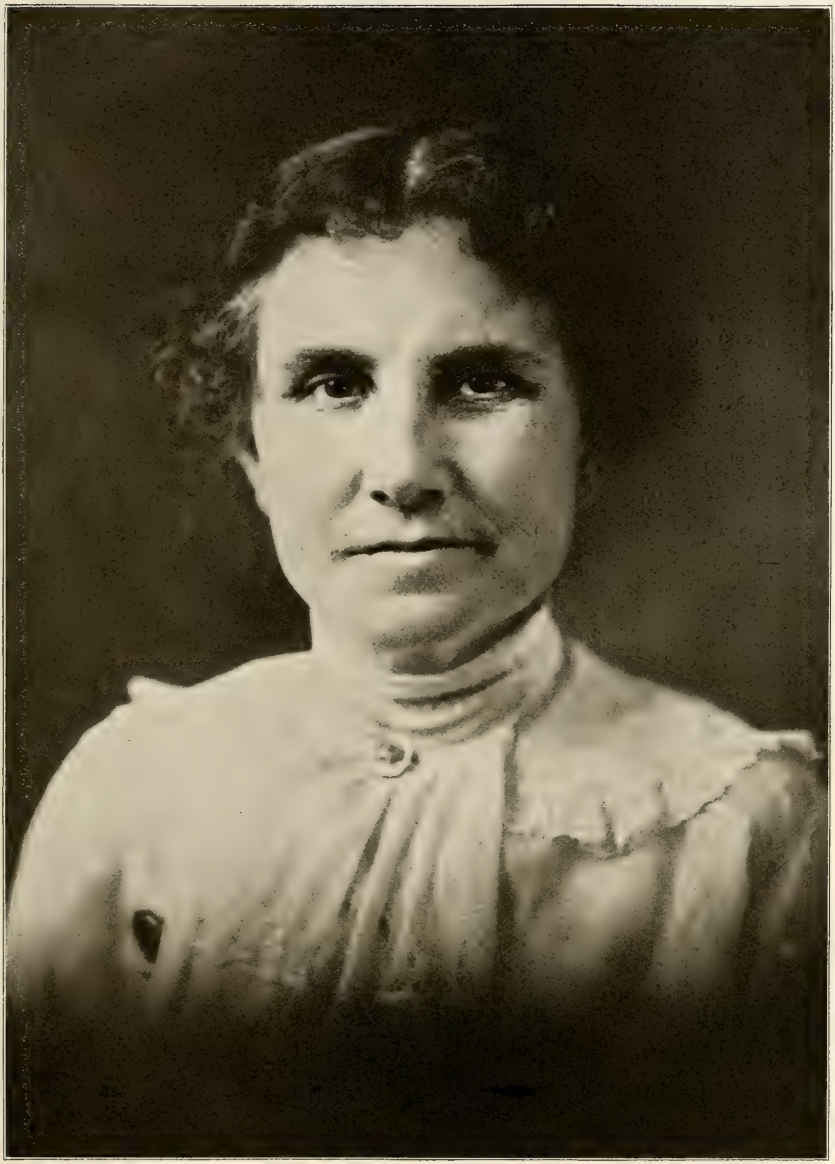
Jeff D. Parrish. Though reared on a farm and engaged in farming in his early life, Jeff D. Parrish has devoted at least thirty years to the business and industry of flour milling. He is now sole proprietor of the Clay Flouring Mill, and as miller, manager or owner has been identified with several milling properties in this section of Kentucky.

Mr. Parrish was born on a farm in Hopkins County, July 29, 1861, a son of Henry S. and Jane (Hester) Parrish. His parents were born and reared near Raleigh, North Carolina. His father was born June 6, 1825, and died September 22, 1899, at the age of seventy-four, while the mother was born November 21, 1831, and died August 21, 1900, at the age of sixty-nine. After their marriage three children, two sons and a daughter, were born in North Carolina. About seventy years ago the family came west and settled in Kentucky, in Hopkins County, where Henry S. Parrish continued his occupation as a farmer the rest of his life. He was always a staunch democrat in politics, and he and his wife were Missionary Baptists. In Kentucky they had eight sons and four daughters. It was a large family of children, and another interesting fact in that connection was the order of birth among sons and daughters. The first two children were sons and then came a daughter, and that order was maintained throughout. All of them except a son who died at the age of eleven grew to mature years and married. All of those that married except one son had children.



Jeff D. Parrish spent his early life on the home farm in Hopkins County, but had only limited opportunities to secure an education, due no doubt to the large household and the necessity for work as soon as the children were old enough. He lived on the home farm and assisted his parents until he was twenty-two.

Mr. Parrish was in the employ of W. M. Farless for seventeen consecutive years. Mr. Farless was a well-known mill owner. Mr. Parrish spent seven years with his mill at Hansen, and ten years at Providence. Then for a little over a year he was in the employ of Justice & Wynn, flour millers at Providence, eventually buying the interests of Mr. Wynn. He sold his business there and on September 23, 1914, moved to Clay, where he acquired an interest in the local flouring mill and ten months later became sole proprietor. The Clay Flouring Mill is a custom mill whose product enjoys a well-deserved reputation and is sold over all the surrounding country around Clay.



Mr. Parrish has always been a hard worker and has led an exemplary life, free from bad habits and expressive of good influence in behalf of every moral and educational institution. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, is a democrat and is affiliated with the Masonic Order and Modern Woodmen of America. In 1887 he married Miss Nannie Ferguson. She died December 6, 1909, the mother of two sons, Thomas Lucien and John Arden. In 1911 Mr. Parrish married Margaret Casner. His younger son, John Arden, was killed in 1912 while riding in an automobile which was struck by a train. His son, Thomas L., is now associated with his father in the milling business.

William Ira Cook. One of the oldest and most substantial families in the community of Clay in Webster County is that of Cook. William Ira Cook was for many years identified with its mercantile affairs, and is now cashier of the Webster County Bank.

He was born at Clay April 13, 1871, son of John D. and Emily O. (Jenkins) Cook. His father, who was born in that portion of Hopkins now Webster County, Kentucky, March 14, 1825, was a son of an early settler of Webster County who came from Tennessee. John D. Cook was a wagon maker by trade, followed that occupation and lived in Clay nearly fifty years, and was a quiet, unassuming, hard-working citizen who voted as a democrat and was faithful in his duties as a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. He died honored and respected at Clay at the age of eighty-seven. His wife, who is also a Missionary Baptist and is living at the age of seventy-eight, was born at Caseyville, Kentucky, a daughter of Wesley Jenkins. Three of her five children are still living.

R. S. Webb

Mary G. Webb.

William Ira Cook has lived practically all his life in the town where he was born. He had a high school education, took the academic course at Providence, Kentucky, and for twelve years was successfully identified with educational work in the local public schools. He began his business career as clerk in a store for four years, and later acquired a financial interest and was manager. Altogether his experience as a merchant at Clay covered a period of fifteen years. He was assistant cashier of the Webster County Bank from 1918 to 1920, at which time he became cashier.

Mr. Cook casts his vote as a democrat, is a Master Mason, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1896 he married Miss Ida L. Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam B. Smith of Webster County. Five children were born to their marriage. The four still living are Lois D., an employe of the Webster County Bank; William A.; Samuel H.; and Carl S.

Richard Spurr Webb, whose energies and the good management of whose mature career contributed many notable improvements to what is known as Stonely Farm situated on Greendale Pike three miles north of Lexington died August 8, 1921. Mr. Webb farmed for profit, but he also did his work with a view to constructive permanence and to enlarge the comforts that are a proper proof of industry.

He was born October 12, 1860, and was a member of one of the old and honored families of Fayette County. He grew up at the homestead, attained his education in local schools, and except for five years spent in Indian Territory always lived in Fayette County and spent nearly all his years on the old farm. Originally the farm contained four hundred acres.

The old stone residence was built by a Mr. Bell at least a hundred and seven years ago. The stones were laid in mud before mortar or cement was generally used. The building stands as solid today as ever, but in its interior comforts and arrangements, Mr. Webb effected many notable changes and improvements. He thoroughly modernized the house, installing electric light, hot water heat and other conveniences. An attractive feature is also an elaborate stone gateway and walled lane leading from the road to the house, constructed during Mr. Webb's ownership and largely by his own labor. He was one of the successful farmers of Fayette County.

Mr. Webb was the pioneer in the hemp industry in McGuffey, Hardin County, Ohio. In 1910 he planted 200 acres in hemp, and was very successful. He afterwards planted 600 acres every year for many years and made a fortune from it. He also invented an engine driven hemp brake that has materially reduced the cost of production, and his activities in the hemp industry have been of material advantage to a large section of the country and have made fortunes for people who have followed in his footsteps.

At the age of twenty-five Mr. Webb married Mary Gunn. Her father, W. A. Gunn, was one of the best known citizens of Lexington and a descendent of an old Colonial family. He was a civil engineer, an expert in his profession, and his skill was such as to call his services into requisition when any highly important work was to be done, either in land surveying or running the lines for railroad surveys. He was chief engineer on the survey of the Southern, now the Great Southern, Railroad, and continued in railroad work for many years. His home was always at Lexington and he surveyed many of the plats and additions of that city. His work was a real public service, but he was never active in public offices. He died at a good old age, and his children, all living, are Fanny, Jennie, Clara, Mary G., William, a mine owner at Middlesboro; John, a civil engineer at Lexington; and Robert. Thomas, who was a clerk in the Lexington postoffice, died in May, 1921.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Webb. Virginia is the wife of Peyton Howard, a mechanic living at Lexington. Richard S. is a contractor, real estate man and dealer in automobiles at Lexington. Julia is the wife of Charles Marshall, of Akron, Ohio. John is continuing his education in the State University. Mrs. Webb takes an active part in the Methodist Episcopal Church and is president of the Women's Home Missionary Society and superintendent of the Sunday school. Mr. Webb was a Presbyterian.

Rev. John William Porter. Among Kentucky's imposing list of brilliant churchmen, Rev. John William Porter is distinguished as pastor and builder of what is said to be the largest Baptist Church building in the world, and is head of an organization completely worthy of such a home. He is also prominent as editor of the Western Reporter, and as a preacher, lecturer and writer is one of the powerful influences in state and national affairs today.

He was born in Fayette County, Tennessee, August 8, 1863, a son of John Freeman and Martha Carolina (Tharp) Porter. His father was a native of North Carolina and his mother of Fayette County, Tennessee. His two grandparents owned 400 slaves and were among the wealthy citizens of the county. Col. John F. Porter was a prosperous planter and a man of unusual intelligence, while his wife was a first honor graduate of the Somerville Female College and an accomplished French scholar. Her father, B. H. Tharp, presented her with six slaves as a bridal present, and that deed of gift is still preserved by the family.

John William Porter acquired a liberal education, attending Oxford University and the Law School of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, where he graduated LL. B. in 1882. He began his career as a lawyer, and practiced with considerable success in Tennessee from 1882 to 1885. In 1890 he was ordained to the Baptist ministry, and in 1893 received the degree Th. G. from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. Subsequent degrees conferred upon him are D. D. by Keiche College of Louisiana in 1900, LL. D. by Union University in Tennessee in 1913. During the thirty years of his active ministry Reverend Porter served successively in earlier years as pastor of the Baptist churches of Germantown and Collierville, Tennessee; of Pewee Valley, Kentucky; Maysville, Kentucky; Newport News, Virginia, and since April, 1908, has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Lexington. It was during his pastorate that the imposing edifice of this church was constructed. The building is said to cover more ground than any Baptist building in the world. During the great $75,000,000 campaign recently concluded this church led all other churches in the state by more than $60,000.

During his ministry Doctor Porter has been instrumental in securing more than 10,000 additions to Baptist churches, and in connection with other work has been a leading evangelist. He is author of three books: "World's Debt to the Baptist," "Baptist Debt to the World," and "Evangelistic Sermons." He has preached the introductory sermon for the Southern Baptist Convention and has been president of the General Association of Baptists of Kentucky. He is president of the Baptist Book Concern of Louisville, an establishment which has more volumes in stock than any other denominational book house in the world.

The Western Recorder, of which he is editor, is the oldest denominational paper south of the Ohio River and is published at Louisville. The Western Recorder took the initiative in the recent fight against the Interchurch Movement. Rev. Mr. Porter is a trustee of the Barberville Institute of Kentucky, the Hall Moody Institute of Martin, Tennessee, and of Georgetown College of Kentucky. He is president of the City Missionary Society of Lexington, a democrat, a Knight Templar Mason, a Knight of Pythias and an Odd Fellow.

On July 21, 1891, Doctor Porter married Lillian E. Thomas. Her father, Capt. G. W. Thomas, was a merchant and planter of Germantown, Tennessee, for a long time served as mayor of that town and was also chairman of the Board of Deacons of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Porter, a woman of unusual beauty and of intellectual character, has been prominently associated with her husband in church work. She finished her education in the Blue Mountain Institute at Blue Mountain, Mississippi. To their marriage were born the following children: Martha Frances, now the wife of Mr. Morris Willis, of Lexington; Mary, who was married to Mr. Perry Rowe, of Lexington; John W., Jr.; Russell T.; and Blanche Porter.

J. Robert Kelley. The world's largest plant exclusively devoted to the manufacture of X-Ray apparatus for hospitals and surgical uses is at Covington—The Kelley-Koett Manufacturing Company. The founder of the business and president of the company is J. Robert Kelley, who some twenty odd years ago while in business at Boston became interested in the development and adaptation of X-Ray apparatus as an adjunct to surgery, a few years later established a small experimental plant at Covington, and his company has since been instrumental in perfecting the elaborate mechanisms now an indispensable part of the equipment of every modern hospital.

Mr. Kelley was born at Thessalia in Giles County, Virginia, November 17, 1871. His great-grandfather was a native of Dublin, Ireland, and settled early in life in Bland County, Virginia. The grandfather, Preston Kelley, was born in Virginia in 1798, and spent all his life as a planter and slave owner in Bland County, where he died in 1881. He married a Miss Sublet, a native of Virginia, who died at Thessalia. Matthew W. Kelley, father of the Covington manufacturer, was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, in 1847, was reared there, was married in Montgomery County, and after that lived in Thessalia, where he was a farmer and manufacturer of wagons. He was one of the youthful volunteers in the Confederate army, was a private soldier for two years, participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and afterward was assigned to duty with the Commissary Department, in charge of wagon trains of supplies. He was a democrat, and one of his deepest interests was the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He died at Thessalia in 1901. His wife was Frances Turner, who was born at Radford in Pulaski County, Virginia, in 1851, and died at Thessalia in 1889. She was of Scotch ancestry. Four of their children are still living. Thomas R. is a retired business man living on his estate near Baltimore. Rev. Charles W. Kelley was for a quarter of a century an active minister of the Holston Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in later years filled the pulpits of the Centenary Church at Knoxville, Tennessee, and the Trinity Church at Chattanooga. During the World war, too old to enlist, he volunteered as a Y. M. C. A. secretary and had charge of all the Red Triangle work at Brest, France. Since the war he has lived on the old homestead at Thessalia, Virginia. The youngest of the living children is Sarah Elizabeth, wife of J. W. Saylor, a prominent attorney at Knoxville, Tennessee.

J. Robert Kelley had only the ordinary advantages of the schools of Giles County, Virginia, first attending the country schools and later Thessalia Academy. At the age of twenty he began learning telegraphy, and for two years served an apprenticeship in a company store at Bramwell, West Virginia. After that until 1895 he was in the retail shoe business at Huntington, West Virginia, under the firm name of Robert Kelley & Company. On disposing of this business he went west and for two and a half years was manager of a large shoe house at Butte, Montana. He spent about a year at Boston, Massachusetts, in an advisory capacity in a large shoe factory.

Soon after the discovery of the X-Ray by Roentgen Mr. Kelley, foreseeing the great usefulness of the light as an adjunct in the medical and surgical field, employed his limited capital for experimental work, and after several years of not altogether encouraging experience, though confident of the future, he came to Covington and in 1902 opened a very small shop at the site of the present great industry, 212 West Fourth Street. The business was later incorporated as the Kelley-Koett Manufacturing Company. Mr. Kelley and his associates have kept the business growing, and have invested an immense amount of money in experimental work and improvement of their devices until it is no exaggeration to say that the world now looks to the Kelley-Koett Company for any of the most efficient and improved types of machinery described under the general term of X-Ray apparatus. Mr. Kelly is president of the company, the vice president is Albert B. Koett, and the secretary-treasurer is G. Edward Geise.

The nameplate of this manufacturing company at Covington is found on part of the equipment in many of the largest hospitals in the world, including that of the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota. During the World war the Government sent a special committee to the Kelley-Koett plant at Covington, and the experts of the plant were set to work designing and elaborating special instruments and apparatus to meet the needs and specifications for war use, both in the field and in the base hospitals. All the X-Ray portable apparatus that proved such an invaluable asset to the American army surgeons in the trenches and in the hospitals were designed and developed at the Covington plant, the great cost of designing and re-arranging the facilities of the plant for the manufacture being borne by the company as a patriotic contribution.

Mr. Kelley was also deeply interested in the success of the war as a patriotic citizen of Kenton County, and had charge of some of the drives for funds. Mr. Kelley, who is unmarried, is president of the Rotary Club of Covington, is a director in the First National Bank of Covington, a director in the Kentucky State Manufacturers' Association, a member of the Citizens' Patriotic League, the Industrial Club, and Covington Lodge No. 314 of the Elks. He is a prominent Mason, being affiliated with Covington Lodge No. 109, F. and A. M., Covington Chapter No 35, R. A M., Covington Commandery No. 7, K. T., Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite, and Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Louisville. In politics he is independent.

Hon. James Breathitt, an eminent attorney of Hopkinsville, is one of the most distinguished men Christian County has ever produced, and the county and city are proud of him and what he has accomplished. As attorney general of the state of Kentucky he wisely administered the affairs of his high office, and has in many other particulars lived up to the finest conceptions of his profession and the ideals of American manhood. His birth occurred at Hopkinsville, September 4, 1852, and he comes of a long line of distinguished ancestry which is traced back during the Colonial period of this country's history to representatives of the name who located in Virginia, coming here from Scotland.

The paternal grandfather was James Breathitt, who was born in Logan County, Kentucky, to which the family had migrated at an early date from Virginia, and he died at Hopkinsville in the early '30s. Not only was he one of the early settlers of the city, but he was a distinguished lawyer and was commonwealth attorney for this section of Western Kentucky. His brother, John Breathitt, was elected governor of Kentucky in 1832, and died at Frankfort, Kentucky, while in office. His son, John W. Breathitt, was born at Hopkinsville, and he died in this city in 1912, and he was the father of Hon. James Breathitt.

John W. Breathitt was reared, educated and married at Hopkinsville, where the whole of his useful life was spent. During the early part of his life he was a planter and slaveholder, but later on he was a dry-goods merchant. During the war between the two sections of the country he espoused the side of the North, and served in the Third Kentucky Cavalry, in the Union army, with the rank of major. His period of service extended over the entire war, and among other engagements he participated in the battles of Nashville and Murfreesboro, and in all of the important ones in General Sherman's March to the Sea. After the close of the war he returned to Hopkinsville, and, being elected county clerk, held that office through successive elections for twenty years. For eight years succeeding his termination of office as county clerk he was county judge of Christian County. Other honors were accorded him, for he served as postmaster of Hopkinsville under Presidents Harrison and McKinley, and died while in office. All of his mature years he was a stalwart republican and one of the leaders of his party in this part of the state. Early uniting with the Baptist Church, he continued one of the earnest and conscientious members of the local congregation at Hopkinsville until his death. A Mason, he belonged to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 37, F. & A. M. As a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, he had opportunity to meet his old comrades in arms both locally and at the annual encampments. In fact he was a very prominent citizen, and one of the most popular men in Christian County, as was evidenced that whenever his name appeared on the republican ticket for any office he received the support of republicans and democrats alike, for all knew that no better man could be found for the office in question. He married Miss Katherine Webber, who was born at Hopkinsville in 1831, and died at this city in 1910. She was a daughter of Dr. Augustine Webber, one of the earliest settlers of Hopkinsville, and a very prominent physician and surgeon of Christian County. Mr. and Mrs. John W. Breathitt had the following children born to them: Payton S., who is a retired farmer of Hopkinsville; Augustine, who is living retired at Hopkinsville, was at one time deputy postmaster and also served as deputy county clerk; Harvie W., who was an attorney and operator of a real-estate and abstract business at Hopkinsville, died at this city in 1906; Hon. James Breathitt, who was the fourth in order of birth; Elizabeth S., who is unmarried, and lives at Hopkinsville; Caroline, who married Robert S. Green, a traveling salesman, lives at Hopkinsville; John W., who was a merchant, died at Hopkinsville in 1895; and Katherine, who married Michael Griffin, a tobaccoist, of Murray, Kentucky.

James Breathitt was reared in his native city and attended its schools until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he left school and for the subsequent three years worked on a farm. He was then appointed deputy sheriff of Christian County, and served as such for a year. His father then made him a deputy county clerk, and for several years he made himself useful to him, the elder man then serving as county clerk. By this time the young man began to realize the advantage of proper training and decided to study law. With this end in view he attended Cumberland University, and was graduated from its law department in June, 1877, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Immediately thereafter he returned to his old home and established himself in a general civil and criminal law practice. He is a man of commanding intelligence and forcefulness, and is a natural leader of men. His fellow-citizens early recognized this and elected him attorney for the City of Hopkinsville soon after his admission to the bar, and he served very capably for one term. In 1881 he was elected to represent his district in the Lower House of the State Assembly, and served in the sessions of 1881 and 1882 and, being re-elected, served in those of 1885 and 1886. A man to whom increasing responsiblities come as a matter of course, and one who has always proven equal to every demand made upon him, no one was surprised when he was elected judge of the Third Judicial District to fill an unexpired term of two years, in 1897 and 1898, nor at his election to the office of county judge of Christian County in 1908 for a term of four years. In both offices he fully maintained the dignity of the office, and rendered some very remarkable decisions which proved his knowledge of the law and his understanding of its interpretation. In 1906 Mr. Breathitt was elected attorney general of Kentucky, and served with distinguished capability for four years, upon the expiration of his term of office returning to Hopkinsville and resuming his practice. His offices are located in the Bohn Building, opposite the Court House, at 2½ East Sixth Street.

Mr. Breathitt is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the late war he was one of the men of Christian County who exerted themselves to the utmost to assist in all of the local war work. He subscribed to all of the drives for war organizations and bonds to the limit of his resources. He owns a modern residence on South Virginia Street, which is one of the most attractive ones in the city.

In 1889 Mr. Breathitt was united in marriage with Miss Olivia Thompson, of Hopkinsville, a daughter of G. V. and Olivia (Ellis) Thompson, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Thompson was a tobaccoist and a prominent man of Hopkinsville. Mrs. Breathitt was graduated from the South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville. Mr. and Mrs. Breathitt became the parents of the following children: James, who attended Centre College of Danville, Kentucky, is an attorney and in partnership with his father; John W., who has a tobacco business at Murray, Kentucky, resides at Hopkinsville; Elizabeth O., who married Henry Stites, a railroad man, resides at Augusta, Georgia; Edward T., who works with the National Harvester Company, lives at Evansville, Indiana; Louise, who is at home; Julia A., who is attending Georgetown College at Georgetown, Kentucky; and Robert Ewing, who is attending the Naval Training Camp at the Great Lakes, Chicago, Illinois.

James Breathitt, Junior, volunteered in the naval aviation corps, and was trained in the aviation field at Boston, Massachusetts. The second son, John W. Breathitt, volunteered in the field aviation corps and was trained at Brooks Field, Texas, and commissioned a lieutenant. Edward T. Breathitt volunteered in the United States Navy, and was on the U. S. S. "Mongolia." Few families have so remarkable a war record, and it is pleasant to realize that while all of the sons enlisted, all of them came out of the war uninjured.

Mr. Breathitt is a man who has risen to great heights in his profession by his profound penetration, his power of analysis, the comprehensive grasp and strength of his understanding, and the firmness, frankness and integrity of his character. Both as an attorney in private practice and a public official of high standing he has reflected honor on his profession, his community and his own character and knowledge, and he has few equals and no superiors.

George Clifton Long. It is difficult for the biographer to sketch in the brief summary review to which he is confined the full activities of the life of a man who has by reason of his enterprise and good citizenship impressed his personality upon a certain community. An active career, marked by constant advancement, presents an interesting study; yet, to enumerate the various and varied steps by which the subject has arisen to the high position which is now his, to name in detail the minutiae of accomplishments which in his forward march have gathered and formulated finally into the complete and satisfactory whole, were to constitute a record which would far exceed the limits necessarily assigned to a work of this nature. The writer, therefore, is called upon to restrict himself to noting only the salient points of a direct bearing. The career of George Clifton Long has been a long and honorable one at Hopkinsville and includes thirty-one years of faithful service to the citizens of this community in the responsible position of president of the First National Bank.

Mr. Long was born while his mother was visiting at New Orleans, Louisiana, May 21, 1846, and is a son of Gabriel Brown and Martha Elizabeth (Thomson) Long. His paternal grandfather, Gabriel Long, was born at Culpeper Court House, Culpeper County, Virginia, and about 1808 came to Christian County, where he became a large owner of land, the present City of Hopkinsville occupying a part of the site of his farm. Here he engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life and died prior to the birth of his grandson. He was married in Virginia to Lucy Slaughter, who was born at Culpeper Court House and died at Hopkinsville.

Gabriel Brown Long was born in 1804, in Culpeper County, Virginia, and was a small child when brought by his parents to the locality of Hopkinsville, where he was reared, educated and married. On reaching his majority he adopted farming as his life work, and in this continued to be engaged during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1874. He was a republican in politics and fraternally a Mason, and he was a life-long and active supporter of the Christian Church and held an official position therein at the time of his demise. He married Miss Martha Elizabeth Thomson, daughter of John Thomson, who was born at Georgetown, Kentucky, and died at Hopkinsville. He was a pioneer of Christian County and land holder in the southern part of this county. After many years of successful participation in farming he retired from active pursuits and settled at Hopkinsville, where he died. Ten children were born to Gabriel B. and Martha E. Long, of whom were: Gabriel B., Jr., who died in childhood at Hopkinsville; Lucy, who also died when a child; Nannie, who died aged sixty-five years at Houston, Texas, as the widow of V. W. Crabb, a farmer and merchant who died at Hopkinsville; Fannie, who died at Hopkinsville, as the wife of the late E. L. Campbell, a former farmer; Kate, deceased, who was the wife of the late Dr. James A. Young, a former homeopathic physician of Hopkinsville; George Clifton; E. B., former president of the City Bank and Trust Company of Hopkinsville, who died at the age of sixty-eight years; Alexander, who died at Hopkinsville as a young man, when he accidentally shot himself; Smith, who met the same fate as his brother Alexander, dying in the same manner when still a young man; and Thomas W., former cashier of the First National Bank of Hopkinsville, who died in 1916.

George Clifton Long attended the rural schools of his native community, but received a large part of his educational training under the instruction of his mother, a splendid woman of scholarly attainments. Until he was twenty years of age he remained on the home farm, then becoming a clerk in a dry goods store at Hopkinsville, where he received his introduction to business methods, where he remained for two years. For a short time at this period he served as deputy county clerk of Christian County, and was then made chief clerk in the internal revenue office, under James A. Wallace, internal revenue collector of the Second District. In 1869 Mr. Long entered the Bank of Hopkinsville as bookkeeper, and subsequently was advanced to assistant cashier, a position which he retained until 1874. He then embarked in the tobacco warehouse business, with which he was identified four years, and in 1882 assisted in the organization of the City Bank and Trust Company, of which he became cashier, a position which he held until 1887. For something more than a year he was again engaged in the tobacco warehouse business, and in 1889 accepted the appointment as president of the First National Bank of Hopkinsville, which had been established the year previous. Mr. Long has remained as president of this institution to the present time, his fellow officials being: C. F. Jarrett, vice president; Ed. L. Weathers, vice president; Bailey Russell, cashier; and Guy Starling and Robert L. Gaines, assistant cashiers. The capital of the bank is $100,000, surplus $85,000, and deposits, $1,100,000. Its banking house is situated on the corner of Main and Ninth streets. This institution has an excellent reputation in banking circles, a standing that has been built up under Mr. Long's administration and careful guidance and carefully guarded by him. He has other connections and is president of the Hopkinsville Building and Loan Association, a position which he has held for a number of years, and is a stockholder in the Hopkinsville Realty Company. The First National Bank was the first at Hopkinsville to start a drive during the World war, and throughout that period Mr. Long exerted himself to the limit as president of the institution and in his private capacity as a citizen to further the movements inaugurated by the Government for the raising of funds to assist the cause of American arms. Mr. Long's political allegiance is with the republican party, although he has not been a seeker for personal preference. He and the members of his family belong to the Christian Church, in which he is a trustee and elder. He owns a modern residence at 1402 South Virginia Street, a comfortable and commodious home where the many friends of Mr. Long and his wife always receive a gracious welcome.

In 1873, at Petersburg, Virginia, Mr. Long was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Rowlett, daughter of Thomas and Amanda (Abernathy) Rowlett, both deceased, Mr. Rowlett having been formerly a commission merchant and farmer at Petersburg. Mrs. Long received an advanced education in her youth and is a woman of numerous accomplishments. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Long: Elizabeth, who died in 1906, at Hopkinsville, as the wife of Dr. F. Manning Brown, a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, in which he has gained something more than a local reputation; Henrietta, the wife of Dr. C. H. Tandy, a practicing dentist of Hopkinsville; Nannie, the wife of R. E. Coates, a druggist of Hopkinsville; George C., Jr., secretary of the Phoenix Insurance Company, of Hartford, Connecticut, and a resident of that city; and Katherine, the wife of S. P. White, an attorney of Hopkinsville.

Rev. Aloysius George Meyering. One of the scholarly divines of Daviess County, Rev. Aloysius George Meyering, pastor of Saint Anthony's Catholic Church of Browns Valley, Daviess County, was born at Rochester, New York, August 28, 1871, a son of John and Catherine (Moeller) Meyering. His parents were natives of Germany. Reared in his native city, Father Meyering received his literary education in Saint Andrew's Seminary of Rochester and his theological and philosophical training at Saint Bernard's Seminary. On June 11, 1898, he was ordained a priest by Bishop McQuaid. Later he took a post graduate course at the Royal Imperial University of Innsbruck, Tyrol.

Aloysius G. Meyering

Returning to the United States, Reverend Meyering came to Louisville, Kentucky, and was placed in charge of the missions at Irvington and Brandenburg, Kentucky, by the bishop of the diocese. In the fall of 1902 he was made resident pastor of Saint Anthony's Church of Browns Valley, and in addition he attends the Saint Charles Church at Livermore and the Saint Joseph's Church at Central City, Kentucky.

While it was a mission Saint Anthony's Church was attended by Revs. Fitzgerald and McConnel of Owensboro, and they said mass and preached in homes until Reverend Meyering came here. In 1903, under the administration of Father Meyering, the old Saint Martin's Church house was removed to the present site at Browns Valley, and reconstructed to meet the requirements of the parish. This edifice was enlarged in 1910. The land on which it stands was acquired in 1902. In 1903 a rectory was built, and was occupied January 1, 1904. In 1913 Father Meyering established a parochial school with thirty-six pupils, and during the succeeding seven years this membership has been increased to 102 pupils. The modern two-story and basement frame building serves both as a school structure and a home for the five sisters who are the teachers of the school.

Reverend Meyering is a thorough-going priest, progressive and popular, not only with his own people, but with all classes as well. At Central City the Saint Joseph congregation was but a mission when he began his attendance there, but now there is a fine church edifice, which is thoroughly ecclesiastical and of English gothic style in construction. His work at Browns Valley, Central City and Livermore has resulted in gratifying results, having a school with three sisters at Livermore in charge, and his labors have been so increased that an assistant pastor is much needed.

Col. Andrew Cowan was a resident of Louisville over half a century, locating in that city and beginning his business career soon after the Civil war, in which he had served with the highest distinction in all the ranks from private to colonel. The city of Louisville is permanently indebted to him for the rare constructive spirit which he exemplified. He was primarily responsible for the development of an adequate park system in the city, and his time and abilities were generously bestowed in various other lines of public spirit. As a business man he gave Louisville prominence as one of the great leather manufacturing centers of the country, and built up a business which is still continued by his son.

Col. Andrew Cowan was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, September 29, 1841, and died at his home in Louisville August 23, 1919, at the age of seventy-eight. In 1848 his parents, William S. and Margaret Isabella (Campbell) Cowan, came to the United States and located at Auburn, New York, where he grew up and acquired his early education. He was in college at Madison, now Colgate University, when the storm of civil war broke. He was the first student of that institution to respond to the call for volunteers issued by President Lincoln in 1861. The following day he enlisted as a private in what became Company B of the Nineteenth New York Infantry, mustered into service May 23, 1861. With this command he was on duty at Washington and in Virginia until September. He was then assigned to assist in raising the first New York Independent Battery, and was commissioned senior first lieutenant of the organization November 23, 1861. This battery was at first in Gen. W. F. Smith's Division of the Fourth Corps Army of the Potomac, and subsequently the division became the Second Division of the Sixth Corps, and served as such until the end of the war. In April, 1862, he was promoted to captain, to rank from January of that year, and was the active commander of the battery until December, 1864, when he was assigned to command the Artillery Brigade of the 6th Corps. For courage and gallantry at the battle of the Wilderness he was brevetted major and became commander of the Artillery Brigade following the battle of Cedar Creek. In the campaign preceding the surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox he was brevetted lieutenant colonel. He and his battery participated in all the important battles of the Army of the Potomac. He was severely wounded at Opequan Creek, near Winchester, and at Gettysburg his battery was stationed in the center of Cemetery Ridge when Longstreet's great charge took place on the third day. The last engagement in which the battle participated was at Sailor's Creek, Virginia, three days before the surrender at Appomattox.

After a continuous service of more than four years Colonel Cowan was mustered out June 23, 1865. In September, 1895, at the reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic at Louisville, Colonel Cowan was presented by the surviving officers and soldiers of the battery with a handsome Sixth Corps Artillery Brigade badge, inscribed with his titles from private to Chief of Artillery Sixth Corps.

Following a brief residence at Indianapolis Colonel Cowan came to Louisville July 1, 1886, and with James E. Mooney and Charles H. Mantle established the firm of Mooney, Mantle & Cowan, wholesale dealers in leather, railway and mill supplies. Subsequently the business was reorganized as Andrew Cowan & Company, manufacturers and dealers in leather and leather belting, jobbers of railway and mill supplies, saddlery, hardware and automobile supplies, this being one of the largest firms of this kind in the middle west. Colonel Cowan remained the active head of this business until his death. He was also president of the National Oak Leather Company of Louisville, and vice president of the Louisville Leather Company, both leading industries of Louisville, and was a director of the National Bank of Commerce and the Fidelity and Columbia Trust Company.

As a leader among local citizens in the matter of the establishment of a park system Colonel Cowan first presented his views before the Salmagundi Club. He was a member of the committee of that club to explain the plans to the Commercial Club, and subsequently did much of the work necessary to secure the approval of the Legislature to the Park Act. He was one of the first elected park commissioners, being chosen on a non-partisan ticket for three years. This commission began its work in 1891, purchasing the park lands and entrusting their development to the great landscape architect Frederic Law Olmstead. Colonel Cowan was defeated for reelection as an independent candidate, but soon afterward was chosen to fill a vacancy on the Park Board and remained one of its valuable members until 1895. In 1907 he was again elected a member of the board on the Fusion ticket, and served as president of the board until he removed his residence beyond the city limits.

Colonel Cowan also became deeply interested in the subject of industrial training as a feature of public school education. He brought this subject to the attention of the Conversation Club of Louisville, and subsequently used his influence as a member of the club committee and as a private citizen to secure the cooperation and action of the School Board. The plan was first tested with one class in the Male High School, and out of the movement came the Manual Training High School Building, donated to the city through the generosity of Mr. A. V. duPont.

One of the strongest claims of philanthropy upon his time and means was the education of the blind. In 1897 he became a trustee of the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, an institution printing the text books used in all state schools for the blind, and was president of the printing house from 1906 to 1918. He also served as president of the Kentucky Institution for the Education of the Blind from 1896 to 1900, and again from 1908 to 1912. He served as a charter member and counselor of the Associated Charities of Louisville, trustee of the Louisville Free Kindergarten Association, the Business Woman's Club and other organizations of a similar nature. Colonel Cowan was an active republican, and was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Chicago in 1908. He was a Baptist, being a member of the Broadway Church at Louisville. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, served as president of the Society of the Army of the Potomac from 1911 to 1916, was commander of the Ohio Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion from 1914 to 1916, and its junior vice commander in chief from 1915 to 1918, and was an honorary member of the Kentucky Orphans Brigade. He was a life member of the American Citizens Association and at Louisville was active in the Pendennis, Salmagundi, Conversation and Filson clubs.

On February 23, 1864, Colonel Cowan married Mary E. Adsit, daughter of Rev. Samuel Adsit, of Palmyra, New York. She died in September, 1867, leaving one son, Albert Andrew Cowan, who died April 4, 1917. He was for many years a member of the firm Andrew Cowan & Company. On January 15, 1876, Colonel Cowan married Anna L. Gilbert, of Utica, New York, a daughter of Elisha Morgan Gilbert, and by this union one son was born, Gilbert S. Cowan, of whom further mention is made. Mrs. Cowan still survives.

Gilbert S. Cowan, a son of the late Col. Andrew Cowan and his wife, Anna L. (Gilbert) Cowan, was for many years actively associated with his father in business at Louisville, and since the death of his father has been president of Andrew Cowan & Company.

He was born at Louisville October 24, 1876, and had every advantage of early training. He graduated from Yale University in 1898, and at once took an active place in the firm of Andrew Cowan & Company. He became secretary and treasurer of the National Oak Leather Company, filling that office for about fifteen years in addition to his other duties with Andrew Cowan & Company. He was vice president of the latter, and on the death of his father in August, 1919, succeeded to the presidency.

The son of a distinguished soldier, he was eager to do his part in the World war, and on June 12, 1918, was commissioned a captain of the Quartermaster's Corps, and served until discharged January 31, 1919. He is a memer of the Loyal Legion, the American Legion and the Military Order of Foreign Wars. Mr. Cowan is a republican, and belongs to the Pendennis, Country and River Valley clubs.

On June 5, 1901, he married Miss Mary Embry Curd, a native of Louisville and a daughter of James P. and Margaret (Swearingen) Curd. Mr. and Mrs. Cowan have two children, Gilbert S., Jr., and Embry S.

Robert Cannon Judge. The most capable, successful and prominent men are not always those who start out in life with the ambition to achieve something especially great and famous, but oftentimes are the men who at the outset place due valuation upon honor, integrity and determination. Possessing these qualities as a capital, Robert Cannon Judge entered upon his business career when seventeen years of age, and during the course of years has won for himself a recognized position in the commercial world of Louisville, where he is vice president of the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company.

Mr. Judge was born at Louisville, January 1, 1861, a son of Theodore and Laura C. (Cannon) Judge. His father, who was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, was a steamboat owner and a man well known in his day, but died before his career had fairly started, in 1862, while his mother, a native of Louisville, born in 1840, died in 1888. There were two children: Robert Cannon and Laura, the latter of whom died in infancy. The parents were members of the Episcopal Church. Robert Cannon Judge was only two years of age at the time of his father's death, and his boyhood knew much of hard work and struggle. He acquired his education by attendance at the public school, and when seventeen years of age secured a clerical position in the offices of the Franklin Fire Insurance Company, a concern with which he was connected for about three years. He then entered the office of the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, where his advancement was rapid. Starting as an office clerk, he was advanced to assistant bookkeeper and later to city salesman, from which latter position it was but a step to a traveling salesmanship, and for about twenty years he was one of the best known paint representatives on the road in the South. When he retired from traveling he took the position of secretary of the Louisville Lead and Color Company, which is a subsidiary concern of the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company, of which later concern Mr. Judge is now vice president. This company was established in 1867 by Charles Peaslee and George and J. W. Gaulbert, and deals in paints, oils, varnishes, brushes, window and plate glass, bottles, corks, incandescent electric lamps, electric glassware, lamps, chimneys, table glassware, fruit jars and rubber-fixt roofing.

Mr. Judge is a director in the First National Bank and the Kentucky Title, Savings Bank and Trust Company. He never measures anything by the inch rule of self, but seeks to gauge all things by that expression of public opinion which has its foundation in the leadership of men and master minds. He claims no part in the development of the city, yet the extent and importance of his business interests have made him prominent in various circles of Louisville. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Elks and the Masons, and he belongs to DeMolay Commandery, K. T. It has been truly said, "Success is a relative term. It is not synonymous with money getting or knowledge getting. It means rather the result one attains by living a wholesome, full life. It is the attainment of right endeavor." Considered by that standard Mr. Judge is certainly a successful man.

He married April 30, 1889, Miss Lucy Gray Rogers, daughter of Dr. Coleman Rogers, a well-known Louisville physician and surgeon of an earlier day. She died without issue in August, 1891. On December 22, 1896, occurred his union with the present Mrs. Judge, formerly Miss Frances Bates Newman.

Enoch Grehan. After many years of practical service in the ranks of journalism, with an experience ranging from reporter to managing editor, Enoch Grehan was called in 1914 to establish the Department of Journalism at the University of Kentucky, and has been at the head of that department ever since.

His father was a scholar in his day, the late Bernard Newton Grehan, who died in 1907, at the age of eighty-two. Born in County Roscommon, Ireland, he was the son of a prominent Irish business man and manufacturer, and his early education was carefully supervised. At the age of seventeen Mr. Grehan came to America by sailing vessel landing at New Orleans. He soon afterward entered Bethany College, Virginia. Bethany College was a school founded by Alexander Campbell, the great theologian and founder of the Church of the Disciples. Bernard Grehan subsequently entered the ministry of the Reformed Church and became a widely known preacher, a vocation he followed for seven years. While in the ministry he came to Kentucky, taught school in various parts of the state, and subsequently became commissioner of schools during the regime of Dr.

Robert Breckenridge. During much of the war he was employed as a trader for the Confederate Government. The war over, he returned to Fayette County and continued teaching more or less every year until past seventy. He organized and conducted the first Teachers Institute in the State of Kentucky, and was frequently called the father of the Teachers Institute. He was a scholar in Latin and Greek, and believed those languages and mathematics the foundation of all education. During the '50s he wrote two books, one on Calculus and another on general branches of mathematics. He acted as moderator in the noted debate between Alexander Campbell and Bishop Purcell. He was a democrat in politics.

Bernard Newton Grehan married Martha Gill, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and died in 1902, at the age of sixty-five. They were the parents of six children, three sons and three daughters, only three of whom are now living. The fourth in age is Enoch Grehan, born in Fayette County, May 15, 1870. He was carefully educated at home, also in the public schools of Lexington, and was graduated with the degree of A. B. from Transylvania College, then Kentucky University, in 1894. During his senior year he represented Transylvania in the State Oratorical Contest, in which six colleges competed, and he won the diamond medal. One of the judges of the contest was the late Senator Goebel He was also class speaker at the commencement. Immediately on leaving college Mr. Grehan became a reporter for the old Lexington Press, and was employed by that daily for three years. He then became city editor, and when the paper was merged with the Transcript he continued as city editor. When the Press passed into the hands of Samuel G. Boyle and later was purchased by Desha Breckenridge and its name changed to the Lexington Herald, Mr. Grehan became city editor of the paper. Subsequently he had been news editor of the Lexington Leader, and for six years held that position. Later he became editor of the Evening Gazette, but later still returned to the Herald as news editor, editorial paragrapher and dramatic critic. In 1914 he was invited by the University of Kentucky to establish its Department of Journalism. During the university administration of President H. L. Barker he served as secretary of the board of trustees. He is also a member of the committee on Memorial Buildings of the University. Mr. Grehan is editor of the State Press Bulletin, chairman of the committee on University Publicity, member of the Athletic Council and member of the University Extension Committee.

On January 20, 1903, he married Miss Jennie L. Embry, a native of Fayette County and daughter of Jacob L. and Allie (Beasley) Embry. Her mother was a native of Garrard County, Kentucky. Both parents are now deceased. Mrs. Grehan is the eldest of six children.

Clarence Le Bus is easily one of the most distinguished Kentuckians of the present generation. Probably no one man has done more to influence and provide the satisfactory solution of problems of agriculture, particularly as affecting the tobacco interests, and considering the tremendous results that have followed from his own enterprise and that of other members of his family it is possible to refer only briefly to his personal achievements at this point.

His father was the late Lewis Le Bus, whose life was also one of great interest to Kentucky. Lewis Le Bus was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, in 1834, his parents and grandfather having a few years previously come from Alsace, France. Lewis Le Bus acquired a substantial education, was a teacher for a time, and in 1855 came to Harrison County, Kentucky, where for five years he continued teaching. In 1860 he married Martha Garnett, whose grandfather was Josiah Whittaker, a famous Methodist minister.

Of Lewis Le Bus it has been written that "always frugal, even the small compensation which he received as a teacher was not expended on himself, and each year enough was saved of his earnings to buy and pay for a few acres of land. His early manner of living he followed until he was thirty-five or forty years of age. He was never a speculator. Once an acre of land became transferred to him it became the property of his descendants. Either under his personal supervision or through tenants his holdings were made to produce their full capacity. With each successive year his acres increased until he had acquired between $2,500 and $3,000 in Bourbon and Harrison counties." He did what he could to support the cause of the Union during the Civil war, served as sheriff of his county, was deputy collector of internal revenue for a time, and took an active part in republican party management, but his chief interest was farming, and his later investments in land and real estate gave him interests in Alabama and Ohio and in California. He removed to Los Angeles in 1893, and died at his home in the West, October 31, 1905.

Clarence Le Bus, one of the several sons of Lewis Le Bus to reach mature years, was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, December 29, 1862, and under the supervision and direction of his father was well trained in the practical lessons of business. He also had a good education, but had to leave off his studies at the University of Michigan during his sophomore year on account of an affliction of the eyes. As a young man he learned farming, was employed in a general store, and after leaving university worked in the internal revenue collector's office, and in 1886 became a solicitor for the Bodmann Warehouse Company of Cincinnati, then one of the best known tobacco warehouses in the West. He soon attracted the attention of tobacco buyers and producers because of the extraordinary knowledge he soon acquired and revealed concerning the quality of all the grades that were sold on the Cincinnati market, which was principally a Burley leaf market. But he was not satisfied to be a buyer or dealer in tobacco alone, and even from youth his great ambition was for the creative side of industry, mainly along the substantial lines laid down by his father as a land owner and farmer. Leaving the employ of the Bodmann Company and refusing some flattering offers, he returned to Harrison County and devoted his energies to farming, studying the adaptability of the various soils; and by the time he was thirty-five years of age he had acquired by purchase some 2,000 acres in Bourbon and Harrison counties for an average price of $40 an acre. In selecting the land he desired his judgment was always unerring. He believed, as his father had believed, that land should be purchased to have and to hold and not to sell. Consequently he always bought the best. Results have amply vindicated the wisdom of his course, since the values of some of the land he bought twenty and thirty years ago have increased four or five and even ten fold. Two or three years ago Mr. Le Bus was credited with the ownership of about 12,000 acres of land, divided into nearly fifty farms. Much the greater part of it was employed for grazing purposes, and of the 3,000 acres under cultivation 1,000 were in tobacco. His holdings are located in Harrison, Bourbon, Fayette, Henry and Bracken counties, and include some of the famous farms of the noted Blue Grass region, distinguished not only for their value and productiveness but also for the prominence of their owners. The beautiful place where Mr. Le Bus and family have had their home for several years is the Hinata Farm, about five miles from Lexington on the Russell Cave Pike. As a farmer and land owner he has worked out some tremendous results affecting not only Kentucky but American agriculture, since his methods of management, of handling the soil and the crops are contributing directly to the larger body of knowledge that must in the near future govern American agriculture. The achievements which have been most written about, however, are concerned with his prominence as a tobacco grower and leadership among the tobacco producers of Kentucky in reorganizing that industry to the end of protecting growers from the so-called tobacco trust.

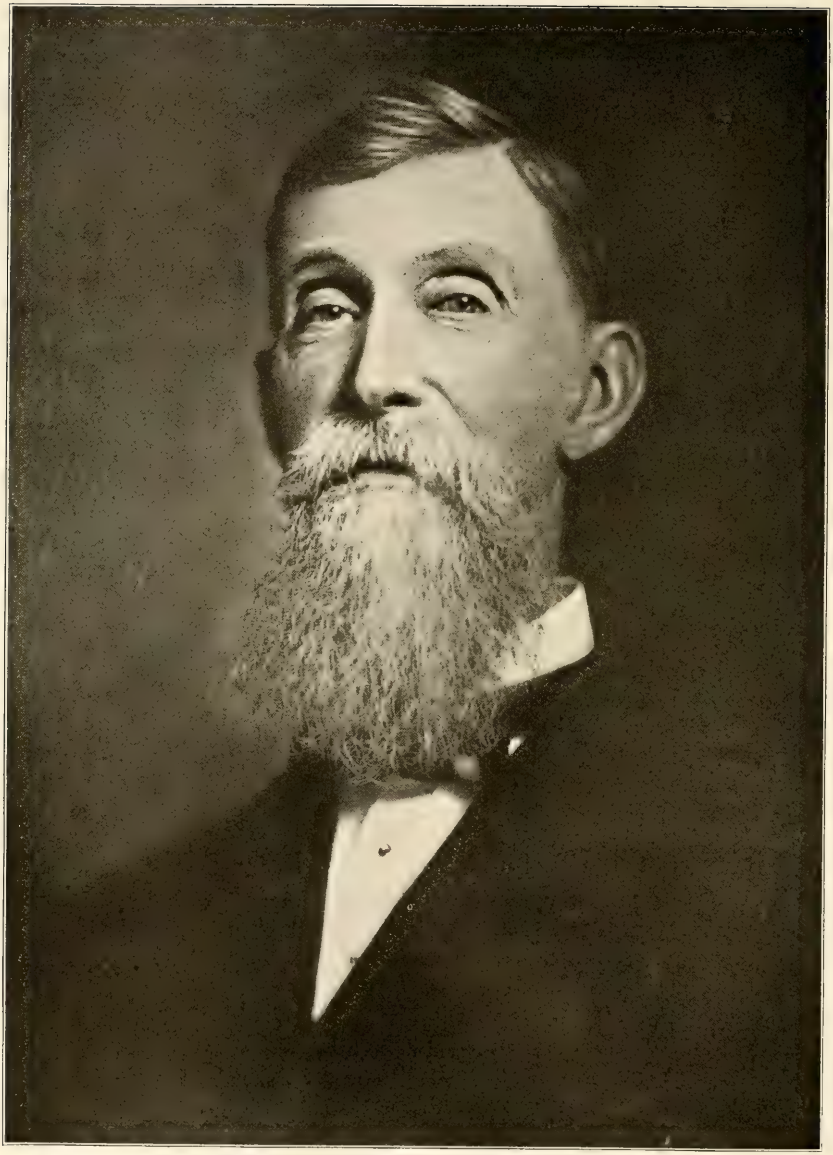
Writing in the spring of 1917, Judge Charles Kerr outlined some of the larger achievements of Clarence Le Bus in the following paragraphs: "Fifteen years ago Kentucky tobacco could not be grown for the price for which it was then selling. Each year he produced his regular crops, however, believing some relief ultimately must be found. Finally, with that energy which has characterized all his undertakings he undertook to organize a pool among the producers, not for the purpose of an unlawful combination, but for the purpose of giving the producer a fair price for his product. At first the butt of ridicule, his purposes soon became apparent to the dealers and an effort was made to circumvent his activities by paying him a large price for his accumulated crops of several years. This he scorned and refused to sell, except through the society which he had organized.

"At a time when the fortunes of all the Kentucky growers as well as his own hung in the balance he resolutely refused an offer which was within one cent a pound of what he asked. He said the extra cent meant a million dollars to the producers of Kentucky and not until he got it did he consent to a sale of the holdings of the entire pool, his own included.

"As president of the Burley Tobacco Company he has been a factor in the tobacco interests of Kentucky that has been felt alike by the producers and the buyers. With indomitable courage and determination he created an organization which owns seventeen warehouses, and besides these sales and storage houses it owns a tobacco factory in Louisville, manufacturing a number of well known grades of smoking and chewing tobacco.

"What this man of energy and purpose has done others might do. In the conduct of his business he has taken rank with creative wealth. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people have found lucrative employment and the means of livelihood through the methods adopted by him in the conduct of his business. The value of tobacco and its prominence as a distinctive Kentucky product are due more to his efforts than to any one man in Kentucky.



"What with attention to a systematic, intelligent management of Central Kentucky farming may be made to yield is abundantly exemplified in his success, and while he has acquired a large holding of the choicest lands in the state, the products of those lands have so increased in value through his efforts that it may be easier for others to accomplish what he has done than it has been for him. His career has been here recited in order that there might be created a wider interest in the productive value of our own Kentucky lands than may be found elsewhere. He has not succeeded without meeting discouragements that might have appalled one of less determination. Like all positive characters, he has encountered opposition, but these he has met as becometh a man of dominant purpose and the results are worthy of the man."

Clarence Le Bus in politics has been an independent republican, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. On November 5, 1896, he married one of Kentucky's most beautiful women, Miss Mary Frazer, of a prominent old Kentucky family, daughter of Noah W. Frazer of Harirson County, while her mother was a daughter of Thomas E. Dunlap of Shelby County. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Le Bus have two children: Frazer Dunlap, born October 11, 1897, who married Elvina Stoll; and Clarence, Jr. Frazer Dunlap Le Bus and Clarence Le Bus, Jr. are both actively associated with their father in his farming, and represent the third successive generation of the family in Kentucky agriculture. Both were born at the family home, then at Cynthiana, Kentucky, and both completed their literary educations in a private school at Asheville, North Carolina, but for several years have been busily engaged in the management of the Hinata Farm.

Wesley P. Dalton is one of the progressive and representative young business men of his native city, and the garage and automobile business in which he is associated with Latham Davis represents the most important, as well as the oldest, enterprise of this kind at Hopkinsville, the judicial center and metropolis of Christian County. Aside from the prestige which attaches to Mr. Dalton in connection with business activities in this city, his is the distinction of having given loyal and gallant service with the American Expeditionary Forces in France within the climacteric period of the great World war, as will be more fully noted in later paragraphs.

Wesley P. Dalton was born at Hopkinsville, on the 5th of October, 1896, and is a son of Hilliard M. and Cora Belle (Payne) Dalton. Hilliard M. Dalton was born near Springfield, Tennessee, where he was reared and educated, and he was a young man when he came to Hopkinsville, where he became a successful rock contractor and where he passed the remainder of his life. He was born in the year 1873, and was only thirty-three years of age at the time of his death, in 1906. He was a republican in political allegiance and was an active and earnest member of the Baptist Church, as is also his widow, who was born at Hopkinsville in 1877, and who still maintains her home in this city. Hilliard M. Dalton was a young man of fine personality, and his circle of friends was coincident with that of his acquaintances. He was a popular and appreciative member of Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is survived by one child,—he whose name initiates this review.

In the public schools of Hopkinsville Wesley P. Dalton continued his studies until his graduation in the high school as a member of the class of 1915, and for 2½ years thereafter he was a student in the celebrated Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana. He was there pursuing his studies when the nation became involved in the World war, and he withdrew from the university to enter the service of his country on the 1st of January, 1918. He was sent to Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he was in the Third Officers' Training Corps and where he was assigned to the Eighty-third Division. On the 1st of May, 1918, he was transferred to Camp Jackson, South Carolina, and on the 23d of the same month he sailed for France, from the port of New York City. After his arrival in France he entered the Saumur Artillery Training School, on the 10th of June, and on the 19th of the following month he received a commission as second lieutenant of field artillery. He was graduated in the Saumur Artillery School on the 28th of August, and was assigned to the air service, in connection with which he received special training as an aerial observer at Tours, where he was graduated in the training school October 30, 1918. With utmost loyalty and zest Mr. Dalton thus prepared himself for active service, and he further fortified himself by his effective work at the Second Aerial Observation School at Camp Souge, near the City of Bordeaux, where he assisted in training other young men for artillery and aerial-observation service, in both of which departments he had become exceptionally efficient. On the 18th of November he was assigned to service with the One Hundred and Fourth Aero Squadron, as an observer, and in this service he continued during the remainder of his stay in France. He sailed for his native land January 16, 1919, and landed on the 29th of that month. At Garden City, Long Island, he received his honorable discharge on the 3rd of February, and he then returned to his native city, where he has since been actively engaged in the automobile business. He became one of the principals in the Dalton-Davis Motor Company, which maintained headquarters at the corner of Tenth and Liberty streets, and on the 1st of January, 1920, he and his associate, Latham Davis, purchased the plant, offices and business of the Ideal Motor Company at 208-210 North Main Street, where they own a modern and finely equipped garage, with well appointed offices and with all the facilities that mark the up-to-date establishment of the kind. This business is the oldest in the city, its inception having occurred in 1913, and it is one of the most substantial and important enterprises of the kind in this section of Kentucky. Messrs. Dalton and Davis sold their original garage and business in February, 1920, about one month after assuming control of their present plant.

Captain Dalton retains lively interest in military affairs and holds commission as captain of field artillery in the Kentucky National Guard. At the time of this writing, in the autumn of 1920, he is perfecting the organization of a battery of artillery in his home city. He is independent in politics, he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church, are popular factors in the representative social activities of the community and reside with his widowed mother on Alumni Avenue.

On the 6th of November, 1919, was solemnized the marriage of Captain Dalton to Miss Elizabeth Cayce, daughter of Delbert D. and Rebecca (Dillman) Cayce, of Hopkinsville, where Mr. Cayce is president and general manager of the Cayce-Yost Company, conducting one of the largest hardware and agricultural implement establishments in this section of the state. Mrs. Dalton was reared and educated at Hopkinsville and was here graduated in the high school.

Captian Dalton is a scion of an old and honored family of Tennessee, and prior to his birth his grandfather, Wesley Dalton, died at the old home near Springfield, that state. The original American progenitors of the Dalton family came from Ireland and settled in Virginia prior to the War of the Revolution.

William Russell Stone was one of the worthiest and most highly esteemed citizens of the community south of Lexington, on the Fayette-Jessamine County line. He bought, owned and developed extensive farming interests in that locality, and the home where he lived so many years amid the comforts he enjoyed is on the Nicholasville Pike, seven miles south of Lexington but in Jessamine County.

Mr. Stone was born near Lexington January 15, 1843, and died August 20, 1920, in his seventy-eighth year. He was a son of James and Nancy (Russell) Stone. His grandfather, Jacob Stone, was a farmer and gentleman of the old school. James Stone spent his life as a farmer in this section of Kentucky and died when past eighty. He had two other sons, John Rogers and Barton W. Stone, the former going to Southern Kentucky, while Barton lived as a farmer in Fayette County. He was named in honor of the old pioneer minister Barton Stone, a close friend of his father, Jacob Stone.

William Russell Stone married in 1864 Eliza Jane Robb, of Jessamine County, daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Jameson) Robb. Her present home is about four miles from the old Robb homestead, now occupied by her youngest brother, Benjamin F., a bachelor, and her maiden sister, Bettie Filene. Soon after his marriage Mr. Stone moved to his present locality. The house was built by Rankin Roberts, but was still new when Mr. Stone acquired it. He had about sixteen hundred acres in various farms and more than a thousand in his home place, situated on the Nicholasville Pike and also intercepted by the Southern Railroad and the Interurban. He also had a large farm in Fayette County, three miles nearer Lexington. Mr. Stone frequently remarked that he loved to make money and also to spend it, and that statement was really characteristic of his life and character. He was a hard worker, an intelligent manager, and thoroughly public spirited and generous in all his ways and interests. Some of his last thoughts and plans were directed toward repairing and rebuilding his residence. He was a stockholder in various banks and in a tobacco warehouse, and was one of the extensive tobacco growers in his section. He bought his land when prices were comparatively cheap, and always exercised a great deal of discretion in his investments. He was a voter but never an aspirant for public office. Outside of his home and farm his sustaining interest for many years was the Providence Christian Church. He served it as an elder, was a liberal contributor to its maintenance, and also provided for it in his will. He was largely instrumental in securing the erection of the handsome new church building which stands just across the road from his home. His home was the place of entertainment for the preachers and was widely known otherwise for its generous hospitality.

Mrs. Stone is now the oldest member in continuous years of membership of this church, having united with it when she was eleven years of age. Mrs. Stone has two children: Essie L., wife of A. M. Land; and Willie Jeannette, Mrs. George L. Dale.

George L. Dale has his time occupied by an extensive farming interest in Fayette County, but recently in order to educate his children moved his home to a place on the Nicholasville Pike, just out of the City of Lexington. He has a thoroughly modern new brick house, and from that location is able to give personal supervision to his interests both in the country and in the city.

Mr. Dale was born at Eminence, Kentucky, November 19, 1880, a son of Alexander Campbell and Mary Elizabeth (Crum) Dale. His grandfather, Newton Dale, was born and lived all his life at Nortonsville in Woodford County, where he died when past seventy. The Dale family came from Virginia to Kentucky at an early day. Newton Dale had a family of six daughters and three sons. The daughters were: Jennie, who became the wife of Thomas Noah, who is still living, past eighty, at Frankfort; Lena, who lives at Charlesville, Tennessee, widow of Elijah Beach; Mit, of San Diego, California, widow of W. A. Broadhurst, a minister of the Christian Church; Jerry, who married Jerry Dean, and both died in Texas; Lulu, who became the wife of Silas Neal and both died in Woodford County; Anna was the wife of John Boone, who is still living, past eighty. The sons were Alexander Campbell, Benjamin, who married Sarah Neal and died in Oklahoma, and Noah. Benjamin first removed to Independence, Missouri, and thence to Oklahoma. Noah was a prominent minister of the Christian Church, a great evangelist, and did much work for that denomination in Indiana and elsewhere.

Alexander C. Dale married Mary Elizabeth Crum in Oldham County, where he was reared. She is still living at Eminence, Kentucky. Alexander C. Dale was a farmer in Henry County and died in 1900. He had two sons, the older, Horace Crum Dale, being cashier of the Deposit Bank at Eminence.

George L. Dale was educated in the schools at Eminence, graduated from the Academy there under Professor C. M. Arnold, and also took a course in Transylvania University. After leaving college in 1899 he took charge of the home farm and remained there until 1903, when he married Miss Willie J. Stone. Mrs. Dale is a daughter of the late William R. Stone, one of the most successful farmers and one of the best known citizens of Fayette County, whose career is told in the preceding pages. Mr. and Mrs. Dale have two children, William Stone Dale, aged fourteen, and Mary Eliza, aged eleven.

At her marriage Mrs. Dale's father gave her a farm in Jessamine County, five miles from the Stone homestead. In 1908 they returned to the vicinity of the Stone farm and lived there until 1919, when they removed to the home near Lexington above noted. Mrs. Dale also has a place of five hundred and forty acres on Clay's Mill Pike, the old Sayre farm, which she inherited from her father and which is one of the finest farms of the Blue Grass region. Mr. Dale in addition to his farming interests is a director in the Burley Tobacco Company and a stockholder in Tattersall's Warehouse. He is a democrat in politics.

Hon. Robert A. Cook, one of the distinguished members of the Christian County bar, now engaged in practice at Hopkinsville, is a man of broad outlook and wide experience, whose duties have been many and varied and included those pertaining to the office of assistant secretary of state for Kentucky. He was born in Christian County, February 3, 1874, a son of Isaac A. Cook, a native of Tennessee, born in 1840.

Issac A. Cook was reared in Eastern Tennessee and lived in McMinn County, that state until he was twelve years of age. His parents then moved to the vicinity of Hopkinsville, and he assisted his father in the farm work and has always been engaged in farming, now owning a valuable farm of 20 acres located five miles west of Hopkinsville, where he carries on general farming and stockraising according to modern methods and with remarkably successful results. In politics he is a republican. Espousing the cause of the Union during the war between the two sections of the country, he enlisted in the Union army as a member of Company I, Seventeenth Volunteer Infantry, and later was in the Twenty-fifth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, participating in the battle of Shiloh, where his brother, Wichliffe Cook, was killed in action; the battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and was with General Sherman in his March to the Sea. Isaac A. Cook was married to Narcissus Armstrong, who was born in Christian County, Kentucky, in 1847, and they became the parents of the following children: Walter, who died at the age of thirteen years; Edward E., who is a liveryman, lives at Hopkinsville; Robert A., who is the third in order of birth; Charles W., who is a ranchman of Los Angeles, California; James H., who is on his father's farm; Clifton Pratt, who died at the age of twenty-three years, was a farmer; Ben H., who is mentioned at length below; and Essie, who married George Diuquid, an employe of the Standard Oil Company, resides at Hopkinsville.

Ben H. Cook, brother of Robert A. Cook, and himself a very prominent man, was born at Hopkinsville, March 2, 1889. He attended the local schools and the Kentucky State Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky, leaving the latter in 1910. He then taught school in Christian County until August 12, 1920, when he was appointed county superintendent of schools for Christian County, and is now holding that office. He is one of the highly educated men of this part of the state, and one of the most popular educators of his time. His offices are in the court house. His political convictions are the same as those of his father, and he is a republican. The Christian Church holds his membership, and he is earnest in his support of the local congregation. During the late war Superintendent Cook was a zealous participant in the local activities, and was thoroughly in sympathy with them.

On December 11, 1911, Ben H. Cook was united in marriage at Clarksville, Tennessee, with Miss Lady Gertrude Wright, a daughter of S. B. and Margaret (Hill) Wright, residents of Christian County, where Mr. Wright is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Cook have one daughter, Hilda, who was born February 12, 1918.

Hon. Robert A. Cook first attended the rural schools of Christian County, but later became a student of the Western Normal School of Bowling Green, Kentucky. When he was twenty-one years old he began teaching school, and for four years taught in the rural schools of Christian County. He was then elected assessor of Christian County, and held that office for four years. By this time he was recognized as one of the leading young republicans of his district, and F. P. James, state auditor, appointed him his clerk in January, 1908, and he served as such until January, 1910, living at Frankfort, Kentucky. For the subsequent two years he was assistant secretary of state under Ben L. Bruner, and for two years more was district deputy collector of internal revenue. His connections with all of these offices made him one of the best known men in his district, and he was the logical candidate of his party for the office of representative of the district to the Lower House of the State Assembly, and served in the session of 1916.

On March 1, 1916, Mr. Cook was appointed a member of the State Board of Control for charitable institutions, and served as chairman of this board for three years, or until it was made a partisan board by the Legislature. In spite of his many and manifold duties and heavy responsibilities Mr. Cook in the meanwhile studied law while he was engaged in teaching and at Frankfort, and was admitted to the bar before the Court of Appeals at Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1909. In 1914 he opened an office for the practice of his profession at Hopkinsville in the Bohn Building, at 2½ East Sixth Street. His practice was somewhat interrupted by his official duties, but he resumed it in 1919, and is now connected with some very important jurisprudence, being recognized as an able lawyer and forceful pleader.

Like the other members of his family he is a member of the Christian Church. Fraternally he belongs to Hopkinsville Lodge No. 545, B. P. O. E., while professionally he maintains membership with the Christian County Bar Association. He owns a modern residence at 1326 South Main Street, which is one of the most comfortable homes in the city, and has other real estate. During the late war he served as chairman of the Red Cross drive in Christian County in 1918, and assisted in putting over all of the Liberty Loan drives, and subscribed to them all to the very limit of his resources, for he recognized the necessity for concerted action on the part of the people in order that a speedy end be made to the disastrous war.

On October 27, 1917, Mr. Cook was married at Clarksville, Tennessee, to Miss Mildred Buckner, a daughter of Frank C. and Harriet (Elliott) Buckner. Mr. Buckner was formerly a tobacconist and farmer, but is now deceased. His widow survives him and makes her home at Clarksville, Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Cook have no children. Mr. Cook has always had a distinct impulse toward the humanities among the leaders of thought, and has been an inspiration for activities of the best sort. Many have been the honors bestowed upon him, but he has always been equal to all of these responsibilities, and if others come to him, as without doubt they will, for he is not the kind of a man to stand still, his constituents may be sure that he will discharge them in the same capable and efficient manner that he has those in the past. He is accessible and sympathetic to those who seek his help, is a rarely gifted man, sincere and unselfish, patriotic and courageous, and has traveled far on the highway to fame and fortune, and at the same time has won a warm place for himself in the hearts of his fellow citizens.

J. E. McPherson. It seems appropriate that the president of the oldest bank in Christian County and one of the soundest and most dignified financial institutions in Western Kentucky should be a veteran in service and experience. J. E. McPherson has been a factor in banking affairs at Hopkinsville for over forty years, and most of that time has been either cashier or president of the Bank of Hopkinsville.

He is of Scotch ancestry, of an old Colonial Virginia family, and was born at Lewisburg in what is now West Virginia December 15, 1857. His father, John W. McPherson, was born at Upperville, Virginia, in 1828, spent his early life at Lewisburg, and qualified as a lawyer and practiced in West Virginia. In 1859 he moved to Christian County, Kentucky, and during the Civil war was engaged in a mercantile business at Newstead in that county. In December, 1864, he moved to Hopkinsville, and thereafter was one of the prominent members of the local bar until his death in 1897. He served four years as judge of the Common Pleas Court of Christian County. For forty years he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He was a Democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Judge McPherson married Margaret A. Withrow, who was born at Lewisburg, West Virginia, in 1830, and died at Hopkinsville in 1890. They had a family of six children: W. C. McPherson, who was express agent at Huntsville, Alabama, when he died in 1890, at the age of twenty-nine; Miss Mary W., of Hopkinsville; J. E. McPherson; Joel D., a traveling salesman living at Madisonville, Kentucky; John W., clerk in a dry goods store at Hopkinsville; and H. L. McPherson, assistant cashier of the Bank at Hopkinsville.

J. E. McPherson as a youth attended some of the country schools of Christian County, also the grade schools in Hopkinsville, but at the age of sixteen had to call his education finished and forthwith began earning his own way and building that business career which has achieved such gratifying proportions and successes. For three years he clerked in a grocery store at Hopkinsville, for another two years kept books in a dry goods store, but at the age of twenty made his real start as bookkeeper for the Planters Bank at Hopkinsville. He held that post six and a half years and in July, 1884, was elected cashier of the Bank of Hopkinsville. Only twenty-six years of age, he was one of the youngest bank cashiers in the state. He steadily filled the office for more than a third of a century, until January 1, 1918, when he was elected president.

The Bank of Hopkinsville has a history. It is logically a descendant of one of the branches of the old Bank of Kentucky at Louisville. In July, 1865, an independent organization was effected to take over the assets of the old branch bank, and ever since then for fifty-five years the Bank of Hopkinsville has operated under a state charter. Its home at the corner of Seventh and Main Street was remodeled in 1908, giving it a modern bank building. The bank has a capital of $100,000, surplus and profits $53,000, while its deposits aggregate $1,000,000. Besides Mr. McPherson as president, the present cashier is Charles F. McKee, and the assistant cashier, H. L. McPherson.

Mr. McPherson is also secretary and treasurer of the South Kentucky Building & Loan Association of Hopkinsville, one of the flourishing business concerns of Western Kentucky. He owns two business buildings in Hopkinsville besides his comfortable home at 1208 South Main Street. He is a member of the State and American Bankers Association, is an elder in the Southern Presbyterian Church, is a democrat, and both as a banker and individual gave the full power of his influence and means to the prosecution of the war.

In April, 1879, in Christian County, he married Miss Sallie Glass, member of two of the distinguished pioneer families of Christian County. Her grandfather, Zacharias Glass, was one of the three founders of Hopkinsville, had one of the first stores in the town, and in other ways helped build up the community. Her maternal grandfather was Archibald Gant, another member of the trio who founded the city and was also an early merchant. Her parents were Posey and Margaret (Gant) Glass, now deceased. Her father for many years was engaged in farming in Christian County. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson have three children: J. G. McPherson, trust officer for the Fidelity & Columbia Trust Company at Louisville; Annie W., wife of George C. Howell, a hardware merchant at Richmond, Virginia; and Charles J., who graduated with the Mechanical Engineer degree from Kentucky State University at Lexington and is now practicing his profession in Philadelphia.

Louis Edward Hillenmeyer. To the lover of nature no occupation known to man furnishes more interesting possibilities than the nursery business. Recent developments along this line have been as wonderful as they were formerly unexpected and unbelievable. Yet even to the man who labors faithfully to maintain standards already established and who has no time to explore in luring paths of promise there always is that satisfaction in accomplishment possible only when one works in collaboration with the elements of creation. Lexington has had its share of careful, painstaking, earnest nurserymen, men who have delighted in their labor and who have contributed liberally to the knowledge of their vocation. Few, however, have become so well and prominently known during a comparatively short period of years as has Louis Edward Hillenmeyer, who is extensively engaged in the nursery business on the Georgetown Road.

Mr. Hillenmeyer was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, November 22, 1885, a son of Hector and Mary (Ossenbeck) Hillenmeyer. A sketch of his parents' careers will be found elsewhere in this work, in the review of Hector Hillenmeyer, an old-time nurseryman and highly respected citizen of the Lexington community. Louis E. Hillenmeyer attended the public schools of Fayette County and Assumption College, Sandwich, Ontario, Canada, and then entered the University of Kentucky. During his college days he was one of the star athletes of his alma mater, and in 1907 was captain of the varsity baseball team and president of the university athletic association. He has been vice president and a member of the executive committee of the Alumni Association and was chosen as a representative of the Alumni on the University Athletic Council for 1920 to 1924. While at college he belonged likewise to the Pi Kappa Alpha, Mister 13 and the Lamp and Cross Society.

Graduating from the university with the class of 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Mr. Hillenmeyer joined his father in the nursery business, this association continuing until 1910, when a partnership was formed between Louis E. and Walter W. Hillenmeyer in the same line, which has continued to the present time. Mr. Hillenmeyer is independent in political matters, and with his family belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, which they attend with St. Paul's Congregation. He belongs likewise to the Lexington Rotary Club and the Board of Commerce.

On June 26, 1912, Mr. Hillenmeyer married Anna Bain, who was born at Bismarck, North Dakota, a daughter of John W. and Lula (Kremer) Bain, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Bain was an auctioneer, and resided in this and other states. He and his wife had three children, all living, of whom Mrs. Hillenmeyer was the second in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Hillenmeyer have four children: Anna Bain, Louis Francis, Dorothy Louise and Robert Hector.

George Burgess Carey. Among the residents of Fayette County, Kentucky, who have built up highly creditable reputations and distinguished themselves by right and honorable living is George B. Carey, well-known contractor of Lexington, one of that body of representative citizens who have done so much for the upbuilding and development of this community. His prominence in the business world is conceded, and his deeds will speak for themselves, for he has been a man who has believed in helping others, in a general way at least, while laboring for his own advancement along material lines.

George Burgess Carey is a native son of the old Blue Grass state, having been born in Lawrence County, Kentucky, on the 5th day of April, 1869, and he is the son of William and Emily (Burgess) Carey, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Lawrence County, Kentucky. They were the parents of eleven children. William Carey was left an orphan at ten years of age and received his education in the common schools of Lawrence County, Kentucky, having spent his boyhood days on a farm in that county. On attaining mature years he engaged in farming and stock raising, and also followed the timber business to some extent, owning a saw-mill. General farming was his chief occupation, however, and in this he was so successful that in 1897 he was enabled to retire from active business pursuits. Politically he gave his support to the republican party, though he was never a seeker after public office.

George B. Carey attended the public schools during his boyhood and then completed his educational training in the University of Kentucky. Upon entering business on his own account he turned his attention to contracting and building in New York City, where he was engaged in construction work from 1895 to 1897. He then turned his attention to street paving, being engaged in that line of contracting in Brooklyn and New York City until 1903, with the exception of a period of eighteen months which he spent in South America and Venezuela, building the first asphalt refining plant in the latter country. From 1903 to 1911 Mr. Carey was in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, engaged in the construction of brick and asphalt streets, but in the latter year he came to Lexington and has since then been closely identified with contracting and building operations in this section of the country. He is in every way thoroughly qualified and equipped for this line of business, and has enjoyed an eminently satisfactory business since locating here, having done a vast amount of construction work of various kinds.

Mr. Carey is also interested in a number of local enterprises in a material way, being a stockholder and director of the Guarantee Bank and Trust Company; president of the Chinn Mineral Company; and a director of the Himyar Oil and Gas Company. He is also president of the Lexington Rotary Club. Politically he is a democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, his membership being with the Second Presbyterian Church in Lexington. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On January 6, 1900, Mr. Carey was married to Jeuett Reed, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of J. Henry and Amanda W. (Hocker) Reed, both of whom are now deceased. These parents were natives of Kentucky, the father born in Clark County and the mother in Lincoln County. They were the parents of three children, namely: James H.; Henry W., who died in young manhood; and Mrs. Carey. J. Henry Reed was for many years a traveling shoe salesman and also engaged in the shoe business on his own account. He was a member of the Christian Church and a democrat in his political belief. To Mr. and Mrs. Carey has been born a son, George B., Jr., Mr. Carey is a public spirited man in all that the term implies, being interested in all enterprises tending to promote the general welfare, withholding his support from no movement for the good of the locality in which he lives. His personal relations with his fellow men have been mutually pleasant and agreeable, and he is highly regarded by all, being easily approached, obliging and straightforward in all the relations of life.

J. Felix Heady. Of the progressive agriculturists who have contributed materially to the development of the farming industry in Daviess County during a long period of years one of the best known is J. Felix Heady, whose farm and home are located in the vicinity of Sorgho. Primarily a farmer, but like a number of other enterprising men of his county, he has engaged to some extent in specializing, and is known as a leading dealer in horses, a business which he has followed successfully for many years.

Mr. Heady was born on a farm in Daviess County, Kentucky, October 29, 1859, a son of Thomas Frank and Caroline (O'Nan) Heady. His father was a native of Nelson County and a son of John Heady, who was born in the same county, of Irish lineage. The mother was born in Daviess County and was a daughter of William O'Nan. Frank Heady was reared in Nelson County, but after his marriage engaged in farming in Daviess County, and there rounded out a long and honorable career in the pursuits of the soil, being a man widely known and highly respected. He and his worthy wife were devout Christian people, and reared their nine children to lives of industry, sobriety and honesty.

J. Felix Heady was reared on the home farm in Daviess County and given the advantages of attendance at the district schools in the home neighborhood. He divided his time in his boyhood and youth between attending school and assisting his father and brothers in the work of the home place, and when he reached man's estate engaged in farming on his own account. In this connection he began dealing in horses, a field of operation in which he has continued to the present time, he being known as one of the able judges of horseflesh in his county and a man of reliability whose shrewdness is always tempered by his sense of fair play. Mr. Heady's farm is a model of modernity, with well-constructed and substantial buildings and up-to-date improvements of every kind, and the general air of prosperity which surrounds it evidences emphatically the ability and good management of its proprietor.

Mr. Heady has been twice married, his first wife having borne the name of Catherine Woodward. She died, leaving eight children, and Mr. Heady married Miss Blanche Payne. They have no children. Mr. Heady is an energetic and valued member of the Daviess County Farm Bureau, and his only fraternal affiliation is with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. With his family he belongs to the Catholic Church, and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party's principles and candidates.

Lister Witherspoon, living in one of the most beautiful country homes in Woodford County, has for many years put his farm to productive use as a stock center, and has especially featured the breeding of trotting horses. One of the horses bred on his farm on the Versailles and Midway Pike, three miles north of Versailles, was Aldine, a team mate of the famous Maud S. This pair made a world's record as a team, being owned by W. H. Vanderbilt. Mr. Witherspoon is still active in the management of his 350 acres, and continues in recent years to sell young stock from his farm. He has never been interested in politics, but is a member of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Witherspoon was born at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, June 7, 1848. He is descended from Rev. Dr. John Witherspoon, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. His grandfather, Robert Witherspoon, was a Virginian, died in middle life, and was a pioneer of Kentucky. His wife was Martha Johnson. Lewis Johnson Witherspoon, father of Lister Witherspoon, was born in Franklin County, Kentucky, in 1800, and graduated in medicine at Philadelphia, being one of the first graduates to practice his profession in Kentucky. He continued his practice at Lawrenceburg until his death at the age of fifty-two. His widow survived him two years. Lister Witherspoon was named in honor of the famous Doctor Lister. His mother was a sister of Martha Lillard, the second wife of Dr. John A. Witherspoon, half brother of Dr. Lewis J. Dr. John A. Witherspoon became the guardian of Lister Witherspoon. Martha Lillard was a daughter of Ephraim Lillard, who was a son of Captain John Lillard, of the Revolutionary army, and he in turn was a son of Benjamin Lillard of Virginia, who is said to have reached the remarkable age of 120 years before he died in Kentucky. Capt. John Lillard had eight children, seven sons and one daughter. The daughter was one of the ancestors of William J. Bryan. Capt. John Lillard was one of the minute men of the Revolution. Ephraim Lillard spent his life in Anderson County, Kentucky.

Lister Witherspoon graduated in 1869 from Georgetown College. On December 8, 1869, he married Miss Martinette Viley, daughter of Warren and Catherine Jane (Martin) Viley, an old and notable family of Woodford County. Mrs. Witherspoon was born near Midway, but since childhood has lived in the community of her present residence. She grew up on the farm now owned by her brother Breckenridge Viley, just across the road from the Witherspoon estate. The present Witherspoon home is the old Kincaid property, and the house was erected by Powhattan Wooldridge of Louisville. It stands in a wonderful natural park, and a home of more comforts and greater natural beauty could hardly be found anywhere in the Blue Grass section.

Mrs. Witherspoon's father, Warren Viley, was a son of Captain Willa and Lydia (Smith) Viley. His grandfather was born in Montgomery County, Maryland, February 10, 1788, and married in Kentucky, April 6, 1813, Lydia Smith, daughter of Rodes and Eunice (Thompson) Smith. She was born January 16, 1794, in Scott County, Kentucky. Capt. Willa Viley was a son of George and Martha Ann (James) Viley, of Montgomery County, Maryland, and moved to Scott County, Kentucky, in 1796. George Viley was a soldier in the War of 1812 and Capt. Willa was a captain of Kentucky militia. Captain Viley died March 28, 1865, in Scott County, and his wife died on June 13, 1869. Capt. Willa Viley was one of the pioneers among Kentucky's thoroughbred trainers and breeders. Warren Viley, father of Mrs. Witherspoon, was born August 3, 1817, and died January 19, 1902. February 27, 1838, he married Catherine Jane Martin, a daughter of William Holman Martin and Susannah Hale. She was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, while William Holman Martin was born December 30, 1801, in Powhatan County, Virginia, his people moving to Scott County, Kentucky, while the Hales went to Franklin County, this state. Through much study and correspondence Mrs. Witherspoon has pieced out the family record of both the Martins and Vileys. The Martins are traced to Huguenots, and pioneers of Goochland County, Virginia. Anthony Martin, a son of Peter Martin, and grandson of John Martin, married Sarah Holman, and they were the ancestors of William Holman Martin. Mrs. Witherspoon's interesting researches have led to the discovery that the ancestors of her family included thirty-two kings and queens, entitling descendants to membership in the Order of the Crown, of which she is now a member. Mrs. Witherspoon has an elaborate amount of material and manuscript bearing upon the family genealogy, and she has also collected numerous copies of coats of arms. She is deeply interested in local and state history as well, and has been active in a movement to secure the publication of a monumental history of Woodford County. Mr. and Mrs. Witherspoon have three living children. Their son Lister died when twenty-one years of age. Warren, in the insurance business at Lexington, married Miss Lillie Fahs, of Virginia. Ellen Douglas married Moses Alton Buffington, who is a coal merchant at Fall River, Massachusetts. Ethel is the wife of O. L. Alexander, a native of Virginia and now a coal dealer in New York City.

Erwin Baxter Liles. Educational work is very exacting in the demands it makes on its devotees. Ostensibly the duty of the educator is to instill a practical, working knowledge for each of his pupils, but equally important is his correlative though less direct function of instilling character and worthy precepts through his unavoidable personal influence. The first duty calls for a man of knowledge and specialized training; the second for a capable and conscientious person whose life and mode of living provide a fit criterion for the younger generation. When a man combines these attributes with progressive educational tendencies and necessary executive ability he has the qualifications which fit him for the direction of a school system. Such a man is Erwin Baxter Liles, superintendent of schools of Henderson County and a resident of Henderson, who has been identified with educational work since the start of his career.

Mr. Liles was born on his father's farm in Henderson County, Kentucky, October 14, 1889, a son of John Baxter and Fannie (Hibbs) Liles. The name Liles is said to be of Scotch origin, the family having a strain also of Irish blood, and the early American ancestors being settlers of the Colony of Virginia. John Liles, the great-grandfather of Erwin B. Liles, was born in the Old Dominion, and was an early settler of Henderson County, where his son, Jack Liles, the grandfather of Erwin B., was born and spent his life as an agriculturist. John Baxter Liles was born in Henderson County and in his early years was a school teacher, but subsequently turned his attention to agricultural operations, and after a long and honorable career is still living with his worthy wife on a farm in Henderson County. Mrs. Liles was born in Hopkins County, Kentucky, but was brought to Henderson County when twelve years of age and has lived here ever since. She and her husband are faithful members of the Christian Church and are highly respected in their community. They reared five sons and two daughters to maturity.

Erwin Baxter Liles attended the country school in the vicinity of the home farm and subsequently the high school at Dixie. Later he was a student for two years at Prof. J. V. Poole's select school at Poole, Kentucky, for four years at the State Normal School, Bowling Green, and for one year at the Kentucky State University, supplementing this training by a business course in a commercial college at Lexington. When he was nineteen years of age he had commenced teaching school in the Henderson County public schools, and after being thus engaged for seven years was made assistant principal of the Smithland (Kentucky) schools. One year later he was offered the principalship of these schools, but declined in order to make the race for the office of superintendent of schools of Henderson County, to which responsible post he was elected in 1917. Mr. Liles entered upon the duties of this office in January, 1918, and has rendered highly efficient service. Under his administration much progress has been made, and the system has been materially bettered. Henderson County's first two consolidated schools having transportation were put in operation under his direction.

Mr. Liles was married in 1914 to Miss Lola Tapp, a daughter of W. Lee and Ella (Pritchett) Tapp, of Webster County, and to this union there has been born one son, Thomas Jean. Mr. Liles is a valued member of the Kentucky Educators Association and has several other educational connections. His fraternal affiliations are with the local lodges of the Knights of Pythias and Masons, and he and Mrs. Liles are consistent members of the Christian Church. In political affairs he gives his allegiance to the principles and candidates of the democratic party.

E. B. JANUARY, present mayor of the City of Paris, has had a long business association with that city, and in his business career has achieved a well deserved success. Over the state in general he is perhaps most widely known for his prominence in the Order of Odd Fellows, being one of its leading state officials.

Mr. January was born at Caseville, Union County, Kentucky, September 27, 1858, and was only a few months old when his father, E. B. January, Sr., died. He then accompanied his widowed mother to Harrison County, and she died in 1854, while visiting in Paris. Her maiden name was Mary Elizabeth Thompson. The January family is a very old one in America, and one early record identifies it with Philadelphia as early as 1758. It is said that Thomas January was provisional governor of Philadelphia in that year. The family came to Kentucky about 1780, and an old deed to land in this state, recorded in 1783, is owned by Mr. January at Paris. Mr. January's grandfather was Dr. Peter January, who was one of the early and prominent physicians of Lexington and is said to have built the first brick house in that city.

After the death of his mother E. B. January and a brother remained in Paris, at the home of their sister, Mrs. John J. Shaw . E. B. was the youngest of seven children. He had limited advantages in the local schools and had to begin earning his own way as soon as possible. He recalls one interesting experience when he was about seven years of age, as selling copies of the Cincinnati Commercial at 25 cents apiece, these papers containing the news of President Lincoln's assassination. When he was ten years of age he went to work to learn the tinsmith's trade under John J. Shaw. He was given board and clothes during his apprenticeship, and at the age of fourteen was doing the regular work of a journeyman, and so continued until 1890. At that time, just thirty years ago (1920) he and Nicholas Connell, another practical tin worker, became associated in a partnership as tinsmiths and hardware dealers, and the firm of January and Connell has been in existence ever since. They are the leading contractors at Paris for cornice and roofing work, and have an expert force of four men constantly employed in that branch of their business.

For many years Mr. January has been prominent in local affairs, serving eight years as police judge. He was then elected mayor and is now in the fourth year of his office. August 6, 1921, he was again elected for a four-year term over four opponents, having a plurality of 214 over the next highest candidate. He has made his administration significant through the laying out of new streets, the construction of sewers, and extension of other improvements and facilities. He is an advocate of municipal ownership for the various public utilities. At the present time Paris is supplied with light and water by private companies. He is a democrat, and served four years as chairman of the City Committee of his party.

On October 26, 1880, at the age of twenty-two, Mr. January married Ella M. Fothergill, of Paris, where she was born, a daughter of W. W. Fothergill, a miller. Mrs. January died in Paris on June 1, 1921. Her father died in 1858, when she was an infant. Mr. and Mrs. January had one daughter, Mary Russell, wife of Fred Woods, a railroad man at Lexington.

Mr. January is the present grand warden of the State of Kentucky Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, and the normal course of advancement will put him in the position of grand master of the Grand Lodge in 1923. While in the Grand Lodge he brought in the proposition and secured its adoption for the establishment of the Odd Fellows Home at Eminence, Kentucky. This was proposed in the Grand Lodge in 1907, and in 1916 the home was established at Eminence and Mr. January has been president of the home from the beginning. The Grand Lodge paid $10,000 for the old college building at Eminence, and now has a well-equipped home for aged Odd Fellows and their wives, with accommodations for thirty, while the present number in the home are fourteen. For twelve years he has served as a member of the Orphans Home Board at Lexington, another institution of the Grand Lodge. He has been elected a representative every year since 1893 to the Grand Lodge, making twenty-nine consecutive years, and is also affiliated with the Encampment degrees and the Rebekahs. He is the oldest member of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias in Paris and is also a Mason.

CHARLES AURELL MCMILLAN has for the past twenty years been accumulating a deserved reputation as a successful lawyer and leading member of the Bourbon County bar. He belongs to one of the older families of this section of Kentucky, where the name McMillan, sometimes spelled MacMillan, has been represented for considerably more than a century.

His American ancestor was James McMillan, who was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1733. For a brief time he was a student in Edinburgh University, but left his studies to come to America, and he served as a private with the Virginia forces during the struggle for independence, taking part in one of the western expeditions which reached as far as Illinois. In Frederick County, Virginia, he married Margaret White, daughter of Dr. Robert White, who had been a surgeon in the British army. It was in 1792 that James McMillan and wife came to Kentucky and located near Boonesboro. He became a land owner and farmer, and died in Clark County in 1799, his will being probated that year. He is one of the Revolutionary soldiers buried in Clark County.

His son was Col. William McMillan, who died in Clark County in 1836. He served with the rank of colonel in the War of 1812, and his sabre is still preserved by his descendants. Robert McMillan, a son of Colonel William, was born October 5, 1816, in Clark County, and died July 1, 1891, at Paris, Kentucky. After his marriage to Miss Barcay he settled at North Middletown in Bourbon County, and eventually became one of the extensive farmers and land owners in that vicinity. In old age he retired to Paris. He had three children by his first marriage. Ann became the wife of Samuel Talbott, and she was the mother of Robert C. Talbott, a prominent attorney. William H. McMillan is living at Paris, a retired lawyer. Robert, who died in 1902, when about sixty years of age, served as a Union soldier during the Civil war and as a result of his service became paralyzed and blind. The second wife of Robert McMillan, son of Colonel William, was Armilda Stark, of Bourbon County. Her father was Jonathan Stark, of the Cane Ridge community, who helped build at that point the first Christian church in Kentucky, under the auspices of the great Alexander Campbell. Armilda McMillan was married December 9, 1846, and died at North Middletown, leaving one son, John T. McMillan. The third wife of Robert McMillan was Ruie Barnes, of Mason County, and she survived her husband.

John T. McMillan, representing the fourth generation of the family in Kentucky, was born and reared at North Middletown and studied dentistry with Dr. Robert Adair of Paris, and also graduated from the Ohio Dental College. He practiced at Paris and at North Middletown and for four years at Lexington, and became a man of prominence in his profession. He married Miss Sallie Clay Williams, daughter of Richard and Sallie (Gay) Williams. Her father was a native of Montgomery County, but for many years lived on a farm in Clark County and was a brother of the noted "Cerro Gordo" Williams. Sallie Gay McMullin was born in Clark County and survived her husband, Doctor McMillan, and lives with her son Charles A. at Paris. In addition to his professional interests Dr. John T. McMillan was deeply interested in the sport of racing and was a breeder of trotting horses, and some of them made excellent records on Kentucky tracks.

There were four children in the family of Dr. John T. McMillan, Charles A. being the second. Elizabeth C., the oldest, is widow of Samuel B. Rogers, a lawyer, and she is now a court reporter at Lexington. Her husband's brother is superintendent of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Danville. The two younger children are Armilda, wife of Joseph Varden, and Robert R. McMillan, a dental surgeon at Paris, who married Mary Batterton, a sister of Judge George Batterton.

Charles Aurell McMillan was born at Paris March 28, 1878, attended the common schools of his native city, also was a pupil under Prof. W. L. Yerkes, and was a student in Transylvania University. He left school in March, 1898, to volunteer in Company E of the Kentucky State Guards for service in the Spanish-American war. Prior to this time he had been a member of the company for about four years. For a time he was a teacher at Ruddle's Mills, and later secured a clerkship in the Interior Department at Washington, and while there diligently employed his leisure in the law department of George Washington University. He was admitted to the Kentucky bar and began practice prior to 1901, and in addition to handling a large general practice he served one term as county judge, retiring from office in 1920, and for four years was city attorney of Paris and also master commissioner of the Bourbon County Circuit Court. A stanch advocate of good roads, he was largely instrumental in establishing a nucleus of trucks owned by the county and operated for the conservation of crushed stone for road building purposes. Mr. McMillan was also honored as president of the State Association of County Judges. He has been active in state and county democratic politics. As a lawyer he has confined his practice almost entirely to civil and commercial law. During the late war he served as chairman of the Bourbon County Draft Board. For some years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a past master of Paris Lodge of Masons, No. 2, is a Knights Templar Mason, has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Shrine, and is also a member of St. Barnabas Council of the Knights of Constantine at Louisville, this being one of the fifty councils of that Masonic jurisdiction in the United States. He is also a member of Louisville Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution.

On August 9, 1921, he married Katherine M. Evans, a daughter of the late Dr. Thomas Evans, professor of chemistry in Cincinnati University. Her mother is now living in East Moriches, Long Island.

William Frederick Link has for eight years been chief of police of Paris, and in that time has made the police department a model of efficiency and has exemplified all the qualities of the best type of a peace officer, being shrewd, keen, expert and courageous and possessing all the physical and moral courage necessary for performance of duty.

Mr. Link was born near Clintonville, Kentucky, July 27, 1882, a son of Robert and America (House) Link. The great-grandfather of Chief of Police Link was named Frederick Link. He was a soldier under the great Napoleon, and after the overthrow at Waterloo came to America and settled in Laurel County, Kentucky, where his old home is still owned by his descendants on Rock Castle River. Frederick Link married a woman of the Cherokee Indian tribe, and the Government recognized the rights of his descendants in the distribution of lands in Oklahoma even as late as 1900. This Frederick Link lived to be 104 years of age, and he was the father of about twenty children. His son James spent his active life as a farmer and moved to the vicinity of Clintonville about 1870, and died there in 1908, at the age of seventy-three. James Link married Martha Jane Bailey, of Tennessee, who died in 1910, at the age of seventy-two. All of their eleven children are still living: Robert; Frederick, of Kansas City, Missouri; William, who has mining interests at Joplin, Missouri; Mollie, widow of William Abner, of Lexington; Lizzie, Mrs. Burton Hornbeck, of Shelby County; Mrs. Oscar N. Williams, of Fayette County; Sarah, Mrs. Joseph Badkins, a farmer of Bourbon County; George, of Bourbon County; John, of Covington, Kentucky; Samuel, of Kansas City, Kansas; and Ella, wife of William Hipshire, of Newport, Kentucky.

Robert Link, father of William Frederick Link of Paris, is a well known merchant of that city, and for twenty years has been identified with the Link Grocery Company, an institution widely known and patronized both in town and surrounding country. He served several years on the Council and has always stood for high class physical improvements. He has been a member of the Masonic Order for forty years. His wife, America House, was reared in Laurel County, Kentucky. The children of Robert and America Link were: James R., who had been for some years interested in mining at Butte, Montana, died in 1912, at the age of thirty-seven; Mollie Pauline, wife of Holt Henry, a railway conductor with the Louisville & Nashville Railway, living at Paris; William F.; Charles B., who is in the clothing business at Kansas City, Missouri; Cora A., wife of George Deiterman, a building contractor at Paris; Junie M., wife of Herman Santeen, of Paris; Thomas B., a real estate operator at Kansas City, Missouri; and Robert L., who served in France as a machine gunner and after his return to this country became manager of a department of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company at Providence, Rhode Island.

William Frederick Link was only fifteen years of age when the Spanish-American war broke out, and nothing could restrain the ardor of his patriotism and he enlisted in Company I of the Second Kentucky Regiment. It is well established that he was the youngest volunteer in Kentucky and probably the youngest volunteer accepted during the war. He spent his time in training in camp at Chattanooga. After the war he entered the service of the Adams Express Company, beginning as railway messenger and later for several years was in the secret service department at Chicago, a work that was in line with special qualifications and gave an experience that has been invaluable to him in his later career as a police officer at Paris. He returned from Chicago to Paris in 1906, and for several years was associated with his father in the grocery business. Then, in 1910, he went on the local police force and in 1913 received his popular election as chief of police. He was reelected in 1917, and his present term expires in 1921. At this writing his candidacy is being strongly urged for the office of sheriff of Bourbon County, a position for which he has undoubtedly high qualifications.

Mr. Link made his administration as chief of police distinctive through his effective work in clearing up the liquor and bootlegging element in Paris. He is a member of the Police Chief's Association, and has always kept in close touch with police and detective organizations over the country. Chief Link is an outdoor man, and when his official duties do not prevent has always enjoyed outings in the woods with gun and rod.

At the age of twenty-seven he married Miss Nora M. Insko, of Robertson County, Kentucky. They have one daughter, Hazel A., born in 1913. Mr. Link is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masonic Order, being a member of Covington Consistory and Oleika Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His three brothers are also members of the Consistory and the Shrine.

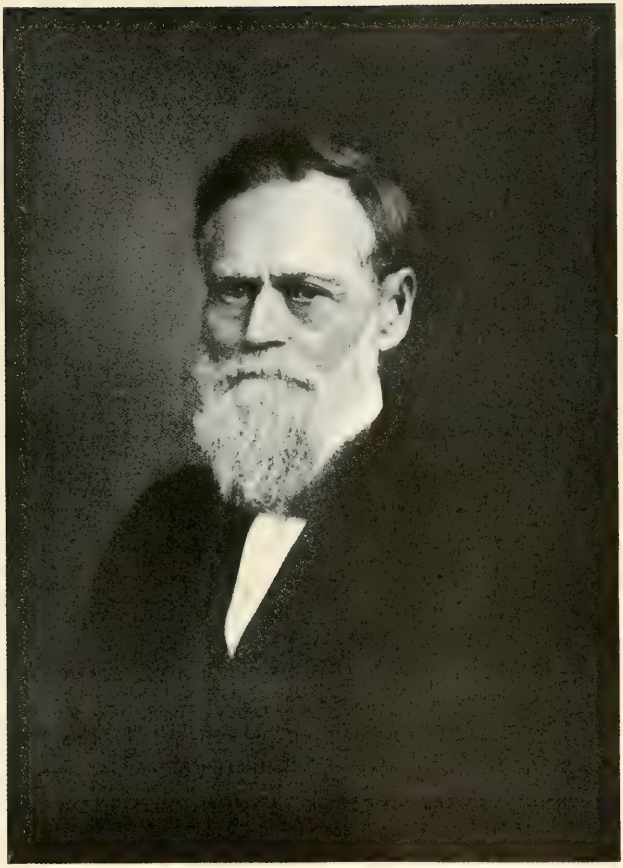
Rodman Russell, commissioner of public property for the City of Covington, has been an active business man in that community for ten years or more, and the energy with which he has looked after his business and his public spirit well entitled him to the confidence expressed when he was chosen one of the city commissioners.

Mr. Russell was born in Bridgeport, Kentucky, August 1, 1878. His father is James B. Russell, now living at Cincinnati. Born at Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1839, and reared and married in that locality, he learned the trade of saddler and as a young man enlisted in the Confederate army under General Morgan and served all through the struggle. After the war he resumed the saddlery business and in 1893 removed to Cincinnati, and is still active as one of the leading harness and saddlery merchants of the city. While in Kentucky he was an active citizen of Franklin County, and for twelve years served as justice of the peace. He is a democrat, a member and deacon of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Latonia Lodge No. 746, F. and A. M. James B. Russell married Adelia Parker, who was born at Shelbyville, Kentucky, in 1853. Rodman is her oldest child. Miss Maude lives with her parents. Ray is a railway employe living at Louisville. Miss Annie is also at home.

Rodman Russell spent his early life largely at Frankfort, the Kentucky capital, attended public school there, and in 1895 graduated from the Cincinnati High School. He learned the trade of saddler and harness maker in Cincinnati, and continued active in that line of business for nearly a quarter of a century, until 1920.

Mr. Russell has been a resident of Covington since 1910. He was appointed commissioner of public property of Covington on June 17, 1920, and has since given all his time to his official duties. His offices are in the City Building. He interested himself in behalf of the various war causes, the sale of bonds and savings stamps, and was one of the vigilant and public spirited citizens during that period. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Baptist Church, and is affiliated with Latonia Lodge No. 746, F. and A. M., and Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite. He is also a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

Mr. Russell married Lou (Smart) Wells at Covington in 1900. She is a daughter of John and Belle Smart, the latter still living in Covington, where her father died. Her father for twenty years was a watchman at the Latonia Distillery. Mr. and Mrs. Russell have one daughter, Thelma, born February 14, 1905, now a student in the Covington High School.



Frank Payne Drake. Many of the men whose influence counts for most in the essential business life of Kentucky have their homes and chief interests in the country. One of them is Frank Payne Drake, an extensive general farmer and tobacco grower in Fayette County, but who is intimately associated with some of the leading commercial organizations at Lexington. His home is 5½ miles northwest of that city, on Leestown Pike.

Mr. Drake was born at Paynes Depot in Scott County, Kentucky, December 18, 1861, a son of Abraham S. and Sarah C. (Elliott) Drake. His grandfather, Abraham S. Drake, was a native of New Jersey, married a Miss Prall, and they came to Kentucky on their wedding tour. The grandfather was a rope maker, and had his rope walk and cordage plant at the east end of the viaduct on West Main Street in Lexington. Some of the old building he used is still standing. His residence was on the site of the Leonard Hotel. He died when about sixty years of age, and his widow survived him to about ninety, spending her last years with her son, Abraham S. Abraham S. Drake, Sr., had a brother who went to Iowa and another who went South. The children of Abraham S. Drake, Sr., were: David, who was killed by lightning when a young man while sitting in a hotel; Benjamin S., a prominent minister of the Baptist Church who for years was pastor of the Cane Run Baptist Church and died at Mount Sterling; Simeon, who became a Lexington distiller and lived in New York; James, a real estate man of Lexington, who died in Florida; Abraham S.; Eliza, wife of James Slaughter, lived near Danville, Kentucky; and Julia, who was the wife of C. M. Thompson, of Fayette County.

Abraham S. Drake, Jr., was born in 1823, at Lexington, and for the greater part of his life was a successful and much esteemed educator. He was a graduate of the law school of Transylvania University at Lexington, and for a number of years was associated in practice with James E. Beck. He had a farm in Fayette County and conducted a private school on his farm that enjoyed the highest standing among the institutions of learning of that day. He continued teaching until his health failed, and after that he lived on his farm on the old Frankfort Pike, seven miles from Lexington, where he died August 29, 1889. His son, W. D. Drake, of Lexington, still owns the old homestead. His widow survived him a number of years, and for about sixteen years spent her winters in Florida. She was born in 1830 and died in 1913. Of their eleven children, nine reached mature years; Hannah, who died at the age of twenty; Ernest Baylor Drake, who for many years was in the agricultural implement business at Lexington and is now retired; Mary, who became the wife of James Fisher and died one year after her marriage; William Dudley, who owns and lives on the old farm; Frank Payne; Abram S., who was a commercial salesman and died at Louisville, at the age of forty-five; Harry Lewis, a resident of Tarpon Springs, Florida; Emma C., wife of Ernest Meres, of Tarpon Springs, Florida; and Simeon Elliott, who is in the agricultural implement and automobile business at Lexington.

Frank Payne Drake acquired most of his education in his father's school. In early life he took charge of the farm, but also learned telegraphy and was appointed station agent at the Yarnelltown station near the old farm. He also opened a stock of goods and developed an extensive trade as a general merchant, acting in the meantime as railroad agent and postmaster. He continued this flourishing business from 1882 to 1900. In the meantime, in 1888, he had bought a farm, which he also handled in addition to his other responsibilities. Since 1900 his time and energies have been chiefly devoted to his farming and the business interests connected therewith. About thirteen years ago he erected the attractive home on his present farm, which stands on land owned by Mrs. Drake's parents. This residence stands back about forty rods from the pike on elevated ground, and is one of the attractive and modern country homes of Fayette County.

On June 26, 1895, Mr. Drake married Miss Mayme Klopf, daughter of John and Nannie (Ramsey) Klopf.

G. E. Hale

Her father was a native of Germany, was a butcher by trade and in Kentucky was employed as a butcher by Lewis Ramsey, whose daughter, Nannie, he subsequently married. Lewis Ramsey owned at one time about 1,300 acres of land and lived at Yarnelltown Station and was extensively engaged in the butchering business, having a plant at Lexington. Of this plant John Klopf was manager. John Klopf spent the last twelve or fifteen years of his life on the old farm, and died there March 25, 1920, at the age of seventy-three. His wife, Nannie, passed away in May, 1907, about a year after the present residence was completed. Mr. and Mrs. Drake own 350 acres. Mr. Drake is a well-known specialist in the raising of wheat and corn for seed. His seed wheat won the sweepstakes at the State Fair, and he has exhibited corn at the International Stock Show at Chicago, and his grains have won many prizes both at local and many state fairs. Seed grains known to have been produced by Mr. Drake command ready sales all over Kentucky and other states. He is also a breeder of Poland-China hogs, and is actively identified with various agricultural organizations for advanced movements in farm life.

Mr. Drake is a director of the Guaranty Bank of Lexington, is also a director of the Shelburne Warehouse Company at Lexington, and is a director and secretary and treasurer of the Fagwood Milling Company of Lexington. He owns some business property in Lexington. In company with his brother, E. B., and Matt Asher he built a tobacco warehouse, the first in Lexington. The brothers subsequently bought the interests of Mr. Asher, and the warehouse was operated by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company of St. Louis and is now owned by that corporation. The construction of this warehouse gave a great impetus to Lexington as a central tobacco market. Mr. Drake was also a director and chairman of the committee for the building of the Central Warehouse Company's warehouse, and was active in its management until he sold his interests. He has been one of the leading individual tobacco growers in Fayette County for a number of years.

Mr. Drake is vice president of the District Board of the Elkhorn Baptist Association, and for a quarter of a century has served as deacon of the Mount Vernon Baptist Church in Woodford County, this church being five miles from his home. He is independent in politics and is affiliated with the Elks. Mr. Drake is a very popular business man and citizen, and few men in Fayette County can claim more loyal friends.

Samuel Caldwell Brooks has given his active years to agriculture and the livestock industry, with substantial results to himself and the various communities where he has lived. For a number of years he was a breeder and raiser of trotting stock. His fine country home during the past decade has been in Fayette County, on Greendale Pike, five miles northwest of Lexington.

Mr. Brooks was born near Mount Sterling in Montgomery County, Kentucky, November 2, 1865, a son of James W. and Hannah E. (Magowan) Brooks. His grandfather was Samuel Brooks, of Massachusetts ancestry, and died comparatively early, as the result of an accident. James W. Brooks moved to Scott County about 1872 and bought the Matt Stone farm of 550 acres. He lived there until his death in June, 1893, when about sixty years of age. His death was the result of falling from the roof of his residence. His widow, Hannah, survived him about fifteen years, and the farm was sold after her death. This old Brooks homestead was four miles north of Midway, on the county line in Scott County, on the South Elkhorn and near old Moore's Mill.

Samuel C. Brooks spent his early life in that locality, was well educated and finished his schooling in Central University at Richmond. On November 10, 1886, he married Minnie Todd, he being twenty-one and his bride twenty. Her father was Capt. William Hacker Todd, who came from Howard County, Missouri, to Kentucky after the Civil war. Captain Todd married Ann Tabitha Phelps, then the widow of Col. David Waller Chenault.

David Waller Chenault was born in Madison County, Kentucky, February 5, 1826. His grandfather, William Chenault, was a Revolutionary soldier and afterward a pioneer in Kentucky, and died on his farm near Richmond. David W. Chenault served in the Mexican war, and was living in Madison County and about thirty-six years of age on the day after the defeat of General Nelson's Federal army at Richmond, on Sunday, August 31, 1861. He was then commissioned colonel to raise a regiment, Joseph T. Tucker being lieutenant-colonel and James B. McCreary, major. On the 10th of September the regiment was mustered in as the Seventh, but a few months later was made the Eleventh Kentucky Cavalry. It was immediately ordered to active duty and participated in the battle of Hartsville, Tennessee, December 9, 1862, and early in 1863 was in Morgan's raid into Kentucky, where he played an important part. The regiment was on duty until the end of the war. Colonel Chenault was killed while leading his men in a charge on an abbattis, behind which was the Twenty-fifth Michigan, under command of Colonel Orlando H. Moore. His remains rest in Richmond cemetery. Mrs. Brooks' mother spent most of her life in Madison County and died there in 1900, at the age of sixty-seven. Mrs. Brooks was born three miles from Richmond, on Lexington Pike.

After his marriage Mr. Brooks conducted the old homestead farm until 1910, when he removed to his present place at Greendale Station. Here he continued general farming, is a stock grower and shipper, and has long been well and favorably known among Kentucky horsemen. The comfortable residence in which he and his family reside was erected many years ago by William Spurr.

Mr. Brooks is a democrat, but has never participated in politics, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Brooks is an active member of the Bethel Missionary Society, has done her part in the suffrage movement, and was a leading worker in the Red Cross during the war.

Mr. Brooks has three children: Lucille Caldwell is the wife of John A. Stevenson, a farmer, and they have one child, James T. James William Brooks is associated with his father in the management of the home farm. He married Marie E. Trapp, daughter of Dr. Claude Trapp. Anna Magowan Brooks is the wife of E. R. Webb, of Lexington.

Major H. S. Hale. Achieving fourscore years is of itself an achievement, but Major Hale has infinitely more to his credit than a long life. He fought bravely on many battlefields of the South, was the first to hold the office of Graves County after the war, rendered conspicuous service to his State as State Treasurer, and for a quarter of a century was closely identified with the management of one of the largest banks in Western Kentucky, the First National Bank of Mayfield. He has exemplified all the best ideals of Christian citizenship and manhood and his long life has been a course of duty performed and service rendered.

He was born near Bowling Green in Warren County, Kentucky, May 4, 1836. The Hales came from England to Virginia in colonial times, and his great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier. His grandfather, Joshua Hale, though born in Virginia took up his early residence in North Carolina and later came to Middle Tennessee where he spent his last years as a farmer. Nicholas Hale, father of Major Hale, was born in North Carolina and died in Graves County, Kentucky, in 1847. He gave his years to agriculture, was a democrat in politics, and a very enthusiastic member of the Christian Church. He married Rhoda Crouch who was born in Tennessee in 1807 and died in Graves County in 1851. She was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The children of Nicholas and Rhoda Hale were: William Harrison, born in 1829 and died in 1881, who spent his active career as a merchant; Geraldine, who died at the age of sixty-eight in Graves County, having been twice married, her husbands being Rufus McCuen and George Thompson, both farmers; Nathan Perry born in 1833 and died in 1902, for many years a merchant at Murray in Calloway County; Major Henry Stevenson, who was the third son of the family; Bathsheba who died at the age of forty-five, wife of John T. Cary, a Graves County farmer; and Joshua David who was born in 1842 and died in 1892, having been a business man and lay preacher of the Christian Church.

Major Hale was eleven years of age when his father died and fifteen at the death of his mother. He and his brothers and sisters found a good home with their uncle and aunt Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Hale of Graves County. He acquired his early education in rural schools, also attended the Mayfield Seminary and his training and environment were calculated to bring out the strong and self reliant virtues of his character. He completed his education at the age of twenty-two and for a time clerked in stores.

He was twenty-five when the war broke out and in the first year he enlisted in the Seventh Kentucky Infantry, serving as captain one year, major two years, and finally was promoted to lieutenant colonel in command of the Third and Seventh consolidated regiments of Kentucky Infantry. Starting at Columbus, Kentucky, he was with Gen. Leonidas Polk, was with Gen. Albert S. Johnston at Shiloh, with General Pemberton at Vicksburg and Baton Rouge, with Gen. John C. Breckinridge at Jackson, with Generals Price and Van Dorn at Corinth and through a large part of his service was under the command of the great Confederate cavalryman Gen. Nathan B. Forrest, participating in Brice's Crossroads, Harrisburg and Old Town Creek. At Old Town Creek he was seriously wounded in the left hip. It was supposed to be a mortal wound but he was nursed back to health in the home of James Sykes at Columbus, Mississippi. On rejoining his command he was promoted by General Forrest to Lieutenant Colonel and filled that post during the last year. His final engagement was at Montevallo, Alabama, and he surrendered with Forrest at Columbus, Mississippi, in April, 1865.

At the close of the war he returned to Graves County and for about a year was in the mercantile business at Boydsville and Lynnville. In 1866 he was elected sheriff of the county and by reelection in 1868 filled the office for four years. In 1871 he was elected to the State Senate, representing the First Senatorial District four years. His service in the Senate was made notable by his work in introducing and securing the passage in 1873 of the Mayfield local option law, which became a law in that year.

Immediately after leaving the Senate Major Hale solicited the capital stock and organized the First National Bank of Mayfield in the spring of 1875. He was elected its first president and for fifteen years he guided that institution through periods of financial stress and prosperity with the wisdom of a true financier. It was his prominence as a banker that caused him to be called by Governor Buckner to the office of state treasurer in 1890. He served by appointment of the Governor two years and was then elected for a term of four years. Largely on his own responsibility he instituted the important reform of requiring banks to pay interest on state deposits, and thereby made the office of state treasurer self supporting and his reform, subsequently re-enforced by state law, is estimated to have saved a quarter of a million dollars to the state in the years since he instituted the practice. In 1895 Major Hale was nominated at the democratic convention for secretary of state.

On returning to Mayfield he was again called to the presidency of the First National Bank, and held that post of duty and responsibility for thirteen years until he accepted an honorable retirement in 1919.

Major Hale helped found West Kentucky College at Mayfield in 1886 and has given his counsel and resources to many other enterprises that have promoted the growth and welfare of his home city. He became president of the reorganized Mayfield Woolen Mills about 1904.

No interest could be said to have dominated his lifelong service in the Christian Church. He has been an elder in his church for many years, and has in fact been the chief support of that denomination in Mayfield. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, of Lexington Camp of the Confederate Veterans and in time of war as in peace has been associated with many movements in his home city and state. A large property owner he has distributed many of his possessions among his children.

Next to his patriotic devotion to the South his chief inspiration during the war was Miss Virginia Adelaide Gregory, who on November 8, 1865, soon after he had returned to civil pursuits, became his bride. She was born in Kemper County, Mississippi, in 1843, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gregory. She graduated from the Female Institute at Columbus, Mississippi, in 1859. For nearly half a century she was the sharer of his home and the partner in his increasing success. Mrs. Hale died April 30, 1914.

Major and Mrs. Hale reared the following children: Albert Sidney, who died at the age of eighteen; Annie Belle, who never married and died at Mayfield, aged forty-four; Nathan A., born in 1870, now vice president of the First National Bank of Mayfield, and who for twenty-five years was its cashier; William L., who is the present postmaster of Mayfield; Mary E., wife of Dr. Edgar Odell Lovett, who since 1908 has been president of the Rice Institute at Houston, Texas, one of the largest institutions of higher learning in the South; Henry S., Jr., an oil operator at Fort Worth, Texas; and Joseph Theodore, who lives with his father and is assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Mayfield.

William Dudley Drake is one of several brothers whose names have been conspicuously identified with the commercial and agricultural progress of Fayette County and the City of Lexington. His own time and abilities have been bestowed almost entirely on farming, and his life has been largely spent at the old Drake homestead on Frankfort Pike, seven miles west of Lexington.

Mr. Drake was born in Lexington July 10, 1859, and is a son of Professor Abraham S. Drake and grandson of Col. Abraham S. Drake. His grandfather came to Kentucky from New Jersey and was a pioneer rope and cordage manufacturer at Lexington. His father, Abraham S. Drake, spent most of his life as an educator, was also a lawyer in Lexington, and while living on his farm conducted a private school. William Dudley Drake was two years of age when his father moved to the farm in 1861. He grew up there, and in spite of the fact that his father was an educator he had limited advantages, never inherited any property, and as a youth began working for his father at wages of $15 a month or 57½ cents a day. He bought the interests of the other heirs in the old homestead of 222 acres, and has since increased his farm to 350 acres. He paid as high as $150 an acre for some of the land, and for other portions he paid as low as $50. At his father's death he took charge of the farm, and when the old home was burned, leaving only the walls standing, he had the residence completely rebuilt. His father owned one of the best private libraries in the county. The fire apparently left the volumes untouched, but as soon as the debris was cleared away and the books exposed to air they fell to ashes.

Mr. Drake has been a diversified farmer, and for a number of years has specialized in seed breeding. He has endeavored to fulfill the role of practical farmer, making permanent improvements and preserving the fertility of the soil. The corn and wheat grown on his farm for seed purposes have long commanded premiums. He won prizes on his Boone County White Corn at Blue Grass Fairs and State Fairs, and in 1920 he exhibited a variety of farm products at the International Stock Show in Chicago, including seed corn, blue grass, timothy, orchard grass, wheat, rye, barley and oats. At the Blue Grass Fair in 1920 he exhibited a hand of hemp which he himself had broken forty-one years ago, and this exhibit was awarded a special prize. Mr. Drake is also a tobacco grower, cultivating thirty or forty acres to that crop. This crop is entirely in the hands of tenants.

His farm is a body of very fine Blue Grass soil, and his residence stands back three-quarters of a mile from the pike, its site having been chosen before pikes were built.

Mr. Drake is married and has one daughter, Whitney Lee, wife of Alwyn W. Arkle, a clerk in the Bank of Commerce at Lexington and a grandson, Thomas Dudley Arkle. Mr. Drake has never sought office, though he has been active in various campaigns. He is a trustee and deacon of the Mount Vernon Baptist Church. He is fond of good stock, and as power for his farming operations has made it a practice to secure the best mules money will buy and has frequently sold mules at the top of the market. He enjoys vacations spent in hunting and fishing, and for sixteen winters has gone to Florida, where he participates in the sport of sea fishing.

Edward H. Doak. While during recent years he has applied himself to the pursuits of farming, Edward H. Doak, agriculturist and magistrate, on the Georgetown Pike, 3½ miles north of Lexington, has never given up his interest in the labors that occupied him during a former period of his career. From young manhood for a number of years he was actively identified with matters pertaining to the reforming of young men and women who had strayed aside from the straight and narrow path, and wrung from his surroundings the victory of a noble achievement. Few institutions can be conceived more cheerless and devoid of all inspiration for anything ideal or elevating than reform institutions. It is true that charitable women and philanthropists have periodically brought their sunshine, kind words and good deeds to bear upon the lives of the inmates; but for the keeper of such an institution to burden himself with the moral responsibility of those turned over to him, and to endeavor to return them to society as human beings with softened natures and worthy ambitions is something out of the ordinary. In Mr. Doak the old ideas of the grim, unresponsive, cold-hearted and cold-blooded jailer were revolutionized, for, although he was always a strict disciplinarian, from the first he treated his charges as humans never beyond the pale of good influences, and there has never been one engaged in this kind of work who has so won the unshaken confidence and affection of the so-called criminal element as Mr. Doak.

Edward H. Doak was born July 11, 1869, at Greenville and Tusculum College, four miles from Greenville, Tennessee, son of William Smith Doak, D. D. The tradition is that Samuel and Jane Doak came from the north of Ireland about 1730. Their son, Samuel Doak, was born in Virginia in 1740 and graduated from a college in New Jersey in 1775. "As first apostle of education" and founder of the first institution of learning west of the Alleghenies he came to Tennessee before it was a state. In 1784 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention that formed the State of Franklin from North Carolina. He established Martin Academy, the first school west of the Alleghanies, at Salem, in 1785, this being four years previous to the founding of Transylvania College. It became Washington College in 1795, and he was its president until 1818, when he established Tusculum Academy, and while acting as its president he preached in that region. He died in 1830. An engraving of this distinguished pioneer educator now occupies an honored position in the home of his great-grandson, Edward H. Doak.

He had worthy successors in both his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel W. Doak, and his grandson, Rev. William S. Doak. His son chartered Tusculum Academy as a college in 1844, and continued for many years as its president. He died in 1875, when his son, William Smith Doak, who was born March 27, 1829, was called to succeed him. William Smith Doak graduated from the institution probably in 1851, was licensed to preach in 1853 at Somerset, Kentucky, and was one of the two graduates of Center College at Danville, Kentucky, in 1854. He and a Mr. Duncan were the first graduates in theology to teach at London, Kentucky, where they likewise preached, and established there Laurel Seminary, with which Mr. Doak was connected until called to become president of the Greenville and Tusculum College, which he served until his death, in 1882. In the meantime he filled the pulpits at times of the Salem and Oakland Presbyterian churches, and for a time during the Civil war period also practiced medicine. William Smith Doak's brother, Alexander Doak, was his successor as president of Greenville and Tusculum College, which is a Presbyterian institution. In 1854, at London, Kentucky, William Smith Doak, D. D., was united in marriage with Frances E. Banton, who was born at Barbourville, Kentucky, a daughter of John Banton and a niece of Judge Boyle, one of the early chief justices of Missouri. Mrs. Doak, who survives her husband at the age of eighty-five years, was a teacher at London for several years before her marriage. To Mr. and Mrs. Doak there were born seven children: Julia, who taught for twenty years at Peabody Normal School and is now Mrs. Franklin Tabor, of Macon, Mississippi; John, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Macon; Belle, who died in 1883, at the age of twenty-two years; Robert, who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Nashville, Tennessee; Edward H.; Addison Randolph, who died at the age of twenty-four years, while in charge of an academy at Sweetwater, Tennessee; and Mary Ellen, who is unmarried and has devoted her life to caring for her mother.

Edward H. Doak attended the Greenville and Tusculum College, and at the age of nineteen years entered the office of the Nashville (Tennessee) Industrial and Reform School, where he spent ten years. In 1897 he established the Knox County Industrial School, at Knoxville, supervising the construction of the building and putting the institution into operation. He continued as superintendent for about three years, or until 1899, when he was called to Lexington by the Board of the Kentucky Houses of Reform, then about to be located at Greendale, and made superintendent. This institution was formally opened November 22, 1899, and at the start as inmates had six boys from the state penitentiary who had been pardoned by Governor Bradley. These boys assisted Mr. Doak, who at the same time received as charges forty men from the penitentiary. The great increase in Mr. Doak's work and the scope of his beneficent influence may be seen in the fact that at the end of his thirteenth year as superintendent the institution of which he was the head had 700 inmates. At the outset Mr. Doak's work was hard, discouraging and for the most part unappreciated. His considerate treatment of prisoners frequently met with ridicule, but his inborn nature of quiet, kind authority continued to assert itself, and during the years that he held the superintendency there was developed and placed in effective working order an agency for moral improvement, the effects of which are practical and the influences of which are immeasurable. This work was accomplished by an earnest man who accomplished a splendid achievement in reclaiming many of his fellows to honesty, industry and wholesome living. Some of these he meets occasionally, and they unreservedly place to his credit the success which they have made of their lives, due to his kindly and sympathetic training, instruction and assistance.

When he left reform work as a vocation Mr. Doak engaged in farming three miles north of the Court House, on the Georgetown Pike, where he had fifty acres, in addition to which he supervises the operations on his two other farms. He is treasurer and an original director of the Shelburne Tobacco Warehouse, established in 1912, and for four months each year devotes his whole time to that business, where his presence is demanded in the office. This concern has sold as high as 7,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and has two houses, each with a capacity of 1,800 baskets and each demanding six square feet of space. This is an expanding business which has benefited much by Mr. Doak's advice, counsel and business abilities. He is a director in the Bank of Commerce and takes an active part in all the activities which make up the life of his community. Although a democrat in politics, in a district normally republican by a 200 majority, he was elected magistrate by a plurality of 300, and is now serving his seventh year in that office. He has been a constant advocate of good roads, and among the many worthy accomplishments of his administration are the asphalt pikes of his district, all of which have been built during his term of office. Recently he has received the democratic nomination for county judge of Fayette County.

In 1893, at Nashville, Tennessee, Mr. Doak married Susie Lyle, who was born at Nashville, a daughter of Dr. Abner and Eliza (Sale) Lyle, natives of Christian County, Kentucky. Doctor Lyle was engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Russellville, Kentucky, for a number of years, but later removed to Nashville, where he passed the remainder of his life and died, as did his worthy wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Doak there was born one son, Robert, who died at the age of six years. As a young woman Mrs. Doak taught in the public schools of Nashville, and was subsequently a teacher of shorthand. Her assistance was of invaluable service to her husband during the period that he acted as superintendent of the Kentucky House of Reform at Greendale, of which institution she acted as matron, in addition to helping her husband with his multitudinous duties and teaching music to the inmates.

William Worthington. Among the leading members of the legal profession in Kentucky is the gentleman whose name forms the caption to this sketch, a man who has not only honored his profession, but who also has by common consent long been numbered among the representative men of his section of the state, ever holding the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people among whom he has lived.

William Worthington was born in Greenup County, Kentucky, on February 22, 1869, and is the last child in order of birth of the six children born to William Jackson and Catherine (Steele) Worthington. His father was born near Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in November, 1833, and his death occurred in 1914, while the mother, who was born in Washington County, Virginia, in 1835, died in 1888. Three of the children are deceased, the survivors being, Annie, the wife of W. B. Strader, John Thomas and William. William J. Worthington was educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Ohio. While still a comparatively young man he became manager of an iron furnace, but later took up farming in Greenup County, Kentucky, having come to this state with his parents. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the Federal cause and became captain of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, with which he served through the war. He became major of his regiment, and subsequently lieutenant-colonel, in which capacity he commanded the regiment, and at the expiration of his period of service he was offered a commission as brigadier-general, but declined the promotion. He attained considerable prominence in the public affairs of his community and state, having served three terms as a member of the State Legislature, one term in the Senate and two in the House. He continued his farming operation until 1873, when he became part owner and manager of an iron furnace, continuing in that business for about ten years. He was then elected county judge of Greenup County, serving one term, at the end of which he again assumed the management of an iron furnace, continuing in that position for several years, or until his election to the office of lieutenant-governor of Kentucky, on the ticket with Governor Bradley. The remaining active years of his life were spent in farming and in the practice of law, he having been a member of the bar from early manhood. Politically he was a republican, and his religious sympathies were with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

William Worthington received his elementary education in the public and high schools of Greenup County, after which he attended the University of Kentucky. He then took a course in a business college, after which he accepted a position as stenographer with the well-known law firm of Breckinridge & Shelby, with whom he remained about seven years, serving one year as private secretary to Colonel Breckinridge. During this period he gave serious attention to the reading of law and also attended night law school at Georgetown University. He was admitted to the bar in 1897, and at once established an office in Lexington, where he has been engaged in practice continuously since. For more than a dozen years Mr. Worthington served as referee in bankruptcy for the district composed of Clark, Fayette, Madison, Scott and Jessamine counties. A lawyer of acknowledged ability and a man of soundest integrity, he has long held a high place among his colleagues and in the community at large his influence has been of a most beneficent order. His character is the positive expression of a strong nature and he has achieved signal success in his calling.

Mr. Worthington has been intensely public-spirited in his attitude towards all measures affecting the general welfare, supporting every movement which has promised to advance the material, civic or moral interests of the people. He has served for a number of years as a trustee of the Kentucky Houses of Reform. Politically he is an earnest supporter of the republican party, while in religion he is a Presbyterian, having served as a member of the session of the First Presbyterian Church of Lexington.

On the 4th day of May, 1898, Mr. Worthington was married to Addie Swift Norwood, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, the daughter of Dr. Edward M. and Priscilla W. (Downing) Norwood, both of whom are deceased. They were natives, respectively, of Massachusetts and Kentucky, and they became the parents of five children, Mrs. Worthington being the fourth in order of birth. Doctor Norwood was a surgeon in the Union army during the Civil war and afterward engaged in general farming and stock raising. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics Doctor Norwood was a democrat. To Mr. and Mrs. Worthington have been born two children, William N. and Frank F. Personally Mr. Worthington is genial and approachable, and has a host of warm and loyal friends throughout this locality.

William Thornton Lafferty. Forty years a lawyer, an active member of his profession in Harrison County and also at Lexington, Judge Lafferty is doubtless most widely known to the profession in Kentucky as Dean of the State University Law School, which he organized and which he has made an institution of the highest service in the training of well qualified members for the bar.

Judge Lafferty was born at Cynthiana, Kentucky, March 1, 1856, a son of John and Francis Elizabeth (Henry) Lafferty. His father and mother were both natives of Harrison County, his father born in 1832 and his mother in 1839. John A. Lafferty spent practically all his life as a farmer in Harrison County. The only important exception was the four years of the Civil war, during which he was a gallant Confederate soldier from the time he enlisted in August, 1861, in Company K of the 9th Kentucky Infantry, until the close of the war in 1865. Almost continuously he was under the command of that great Kentucky general, Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge. He was wounded twice in the first battle in which he engaged, but soon rejoined his command and had the distinction of being one of the soldiers constituting the body-guard of President Jefferson Davis and his cabinet when that distinguished party surrendered in Georgia. In after years he was several times called from his farm to the duties of public office, and for three terms, six years, served as sheriff of Harrison County. He began voting as a whig, and later became a democrat. He was a very active member of the Church of the Disciples. John A. Lafferty died in 1906. His wife died in 1918, and of their twelve children eleven are still living, William T. being the oldest.

William Thornton Lafferty acquired his preparatory education in the Cynthiana Academy and the Smith Classical Institute of Cynthiana, and later graduated with the A. B. degree from the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical College, now the University of Kentucky. The University in consideration of his prominence as a lawyer and other distinguished services conferred upon him the A. M. degree in 1908. Judge Lafferty was admitted to the Kentucky bar in 1879 and forthwith engaged in a practice that soon brought him a large clientage and many public honors. He filled the office of county attorney of Harrison County from 1882 to 1886, and was judge of Harrison County from 1886 to 1894. Then from 1894 to 1899 he practiced as a member of the firm Ward and Lafferty, and was senior partner of the firm Lafferty and King from 1899 to 1908.

In 1908 he was called upon to organize the Law Department of the University of Kentucky, and when that school was opened he was Dean and conjointly with those duties he was also comptroller of the University from 1908 to 1915.

Judge Lafferty is a member of the Kentucky Bar Association, is a democrat, member of the Christian Church, and fraternally is affiliated with the Masons and Knights of Pythias. He was trustee of the Bible College of Transylvania University five years and for five years was trustee of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Kentucky, serving as a member of the Executive Committee. He is a member of the National Educational Association, and in many ways has exerted a prominent influence in Kentucky educational as well as legal affairs. In Masonry he has enjoyed some distinctive honors, being past master of his Lodge, past high priest of the chapter, past eminent commander of Cynthiana Commandery No. 16 of the Knights Templar, and also past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias.

Judge Lafferty married on November 20, 1889, Miss Maude Ward, of Cynthiana, daughter of Andrew Harrison and Helen (Lair) Ward. To her ancestry and the career of her distinguished father a special memoir is dedicated elsewhere in this publication. Mrs. Lafferty is one of Kentucky's prominent women. She is chairman of Kentucky History on the Board of the Kentucky Federation of Women's clubs, a post she has held since 1915. In that capacity she has performed an important service in locating and cataloging the historical materials of Kentucky, and has inaugurated a plan of work for the Department of History, which is being carried out by the clubs over the state—a program that goes far to emphasize the value of history and awaken a new interest in the subject in all parts of Kentucky. Her plan of work is the more important because it gives first place to local and state history and sets in motion an organization of research and study from which will accrue a tremendous amount of true historical data and historical material hitherto unavailable to students of Kentucky history. Last but not least she is striving to arouse an interest in the possession and a pride in the preservation of the historic materials still in Kentucky—for future Kentuckians. Mrs. Lafferty is also a member of the Filson Club, the Bradford Club, the Mississippi Valley Historical Association and the Ohio Valley Historical Association.

Judge and Mrs. Lafferty reside at 127 Woodland Avenue in Lexington. To their marriage were born two children: Helen Ward, the older, graduated in 1909 from the Hamilton Female College of Lexington, and in 1911 completed the course of the Musical Conservatory of the same college. She is the wife of Benjamin Louis Nisbet, who graduated under Judge Lafferty from the Kentucky University Law School in 1915, and has since been engaged in the active practice of his profession at Madisonville. Mr. and Mrs. Nisbet have one daughter, Helen Louise. The younger daughter of Judge and Mrs. Lafferty was Kathleen L., who died at the age of eight years.

Andrew Harrison Ward, father of Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, of Lexington, was for many years a peer of Kentucky's ablest lawyers, was a citizen of remarkable integrity and purity of character, and, living to the age of eighty-nine, he was one of the last survivors of a bar which still included Henry Clay and others when he began practice.

Andrew Harrison Ward was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, January 3, 1815, and died April 16, 1904. He was reared on a farm and had to exert his youthful energies in contributing to the support of his widowed mother and younger children, attending country schools and also old Transylvania University at Lexington. He began the study of law in 1842 under Maj. James Curry at Cynthiana, and entered practice in 1844, just sixty years before his death, and he continued an active member of the bar for over half a century. He was elected to the Legislature in 1863, and in 1865 the democrats nominated him for Congress from the Sixth Kentucky District. His friends attributed his defeat to the votes of Federal soldiers. He was renominated in 1866 and elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Gen. Clay Smith, who became governor of Montana Territory. Judge Ward cast his first vote for Henry Clay, and during the war was a Constitutional Union man and ever afterwards a democrat.

Mrs. J. J. Haley, a sister of Champ Clark, has declared that Harrison County never had a more gifted son than Judge Ward. In her tribute to him published when he celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday, she said:

"Could there be convened a council of men who had known him from his youth up to sit in solemn judgment and decide which is the greatest talent, there would likely be as many different decisions as there were men. Looking at his leonine head and face and compactly knit frame, one would say, strength; listening to his impassioned oratory, eloquence; to his flashing repartee, wit; to a crushing argument, logic; to a marvelous flight of fancy, imagination; to a startling array of historic facts and figures, memory; to an instantaneous solution of a test problem in abstruse mathematics and we say, 'Why here is a mathematician of the first order'; to one of his desultory talks—which are often prose poems—as he descants on fields and woods, telling in what nooks and crannies the first wild flowers are found, and what trees in the hedge burst their buds to the first smile of spring—we think we have summed him up at last and say, 'Lo, he is a poet!' The truth is there are as many A. H. Wards as there are moods and occasions, and though he may often be bewildering, prosy and dull he never is. Other men we know, and we admire their knowledge; they toil and strive and we admire their achievements; but here is a man with such readiness, spontaniety and versatility, with such a complete mastery of his powers and he manipulates them as a conjurer does his 'properties' and with a magic touch opens to us new realms of fact and fancy."

At the time of the death of Judge Ward the editorial columns of the Lexington Herald contained a tribute written by Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge which deserves quotation here.

"Major Harry Ward, as he was known through Kentucky, was a law student in the office of Judge James Curry, who was the great-grandfather of the manager of the Herald. Our personal acquaintance with him began before the war, and a friendship was then commenced which was never broken or impaired. We met him at the bar on numerous occasions; we were quite often associated with him as counsel for the same clients, or on opposite sides. We also met him at political conventions, speaking with him from the same platform to the same meetings, and associated with him in the most intimate ways. While he was much our senior, our terms were such as to give us a fair insight into his character. His personality was unique; his individuality as strong as any man with whom we were ever acquainted. It does not describe this man to say of him, as you may of many thousands, that he was a brave, frank, upright gentleman. He was all of that. It does not give any fair portraiture to add that he was an excellent lawyer, a captivating and persuasive stump speaker, and a pracitioner of unusual power, though he was all of that. There was something about him that was individual and personal, so that no man ever came in contact with him who was not impressed by this strong individuality. He was one of the kindest, most charitable and generous men we ever knew—charitable in its broad and noblest sense, thinking evil of no one, speaking evil of no one, but kindly in his judgment of all. We presume he never knew what fear was, either physical, intellectual or moral; and consequently he was a thoroughly veracious man. We do not mean that he told merely the truth, but he lived a veracious life. His life was an open book. He had some gifts to a very high degree. His perceptive faculties were unusually quick. He seized the salient points in a case with almost lightning like rapidity, and he presented them with unusual power. While he had not the graces of some of our Kentucky orators, his manner was impressive, and through all he said he showed the power of his original individuality. His sarcasm was overwhelming; not either bitter or vindictive. His humor was irresistible, and he illustrated in his forensic and political speeches the points he desired to make with anecdotes, the most of which he made, that were not only apt and amusing, but told with wonderful attractiveness. He was a man of very strong nature, intense convictions and earnest likes and dislikes, and he took no pains to conceal either. Of course, such a man living so long a life in a community so fine, had influence, attracted to him warm friends and made some enemies. He was known all over Kentucky, and everywhere had the respect and confidence of the people and the friendship of the bar with those with whom he came into personal contact.

"We have never known a kindlier man. We have never met a more sincere friend. We never knew a franker gentleman. In the practice of law he was scrupulous and punctilious. During his long and varied career we presume no one ever had occasion to doubt not only his strict integrity, but his careful observance of the etiquette and ethics of his profession.

"He was the last of a group of striking and rather remarkable lawyers who were, as was known in those days, the Circuit Court lawyers or riders of the circuit. He was held to be at the bar at the trial of cases the full equal of the ablest of those lawyers of whom the Trimbles, Garrard Davis, Governor Robinson, Madison C. Johnson, John B. Huston, Richard Hanson, James Simpson and others were members. Those who heard him in any of the great criminal or civil cases that have been tried in the counties of Harrison, Pendleton, Scott, Bracken, Bourbon, Clark, Montgomery and perhaps others during his long career will hold this tribute as being severely just and not extravagant or rhetorical. He was greater than anything he did; his personality more attractive than anything he said. The man was larger, more lovable and more influential than either his utterances or his actions in whatever society he was, under all circumstances he exercised an influence, he evoked an interest and commanded a power that was as great, if not greater, than anything he said in any formal speech either at the bar or on the stump. In his daily talk on the street, in the lobbies of the hotel, wherever he happened to be, in whatever company he happened to fall, he was a man of striking influence and power. It was this quality or combination of qualities that made him so beloved and so influential; and in this tribute to his memory by one who long admired him and was always a friend we desire to call rather special attention to this attractive personality."

Judge Ward was three times married. His third wife was Miss Helen Lair, who was born in 1838 and is still living, and though past fourscore makes trips unattended between her home in California and her children in Kentucky. She is the mother of Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, Harry Ward, Mrs. W. U. Grider, Paul Ward and Ashley Ward.

A great deal of Kentucky history centers in the Lair family and the old Lair homestead still carefully preserved at Cynthiana, now the property of Mrs. J. K. Northcutt and her sister Miss Eliza Lair, who are descendants of the original owner and builder of this famous home, known as The Cedars. The great Lair estate, which once comprised nearly 1,000 acres has been greatly diminished, but the Lair house, built in 1828, at a cost of $40,000, is still standing, one of the splendid types of the solid architecture of that period. It is in English baronial style of brick and cut stone. A short distance from the house is the old Lair family vault, hewn out of the solid granite and overlooking the Licking River. In this vault were placed the bones of the ill-fated pioneers of Ruddels Fort who were massacred by the British General Byrd and his savage allies in 1780 at the time of the first raids in Kentucky. Charles Lair caused the bones to be gathered, placed in stone coffins and laid with his loved ones in the stone vault built just below the spot upon which the old fort stood. In 1775 Andrew Lair came from Rockingham County, Virginia, to Logans Fort in Kentucky. In 1791, the year before Kentucky was admitted, his two younger brothers, Mathias and John, came to Kentucky. John Lair was the father of Mrs. Helen (Lair) Ward. Recently a permanent organization of the descendants of the Lair brothers has been formed, and the historian of the organization is Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, who was largely instrumental in effecting the organization.

THOMAS R. GARDNER. The State of Kentucky, long famed for its wonderful horses, has produced few finer animals than those which have come from Timberland, for many years conducted as a leading breeding farm by Thomas Robinson Gardner. Here were born such famous race horses as Domino, Tommy Atkins, Havoc, Leonora Loring, Eva Rice and Electioneer, all bred under the watchful eye, experienced care and infinite skill of Mr. Gardner, who from boyhood has understood and loved horses, but who since the advent of the automobile racing industry has drifted more and more into retirement, with the gradual passing of the "Sport of Kings."

Mr. Gardner was born in his father's farm in Clark County, Kentucky, April 17, 1853, a son of Thomas and Mary Ann (Ramsey) Gardner, natives of the same county, where his father was born in 1812 and died at eighty years of age, while his mother, born in 1816, passed away when seventy-eight years of age. There were four children in the family: William L., who died at the age of forty-five years; Margaret H., who died at the age of sixty-five years, as the wife of James H. Scott; Rachael F., the widow of S. B. Redman; and Thomas R. The father of these children passed his entire life in agricultural pursuits and never cared for politics, although he was a democratic voter. He and his wife were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Thomas R. Gardner was educated in the public schools of Clark County and at Kentucky Wesleyan Institute at Millersburg, and after leaving school began his association with his father in farming operations. Following his marriage he settled in Fayette County, Kentucky, and for a time devoted himself to farming and subsequently stock breeding, and eventually centered all his activities in the breeding of fast horses, a field in which, as heretofore noted, he gained wide success. For many years Timberland furnished some of the finest horseflesh in Kentucky, among its sires being Himgar, Fellowcraft, Paramatta, Longflight, imported Victory, imported Gonecoon, imported Massetto, Tenney, imported Goldcrest and Doctor McBride. For a long time Mr. Gardner was associated with Maj. B. G. Thomas, with whom he held annual sales of yearling colts at New York. The arrival and rapid development of the automobile, together with the advent of automobile racing and the passage of laws legalizing the same, caused them to sell off all their stock with the exception of a few animals, and Mr. Gardner disposed of the last of his in 1920 and is now living in retirement at 128 East High Street, Lexington. During the many years that he was identified with the breeding and development of horses he was known for his high sense of honor, straightforward principles and unfailing integrity.

Mr. Gardner is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has been a steward for twelve or fifteen years. He was a director in the Central Bank, later the Lexington Bank & Trust Company and then of the Phoenix Third National Bank, of which he has been a member of the finance committee for five years. His political affiliation is with the democratic party.

In April, 1876, Mr. Gardner was united in marriage with Kate Henderson, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, a daughter of David B. and Martha Ann (Pettit) Henderson, farming people, who died when Mrs. Gardner was only a child, leaving three children, of whom two are living, Mrs. Gardner being the second in order of birth. To Mr. and Mrs. Gardner there has been born one child, Carrie G., the wife of William K. Bayless, and they have one son, Thomas Gardner, a graduate of Lexington High School and Culver (Indiana) Military Academy, class of 1919, who declined an appointment to West Point.

MARTIN THOMPSON KELLY is a successful corporation lawyer now located in Lexington, whose practice has involved the legal affairs of a number of leading land and oil companies in Virginia and Eastern Kentucky and also in other states.

Mr. Kelly was born at Shenandoah, Pennsylvania, January 4, 1875, a son of James J. and Louise B. (Thompson) Kelly. The parents were both born in Pennsylvania and in the same year, 1852, and the mother is still living at Chicago. Martin T. is the third of twelve children, all of whom are still living. James J. Kelly, who died in 1916, was a man of great prominence in the Pennsylvania industrial field for many years. He was educated in that state and for a long time was superintendent for the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, having charge of their collieries Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Later, at Pittsburgh, he was associated with the steel manufacturers Howe-Brown and Company as superintendent. Subsequently he designed and built the Colonial Steel Company's plant and continued as its manager for several years. He also served as boiler inspector for Allegheny County, and was president of the Sally Cogins Gold Mining Company in North Carolina and of the Longfellow Gold Mining Company of Idaho. Politically he was a stanch republican.

Martin Thompson Kelly spent his early life in Pittsburgh, where he attended public schools, also the Curry Institute, and prepared for his profession in the law department of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1901. He was admitted to the Michigan bar the same year. For about a year he practiced at Morgantown, West Virginia. Coming to Kentucky, his home and offices were at Jackson for about eight years, where he represented some important corporations owning lands in Eastern Kentucky. Mr. Kelly has also lived at Pineville, Kentucky, and in 1917 came to Lexington. He has his offices in the Fayette Bank Building and is attorney for several oil, coal and land companies operating in Eastern Kentucky. He is a member of the Lexington Bar, at Lexington, and State Bar associations, votes with the republicans, is a member of the Catholic Church, is identified with the Chamber of Commerce, and during 1920 was a member of the law faculty of Kentucky University.

On June 26, 1909, Mr. Kelly married Anna May Osborne, daughter of Judge J. J. Osborne, of Cynthiana, Kentucky. She was the second of the seven children of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have three children, Dorothy, Margaret and James J.

ALBERT BENEDICT OBERST. One of the prominent younger members of the Owensboro bar, Albert Benedict Oberst has found ample exercise for his time and talents since beginning practice here nearly fifteen years ago.

A native son of Kentucky, he was born at Owensboro, November 7, 1883, one of the family of nine sons and two daughters of Andrew and Mary J. (Tennes) Oberst. Andrew Oberst who was born in Germany in 1853, left his native land at the age of fourteen, and in London, England, learned the baker's trade. At seventeen he came to the United States, and after a brief period in the State of New York located at Owensboro in 1872, where he has been an honored and respected resident for nearly half a century. At Owensboro he married Mary J. Tennes, born at Jasper, Indiana, in 1857, daughter of Paul and Josephine (Kieffer) Tennes, who were also of German ancestry. Paul Tennes moved to Owensboro in 1868 and was a successful brick maker, owning and operating a brick yard until his death in 1877. At that time Andrew Oberst, who for ten years had been in the bakery business, took the management of the Tennes brick business, and directed the plant for about thirty years. He is now retired. Andrew Oberst and wife reared their children in the Catholic faith. One of their sons was in the army during the World war.

Albert B. Oberst attended parochial schools, graduated from the Owensboro High School in 1903, and acquired his professional education in Notre Dame University at South Bend, Indiana, where he was graduated with the LL. B. degree in 1906. He was admitted to the bar and began practice in his native city the same year, and following the lines of general practice has achieved a very substantial clientele.

In 1913 he married Miss Marie Elizabeth Wittgen of Evansville, Indiana. They are the parents of two sons, Paul Leo, and Charles Albert, and two daughters, Alma Elizabeth and Mary Emma. Mr. and Mrs. Oberst are members of the Catholic Church, and he is a past state deputy of the Knights of Columbus; a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Country Club, retiring president of the Welfare League, and is the first president of Community Service, recently organized in Owensboro.

NATHANIEL LEWIS BOSWORTH. One of the best known and most successful physicians and surgeons of Kentucky is Dr. Nathaniel L. Bosworth, of Lexington. He has won success in life in a definite manner because he has persevered in pursuit of a worthy purpose, and is gaining thereby a most satisfactory reward. His life has been exemplary, and he has always supported those interests which are calculated to uplift and benefit his community. He is the representative of honored old families of the Blue Grass state and stands as a sterling type of that class which has dignified and honored the community where he lives.

Nathaniel Lewis Bosworth was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, Kentucky, on the 12th day of April, 1869, and is the son of Benjamin and Mary (Cloud) Bosworth. His paternal grandparents, Nathaniel Bosworth and wife, were among the pioneer settlers of Fayette County, spending their days here on a farm. They reared a family of nine children. Benjamin Bosworth was born in Tennessee on July 3, 1835, and died on June 10, 1906, while his wife, who was born in Kentucky on October 30, 1840, died on October 31, 1918. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom two died in infancy, the survivors being as follows: Henry M., who served as sheriff of Fayette County, as auditor of the State of Kentucky and as treasurer of the state; J. Cloud, who married Minnie Gess; Harriett C.; Joseph F., who married Nora Veil; Nathaniel L., the immediate subject of this sketch; Charles C., who married Nellie Hardy; E. Powell, who married Virginia Griffith; Benjamin, who married Anne Graves; and Mary. The father of these children came to Kentucky when a mere child with his parents and secured his education in the schools of Fayette County. On attaining mature years he engaged in farming and stock raising, which occupied his attention during his entire active life. He was a member of the Baptist Church, while in politics he was nominally a democrat, though he frequently gave his vote in support of the prohibition ticket, being deeply interested in the efforts to eradicate the whiskey traffic. The subject's maternal grandfather, Robert Cloud, was a man of considerable prominence in the early history of Kentucky, being one of the leading ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a forceful and eloquent speaker.

Nathaniel L. Bosworth was a student in the public schools of Fayette County and the Kentucky State University, and having determined to devote his life to the medical profession he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Louisville, where he was graduated with the class of 1892, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic Institute, followed by two years of special post-graduate study in Europe, in 1899-1901, visiting the best clinics of London, Berlin and Vienna. On his return Doctor Bosworth entered upon the active practice of his profession in Lexington, where he has long been recognized as one of the leading members of his profession, his reputation extending far beyond the confines of his own locality. He is a member of the Fayette County Medical Society, of which he is an ex-president, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley Medical Society, the Southern Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He rendered efficient service for several years as a member of the Board of Health of the City of Lexington.

Politically Doctor Bosworth gives his support to the democratic party, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 89, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 21st day of October, 1903, Doctor Bosworth was married to Mary E. Neale, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of Capt. William L. and Carrie B. (Goodloe) Neale, both of whom are deceased. She is the younger of two children born to her parents, the other being William, who died in young manhood. To Doctor and Mrs. Bosworth have been born two children, Carolyn Goodloe and Nathaniel Lewis, Jr. In addition to his long and creditable career in one of the most useful and exacting of professions the doctor has also proved an honorable member of the body politic, rising in the confidence and esteem of the public, and in every relation of life he has never fallen below the dignity of true manhood, being essentially a man among men and commanding respect by innate force as well as by superior ability.

RANKIN CLEMMONS was one of the most venerable citizens of Fayette County at the time of his death, in 1915, a few months prior to the ninetieth anniversary of his birth, and he had proved himself distinctly one of the world's constructive workers, with the result that he accumulated a valuable property. His integrity of purpose was never questioned, and for many years he applied himself zealously to his farm operations and business affairs, his sagacity and judgment having made him a citizen of substantial order. He was a good neighbor and a loyal friend, unassuming in manner and tastes and indefatigable in his efforts to achieve the maximum success which his ability and environment made possible. He died at the home of a neighbor, C. B. Carby, near the old homestead farm five miles southwest of Lexington, on the Harrodsburg turnpike, a property now owned and occupied by his son-in-law, John C. Larkin.

Mr. Clemmons was born on a farm near Brannon Station in Jessamine County, near the Fayette County line, and he passed the greater part of his long and useful life in Fayette County. As a young man he purchased the farm near which his death occurred, the substantial old brick house on the place having been erected long before the property came into his possession. Mr. Clemmons was about forty years of age at the time of his marriage to Miss Virginia Brock, and their marital companionship of nearly forty years was broken by the death of Mrs. Clemmons, who passed away at the age of sixty years.

The old home farm of Mr. Clemmons comprises 205 acres, but through his own energy and ability he accumulated a splendid landed estate of 6,000 acres, one-half of this property being in Mercer County and the remainder in Fayette, Jessamine and Woodford counties. With increasing prosperity he added gradually to his landed possessions until he became one of the most extensive holders of farm property in this section of the state. On his home farm he gave special attention to the raising of live stock, and he rented his other farms to tenants who met the approval of his judgment. He continued in the active supervision of his business affairs until his death and was in many ways a remarkable man. He left no will, and the settlement of his large estate was effected through the medium of the Probate Court.

Of the children of Mr. Clemmons the eldest was Mollie, who was born in the old brick house on the home farm, and who was nineteen years of age at the time of her marriage to John C. Larkin, of whom more specific mention will be made in later paragraphs. She remained with her husband on the old home place until her death, November 11, 1917, at the age of fifty-four years. Robert, the only son, continued to be associated with his father in farm industry until his death, at the age of forty years. He married Miss Mattie Raibe, and they became the parents of four children, Mrs. Clemmons likewise being deceased. Virginia, the eldest of these four children, is the wife of Doctor Allen, a representative physician in Mercer County. Edward resides in the city of Lexington. Mrs. Margaret Wilson and Mrs. Estabell Brown likewise reside in that city. Bettie, youngest of the children of the subject of this memoir, became the wife of James Shepard and was a resident of Lexington at the time of her death, she having had no children. Thus the children of the late Robert Clemmons and those of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Larkin are the only surviving immediate representatives of the Clemmons family.

John C. Larkin was born in Hawkins County, Tennessee, on the 16th of April, 1860, and was reared and educated in his native state. Impressed with the records he had heard concerning the famous Blue Grass district of Kentucky, he came to Fayette County as a youth of nineteen years and became associated with farm enterprise near South Elkhorn. Finally he engaged in independent business as a market gardener, and he continued his activities in this field of enterprise for twenty years. During nine years of this period he resided in Jessamine County, and he retired from the gardening business to assume the active management of the home farm of his father-in-law, his wife having inherited this valuable property. Mr. and Mrs. Larkin erected on the place the handsome and commodious brick house which now adorns the farm, the same being situated on a gentle rise of ground and commanding a fine view of the surrounding country, besides which it stands forth as one of the pleasing features of the rural landscape of this section of Fayette County. Mrs. Larkin was not long permitted to enjoy the new and attractive home, as her death occurred nine months after the family had removed to the new house. In the hope of benefiting her health she had passed several months in Arizona, but she returned to Kentucky and passed the closing days of her life in the new house in which she had taken much pride. Mrs. Larkin is survived by ten children: William is one of the substantial farmers of Fayette County; Lizzie is the wife of Clarence Knight, of Mercer County; Georgia is the wife of Samuel Cecil, and they reside on a farm adjoining that of her father; Bertie is the widow of Gilbert Berryman and is now at home with her father; James is a progressive farmer near South Elkhorn; and Bryant, Margaret, Virginia, Thomas and Charles are the younger members of the family circle at the paternal home.

John C. Larkin is one of the vigorous and progressive exponents of farm industry in Fayette County and is loyal and liberal in community affairs. His political support is given to the democratic party.

John Peter Fister. Engaged actively in the agricultural industry in Fayette County, where he is carrying on extensive operations as a tobacco grower and general farmer, is John Peter Fister. Mr. Fister, whose property is located on the Georgetown Pike, has passed his entire career in this locality, having been born on the farm which he now occupies December 10, 1882, a son of John N. and Annie (Grosser) Fister.

John N. Fister was born in Alsace, France, in 1845, the son of a small farmer in that province, and was brought up to agricultural pursuits which he followed until the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. He enlisted in a regiment from his home community and was the leader of a battery, but the overthrow of the Second Empire and the subsequent loss to Prussia by France of the province of Alsace-Lorraine caused him to decide to flee his native land. Accordingly he made plans with his friend, John Decker, to leave Paris and return temporarily to Alsace; but, while Mr. Fister succeeded in leaving that city, Mr. Decker did not get away until 1872, in which year they embarked for the United States and eventually reached their destination at New York City.

After spending about two months in the metropolis Mr. Fister went to Cincinnati, which was his home for about a year, and he then came to Fayette County and engaged in truck gardening, first buying twenty acres and later adding to his holdings until he had over 500 acres of fine Blue Grass farming land. During the remainder of his long and active career, until his retirement, he devoted himself uninterruptedly to the cultivation of his land, and never cared for public office. He died August 22, 1919, at the age of seventy-four years, in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. In politics he was a democrat. Mr. Fister married Annie Grosser, who was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, and died November 13, 1902, at the age of fifty-one years. They became the parents of eleven children, as follows: Mary, the wife of Charles McKenna; James, who died at the age of eight years; Frederick, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, who married Nettie Stuntebeck and has nine children; Margaret, the wife of Charles Schuemaker, with five children; Joseph, who married Carrie Wolf and has five children; John Peter; Rosie, the wife of George Keller, with four children; Ferdinand, who died at the age of twelve years; William, who married Elizabeth Decker and has two children; Charles, who married May Rebbel and has four children; and Julianna, who married Lorine Burke and has two children.

John Peter Fister was given good educational advantages in his youth, attending first St. Paul's parochial school and then spending two years at Assumption College, Sandwich, Ontario, Canada. When not engrossed in his studies he was associated with his father in the work of the home property, and when only twenty years of age bought out his father's interest in the truck gardening business. After the death of the elder man, Mr. Fister started farming, and at the present time has 300 acres of the home property, all well-cultivated and highly productive Blue Grass land, which he devotes largely to the growing of tobacco, although he also has good corn crops and raises a number of hogs for the market. He is considered one of the progressive and capable agriculturists of his locality, and as a business man maintains an excellent reputation for integrity. Mr. Fister is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and in political matters maintains an independent stand.

On October 4, 1904, Mr. Fister was united in marriage with Magdalena Schweichart, who was born in Mason County, Kentucky, and to this union there have been born seven children, of whom two died in infancy, the others being: Annie Theresa, Mary Cecelia, Henrietta, Julius and Claude V., all at home with their parents.

Charles Alonzo Nevitt, M. D. The modern hospital is too often looked upon as a convenience or a luxury of the well-to-do. This theory is both unfounded and injurious. The modern hospital is not only the highest development of science for the alleviation and cure of the swarming bodily ills of mankind, but a wonderful organization into which the best thought and experience of experts the world over have entered. Among the modern hospitals which are representative of the best tenets of medical science is that conducted at Elmwood, just outside the city limits of Lexington, by Dr. Charles Alonzo Nevitt.

Doctor Nevitt was born in Meade County, Kentucky, on his father's farm, April 27, 1873, a son of Henry Clay and Catherine Elizabeth (McNamarry) Nevitt, natives of this state. Henry C. Nevitt was born in Meade County, May 24, 1845, and after attending the public schools entered Gethsemane College in Nelson County, from which he was duly graduated. He also attended Cecelian College in Hardin County, and on leaving that institution engaged in farming in Meade County. Mr. Nevitt was a great lover of fine horses, which he raised on his farm with other stock, and found much enjoyment in engaging in the chase with his fox hounds. He was a substantial agriculturist and highly esteemed citizen, a stanch democrat in politics, and a member of the Roman Catholic Church. His death occurred in October, 1882. On September 5, 1865, he married Elizabeth McNamarry, who was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, November 24, 1884, and survives him, and they had ten children, of whom three are deceased, the survivors being: Edward H., John P., Charles Alonzo, Anna L., Richard O., Elizabeth and William G.

Charles A. Nevitt was reared on the home farm and secured his primary education in the public schools of Meade County, subsequently attending Cecelian College in Hardin County, from which he was graduated in 1895 with the degree of Master of Arts. At the age of twenty-three years he was appointed county clerk of Meade County, serving 2½ years, and then entered Louisville Medical College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1904, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. At that time he engaged in practice at Brandenburg, Kentucky, but after one year was appointed second assistant physician at the Eastern State Hospital in February, 1905. In October, 1907, he was made first assistant physician, and later was appointed superintendent of that institution, a position which he occupied for two years. Doctor Nevitt resigned to establish the Elmwood Hospital on the old J. R. Hugh homestead, known as Elmwood, one of the beauty spots of the Blue Grass region, one mile out from the Court House at Lexington, just outside of the city limits. Here he has since conducted a general hospital, which is modern in every respect, and which has won and held the confidence of the public. Doctor Nevitt is a skilled physician of recognized high standing, and is highly thought of by his fellow-members in the Fayette County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Kentucky Valley Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the American Medical Psychological Society. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, holds membership in the Knights of Columbus, and in politics is a democrat.

Doctor Nevitt married Miss Pearl Wimp on July 11, 1899, who died February 1, 1913, leaving three children: Alice Pearl and Charles A., twins, and Dorothy W.

George B. Batterton, present county judge of Bourbon County, has been in county offices most of his professional career as a lawyer. He is a member of one of the old and prominent families of Bourbon County, and several of the present generation have gained enviable distinction.

Judge Batterton was born January 21, 1885, in Bourbon County, son of B. A. and Elizabeth (Boswell) Batterton. His grandfather, Benjamin Alfred Batterton, was also born in Bourbon County. The Battertons came to Kentucky about 1784 and acquired land on which some of the family have remained to the present date. B. A. Batterton has spent his life on a farm seven miles west of Paris, near Jacksonville. His wife, Elizabeth Boswell, was born in Harrison County, daughter of Gen. Bushrod Temple Boswell, a native of the same county and son of William Elliott Boswell, who came to Harrison County from Virginia about 1794. William Elliott Boswell was a colonel in the War of 1812 under Gen. Green Clay and saw some heavy hardships as a soldier, in some of the campaigns marching through water to the waist. He served as a member of the Kentucky Constitutional Convention and was a first cousin of Governor Issac Shelby. The family still retains some old letters throwing interesting light on men and affairs of pioneer Kentucky. Gen. B. T. Boswell served as an officer in the Mexican war, was too old for service in the Confederate army, and acquired his title as General from duty during Indian times. B. A. and Elizabeth Batterton had a family of four sons and one daughter. The oldest, Benjamin Alfred, went to the Philippine Islands as fiber inspector for the United States Bureau of Agriculture, was with the Navy Department in the Islands, and is now with a New York importing company at Manila. Judge George B. is the second in age. Roy is a farmer in Bourbon County. The daughter, Mary, is the wife of Dr. R. R. McMillan, of Paris. The youngest, Bishop Batterton, enlisted soon after the declaration of the war against Germany, was with the Marine Corps, and accompanied the first 50,000 American soldiers to France. He was an expert rifle shot, and had won medals before going into the army. He was wounded at Chateau Thierry, also in the battle of Belleau Wood, and on July 19, 1919, while acting as a sharpshooter holding back a German advance, was fatally wounded and died the next day, while being transported to hospital. He was a member of the Seventy-sixth Company of the Sixth Regiment and was buried at Crepy, France. Captain Overton wrote a letter giving the details of his death and praising his admirable conduct as a soldier.

Judge George B. Batterton grew up on the family homestead in Bourbon County, attended private schools and also Center College at Danville, and graduated in law in 1906. He immediately began practice at Paris, and in 1910 was elected county attorney, filling that office consecutively until 1918, when he was made county judge. Judge Batterton married Miss Ida Smith, a daughter of Wellington Smith, of Scott County.

Fletcher Mann, proprietor of the Blue Grass Stock Yards Company at Lexington, has been identified with agricultural interests and with the handling of horses and mules for many years, and has won success through industry and individual ability. He was born on his grandfather's farm in Nicholas County, Kentucky, near the old Indian battle ground, March 19, 1856, a son of Milton and Margaret E. (Ricketts) Mann.

Milton Mann, the paternal grandfather of Fletcher Mann, was born in Nicholas County, and there passed his life in farming, reaching the age of seventy years. His son, also named Milton, was born on the home farm in 1821 and as a young man followed his father's vocation of farming, but later went to college, was graduated at Greencastle, Indiana, and, being converted to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a preacher in the Kentucky Conference for fourteen years. Returning then to Nicholas County, he passed the rest of his life as a farmer and raiser of live stock, in addition to which he engaged in a general stock business. He was a democrat in his political faith. Mr. Mann died in 1893, at the age of seventy-two years. He first married Margaret E. Ricketts, daughter of William E. and Mariah (Leach) Ricketts, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Robinson (now Nicholas) County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts were farming people who reached advanced years and had a large family. Mr.

J. M. Hillman

Ricketts became one of the prominent men of his day and locality, and served for some years as sheriff of Nicholas, Fleming and Robinson counties, Kentucky. Mrs. Mann died when her son Fletcher was a mere child, and her two other children, James E. and Margaret, died in infancy. For his second wife, Milton Mann married Jennie Ricketts, and they had two children: Dr. Edgar G. and Rev. Luther E.

Fletcher Mann secured his education in the public schools of Nicholas County, where he resided on the home farm until reaching the age of twenty-seven years. At that time he went to Paris, Kentucky, where he embarked in the transfer and bus business, in addition to which he dealt in mules and horses. In 1907 he disposed of his interests there and came to Lexington where he bought the Blue Grass Stock Yards, of which he has since been the proprietor. He has shipped to the various large markets of the country and is doing a large and profitable business. Early in the World war he began to buy mules for the British Government, and later was engaged in a like capacity for the United States Government. While residing at Paris Mr. Mann served in official capacities in Bourbon County, and wherever his residence he has always been justly accounted a public-spirited and constructive citizen. As a business man he is highly thought of because of his known integrity. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in politics is a democrat.

In May, 1877, Mr. Mann was united in marriage with Miss Mollie D. Jones, a native of Kentucky, who died in 1910, leaving three children: Howard Wilson, who married Mrs. Borland; Edward K., who married Nettie Porter; and Lucy B., who married first Terrell Thompson, who died leaving one daughter, Wenntia, and after his death married Frank Bryan. In 1912 Mr. Mann married Miss Inez B. Glass.

Paul Morphy Williams, Federal prohibition director for Kentucky, with headquarters at Lexington, is the youngest man to hold such an office in any of the states of the Union. Mr. Williams though a young man is a veteran of the public service and has been in public affairs practically since boyhood.

He was born in Gallatin County, Kentucky, October 1, 1886, a son of D. O. Williams, who was born on the same farm though in Carroll County. Grandfather Joel Williams with his bride rode horseback over the mountains from North Carolina about 1832 and became one of the largest land owners in Carroll and Gallatin counties, leaving each of his large family of children a generous farm. Much of this land is still in the family. He also owned land now included in Cincinnati. His old home was in Carroll County. He was a southern sympathizer and was frequently annoyed by the Federal soldiers during the Civil war, and from exposure brought on during that period died when about seventy years of age. The life of D. O. Williams was spent as a farmer and stockman at the old farm, where he died in 1897, at the age of forty-nine. His widow, Frances Burnley Henry, whose father was a direct descendant of Patrick Henry, survives and lives at Detroit, Michigan. Mr. Williams' Christian names came through another branch of ancestry. Dennis Morphy was a Virginia settler from Ireland, and his Masonic regalia is still owned by Paul Morphy Williams. He was a ship builder at Norfolk and married Jane Jackson, a cousin of President Andrew Jackson, and named the first son born James Monroe for the President, and the first daughter, Virginia, for his adopted state. One of his descendants was Paul Morphy, the celebrated chess expert.

Paul Morphy Williams grew up on his father's farm and completed his education in American University at Harriman, Tennessee. When he was fourteen years of age he was a page in the House of Representatives at Frankfort. Later he was private messenger to Speaker Eli Brown, and was bill clerk in the 1908 session of the House during the Bradley-Beckham deadlock. For two years he was a Pullman car conductor in the Southwest, and on returning to Kentucky became field statistician in the State Department of Agriculture, serving four years under Commissioner Matt S. Cohen. During that time he visited every county in the state and compiled a great bulk of data on farm acreage, extensive variety of crops, and also did an important service in encouraging movements for the betterment of farm and rural life conditions, movements that are represented today in the County Agency System. By these extended travels Mr. Williams acquired a personal acquaintance all over Kentucky, and his acquaintance with Kentuckians is probably unsurpassed in number. He was for two years assistant tax commissioner in Henry County, living at Newcastle, and his home has been at Newcastle since 1916. While there he read law with H. K. Bourne, but never took the bar examinations.

Mr. Williams was chosen Federal prohibition agent March 1, 1920, in the Eastern District of Kentucky, and on the 1st of June was made chief Federal agent for the Eastern District, with fifteen subordinates covering sixty-six counties. The distinctive ability he showed in this office brought him promotion on November 15, 1920, as Federal prohibition director for Kentucky. He has the chief administrative responsibilities in the enforcing end of the prohibition amendment, and has an office force of six at Lexington besides six field inspectors and subordinate agents in the different counties.

Mr. Williams has been active in a number of democratic conventions. He is a baseball fan, a thorough outdoor man and a member of the Baptist Church and Knights of Pythias. At the age of twenty-four he married Lyllian Clay Duncan, of Ghent, Carroll County.

Louis des Cognets. From an early boyhood of comparative poverty and lack of opportunity Louis des Cognets many years ago achieved a position as one of the strongest and most influential business men of Lexington and the state. The foundation of his prosperity was laid as a producer and dealer in coal. For many years he was an active official in some of Kentucky's leading public utilities.

Mr. des Cognets was born at Lexington March 6, 1859, son of Hippolyte and Anna (Russell) des Cognets. His mother, who was born at Lexington in 1820, and died in 1902, was of distinguished lineage, being a daughter of Col. Thomas A. Russell of the noted family of Russell pioneers. Col. Thomas A. Russell married Sarah Lewis Garrard, who was a granddaughter of James Garrard, that distinguished Kentuckian who was the only citizen to serve two consecutive terms as governor. He was the second governor of the state, elected in 1796 and was reelected in 1800. Hippolyte des Cognets was of a noble French family, and was the youngest brother of Count des Cognets, one of the oldest names of Brittany. Hippolyte des Cognets came to this country when quite young, graduated in medicine from Transylvania University at Lexington, later continued a post graduate course in medicine in Paris, France, and thereafter practiced his profession with high skill and proficiency at Lexington, Kentucky, until his death at the early age of thirty-three. He was born in France in 1820 and died in 1862. He was the father of two sons, Thomas Jean, who died at the age of eight years, and Louis.

Louis des Cognets, who was born at Lexington March 6, 1859, was only three years of age when his father died, and largely as a result of that circumstance had to depend on his own energies and exertions to secure an education and make his start in the world. The first regular employment he had was as messenger boy with the banking firm of Grinstead & Bradley of Lexington. He remained with that institution continuously for about eleven years, in the meantime studying as opportunity presented, and working constantly to familiarize himself with the banking business. He was teller of the bank when he resigned in 1884 and entered the retail coal business. During the past thirty-five years his holdings have become widely extended as a coal mine owner and operator, and for the handling of his large aggregate volume of coal production he maintains selling agencies in Cincinnati, New York City and Minneapolis.

He is a director in the First and City National Bank of Lexington, and was formerly connected with the management of most of Lexington's public utility corporations. He is former president of the Lexington Street Railway Company, former president of the Electric Light Company, former president of the Lexington Gas Company, and former president of the Lexington Ice Manufacturing Company.

Mr. des Cognets is a democrat, is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Lexington Lodge of the Elks. On February 26, 1889, he married Estelle McCarty, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. They have three children: Russell; Estelle, wife of Hogan L. Yancey, now county attorney of Fayette County; and Louis.

William M. Fister. One of the finely-cultivated properties of Fayette County is the farm on the Georgetown pike owned by William M. Fister, which has also the distinction of being a point of much historic interest as the site of the old Eagle Inn. Mr. Fister has gained his position as one of the progressive young agriculturists of his county through industry and the intelligent use of modern methods. He was born on his father's farm in Fayette County June 7, 1888, and is a son of John N. and Annie M. (Grosser) Fister.

John N. Fister was born in 1845, in Alsace, France, the son of a modest farmer of that province, and was reared to the pursuits of agriculture, which he followed until his career was interrupted by the opening of the Franco-Prussian war. Enlisting in a battery of horse, he became its leader, but the days of 1870 and 1871 were dark ones for France, which was defeated in the great struggle and eventually lost the province of Alsace-Lorraine. Mr. Fister thereupon decided to leave the country, not feeling able to live under the rule of the invader, and made plans for leaving Paris with his friend John Decker. While Mr. Fister got away from that city safely and returned to his home in Alsace, Mr. Decker could not complete his plans until 1872, in which year the friends embarked for the United States and eventually reached their destination of New York City. Mr. Fister spent two months there and then went to Cincinnati, whence, after a year, he came to Fayette County, Kentucky, and engaged in truck gardening, first buying twenty acres and later adding to his holdings until he had over 500 acres of fine Blue Grass land. From that time forward until his retirement he devoted himself without interruption to the cultivation of his land. He was a democrat in politics, but was satisfied with a quiet career and never sought public office. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and died in that faith August 22, 1919, at the age of seventy-four years.

Mr. Fister married Annie M. Grosser, who was born in 1851 in Hamilton County, Ohio, and died November 13, 1902, in Fayette County, aged fifty-one years. To this union there were born eleven children, as follows: Mary, the wife of Cass McKenny; James, who died at the age of eight years; Frederick, of Bourbon County, this state, who married Nettie Stuntebeck and has eight children: Margaret, the wife of Charles Schuemaker, with five children; Joseph, who married Carrie Wolf and has five children; John Peter, a prosperous farmer of Fayette County, who married Magdalena Schweichart and has five children: Rosie, the wife of George Keller, with four children; Ferdinand, who died at the age of twelve years; William, who married Elizabeth Decker and has two children; Charles, who married May Rebbel and has four children; and Julianna, who married Lorine Burke and has two children. After the death of his first wife John N. Fister married Mrs. Clara Dirks, and they had one son, Victor.

William M. Fister attended St. Catherine's Academy at Lexington, Mount St. Joseph's College at Delhi, Ohio, and Assumption College at Sandwich, Ontario, Canada. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm, and when he was but eighteen years of age began to work at the truck gardening business in association with his father. He was thus engaged until 1909, when he began traveling in the West, but after two years, during which he visited many important and interesting points, returned to his home locality and engaged in farming on the Georgetown Pike, where he now has 315 acres of highly-productive Blue Grass land, which he devotes to general farming and tobacco raising. He is enterprising and industrious and has fairly won and held the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has come into contact. Mr. Fister belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, and in politics is a democrat.

On October 22, 1913, Mr. Fister was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Decker, daughter of John and Margaret Decker, and to this union there have been born two children: John William and Richard E. Mr. Fister is the owner of the old Eagle Inn, built 150 years ago and still in good condition, although one of the oldest houses in Fayette County. It was here that the Marquis de Lafayette, the great French patriot, was entertained during his last visit to the United States, in 1824.

William David Watts, a retired business man and farmer of Lexington, is living not far from the scenes of the wilderness in which some of his ancestors, including his great-grandfather, had their first Kentucky experiences 140 years ago. Few of the original families of Kentucky can claim a longer and more unbroken continuity of residence than that of Watts. When the pioneers of the family came to Kentucky, about twelve years before this section of the west was set off and formally dedicated as a new state, they established a home in a community known as Cross Plain, where in subsequent years the village of Athens grew up and was established.

The founder of the family was David Watts, who was born in Virginia April 20, 1761. He died December 13, 1835, fifty-four years after coming to Kentucky. He married Ruth Twyman, who was born in Virginia, June 17, 1757, and died in Kentucky June 6, 1837. Her father, George Twyman, who died in 1822, at the age of eighty-nine, was living with his brother William Twyman in Albemarle County, Virginia, about 1765. George Twyman and his wife, Mary, had the following children: Joseph, Samuel, Sarah, who became the wife of Sanford William Acaham, Elizabeth, who was the wife of William J. Wood, Agatha, wife of Robert Dearing, Ruth, who became the wife of David Watts, and James.

The children of David Watts and wife were: Mary, born January 27, 1785, and died December 17, 1840; Elizabeth, born April 27, 1787, and died July 7, 1830; Sarah, born October 9, 1789; Millie, born July 31, 1792, and died August 27, 1819; Nancy, born September 23, 1794, and died December 4, 1803; Garrett, mentioned in the following paragraphs; and David, who was born October 12, 1800, and lived to be fourscore or more years of age.

Garrett Watts, who carries the line of descent to William David Watts, was born November 24, 1796, and died February 3, 1873, and was therefore a native Kentuckian and spent his life largely in Fayette County. On November 4, 1818, he married Martha Twyman, who was born in Virginia December 29, 1801, and died March 30, 1842. The record of their children is: Lucy R., born August 13, 1819, and died September 10, 1841, was married May 11, 1837, to Walter C. Furgerson, and she left a child, named Martha Ann, who married a Mr. Lewis of Missouri; Margaret, born May 19, 1821, died April 15, 1822; Elizabeth born March 16, 1823, died July 18, 1843; William, born May 25, 1825, died November 7, 1839; David T.; and George born May 29, 1837, and died August 4, 1837.

David Twyman Watts, who represented the third generation of the family in Kentucky, was born April 11, 1831, and died October 14, 1854, having spent his brief but active career as a successful farmer in Fayette County. On November 15, 1849, he married Talitha Quisenberry, who was born in Clark County, Kentucky, December 19, 1824, and died February 3, 1885. They had two sons, William D. and Garrett. Garrett, the second, was born May 6, 1853, and is one of the prominent farmers and tobacco raisers in Fayette County. On January 13, 1886, Garrett Watts married Minnie Gay, a native of Woodford County, Kentucky, and they have four children, named Edith, David T., William J. (who married Miss Allie Karsner of Fayette County) and Mattie Lee.

It was on his grandfather's old homestead not far from Lexington that William David Watts was born October 2, 1851. As he grew to manhood he acquired a substantial education, and then devoted his efforts to the ancestral occupation of agriculture, and was one of the leading farmers of Fayette County for many years, until he retired to his home in Lexington. In addition to his advantages in the public schools he attended Georgetown College. He has lived the life of an influential citizen but has never cared for public office. He has long been prominent in the First Baptist Church of Lexington, and in that great church organization has held the post of deacon for some fourteen or fifteen years and for a much longer period that of church clerk. In politics he regards himself as an independent, though usually he has voted the democratic ticket.

On February 10, 1880, Mr. Watts married Miss Ella Chenault, of Madison County, and member of a very prominent family of Central Kentucky. Mrs. Watts throughout her life expressed a kindly character in devotion to home, children and all the good works of her community. She was long prominent and esteemed in the membership of the First Baptist Church at Lexington and was identified with its several auxiliary societies, and was especially interested in the work of the Sunday School. She died October 17, 1918, of pneumonia following an attack of influenza. Mr. and Mrs. Watts were the parents of four children, the youngest having been born April 3, 1896, and dying three days later. The three children who came to mature years were all daughters. Lillian C. was born December 25, 1880, and on October 15, 1902, was married to William C. Smith, who died in May, 1908. He was the father of two children, Eleanor C. and William C. Smith, Jr. Mrs. Lillian Smith on November 5, 1913, became the wife of Thompson R. Bryant, and they have two children, Elizabeth Scobel and Thompson R. Bryant, Jr.

The second daughter, Ethel, born December 7, 1882, was married December 8, 1903, to Harry M. Blanton, and they have three sons, William Watts, Harry M., Jr., and Harvey Chenault Blanton.

The youngest daughter of Mr. Watts is Aileen, who was born January 1, 1887, and was married to Harry G. Edwards June 16, 1909. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards likewise have three children, Harry G., Jr., Charles G. and Eleanor Chenault Edwards.

Garrett D. Weathers was for forty years closely identified with the agricultural progress and development of Fayette County. For several years before his death, which occurred June 6, 1921, he had owned and occupied a beautiful country place near Briar Hill, seven miles northeast of Lexington. Success in generous measure had rewarded his efforts, though death overtook him before he had completed the normal span of years and was consequently regarded as a calamity to the community as well as to his immediate family.

The old family homestead where he was born June 25, 1859, was adjacent to Avon Station in the extreme eastern part of Fayette County. He was a son of Albert and Sarah (Scott) Weathers. Albert Weathers was born December 20, 1822, and died in 1880. His wife was born July 20, 1826, and passed away in 1914. They were married June 22, 1845, nearly seventy years before her death. Sarah Scott was a daughter of Thomas Scott, whose old homestead is on the turnpike between Bryan Station and Briar Hill. She was a child at the death of her father, and the last of his family to pass away was Jane, wife of Granville Weathers, a brother of Albert. She died at her home near Avon in February, 1920. Some other details in the history of the Weathers family will be found on other pages of this publication. The four children reared by Albert and Sarah Weathers were: J. Howard, who owned a farm adjoining that of his brother Garrett D., and died in 1895, his family still occupying the homestead; Mary is the wife of John B. Roddick, an insurance man at Chicago; Garrett D.; and Sally, of Danville, widow of Rev. S. D. Boggs, a Presbyterian minister.

Garrett D. Weathers was reared on the home farm. He was twenty-one years of age when his father died, and thereafter gave his labors and energies to his widowed mother, assisting her in the work of the fields and the management of the estate. He gave her his utmost filial affection throughout the remaining years of her life. Eventually he acquired the ownership of a farm adjoining the old home place, and it was his desire to retain both in the family. Subsequently it became expedient to sell the old homestead, and at the same time, in 1917, he sold both properties. He then bought the farm above mentioned, and on which his last years were spent. This in earlier years was the home of Dr. Clifford Coons, who had erected the commodious residence subsequently enlarged and remodeled before the death of Mr. Weathers. The farm comprises 118 acres and has been handled as an agricultural and livestock proposition. The late Mr. Weathers was not only a good farmer but a loyal citizen in all that touched the community interests, though never a seeker for any political honors.

On October 27, 1887, he married Miss Laura Ruth Layson, who with three children survives him. Mrs. Weathers was born and reared in Bourbon County, a daughter of Z. M. and Sally Wilmott (Varnon) Layson. Her parents lived out their lives on the old home farm near Millersburg in Bourbon County. Her grandparents were Isaac and Polly (Moore) Layson, the former a native of Eastern Pennsylvania and was a child when brought to Kentucky. Polly Moore's ancestor was Patrick Moore, a native of Ireland who came to Kentucky from Virginia. Of the three children of Mrs. Weathers the oldest is Margaret Varnon, now a teacher in the high school at Danville, Kentucky, and formerly a teacher in the schools of Fayette County and for five years a missionary teacher in Pike County. The only son, Scott Layson Weathers, who was associated with his father in the management of the home farm and is now its responsible directing head, is an enthusiastic young agriculturist and is secretary and treasurer of the local Farmers Union. The younger daughter, Laura Ruth, finished her education in the University of Kentucky, is affili ated with Alpha Zeta sorority, and is a teacher in the Union High School near the old home.

Walter C. Dodson has been an educator, has been in the railroad service and for several years past has been cashier of the First State Bank of Eubank, Pulaski County. He is a native of Wayne County and the family have been there since pioneer times. The first Kentuckian of the family was his great-great-grandfather, a native Virginian, who moved over the mountains into Wayne County, Kentucky, and lived out his life as a farmer. An account of the Dodson family, carefully compiled, is presented on another page, in connection with the history of Walter Dodson's brother, Marcus A. Dodson. The grandfather, George Dodson, was born in 1828 and died in 1908, and his name is still spoken with high respect in that county, and he was not only a good farmer but a good citizen and homemaker. His wife was Dorcas Young, likewise a native of Wayne County, born in 1838 and died in 1919.

J. M. Dodson, father of Walter C. Dodson, is still living at Monticello in Wayne County, and was born near that town. He still gives his supervision to some extensive farming interests in that section. He also served two terms as assessor of Wayne County, is one of the leading members of the Baptist Church there, is a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. J. M. Dodson married Janette C. Dodson, a distant relative. They have three children: Marcus A., cashier of the Peoples Bank of Science Hill in Pulaski County; Walter C.; and Miss Flora, a foreign missionary of the Baptist Church at Canton, China.

Walter C. Dodson, who was born in Wayne County October 28, 1884, grew up on his father's farm, and in the intervals of his teaching work acquired a liberal education, supplementing his advantages in the rural schools by attending the Kentucky State University at Lexington for four years, until 1907. His record as a teacher and administrative head of schools includes two years as principal of the grade school at English in Carroll County, one year as principal of the grade school at Bradfordsville in Marion County, one year as principal of the Russell Springs Academy in Russell County, and during 1908-11 taught in the rural schools of his native county. Beginning in 1911, for seven years Mr. Dodson lived at Louisville, where he was employed in the general offices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. He left there in 1918 to accept the post of cashier of the First State Bank of Eubank. This institution was established in 1910, and has a capital of $15,000, surplus and profits of $14,500, and deposits of $90,000. Silas Wesley of Bethelridge is president, I. E. Payne is vice president, W. C. Dodson, cashier, and Charles N. Wardrip assistant cashier.

Mr. Dodson was a leader and instrumental in insuring the success of the various drives for the sale of Liberty Bonds and other Government securities during the World war, and gave much of his time to patriotic affairs. He owns a home of every modern convenience on Main Street, votes as a democrat, and is a member of the Baptist Church. In 1908 at Madison, Indiana, he married Miss Eulah Wright, daughter of J. A. and Sarah (Marshall) Wright, residents of English, Carroll County, Kentucky. Her father is an employe of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. Mrs. Dodson was a graduate of the high school at English. She died June 9, 1920. To their marriage were born three children: Francis R., on September 1, 1910; Walter R., on May 11, 1914, and Marcus A., on February 26, 1917.

William Robert Larkin is of the progressive, modern generation of farmers in Fayette County, and though educated and well qualified for the technical profession of electrical engineering he regards his status as an agriculturist a permanent vocation and one worthy of his best talents and energies.

Mr. Larkin, whose home is on Keene Pike, seven miles south of Lexington, is a grandson of late Rankin Clemmons, whose interesting career is reviewed elsewhere in this publication. Mr. Larkin's present home is about a mile and a half from the old Clemmons homestead, now occupied by his father, John C. Larkin, William R. Larkin was born at Nicholasville, February 1, 1885. He grew up on the farm, was well educated in the home schools, and studied electrical engineering by correspondence and also in the Kentucky University. At the age of twenty-eight he was appointed electrical engineer at the State Reform School at Greendale, and for three years had charge of all the machinery and equipment on the farm. He then returned home, and has since occupied his present place of eighty-six acres, formerly a part of the Rankin Clemmons estate, and inherited by him through his mother. Mr. Larkin has some of the noted Blue Grass soil, and is enjoying much of the prosperity of Blue Grass agriculturist. For the past two years he has also operated a garage at his country home, and has the local agency for the Liberty automobile.

Mr. Larkin married at the age of twenty-eight Susie B. Grow, of South Elkhorn, a daughter of the late Squire Levi Grow, of Lexington. Mr. Larkin is a democrat, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and is also a member of the social order of the Knights of Pythias, Knights of Crescent.

Samuel Ridley Ewing. Fealty to facts in the analyzation of a character of a citizen of the type of Samuel R. Ewing is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of standing and affairs more than any other consideration that gives character and stability to the body politic and makes the true glory of a city or state revered at home and respected in other localities. Mr. Ewing has long been numbered among the representative citizens of his community, and it is eminently proper that specific mention be made of him in a work of this character.

Samuel Ridley Ewing is a representative of one of the oldest and most respected families of Kentucky. His paternal grandfather, William Ewing, a native of Virginia, came to Kentucky in 1833 and settled on a farm just west of Owensboro. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Rebecca Hay, was also a native of Virginia. They became the parents of four sons and two daughters, but only one, Samuel Ridley Ewing, Sr., father of the subject, lived to attain considerable age. He was born in Virginia in 1825, was eight years of age when his parents came to and settled in Daviess County, Kentucky, and his death occurred in that county in 1883. He married Bettie Read, who was born in Russellville, Logan County, Kentucky, and, survived her husband, dying at Owensboro October 1, 1921, at the advanced age of ninety years. Her parents both died about the same time, when she was a mere girl, and she was partly reared by relatives in Owensboro and by a family in the country. She bore her husband two sons and three daughters. Samuel R. Ewing is the only surviving son, his brother dying in boyhood. Mr. Ewing's father and grandfather were farmers by vocation and, resided on the farm where the grandfather settled when he first came to Daviess County. They both were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Grandfather Ewing served in the War of 1812 as a colonel, and ever afterward was known as Colonel Ewing. Mr. Ewing's mother is a member of the Catholic Church, to which he and his wife and their children also belong.

Samuel Ridley Ewing was born on the old Colonel Ewing farm in Daviess County on December 7, 1858, and was reared on the paternal homestead, receiving his educational training in the public schools. He has devoted much of his life to agricultural pursuits and now cultivates 1,400 acres of land, corn, tobacco and alfalfa being his principal crops. He is up-to-date and progressive in his methods and has long been considered one of the leading farmers in his section of the country. He is also identified with the manufacturing interests of Owensboro, being a director in several of the largest successful manufacturing plants. He is a director in the National Deposit Bank, the largest bank in Western Kentucky.

In 1888 Mr. Ewing was married to Ida M. Millett, a daughter of Maj. Joe Millett, of Daviess County, who was killed in the Southern Army during the Civil war. Of the eight children, six daughters and two sons, born to Mr. and Mrs. Ewing, Robert G. served in the United States army during the recent World war, being a member of the Student Officers' Training Corps, but was not ordered overseas.

Politically Mr. Ewing is an independent democrat, and has never been a candidate for public office which paid a salary, but was elected and served on the City Council for two years and for a number of years was a member of the Electric Light and Water Commission, which operated the electric light and water plant. Owensboro's municipal water system (the best water system in Kentucky) was built while Mr. Ewing was on the City Council and stands as a testimonial to his devotion to his civic duties. He had the unique distinction of having been nominated for re-election by both political parties of Owensboro after his service on the City Council. Fraternally Mr. Ewing is a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The Ewing home at 519 Locust Street, is probably the finest residence in Owensboro, being of splendid architectural design and absolutely modern in all its appointments, many of the latter features being the selection of Mrs. Ewing. This home is the center of a large social circle, among whom the Ewings are held in the very highest esteem. Mr. Ewing has ever been a warm supporter of every movement having for its object the material, moral or civic advancement of the community and is counted one of Owensboro's representative men.

Benjamin F. Crimm, whose well ordered activities in connection with agricultural and live-stock enterprises have contributed to the maintaining of the high industrial status of his native county, was born in the old family homestead that stood on the site of his present attractive farm dwelling, 7½ miles east of Lexington, on the Winchester Turnpike, and he is a popular representative of one of the old and well known families of Fayette County.

Benjamin Fielding Crimm was born on the 16th of September, 1879, and is a son of Benjamin M. and Louise (Hamilton) Crimm. Benjamin M. Crimm likewise was born in Fayette County, a son of Fielding Crimm, who, with one of his brothers, came from Culpeper County, Virginia, to this section of Kentucky about a century ago. The brothers first settled on Jack's Creek, in Fayette County, and there they erected a substantial stone house, which is still standing, on the farm now owned by Charles Land. The brothers became the owners of an extensive landed property, and the brother of Fielding Crimm became one of the representative citizens of Clark County, where he remained until his death. Fielding Crimm eventually became the owner of about 1,000 acres of land in Fayette County, including the fine old homestead farm now owned and occupied by his grandson, Benjamin F., of this review. He was a vigorous and resourceful pioneer who aided definitely in the civic and industrial development of Fayette County, and the house which he erected on his home farm was destroyed by fire in 1880, the same having given place to the commodious rural dwelling which is now occupied by the subject of this sketch. Fielding Crimm died in 1865, when venerable in years, and his wife likewise attained to advanced age. They became the parents of the following children: Susan, who married John Darnably, continued her residence in Fayette County until her death; Martha and her husband, whose name was Weathers, both died on their farm near Avon, this county; Sally married Dr. Rozzell and they established their home in the State of Missouri, where they passed the remainder of their lives; and Benjamin M., father of the subject of this review, was the only son to attain to years of maturity.

Benjamin M. Crimm passed his entire life on the old home farm and was a citizen whose worthy character and substantial achievement made him one of the representative men of his native county in all that pertains to constructive service and civic loyalty. He was forty years of age at the time of his marriage to Miss Louise Hamilton, and his death occurred in 1884, his widow passing to eternal rest in 1890. Mr. Crimm was well known as a breeder of fine trotting horses and high-grade Shorthorn cattle. Of the children of Benjamin M. and Louise (Hamilton) Crimm only three attained to maturity: Van P., who became a successful lawyer, died in middle life in the City of Denver, Colorado. He was graduated from Transylvania University at Lexington, and thereafter completed a course in the law department of this historic old University of Virginia, from which he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was for several years associated in practice with Judge Bullock in the City of Lexington, and he had been one of the representative members of the bar of Denver, Colorado, for fifteen years prior to his death. As a young man he was active in political work in Kentucky, especially as a campaign speaker in support of the candidacy of Colonel Breckinridge for the office of congressman from the Seventh District. Clarence Hamilton Crimm, the next younger son, is engaged in the insurance business in the City of Chattanooga, Tennessee. Benjamin Fielding Crimm, of this review, is the youngest of the number.

Of the three brothers it was Benjamin F. who remained with the parents on the old homestead farm, in the activities of which he became closely associated in his early youth. Like his brothers, he was afforded excellent educational advantages, including those of Transylvania College, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1896. He has had the active management of the old home farm, and has brought to bear the progressiveness and good judgment which make for maximum success in agricultural and live-stock enterprise. In connection with diversified agriculture he gives special attention to the breeding and raising of the best type of Duroc-Jersey swine. His farm now comprises about 100 acres of the valuable soil of Fayette County, and he takes loyal and helpful interest in all things pertaining to the civic and material welfare of his home community and native county. He has had no desire for public office and in politics maintains an independent attitude, especially in local affairs. He holds membership in the old Macedonia Christian Church, about a mile distant from his home, and his parents likewise were earnest members of this church. In the time-honored Masonic fraternity he has received the chivalric degrees of the York Rite, as a member of the Commandery of Knights Templar in the City of Lexington, where also he is affiliated with the venerable Lexington Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. His Masonic affiliations are further extended to include his membership in the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He was active and liberal in support of local agencies in connection with the nation's participation in the World war, and gave effective service in furthering the various drives in support of the various governmental loans. The popularity of Mr. Crimm is in no measure impaired by reason of the fact that his name is still enrolled on the list of eligible bachelors in Fayette County.

William F. Hieatt is to be designated not only as one of the representative farmers of Fayette County, but also as a scion of an old and honored Kentucky family. His farm, well improved and under effective cultivation, comprises 251 acres of the fine Blue Grass land of Fayette County. It is situated on Bowman's Mill Turnpike, and is six miles southwest of the City of Lexington.

Lewis Hieatt, the founder of the Kentucky branch of the family, came in an early day from Virginia, proceeded down the Ohio River to Maysville, and thence made his way overland to Woodford County, where he obtained a tract of land south of Versailles. the county seat. He there reclaimed and developed the farm, which continued to be his place of residence until his death, when venerable in years. His son Allen became the owner of the old homestead and there remained until his death, when he was seventy-eight years of age. His remains rest in the old family graveyard on the farm, beside those of his parents, and this portion of the old homestead is still retained in the possession of the family. Harbin L., son of Allen, inherited the ancestral estate, which originally comprised about 250 acres, and there he passed his entire life as a prosperous farmer, he having been seventy-four years of age at the time of his demise, and the farm having been sold by their heirs after his death, save for the family burial plot, in which rest the mortal remains of himself and his wife. Harbin Lewis Hieatt married Miss Anna Fox, daughter of William Fox, of Mason County, and she preceded her husband to eternal rest by about twenty years. Allen Hieatt, father of Harbin L., was an only child, and he became the father of two sons and three daughters. Of the sons Benjamin died a bachelor, and thus it was through Harbin L., the other son, that the family name was perpetuated. Harbin L. and Anna (Fox) Hieatt became the parents of three sons and two daughters who attained to years of maturity, and of the number William Fox Hieatt, of this review, is the eldest; Benjamin Moore still resides in Woodford County; Allen is a resident of Danville, Boyle County; Katie is the wife of Andrew J. Hutchinson, of Warrensburg, Missouri; and Lucy is the wife of S. J. Bush, of Lexington, Kentucky. The parents were zealous members of the Presbyterian Church, and the father was unswerving in his support of the cause of the democratic party.

William Fox Hieatt was born on the ancestral farmstead in Woodford County, March 3, 1858, and was reared and educated in his native county. He became a representative farmer in Woodford County and also dealt extensively in tobacco in that county. He also became associated with others in the handling of Kentucky tobacco in the City of Louisville, and later he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, William Riley, and established a loose-leaf tobacco warehouse at Danville, Boyle County, where he continued in business under these conditions about four years. For two years he was interested in coal mining operations near Beattyville, Lee County, but the negative success which attended this venture gave him a somewhat disagreeable financial experience in connection with this line of industrial enterprise. In 1909 Mr. Hieatt purchased and established his home on his present farm, on which he has made numerous improvements, including the erection of two barns for the storage of the large crops of tobacco which he raises on the place, this branch of farm enterprise being given special attention by him. Mr. Hieatt takes loyal interest in local affairs of a public order, is a staunch democrat and has served as judge at various elections. He has been for forty years an active member of the Presbyterian Church, and while a resident of his native county he was a member of the old church of this denomination at Versailles.

The year 1893 recorded the marriage of Mr. Hieatt to Miss Nannie Riley, of Woodford County, and thereafter he had active charge of the old home farm from the time of his father's death until the property was sold. Mr. and Mrs. Hieatt became the parents of three children—Martha Fox, and Catherine Gray and Nannie, who are twins, the mother having died at the birth of these twin daughters. Martha F. taught three years in the public schools of Kentucky, and is now a teacher in a leading college for young women in the City of Birmingham, Alabama. Catherine G. is a popular teacher in the Picadome School in Fayette County; and Nannie remains with her father and presides over the domestic and social affairs of the attractive home. After the death of Mrs. Hieatt, her mother, Mrs. Martha Gray Riley, assumed the care of the infant twin daughters, as well as the older daughter, and they in turn are according to her in her venerable years the most loving devotion.

J. Ernest Cassidy. Among the citizens of Lexington, Kentucky, to whom is vouchsafed an honored place in local history is J. Ernest Cassidy, a well-known business man of that city and whose record as a public official is one to which he can refer with a justifiable degree of pride. In his life history are found evidences of those peculiar characteristics that always make for achievement—sound judgment, persistency and fortitude—and as the result of such a life he has long been one of the best known, most influential and highly esteemed citizens of this locality.

J. Ernest Cassidy was born January 16, 1867, in Fleming County, Kentucky, and is the oldest son of John T. and Laura Cassidy. He is the scion of one of Kentucky's old and respected families, the Cassidy family having been established in Fleming County at about the close of the Revolutionary war, and in the beautiful cemetery overlooking Flemingsburg lie buried five generations of his people. He is the great-grandson of Michael Cassidy, the pioneer, who is so interestingly written of in Collins' "History of Kentucky." In an article written twenty years or more ago Judge J. Soule Smith used the following language: "Of his ancestors it is unnecessary to speak, since he has only claimed recognition for his own merits and sought friendship for his own personality. But they were of the stern and rugged sort, with the granite front for an enemy, and the violet growing in its crevices for a friend. Like almost all the early Kentuckians, they were strong and brave.

"He was educated in the public and private schools of Fleming County, but found it necessary to engage in business before his maturity. So in 1886, when nineteen years of age, he opened a general store at Shawhan in Bourbon County, Kentucky. Here he met and married Miss Sallie Moore, daughter of Captain Thomas E. and Sarah (Shawhan) Moore. His business in Shawhan prospered, but in 1891 he sought a wider field and came to Lexington, where he opened a cigar factory.

"Mr. Cassidy, through an accident while hunting, lost one of his hands, but few would notice it. He has an artificial hand and so performs his duties (city clerk) that the absence of the natural member is not noticed. He is attentive to his duties, kind and courteous to every one without regard to color, social position or politics."

Mr. Cassidy's father, John T. Cassidy, was a merchant and farmer of Fleming County for twenty years, and afterward devoted himself to farming in Bourbon and Fayette counties. It was on the farm that J. Ernest Cassidy learned the lessons of industry, energy and self-reliance which have made him a success in whatever field of activity he has labored since. Mr. Cassidy served the City of Lexington sixteen years as mayor and city clerk, 1900 to 1915 inclusive. His record as mayor was characterized by actions of the most constructive sort, and it is a matter of common knowledge that the city made more substantial progress during his term of four years than during the previous twenty years. Among the things accomplished by him during that eventful period may be mentioned the following: Built more than sixteen miles of asphalt streets; built the Jefferson Street and West Main Street viaducts; connected East Maxwell Street with High Street and Walnut Street with Seventh Street, at a cost of more than $250,000, without a bond issue; and the purchase of Duncan, Douglas and Gratz Parks. Since retiring from office Mr. Cassidy is devoting his time to his business interests. He built and owns the Aylesford Flats at the corner of Maxwell Street and Woodland Avenue, and here he is engaged in the grocery business, conducting what is generally known as the model grocery of Kentucky. He is recognized as a business man of more than ordinary soundness of judgment and executive ability, and the position he occupies today has been gained solely through his own individual efforts.

Mr. Cassidy has always taken an interest in fraternal societies and is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons; the Royal Arcanum, the Knights of Pythias, the Improved Order of Red Men, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Sons of the Revolution.

Mr. Cassidy resides at 146 East Maxwell Street, and he and his wife have been blessed with two children, namely: Laura, who is a graduate of the University of Kentucky and now holds a responsible position at Washington, District of Columbia, and John T., who is an alumnus of the University of Virginia and is now engaged in the practice of law. In placing the name of Mr. Cassidy in the front rank of the enterprising men of affairs of Lexington, whose influence has always tended to the upbuilding of his city and the general advancement of the community, simple justice is done a fact recognized throughout the community by those at all familiar with his history and cognizant of the important part he has acted in local affairs. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which overcome obstacles and win success, and because of his success and substantial qualities of character he is deservedly popular throughout the community honored by his citizenship.

James H. Browning is a native Kentuckian who started life at the bottom of the financial ladder, has reared his family, provided home comforts and achieved a solid basis of prosperity by reliance throughout upon the medium of agriculture. He has been a persistent devotee of this, the oldest human occupation, for more than forty years. His farm is one of the attractive places in Fayette County, 3½ miles south of Lexington on Clays Mill Pike.

Mr. Browning was born in Mason County, Kentucky, September 14, 1857, son of William and Nancy (Wilson) Browning. His maternal grandfather was James Wilson. William Browning spent his active career as a farmer and died in Bourbon County at the age of sixty-five.

James H. Browning grew up in Mason County, attended local schools and learned to work, but was practically without capital when at the age of twenty-two he married in Bracken County Miss Fanny Florence Ellis. She was also born in Mason County, though at the time of her marriage her father, William Ellis, lived in Bracken County. The first four years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Browning lived on a rented farm in Bourbon County. He then bought and occupied for three years a farm in Garrard County, and moved from there to a place he bought near Nicholasville. He was in that one community for eighteen years, and in 1910 moved to his present property near Lexington. This is the old John McLeod farm, contains 125 acres, and Mr. Browning paid $150 an acre, a price that then represented the top of the market for farm lands. However, a conservative valuation of the farm today would be nearer $450 an acre. The farm has good soil, is thoroughly productive and the home is a modern one, consisting of a brick house built by its original owner, Mr. McLeod. The house is lighted by an acetylene gas plant, and since acquiring the farm Mr. Browning has added other buildings and varied improvements.

He is a democrat in politics and is a member of the Epworth Methodist Church at Lexington. Mr. and Mrs. Browning have two daughters: Ola is the wife of J. F. Huffman, a real estate man at Lexington and has two children, Mary Florence and Ann Lee. Bessie, the younger daughter, is the wife of W. J. Penn, a farmer near the Browning home. Mr. and Mrs. Penn have three children, named Eva, James Estill and Willabelle.

Charles Francis McMeekin, the late proprietor of Oakwood Farm, three miles south of Lexington, on Clays Mill Pike, was distinguished among Kentucky horsemen for his remarkable judgment and insight into the possibilities and characteristics of young stock. He was not to any extent identified with the turf and track, but for many years was a breeder on a commercial scale, and a colt bred at Oakwood Farm commanded a premium in the market above its pedigree because of Mr. McMeekin's reputation for producing a long success of prize winners.

Mr. McMeekin was born near Lexington. He was thirteen when his mother died, and he lived at home with his father on the farm. Mr. Wilgus the old time banker at Lexington assisted him in getting a start in the wool trade. He was associated with James McCormick, and soon developed sound business ideas and bought wool all over the Blue Grass region. His success in that field enabled him to expand into the thoroughbred horse industry, where he also achieved success. As a breeder he was associated for a number of years with Ed Applegate of Louisville and John McDonald of Lexington. He and Mr. Applegate together bought the 250 acres comprising the nucleus of Oakwood Farm, but Mr. McMeekin eventually became sole owner and acquired additional lands since incorporated in Oakwood Farm. Another business associate was Capt. Sam Brown, a close personal friend of Mr. McMeekin. Mr. McMeekin was owner of "Sally of Navarre," a brood mare which after his death sold at a public sale for $20,000. A noted stallion on his farm was Fonso, which sired many excellent colts bringing good prices. It was his annual custom to sell eighteen or twenty choice colts in New York. Mr. McDonald and Mr. McMeekin were still doing business together when they lost their lives in a train wreck in England. They were en route from London to purchase a stallion, their train being derailed at Salisbury and many of its passengers killed. Mrs. McDonald received lifelong injuries in the same accident. This was Mr. McMeekin's first trip abroad. At that time Applegate & McDonald had stock at Oakwood, though the ownership of the farm was then vested in Mr. McMeekin. He greatly improved the place during his tenure, building the present comfortable home, and the barns which are especially fitted for its character as a horse farm. Mr. McMeekin had many noted customers, and one of them depended upon him to pick a colt each year, and repeated this order for eight successive years. Only one purchase failed to realize all the merits anticipated. Few American horsemen were ever so well gifted in judgment as to a colt's possibilities as Mr. McMeekin. He was prospered in his business affairs, and before his death had been planning to make investments in the mountain regions of Kentucky, a country for which he foresaw a great future. He was never in politics and his chief interests were his home and family and farm. He had personal traits that attracted to him a great number of warm and admiring friends. Mr. McMeekin acquired Oakwood Farm at about $125 an acre, but with the improvements he made there and the subsequent rise in values it is worth a great deal more today.

At the age of twenty-five Mr. McMeekin married Mattie Craig, of Jessamine County, Kentucky, daughter of Lewis Craig, a well known farmer of that section. She completed her education in Georgetown College. She became the mother of two children. The daughter, Catherine Lee, died at the age of twenty. The son, Charles Francis, lives with his mother at the old homestead. Mrs. McMeekin is a member of the First Baptist Church at Lexington.

John Thomas McGibbons Carr is owner of one of the substantial country homes in the rich and beautiful section around Lexington. His place is three miles south of that city, on the Parker's Mill Pike. The prosperity he has enjoyed for himself and family has been earned by consecutive and faithful service beginning when he was a mere boy. He was a farm hand, and for many years, in an era of low prices, made progress as a farm renter. He combined the growing of crops with his trade as a carpenter, has done a large amount of contracting in his time, and is still one of the leading men of enterprise in the rural sections of Fayette County.

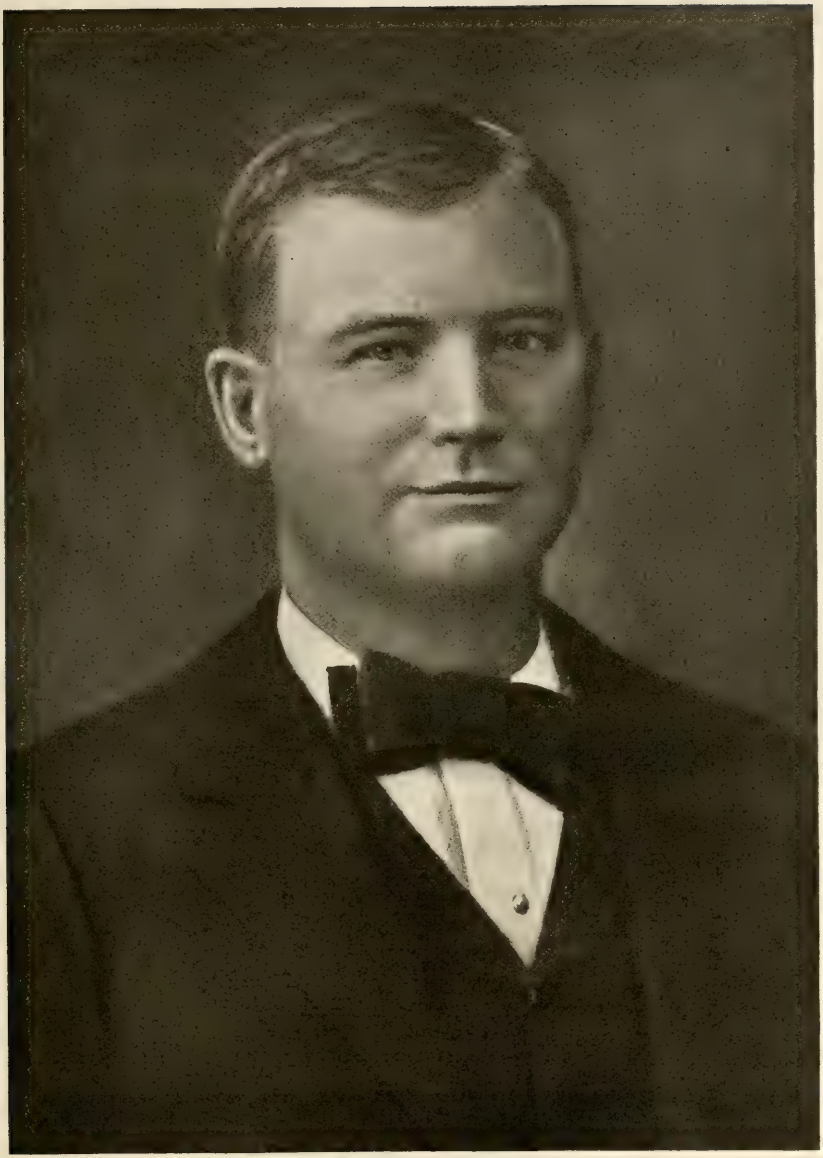
He was born in Cynthiana, Kentucky, June 11, 1871, a son of James C. and Cynthia A. (Mattox) Carr. James C. Carr was a friend and admirer of John Thomas McGibbons, at one time a Kentucky congressman. It was in honor of the congressman that a son of the Carr family was named, at the special request of Mr. McGibbons. Mr. Carr, however, is universally known as "Mack" Carr. The Carr family was established in Kentucky from Pennsylvania by the grandfather of Mack Carr. James C. Carr was a Kentucky farmer, and after selling his farm in this state moved to Arkansas and bought 265 acres, but died less than a year after going there from congestive chills. He had served as a soldier in the Union army, in Company B of the Fortieth Infantry, and his widow received a pension. She was of Virginia ancestry, and her father, Elijah Mattox, was a well-known farmer and distillery owner, and in the early days fed large numbers of cattle at his distillery and drove them east to market. Mr. Mattox was widely known as an interesting personality in that section of Kentucky, and died in advanced years.

After the death of James C. Carr his widow returned to Kentucky from Arkansas and reared her four sons on a farm near Smithsonville. She died at Cynthiana at the age of eighty-five. Elijah R., the oldest of her sons, is a farmer at Millersburg, Kentucky; Joseph W. farms in Boone County; Mack is the third in age, and Daniel R. died at Indiana Harbor, Indiana, while a roller in the steel mills.

Mack Carr at the age of sixteen came to Fayette County in order to receive better wages for his farm work. He spent one season in the employ of Lewis Nicholas, working for wages of from $10 to $26 a month, continued working out in that same locality five years and carefully saved his wages. It was as a farm hand that he came into the neighborhood where he lives today. As a carpenter he helped Newton Peek build a dairy house within view of the present Carr place. By another neighbor, W. M. Sale, he was employed seven years. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Carr married Sidney Maxwell, of Owenton, a native of Owen County and daughter of James and Arminta (Reed) Maxwell. Mr. Carr spent altogether nine years on the Sale farm, seven years of the time as a renter. For about the same length of time he lived on the Martin farm on the Southern Railroad. Those years included many seasons when agricultural crops brought next to nothing, but in spite of these adverse conditions he made headway. He supplemented his efforts as a farmer by contracting for the building of fences and as a general carpenter, and employed a gang of men during a large part of the year. Mr. Carr bought his present place in 1907. It is the James Fitzpatrick farm. He grows a small acreage of crops, including a few acres of tobacco, but has always produced a high grade of tobacco and gets the top price on the market. He has made many improvements, using his skill and experience as a carpenter, and built his present home in 1916. It is a comfortable brick house, and is situated in a valley, so that its full attractiveness is not appreciated from the highway. As a contractor Mr. Carr was employed by the firm of Mason and Fener as foreman at Mason, Tennessee, where he had eighteen men under his supervision. Mr. Carr has never been in politics, but has served as a school trustee. He is a member and choir leader of the Baptist Church at South Elkhorn.

Mr. and Mrs. Carr have four children: Mattie, wife of John E. Gardner, a farmer near her father; Miss Willie V., a teacher in the home schools; Edward and Attie, both attending school.

Bernard M. Powell, banker, postmaster and merchant, has extended the best energies of his life and a rare degree of public spirit and enterprise in his home community of Corydon in Henderson County.



He was born on a farm near Corydon October 11, 1860, son of Harbert A. and Malinda E. (Gibson) Powell. His parents were also natives of Henderson County. His grandfather, Harrison Powell, came from his native State of North Carolina and joined a pioneer community of farmers in Henderson County, locating at Corydon. Harbert Powell was both a farmer and tobacco merchant, lived to be more than eighty-five years of age, and spent his last days at Corydon. He was a democrat in politics, and he and his wife were faithful members of the Christian Church. His first wife was Nancy Livesey, who was the mother of four children. Malinda E. Gibson, who lived to the age of seventy-three, had seven children.

Bernard M. Powell grew up on a farm, had a high school education, and after his marriage conducted a farm three years, and is still interested in farming to the extent of ownership of some choice acreage in Henderson County. After leaving the farm he operated a coal mine in Corydon some half a dozen years, but since then his principal business has been as a druggist at Corydon. In 1894 he was one of the organizers of the Corydon Deposit Bank, served on its board of directors a number of years, and since 1909 has had its executive management as president. Mr. Powell first served as postmaster of Corydon from 1894 to 1897. He is now in his seventh consecutive year in charge of that office.

Always active in local affairs, a leading democrat, he served one term as magistrate of his district. He is a member of the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

In 1886 Mr. Powell married Miss Carrie Buckman, daughter of James I. Buckman, of Henderson County. Their only daughter, Jessie, is the wife of W. A. Posey, of Corydon.

Jacob S. and Sanford Foley are successfully engaged in agricultural enterprise and fruit growing on their well improved homestead farm six miles south of Lexington, and are representatives of an old and honored Kentucky family. As progressive and popular citizens of Fayette County the brothers are well entitled to special recognition in this publication.

The founder of the Kentucky branch of the Foley family came to this state from the James River District of Virginia and numbered himself among the early settlers in the vicinity of Bowman Station, Mercer County. There his son William was born and reared, and as a young man this son married Miss Elizabeth Stone. From Mercer County William Foley removed to Fayette County and purchased and established his home on the farm now owned by his grandsons, Jacob S. and Sanford, of this review. Here he passed the remainder of his life, and his farm enterprise was largely in connection with the nursery business, of which he was a prominent and successful representative in this section of the state. His brothers Elijah and John established homes in the same section of the county, and here passed the remainder of their lives. Of the children of William and Elizabeth (Stone) Foley the eldest was Sanford, who was born on this old home farm in 1809, and whose death here occurred in 1892, when he was eighty-three years of age. He remained a bachelor and was one of the substantial and honored citizens of Fayette County. Jacob S., the second son, married Miss Margaret Cravens, of Fayette County, and in addition to his association with farm industry he was a skilled workman at the gunsmith's trade, was for a number of years engaged in the operation of a grist mill, and also operated a distillery at South Elkhorn, about two miles northwest of the old home farm. His death occurred February 13, 1878, and his wife survived him by a number of years. Of their children the eldest is Alexander, who is successfully engaged in the real-estate business at Lexington; Luther likewise resides in that city; Sanford, of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Martha died in middle life; Jacob S. remains with his brother Sanford on the old home place; and Marshall is a traveling commercial salesman. Lucinda, the elder daughter of the late William and Elizabeth Foley, became the wife of James Marrs and was a resident of Jessamine County at the time of her death. Eliza, the younger daughter, died, unmarried, at the age of twenty-one years.

Sanford and Jacob S. Foley have maintained most effective fraternal and industrial alliance in their active careers as farmers and fruit-growers, and they succeeded to the ownership of the fine little farm of twenty-six acres which had been the stage of operations of their bachelor uncle, the late Sanford Foley, to whom they showed true filial devotion in the closing years of his long and useful life. To the original tract they have added until they now have a valuable place of 125 acres, and for some of this land they paid as high as $300 an acre. The substantial and attractive old house on the farm was erected about the year 1840, and near the house stands a fine cedar tree of equally venerable age. This residence stands some distance from the public highway which passed the property and constitutes one of the attractive homes of the county. For fully a score of years the Foley brothers have specialized in fruit-growing, and in this field of enterprise their success has been unqualified. On the place they have four acres planted to strawberries, and they are well fortified in scientific and practical knowledge of modern fruit culture. They are republican in politics, as were also their father and their uncle Sanford, their grandfather having been a staunch supporter of the cause represented by the old-line whig party. Sanford, like the uncle whose name he bears, remains a bachelor. Jacob S. married Miss Bettie Cravens, and they have one daughter, Fannie L. The brothers are active members of the Christian Church at South Elkhorn, as is also Mrs. Jacob S. Foley, and the family enjoys unequivocal popularity in the home community.

William A. Boston, whose home is in Fayette County, eight miles west of Lexington, on the Versailles Pike, earned the comfortable home he now enjoys and the right to take life leisurely by more than forty years of consecutive work and good management as a blacksmith and later as a capable farmer.

Mr. Boston was born near Mortonsville in Woodford County, November 20, 1855, a son of Jacob and Catherine (Wilhoite) Boston. His grandfather was John Boston, of Holland Dutch descent and a pioneer of Kentucky, who probably came to the state prior to 1800. He died in 1875, in his ninety-third year. His wife was Barbara Huffert, who died many years before him. Both were laid to rest in the family plot on the old farm. The sons of John Boston were: Anthony, who removed to Illinois and died in Jacksonville in that state; Willis, who died at the old home; Jacob; and George, who died in 1859.

Jacob Boston was born in Fayette County in 1812, learned the blacksmith's trade as a youth and from 1861 had his home at Mortonsville in Woodford County. He was also in his ninety-third year when he died. His wife died when their son William was nine years of age. Of their four children only two survived infancy, the other being Mary, who died at the age of eighteen.

William A. Boston had a common school education and learned blacksmithing from his father. He worked at the trade from 1878 to 1893, succeeding to the business of his father, and for a number of years conducted a general repair shop. Mr. Boston turned his energy to farming in 1893, and in that year bought a place for $30 an acre. That was a panic year and the land which he acquired so cheaply he subsequently sold at $200 an acre. In 1918 he moved to his present small farm, equipped with a very comfortable home, and the property would readily demand $500 an acre. As a farmer he grew tobacco and other crops and also kept some good livestock. Mr. Boston is a democrat but has never sought a political office. He is a member of the Christian Church, and has always been very fond of a good horse.

At the age of twenty-two he married Molly Dale, aged twenty-one. Her father, Jackson Dale, was a farmer of Mortonsville, Woodford County, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Boston have no children.

Lenox M. Tucker has had a life of usefulness and achievement spent almost entirely within the community where he was born. His present home on Versailles Pike, five miles west of Lexington, is only a short distance from the spot where he was born February 13, 1838. Besides the interest attaching to the career of this honored old time citizen of Fayette County, his individual record also serves to introduce a number of other members of his family relationship.

Mr. Tucker's grandfather, Robert Tucker, came from Ireland, and in Kentucky became a settler on Steele's Run, near a noted spring in that locality. He died when his grandson, Lenox, was six years of age. Robert Tucker married a Miss Vance, and they had three sons, James, William and Robert. William left a son, William, and the latter's son, also named William, is still living in Kentucky. Robert is survived by his widow and sons Ben and Morgan, all living at Lexington.

James Tucker died at a comparatively early age, in his thirties. He married Frances Wheeler, a daughter of George Wheeler, and they were the parents of four children, Lenox M. being the oldest. Nancy, the second child, became the wife of Isaac Bridges, and both died in Fayette County, their only living child being James T. Bridges. Mary is the widow of Levi Rice, of Lexington. James William was born after his father's death, and died about three years ago in Lexington. The widowed mother reared these children and subsequently married for her second husband George Spencer. She died in advanced years.

Lenox M. Tucker had in the person of his great-uncle, Charles Neal, almost a father. Mr. Neal gave him the benefit of his advice and also offered him opportunities to go into business. Charles Neal was a bachelor and lived with his maiden sister, Frances, and the latter was cared for by Lenox Tucker until her death, when past eighty. Charles Neal died at the age of eighty-one. He owned thirteen negro slaves at the time of emancipation. Lenox M. Tucker was reared to manhood on the old home place, and eventually inherited some of the land and bought the interests of the other heirs. He still owns about 100 acres of the old Tucker farm.

He left this place in 1872 and bought his wife's old home, the McMurray farm on Versailles Pike, and remained on it fifteen years. Then, in order to afford his children better educational advantages, he moved into Lexington, but in 1895 returned to his present place, the old Wardlow farm of 250 acres. The residence was built here by Mrs. Jones in 1860. Its owner before Mr. Tucker acquired it was Rev. Rutherford Douglas, pastor of the Pisgah Presbyterian Church. Mr. Tucker acquired the farm at $116 an acre, though it would now stand a ready sale at the prevailing prices commanded by the best Blue Grass farms. The Tucker home stands well back from the pike, and, though a large house, a grove of trees almost obscures it from the road. Mr. Tucker, though physically infirm, is well preserved mentally, and his life has been such as to gain him the complete esteem of a wide circle of friends and neighbors.

In 1861 he married Emeline R. McMurray, daughter of Edward M. and Mary J. (Reed) McMurray. Her mother attended school under Colonel Dunham, and had the privilege of shaking hands with General Lafayette on the latter's tour through Kentucky in 1826. Mrs. Tucker was born in Lexington, was educated there, but afterward lived on the McMurray farm on Versailles Pike, six miles from Lexington. Her father was also a native of Lexington, son of William McMurray, who during the infancy of his son Edward started down the river with a flatboat of salt and was never heard from again. It is supposed that he was killed by Indians. Edward M. McMurray became a bricklayer, was very expert in the trade and proud of his skill, and subsequently developed an extensive business as a contractor and builder. Only recently some old buildings were torn down and gave proof of the skill and substantial character of his construction work. His father, William McMurray, was not only an expert mechanic but could also preach a sermon or plead a case in court. Edward M. McMurray died at the age of sixty-one and his wife at fifty-nine. Mrs. Tucker's sister, Mary B., widow of William B. Cassell, lives in Kansas City, Missouri. Her sister Julia R. became the wife of George McTyre, and both are deceased. Her sister Edward Anna was married to Jerome Hathaway and died in Florida. Mrs. Tucker and her two sons now own the old McMurray farm. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have two sons and one daughter. The daughter devoted her mature life to her home and family and died in middle age. The two sons are James Jackson and Raymond Tucker, both of whom are partners in handling the farming interests of their father and mother. James Jackson married Clara Reece, and their three daughters, Clara, Virginia and Frances, are still students in high school at Lexington. Raymond married Minnie Holman and has two sons, Leonard and Pat. L. M. Tucker began voting as a democrat, but eventually became affiliated with the republican party.

John Frank Taylor is one of the well-to-do and esteemed farmer citizens of Fayette County, owning a good farm and enjoying an attractive home six miles south of Lexington, on the Parker's Mill Pike and three-quarters of a mile from old Parker's Mill.

Mr. Taylor had to struggle for many years to realize his ambitions for independence. He was born in Hickman County, May 26, 1860, a son of John Woodford and Margaret (Downing) Taylor. His father was reared in Clark County and his mother in Fayette County, Kentucky. Soon after the son John F. was born his parents returned to Lexington, where John W. Taylor died two years later. He left four children, Reuben, Herbert, Sally and John F., while another son, Jerry, was born after his death. The widow lived a few years longer, passing away when her son John was nine years of age. In the meantime her sons Reuben and Herbert went to live with an uncle in Clark County, and she kept the other children with her. After her death John F. Taylor lived with his half brother Joseph Step on a farm in Fayette County. His sister Sally went to live with an aunt, Mrs. Charles Eadenton, wife of an attorney at Covington. Sally is now Mrs. John Trice, of Louisville. Reuben Taylor became a farmer and died at Lexington about three years ago. Herbert was a farmer and trader in Scott County and died in July, 1919. Jerry Taylor is farming in Franklin County.

John F. Taylor lived with Mr. Step until he was fourteen or fifteen, then with his brother Reuben, and all this time had little opportunity to attend school. As a youth he took up practical farm work with his brother and other relatives, and through farming he has made gradual progress toward prosperity.

At the age of twenty-seven he married Lucy Gentry, daughter of John and Jane Gentry and a sister of Morgan and Charles Gentry. Mr. Taylor bought his first farm in 1920, paying $225 an acre for the place of seventy-eight acres, which constitutes one of the fine old farmsteads of the Blue Grass region. The land is watered by unfailing springs and it is productive of large crops of wheat, hemp and tobacco.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor had five children: Stella is the wife of Frank Ireland, a farmer in Scott County. Sarah became the wife of Honor Wiley and died two years ago, at the birth of a child, Sarah Honor, who has since lived with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor. Dan Taylor is unmarried and helps his father with the home farm. The two youngest daughters Catherine and Henrietta live at home, but both are teachers, Catherine having spent two years in the schools of Lexington and is now in charge of the Miller School, while Henrietta is connected with the Arlington School at Lexington.

Oliver Miller. The gentleman to a review of whose life the reader's attention is herewith respectfully directed is widely recognized as one of the energetic business men of Lexington and a representative citizen of his community. In the course of an honorable career he has been successful in his chosen vocation and has enjoyed the confidence and good will of those with whom he has been associated in either a business or social way.

Oliver Miller was born in Lexington, Kentucky, on September 29, 1862, and is the seventh child in order of birth of the nine children born to Andrew and Martha (Tankersley) Miller, both of whom were born in Lexington in 1838 and both died in 1908, at the age of seventy years. Andrew Miller received his education in the public schools of Lexington and learned the trade of a coppersmtih, which vocation he followed during his entire active life. He was a member of the Baptist Church and in politics gave his support to the democratic party. He was a man of high character and enjoyed the confidence of all who knew him.

Oliver Miller received his educational training in the public schools of Lexington and then learned the trade of a coppersmith under his father's direction, remaining with him until 1908. In the latter year the son Oliver formed a partnership with his younger brother, Thomas, under the firm name of Miller Brothers, and they engaged in the tin and furnace business. Thoroughly qualified for this business by training and experience they have rapidly come to the front and today are recognized as one of the leading firms in their line in this section of the country, and they have enjoyed a large and constantly increasing patronage. The highest quality of workmanship and fair dealing and prompt service have been the elements which have gained for them the measure of prosperity which they now enjoy.

On June 20, 1900, Mr. Miller was married to Fannie Lloyd, who was born and reared in Georgetown, Kentucky, the daughter of Sanford and Nettie (Orffutt) Lloyd, both of whom are now deceased. Her father was a native of Scott County, Kentucky, and her mother of Fayette County, Kentucky. Of their three children Mrs. Miller is the oldest and the only survivor. Mr. Lloyd was a farmer by vocation and was successful in his business affairs. He was an earnest member of the Christian Church, while in his political affiliation he was a republican. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Miller has been blessed in the birth of a daughter, Mildred.

Politically Mr. Miller gives his support to the democratic party, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church, to which he is a generous contributor. Fraternally he is a member of Friendship Lodge No. 5, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of the Maccabees. He is essentially a man of affairs, sound of judgment and far-seeing in what he undertakes, and he has won and retains the confidence and esteem of all classes.

Thomas M. Owsley is a lawyer by education and by several years of experience in his early career, but for many years his chief business at Lexington was a large printing industry and more recently he has been in the brokerage business as president of Owsley, Fairleigh & Company, brokers in stocks, bonds, grains, provisions and cotton.

Mr. Owsley was born in Lincoln County, Kentucky, April 2, 1875, and spent his boyhood on his father's farm. He is a son of John S. and Malinda (Miller) Owsley. His father was born in Lincoln County and died in January, 1916, at the age of seventy-two, while the mother was a native of Madison County and died at the age of fifty years in 1888. John S. Owsley acquired a very substantial education in public schools and in Centre College, but after leaving school took up farming and devoted the best years of his life to that occupation. He retired in 1906, and his last days were spent in Lexington. He was at one time a member of the State Legislature, was a democrat in politics, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He and his wife had eight children: Mary, wife of Will R. Manier; John S., who married Ella McElwain; Mattie, widow of W. P. Walton; Margaret, wife of John S. Wells; Malinda; Thomas M.; Emma, wife of James R. Bush; and Mike.

Thomas M. Owsley while a boy received most of his scholastic advantages in the Stanford private school in Lincoln County. Later he attended Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, and in that splendid institution of learning pusued both the literary and professional courses, graduating with the A. B. degree in 1893 and from the law department in 1895. He was admitted to the bars of Tennessee and of Kentucky in 1895, and the following year began a general practice at Bowling Green. However, during 1897 he moved to Lexington, and soon afterward bought the business of the Transylvania Printing Company, and gave almost his undivided time and energies to that enterprise until 1919. Since then he has been most active as a member of the brokerage firm of Owsley, Fairleigh & Company, with offices in the Ben Ali Theater Building.

Mr. Owsley is a republican voter and a member of the Presbyterian Church. January 15, 1901, he married Katherine McGoodwin, who was born at Bowling Green, a daughter of Isaac D. and Virginia (Wooten) McGoodwin. Her parents were native Kentuckians and her father is still living, a retired business man. Mrs. Owsley was the second in a family of four children. She and Mr. Owsley have two children, Virginia and Thomas M., Jr.

Harry G. Wellman. Perhaps there are few men in Lawrence County, Kentucky, whose business sagacity is more depended upon than Harry G. Wellman, capitalist, oil operator, founder of the Louisa Bottling Company and for years president of the widely known Lobaco Company of Louisa, whose fortunes have been entirely built up through his own efforts. Forced by the early death of his father to assume family responsibilities, he displayed rare courage and determination in boyhood, that carried him step by step along a rugged path but ultimately brought him to honorable independence. He has spent his life at Louisa, and the respect and esteem felt for him by those who have known him from youth speak volumes for his sterling character.

Mr. Wellman was born at Louisa, Lawrence County, Kentucky, February 6, 1883, a son of Oliver and Lizzie (Slayer) Wellman. His father was a carpenter by trade, an honest, hard-working man, but one who had been able to lay aside but little for the future, and when he died in 1897 the support of the family fell upon the eldest son, Harry G., then a youth of fourteen years. It was then that the boy's schooldays ended, for he immediately sought work, determined that his mother should be comfortable and able to keep the family together, and it may be mentioned right here that this noble ambition was satisfied and furthermore that he was able to give his brothers and sisters the higher educational advantages denied to himself.

Mr. Wellman found his first employment with the C. & O. Railway Company, as office and messenger boy, and while there he utilized every spare moment in studying telegraphy and in a surprisingly short time had acquired the art. Some lads, no doubt, would have been satisfied with this accomplishment but this was not the case with Harry G. Wellman. He studied still more diligently and mastered the technical details that were necessary before he could be appointed to a railroad office, giving particular attention to the freight department. Railroad companies do not carry on their business along sentimental lines, and Mr. Wellman not only had to prove efficient as well as personally deserving in order to be appointed to so responsible a position as freight agent at Louisa, which is a heavy shipping point.

It was in 1914 that Mr. Wellman organized the Louisa Bottling Company, capitalized at $5,000, of which he was made president. In 1918 the capital of the company was increased and a bakery added to the plant; in 1920 the capital was increased to $150,000, when an ice manufacturing plant was added. When the bakery became a part of the business a change of name was decided upon, and it became the Lobaco Company of Louisa, this title being formed by syllables of the words Louisa, bakery and company. This business has been profitable from the first and its expansion has been rapid but healthy. The company ships its goods all through Eastern Kentucky, during the summer seasons supplying ice to a very large territory, shipping in car load lots over the C. & O. and the Northwestern Railroads. In 1914 the company did a business of $12,000, and in 1920 it reached $=00,000. Until 1921, when he retired, naming E. E. Shannon as his successor, Mr. Wellman continued not only the nominal but the actual head of the business. His foresight, his keen business comprehension and his commercial understanding had guided the enterprise safely and profitably even during the depression of war times, and his associates render him full credit. It has been Mr. Wellman's good fortune to be able to recognize business opportunities, and in 1918, becoming interested in the oil business, he made judicious investments, bought and sold leases and developed six valuable producing wells and still maintains an interest in much promising oil property. While Mr. Wellman's business success has not been spectacular, it has been rather notable under the circumstances, and his possession of business acumen can hardly be disputed. He is a man of generous impulses and ever ready to give a helping hand to others.

Mr. Wellman married in 1918, at Louisa, Miss Shirley Burnes, a daughter of M. S. and Cora (McHenry) Burnes, the former of whom is president of the First National Bank at Louisa. In politics Mr. Wellman is a democrat, fraternally is a Mason, and Elk, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

George E. Tomlinson, while a Kentuckian by adoption, is typical of the business representatives of this state. Prominent in business from young manhood, particularly in the line of lumber dealing and the manufacture of tobacco hogsheads, of more recent years he has been a leader in movements beneficial to the material, moral and educational uplifting of Winchester and Clark counties.

Mr. Tomlinson was born at Bay City, Michigan, February 26, 1873, a son of a lumber manufacturer of that place, where Mr. Tomlinson's brother, W. H. Tomlinson, is at the head of the well-known firm of W. H. Tomlinson & Company. He practically grew up in the lumber business, for while he was still attending public school he started to learn its many details, and when he was fourteen years of age began to apply himself unreservedly to this form of business activity. When he came to Kentucky, at the age of seventeen years, after a business course in a Bay City business college, he already was an operator of four years of experience on a band saw. At that time the band saw had come into use only recently, and skilled operators thereon were few. When he came to Kentucky he took a position with the Asher Lumber Company, which had a mill at a ford on the Kentucky River in Clark County, this being then considered a large enterprise, inasmuch as it had three sets of saws. For two years he was in charge of the band saws and other machinery there, and for a like period was similarly employed elsewhere. In 1900, in company with George Hon, he founded the Reliance Manufacturing Company, for the manufacture of lumber mill work and special articles, with a mill at Bowen, Kentucky. The business was removed to Winchester one year later, and so continued for twelve years, as a lumber and planing mill business, with a band mill at Jackson, Kentucky, and other small mills in various sections. It was the custom to buy standing timber, as well as an entire output of other mills, and thus was built up a large and prosperous business in a general line of building materials, with market largely in Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan. Later there was added the manufacture of interior finishings, particularly the finer grades of such work. In 1912 Mr. Tomlinson established the present plant for the exclusive manufacture of tobacco hogsheads, this business employing from twenty-five to thirty people and producing annually 100,000 hogsheads.

Mr. Tomlinson is the inventor of a process for the making of staves, a machine automatic in every respect, which finishes the staves so that they are ready to use in the manufacture of the hogsheads. The latter are marketed in warehouses in Wisconsin, Missouri, Canada, and wherever tobacco is grown, the demand exceeding the output. The machine mentioned is used by other manufacturers under a royalty. At this time Mr. Tomlinson is establishing a band mill on the same grounds. He has other interests and is a director in the Clark County National Bank. During the World war period, he was one of the one dollar per year men serving under the Federal Labor Board, connected with various duties in handling Red Cross funds, etc., from this district. He was active in securing the commission form of government for Winchester, and at present is serving his third term as president of the Winchester Commercial Club. During the Jamestown Exposition, in the capacity of president of the Commercial Club, Mr. Tomlinson inaugurated a "Winchester Day," and gave an exhibit of Blue Grass history, soil, climate, productions and advantages in educational, religious, social, aesthetical and other lines. He has served seven years on the Conference Board of Education of Kentucky, is a member of the Board of Directors of Wesleyan College, Winchester, and is prominent in the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he is chairman of the Board of Stewards, superintendent of the Sunday school, and chairman of the building committee in charge of the erection of the $100,000 church structure. That Mr. Tomlinson is progressive and quick to grasp new ideas is shown in the fact that he owned the third automobile in Clark County.

Mr. Tomlinson was married in Powell County, Kentucky, to Miss Maude Derickson, daughter of the Hon. Thomas Derickson, late member of the State Legislature from Powell County and a leading attorney of Stanton. Mrs. Tomlinson is an active church and Sunday school worker, and she and her husband have two children: Orlin D., a graduate of Wesleyan College, associated with his father; and Laura, a member of the freshman class at Wesleyan College, Winchester.

Sampson H. Tolliver. A large community in the mining and agricultural district of Letcher County is proud to claim the friendship and give tribute of esteem to the enterprise and character of Sampson H. Tolliver, a merchant on Potters Fort on Boone Creek, near Fleming.

Mr. Tolliver represents an old family in the county, and was born at the homestead on the head of Millstone in Letcher County May 9, 1878, son of Melvin and Arminda (Baker) Tolliver. His mother was a sister of Judge Baker of Whitesburg and daughter of Elijah Baker, who came to Letcher County when a young man from Ohio in 1845. Melvin Tolliver was a son of Lite Tolliver, and his has been a life of industry. He still lives at the head of Millstone. He taught his children to do right, and all his numerous sons have gained honor and respect in their communities. His family consisted of fourteen children including: Lincoln, a merchant on Troublesome Creek in Knott County; Burton a farmer at Democrat on Rockhouse; James S., sheriff of Letcher County; Sampson H.; Marion, a merchant at Waynesburg, who died in 1919 at the age of thirty-six; Harvey, a physician at Pine Top; Mary M., wife of W. E. Wright, a merchant of Neon; Wyley, a farmer at Pine Top; Julia, wife of Lewis Hall, a merchant of Dean, Kentucky; Elcaney, a farmer on Millstone; Willis, a Baptist minister and partner with his brother Sampson in the mercantile business at Fleming; Alice, who died at the age of four years.

Sampson H. Tolliver while growing up at the old home at Millstone made good use of his educational advantages, attending school at Boone Creek and at Whitesburg, his principal teachers being Morgan T. Reynolds and H. R. Younts. Afterward he was given a school to teach and boarded at home and walked over the mountains to the school, making two hundred trips during the term and receiving $115 for his services. He taught two years, then farmed on Millstone for twelve years, and finally engaged in business on Millstone. He borrowed his capital, $112.76, from his brother, giving as security a mule worth thirty-five dollars. Success attended his enterprise from the start. When he moved to his present location at Potters Fort his store was a log house twelve feet square. He now owns two stores and carries a stock of general merchandise and hardware. He is a member of the United Mine Workers, and the miners are his friends and frequently come to him for advice on business matters. Every dollar of his money is an honest dollar, and he has made many of them.

July 31, 1901, Mr. Tolliver married Elizabeth Bates, who was born at the head of Millstone in 1880, daughter of T. G. and Mary J. Bates. Mr. and Mrs. Tolliver were schoolmates. She is a member of the Regular Baptist Church. Mr. Tolliver votes as a republican. They had two children, Dorothy, at home, and Mary Alice, who died at the age of twelve years.

David C. Hunter. Among the capable members of the Fayette County bar one who is making rapid strides in his profession and who has gained a liberal practice through the exemplification of qualities recommending him to public favor is David C. Hunter. Mr. Hunter is also a veteran of the World war, in which he rose to a captaincy, and his record both as soldier and civilian is an honorable and commendable one.

Mr. Hunter was born on his father's farm in Clark County, Kentucky, February 21, 1880, a son of Hon. Ryland Dillard and Melissa (Bush) Hunter. Ryland D. Hunter was born June 2, 1846, in Jessamine County, Kentucky, where he received his early education in the public schools, following which he attended a business college at Covington. As a youth he adopted farming as his vocation, and that occupation he followed without interruption until 1888, when he accepted the cashiership of the Winchester Bank, a position which he retained until 1900. He then returned to farming in Clark County, which he followed until 1920, at that time retiring from active pursuits. Mr. Hunter was long connected prominently with public affairs. From 1869 to 1871 he was deputy county clerk of Jessamine County. In 1907 he was elected a member of the Kentucky House of Representatives, and served in that body for three terms, receiving re-elections in 1909 and 1911, and establishing a splendid record for capable and effective work. His fraternal connection is with Winchester Lodge, B. P. O. E. From boyhood he has been a member of the Baptist Church, and for thirty-five or forty years served in the capacity of treasurer thereof. His political belief makes him a democrat. Mr. Hunter married Melissa Bush, who was born in Clark County, Kentucky, October 3, 1850, and died August 24, 1906, aged nearly fifty-six years. They had six children, of whom one died in infancy, the others being: Bettie I., the wife of D. M. Lawson; Richard B.; David C.; June, a son; and Mary Lucy, the wife of Prewitt Harris.

David C. Hunter attended the public schools of Clark County, Winchester College, Georgetown College and the law school of the University of Cincinnati, from which latter he was graduated with his degree in 1901. He was admitted to the bar of Kentucky February 23, 1902, at that time engaging in the practice of his calling with a partner, under the firm style of Kimball & Hunter, this association continuing until January, 1916, when the association was mutually dissolved and Mr. Hunter began practice alone. From July 6, 1906, to November, 1911, Mr. Hunter served as back tax assessor of the City of Lexington.

He entered the training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, August 27, 1917, and secured his commission as first lieutenant of infantry November 27, 1917, being assigned to duty with the 89th Division at Camp Funston, Kansas, where he reported for duty December 15. He served as first lieutenant of Company E, 356th Regiment, United States Army, to May 24, 1918, when he was assigned to the 164th Depot Brigade, and later transferred to Supply Company 806, Pioneer Infantry, with which he was ordered overseas April 30, 1918. Landing at Brest, he was assigned September 21, 1918, to the First Army Corps, with which he participated in the fighting in the Meuse and Argonne sectors for twelve days from October 3. Later he was assigned to the Second Army Corps and was stationed in the Toul sector until February 6, 1919, when he was ordered to Mont Richard, France. There he was promoted captain March 15, 1919, and made supply officer of the regiment. He left France June 17, 1919, and July 22, 1919, received his honorable discharge. At that time he again took up the practice of his profession, in which he has since been engaged with increasing success, maintaining offices at 412 Security Trust Building, Lexington.

Captain Hunter is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association and of the Baptist Church, and in politics is a democrat. He is well known in fraternal circles, being a member of the Knights of Pythias; Lexington Lodge No. 89, B. P. O. E., of which he is past exalted ruler; Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M.; Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M.; Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T.; and Oleika Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He was married February 15, 1906, to Miss Laura H. Ramsey, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of James and Jennie (Davidson) Ramsey, both deceased, the former a native of New Orleans, Louisiana, and the latter of Lexington, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey had six children, of whom Mrs. Hunter is the fourth in order of birth.

John Morton Morris. A business sense developed far beyond the ordinary has been one of the characteristics which has distinguished the career of John Morton Morris, one of the leading figures in business in Louisville, where he is resident vice president and manager for the Fidelity and Deposit Company. A man of ripened experience, he has brought his knowledge of men and affairs to bear upon the several companies with which he has been connected to such an extent that they have not only enjoyed a long era of prosperity, but have had their influence in determining the standards of other enterprises of similar character. In his career Mr. Morris is a distinct refutation of the claim that too much education is a handicap in the business world. His scholarly attainments lend a character to all that he undertakes, and not only have proven beneficial to himself but to others.

Mr. Morris was born on his grandfather's Kanawha farm in Jefferson County, Kentucky, March 22, 1874, a son of John Hite Morton and Fannie (Craik) Morris. His great-grandfather Craik was one of the leading physicians of his day and was surgeon general of the Continental Army and the personal friend and physician of Gen. George Washington, being at the beside of the "Father of His County" when he died. Joseph S. Morris, the paternal grandfather of J. Morton Morris, was born at Philadelphia, and on coming to Louisville in young manhood established the first wholesale drug business in the South, which he developed to large proportions before the Civil war. The family in this country was founded by Anthony Morris, who settled at Philadelphia at an early date in Colonial history, shortly after the arrival of William Penn. The family was of Quaker stock, and its members have possessed the sterling qualities of that sect.

John Hite Morton Morris was born at Louisville, Kentucky, February 29, 1832, and received excellent educational advantages, attending the Friends' School at Philadelphia, the Jesuit College and a school of pharmacy. As a young man he became associated with his father in the wholesale drug business at Louisville, under the firm style of Joseph S. Morris & Son, and continued to be identified with this enterprise until the late '60s, when he turned his attention to the fire insurance business at Louisville, under the firm name of Morris & Bayly. This business continued until the '80s, when Mr. Morris became manager and a director for the Queen Insurance Company of England, for which he was manager for the central states and South until his retirement in 1894. A man of much public spirit, he rendered efficient and valuable service to his community as a member of the School Board, and was a member and for a long time president of the Cave Hill Cemetery Board. He was an active and helpful member of the Episcopal Church, was a states' rights democrat and a business man who was held in the highest esteem. His death occurred in February, 1910. Mr. Morris married Miss Fannie Craik, who was born in Virginia in 1841 and died in January, 1917, and to this union there were born two sons and four daughters, all of whom survive.

The fifth in order of birth of his parents' children, John Morton Morris attended the public schools of Louisville until he was thirteen years of age, at which time he became a student at the Sewanee grammar school and then entered the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, an Episcopal university, from which he was graduated in 1894. Going then to Philadelphia he studied law and was graduated from the legal department of the University of Pennsylvania after a two-year course. In 1897 he returned to Louisville, where he engaged in the practice of his profession, having received his degree from the University of Louisville in that year, and became attorney and secretary of the Kentucky Title Company. When this concern became the Kentucky Title, Savings Bank and Trust Company Mr. Morris was made manager of the title department, a position which he held until 1907, and then resigned to become attorney and manager for Kentucky and Southern Indiana of the National Surety Company of New York. In 1921 he resigned from that company to become resident vice president of the Fidelity and Deposit Company, which maintains offices in the Inter Southern Building. Some of the functions of this company are to secure to the persons entitled thereto the proper and legal distribution, or investment and preservation, of estates by co-operation and co-obligation with administrators, executors, guardians and other trustees; to secure the undertakings required by law in order to pursue the remedies available through the processes of courts, and to give advice and assistance in relation thereto; to underwrite and secure the strict performance of contracts for construction and "supplies"; to insure the fidelity of employes and of officials, and the careful and proper discharge of their duties; to insure money, bank deposits, securities, merchandise and other personal property against loss or delay; and to provide expert advice and service as surety on bonds necessary in the consummation of the manifold variety of transactions incident in modern commerce.

Mr. Morris is a member of the Pendennis Club, the Louisville Country Club, the Rotary Club, the Board of Trade, the National Association of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, the Sons of the American Revolution and the Alpha Tau Omega college fraternity, and is president of the Kentucky Insurance Federation. His religious affiliation is with St. Mark's parish of the Episcopal Church, and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party.

Mr. Morris was married July 1, 1900, to Miss Margaret Elliott, who was born at San Antonio, Texas, daughter of Bishop Robert W. B. and Caroline (Elliott) Elliott. Mrs. Morris' father, a bishop of the Episcopal Church, was born in South Carolina and died at Sewanee in 1887, at the age of sixty years. Her mother, born at Savannah, Georgia, died in 1894, when sixty years old. Mrs. Morris is the youngest in a family of five children, of whom four are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Morris there have been born two children: Charlotte, who is attending Wellesley College at Wellesley, Massachusetts; and Morton, who died in 1913, at the age of nine years.

Charles Erwin Eveleth. While he lives in one of the fine homes at Lexington, the native environment, if it may be so called, of Charles Erwin Eveleth is the open woods or the rugged hills and valleys where the timber and mineral wealth of the country is stored. He is a real product of that hardy and enterprising class of people chiefly associated with the lumber and mining industries of America. His father was distinguished among experts in woodcraft, and he learned the lessons of a timber cruiser when a youth. Mr. Eveleth has done some big work in Kentucky in locating, exploring and exploiting and developing the great mineral resources in the eastern counties.

He was born at Flint, Michigan, August 23, 1870, and is the third of ten children, nine of whom are still living, born to Erwin and Jennie (Black) Eveleth. His mother was born in Scotland and died in 1906, at the age of sixty-seven. His father, who was born in New York State November 3, 1841, is still living, a virile old gentleman in his eightieth year. He was educated in the State of New York, and as a boy accompanied his parents to Michigan, attended school in Saginaw and also a business college in Detroit. He obtained his real education in the woods of Michigan when the logging and lumbering industries were in their prime in that state. He had a genius which with experience made him one of the best timber cruisers or timber estimators in the entire country, and he carried on that work all over Michigan and other states, and even in Mexico and Canada. While his chief business has always been lumbering, his services proved hardly less valuable in the location and development of lumber and iron mines in Northern Michigan and Northern Minnesota. One of the most thriving mining centers of the iron range district of Northern Minnesota is named Eveleth in his honor. One of the prominent old-time citizens of Eveleth a few years ago wrote: "I don't know whether everyone is aware that it is not always an easy matter to find a name for a town. Many a name proposed for this one had to be abandoned because it was already in existence in some other part of the state. However, we finally settled this matter by naming the town after a woodsman named Eveleth sent up here from Michigan about twenty years ago in the interests of Robinson, Flynn and Fowler to pick up fine land." He was in fact associated with such men as Simon J. Murphy, Robinson and Flynn of Detroit, Eddy Brothers of Bay City, and for several years past has been a resident of the State of Washington and still owns some extensive interests in timber and farm lands. He is a very prominent Mason, having attained the thirty-third, honorary degree in the Scottish Rite. For many years he was a resident of Corunna, Michigan, and is a former mayor and former postmaster of that city, having held the office of postmaster under McKinley and Roosevelt.

Charles Erwin Eveleth spent his early life chiefly in Corunna, where he attended high school. As early as twelve years of age he started out into the woods with his father and acquired all the experience of a timber cruiser. He continued to be associated with his father more or less closely until 1905, when he came to Kentucky in the interests of some Detroit financiers to operate a logging business and also buy logs for the Thomas Forman Company of Detroit. He made his headquarters for a time at Heidelberg, Kentucky, and subsequently extended his operations as a dealer in timber and coal lands all over the eastern counties of Kentucky. During 1909 he acquired some 2,500 acres of land in that section of the state. Subsequently he organized the Flahaven Land Company, and has since been president of this large holding company. Much of the land has been leased to oil companies for development, and some highly productive properties have been brought in on the land company's holdings.

Mr. Eveleth before coming to Kentucky was a resident of Corunna, Michigan, and served two terms as alderman there. He was a member of the council at Beattyville, Kentucky, but for several years past his home has been in Lexington, his residence being at 251 South Ashland Avenue. He is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Corunna Lodge of Masons. June 1, 1904, he married Mary A. Frain, who was born at Corunna, Michigan, daughter of Albert A. and Emma (Edgerley) Frain. Her parents were natives of Michigan, and her father died in 1907. Mrs. Eveleth is the third of eight children, seven of whom are still living.

Oscar Farra Headley is the owner of the fine farm estate known as "Allendale," the same being situated in Jessamine County, on the Harrodsburg Turnpike and seven miles south of the City of Lexington. He has more than merely material interest in the property, for here he was born and reared, and here he is continuing effectively the agricultural and livestock industry which was formerly prosecuted with marked success by his father. He was born on the 18th of October, 1884, and is a son of Charles W. and Belle (Blakemore) Headley. Charles W. Headley was born November 5, 1839, and was the son of Marshall and Margaret (Farra) Headley, who established their home at "Allendale" in 1852, so that the property has been in the possession of the Headley family for three generations, and here Marshall Headley and his wife remained until their deaths, both having been earnest members of the Providence Christian Church. A tribute paid to Marshall Headley by Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, of Harrodsburg, designated him as "one of the noblest of men—one ever ready to render the loyal service indicative of a high sense of personal stewardship, and one staunch and appreciative in friendship." The widow of Marshall Headley survived him by many years and was eighty-four years of age at the time of her death, the present house on the farm having been remodeled by her and this representing practically her final undertaking prior to her death. She had contracted a second marriage, but after the death of her second husband, the late General Bryan, passed the remainder of her life with her only son, Charles W.

Charles W. Headley was reared to manhood on this old home farm, and it was about the year 1880 that he wedded Miss Belle Blakemore, of Franklin County, a daughter of Madison and Frances (Gill) Blakemore. Mrs. Headley passed to the life eternal in August, 1904, and her husband survived until the 5th of March, 1920. Charles W. Headley had been one of the substantial farmers and highly honored citizens of Jessamine County. In earlier years he gave much attention to the raising of standard bred horses and took an active part in racing events. He bred and raised on his farm the horse "Frank L.," which made an excellent turf record in its day, and also "Tynebrae" and "Farra," both of which gained distinctive turf victories. Mr. Headley was a republican in politics, as had been his father also, but while loyal and progressive in citizenship he never manifested any ambition for political activity or public office. He and his wife were zealous members of the South Elkhorn Christian Church, one mile distant from their home. Their only child is Oscar Farra Headley, to whom this sketch is dedicated.

Oscar Farra Headley gained his early education in the public schools and supplemented this discipline by attending the University of Kentucky. At the age of twenty years he assumed active charge of the home farm, and upon the death of his father became the owner of this property. Mr. Headley is vigorous and enterprising in his farm activities and gives special attention to the raising of wheat and tobacco. He is aligned loyally in the ranks of the republican party, and he and his wife held membership in South Elkhorn Christian Church.

On the 6th of June, 1905, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Headley to Miss Corinne Stone, daughter of Charles W. and Patty (Martin) Stone, of Woodford County. Mr. and Mrs. Headley have one son, Charles W., who was named in honor of his paternal grandfather and who is, in 1920, a student in high school.

William Lee Lyons, Jr. Prominently identified with the business interests of Lexington, one of the younger generation who is coming rapidly to the forefront is William Lee Lyons, Jr., of the stock, bond, grain and cotton brokerage firm of W. L. Lyons & Company. Mr. Lyons was born at Louisville, Kentucky, December 2, 1892, a son of William Lee and Belle (Clay) Lyons.

William Lee Lyons the elder was born at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1858, and after graduation from the high school in his native city attended Harrodsburg Military Academy. He was a young man of twenty-two years when he embarked in the grain, stock and bond brokerage business, and from that time forward until his death continued in the same line at Louisville, with the exception of seven years spent in New York City. Mr. Lyons became one of Louisville's most prominent and influential citizens and took a leading part in civic affairs. After serving as park commissioner for four years and as city councilman for eight years, he was elected mayor of the city, and gave Louisville an excellent administration. Mr. Lyons was widely and prominently known in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-third degree in that order, and belonged to the Elks and the Pendennis, Louisville Country and Louisville Gun clubs. His political belief made him a democrat, and his religious faith was that of the Episcopal Church. He died at Louisville, June 2, 1911. Mr. Lyons married Miss Belle Clay, born at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1860, and they became the parents of four children: Samuel Clay, who married Virginia Bayless; Laura Lee, the wife of Owsley Brown; Mary Rogers, the wife of Robinson S. Brown; and William Lee, Jr.

William Lee Lyons the younger was educated in the normal school at Louisville, the Mackenize school at Dobbs Ferry, New York, and Louisville University, and following his graduation from the last-named institution joined the Louisville firm of W. L. Lyons & Company, which had been established by his father in 1878. This concern, brokers in stocks, bonds, grain and cotton, consists of S. C. Lyons, W. L. Lyons, Jr., B. C. Lyons, M. G. Lyons and J. M. Warden, and belongs to the New York Stock Exchange, the Louisville Stock Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade. In 1917 Mr. Lyons came to Lexington, where a branch office of the firm had been established in the Phoenix Hotel Building and now located at the new Lafayette Hotel. He is known as one of the thoroughly alert and enterprising young brokers of the city and is also president of the Henry Clay Realty Company. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89, B. P. O. E., and holds membership also in the Lexington Country, Lexington Fishing, Pyramid and Pendennis clubs. He is a member of the Episcopal Church and maintains an independent stand upon questions of a political nature.

On January 3, 1914, Mr. Lyons married Carolina Virginia Bell, who was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, daughter of Charles W. and Anne (Law) Bell, and they have one child, Anne Law Lyons.

JOHN W. ALLISON. Located eight miles northwest of Paris, at Centreville, Bourbon County, is the Appleton Stock Farm, one of the prosperous and highly improved properties of this part of the state. This is the estate of John W. Allison, a highly respected and honored resident of this locality for a long period of years, and a man who has contributed in full degree to the advancement and upbuilding of his community, its interests and its institutions. Mr. Allison was born at Paris, Kentucky, March 4, 1833, the day of President Andrew Jackson's second inauguration, and is a son of John Allison.

The family is of old Scotch-Irish Presbyterian stock from the north of Ireland, whence the grandfather of John W. Allison came with his two brothers to America and settled in Maryland. Later he went to Pittsburgh, where he died at a comparatively early age, and where his son, John, was born in 1784. After the death of the grandfather the widow with her children came to the home of an uncle, Mr. Clark, near Paris, where she bought some land and slaves and there rounded out her useful life. She was the mother of the following children: Jane, Anna and Polly, who died as maidens; Sam, who lived at Jacksonville, Bourbon County; and Will, who lived on the old farm with his sisters and died when well advanced in years.

John Allison, after a somewhat meager education in his youth, was bound out to learn the trade of carpenter and cabinetmaker, and at the end of five years was given as a reward for his services a horse, saddle and new suit of clothes. He then began working at the trade, and while building a house for George Edwards met and later married the daughter of George, Mary Edwards. George Edwards' brother, John Edwards, was county clerk, and the sessions of the court were held in John Edwards' home. After his marriage John Allison built a home at Paris and worked at his trade, in the winter months being employed at making furniture. At the death of his wife's father, George Edwards, he bought a farm at Jacksonville, and there Mr. Allison spent the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits, dying at the ripe old age of eighty-four years. She survived him for a decade, but was about the same age as he at the time of her demise. Mr. Allison was a whig in the early days and later adopted the principles of the republican party. His farm contained 200 acres and was one of the largest in the neighborhood at the time, and much of the work thereon was done by colored labor, Mrs. Allison having inherited a number of slaves. There were the following children in the family of John and Mary (Edwards) Allison: Ann Eliza, who married a Mr. Shropshire and after his death, Will Thompson, and died at Georgetown at the advanced age of ninety-two years, being survived by one daughter of her first marriage, Anna Shropshire; Addie, who married Joseph Northcutt and lived on farms in Bourbon and Scott counties, where she died, her son, John, now being a resident of Lexington; John W., of this notice; Mary, who married Professor Rucker, of Georgetown College, and died when between the ages of forty-five and fifty years; Sarah, who died in middle life as the wife of Jonathan Smith, leaving one son, William; and Ben, who never married but devoted his life to his mother, to whom he was profoundly attached, and spent his last years at the home of his brother, John, where he died in 1918.

John W. Allison received his education in the public schools and remained with his parents until 1854, at which time he went to St. Joseph, Missouri, and invested his means in enterprises there. He was married in 1860 and went to St. Joseph to make his home, but was very soon thereafter called back to Bourbon County to care for his suddenly widowed sister and her three children, whose estate he settled satisfactorily. At the death of his wife's grandfather, Col. Joseph Cantrille, her mother inherited a part of the estate, and it thus came to Mrs. Allison, who had been Frances Barlow. Her mother was a daughter of Colonel Cantrille, who had 700 acres, which was later purchased by Mr. Allison from the four brothers of his wife. From childhood Mrs. Allison had been reared by her Grandmother Barlow, a resident of Scott County, her father, Thomas Barlow, after his second marriage having removed to Ballard County, Kentucky, where the Town of Barlow was built on his farm. Of the 375 acres of land now owned by Mr. Allison, 200 acres was originally in the Cantrille estate.

Mr. Allison's property, known as the Appleton Stock Farm, has long been noted as the home of fine livestock, including Shorthorn cattle and trotting horses. In 1876 Mr. Allison began importing Cotswold and Southdown sheep, and this venture turned out so well that he began shipping ewes by the carload, and also sold a buck for $200. He continued to breed both Cotswolds and Southdowns, and attained a reputation as a breeder of sheep that extended far beyond the limits of his immediate community. He also bred horses, and his animals won numerous prizes in the less than 2:30 class. Mr. Allison also grows from ten to twelve acres of tobacco. He was one of the organizers of the Agricultural Bank of Paris, which as a Grange bank limited any one individual's stock to $5,000, but as the directors died the stock passed into other hands, and Mr. Allen disposed of his interests. Later he was a stockholder in the First National Bank of Paris. For some years he was the owner of a stretch of seven miles of the Russell's Cave Pike.

While Mr. Allison has been a leading citizen of the Centreville district for more than half a century he has not been very active in politics. However, he served for a time as a member of the Board of County Commissioners, and while acting in that capacity was the prime mover in securing the passage of the railroad within one-half mile of Centreville, which has greatly benefited the county and local interests. He attended, though not as a delegate, the Democratic National Convention held at Chicago in 1896, and heard the famous "Crown of Gold" speech, which gave William Jennings Bryan the nomination of his party for the presidency.

Mrs. Allison died after thirty-one years of wedded life, without issue. In his declining years Mr. Allison can look back with contentment over a career well spent, in which his dealings with his fellow-men have always been honorable and in which his citizenship has been helpful and constructive.

HARRY BRYANT TILESTON has achieved a national reputation as a dental surgeon, has practiced his profession at Louisville nearly forty years, and was one of the founders of and has long been prominent in what is now the dental department of the University of Louisville.

Doctor Tileston was born at Evansville, Indiana, January 10, 1860, a son of William W. and Emma (Tribble) Tileston. His father, a native of Boston, Massachusetts, was taken to Ohio by his parents soon after his birth, and later to Evansville, Indiana, where he was reared and educated. He spent all his active life in the insurance business, first in the fire and later in the life department. He died in 1911, at the age of eighty years. He was a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. For many years he was choirmaster of the First Presbyterian Church at Evansville. His wife, a native of Kentucky, died in 1909, at the age of seventy-six. Of their seven children Harry Bryant was the fourth, and four are still living.

Doctor Tileston grew up at Evansville, where he attended the public schools, and in 1882 graduated from the dental school of the University of Michigan. After a brief period of practice at Owensboro, Kentucky, he removed to Louisville in 1883, and from this city the reputation of his abilities and work has spread to many states.

The Louisville Dental College was organized in 1887, and Doctor Tileston was its first teacher of operative surgery. He was elected professor of prosthetic dentistry in 1895, and later professor of operative dentistry and president of the faculty. In 1917 this school became the dental department of the University of Louisville, and since that date Doctor Tileston has been dean of the department.

Some of the many honors he has received from professional bodies indicate his standing in American dentistry. He has served as president of the Jefferson County and the Kentucky State Dental associations, and has been vice president of the National Dental Association, also president of the National Association of Dental Faculties and president of the American Institute of Dental College Teachers. Aside from his direct service as a teacher in the profession he has contributed a large number of papers to dental journals. He has been accorded honorary membership in the State Dental Associations of New York, Indiana, Ohio, North and South Carolina and New Jersey.

In his home city Doctor Tileston is a member of the Filson Club, Audubon Country Club, Board of Trade, and is an elder in the Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church. He is a republican and a Mason, being affiliated with Excelsior Lodge No. 254, F. and A. M., and King Solomon Chapter No. 5, R. A. M.

On June 16, 1893, Doctor Tileston married Miss Fannie De Souchet, a native of Evansville. They are the parents of three sons. The oldest, Harry B., Jr., is a graduate of the Louisville College of Dentistry and also of the St. Louis College of Orthodontia, and is practicing that profession at Louisville. The second son, Edwin, is in the automobile tire business at Los Angeles, California, was in the Naval Aviation Corps during the World war at Pensacola, Florida, at the Boston School of Technology and at Miami, Florida, and after being commissioned a first lieutenant served until the close of the war. The third son, Roy, graduated Bachelor of Science from the University of Michigan and received his D. D. S. degree from the Louisville Dental College in 1913. During the World war he was attached to Doctor Barrow's Hospital, with a commission as major, serving in England and in France. Since the war he has resumed his practice at Louisville. Dr. Roy Tileston married Margaret Benua, of Salem, Indiana.

Samuel B. Walton. An enumeration of those men of the present generation who have won honor and public recognition for themselves, and at the same time have honored the locality to which they belong, would be incomplete were there failure to make mention of the one whose name forms the caption to this sketch. He has sustained a very enviable reputation in business circles and today is conducting one of the leading insurance agencies in this section of the state.

Samuel B. Walton was born in Germantown, Kentucky, on the 5th day of December, 1886, and is the son of Joseph F. and Lillie Dale (Savage) Walton, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. The father was born on May 5, 1865, and died on July 30, 1918, while the mother was born on September 11, 1869, and died on September 10, 1916. They were the parents of four children, namely: Hervy B., Matt S., Mary S., who died when thirteen years of age, and Samuel B.

Joseph F. Walton received his educational training in Bethany College, at Bethany, Virginia, after which he engaged in farming in Mason County, Kentucky, which vocation he followed up to 1906. In the latter year he moved to Fayette County. For a number of years while residing in Mason County he had been a breeder of high-class saddle horses. He was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias. His religious faith was that of the Christian Church, while in politics he gave his support to the democratic party.

Samuel B. Walton attended the public schools of his native county and completed his education in old Kentucky University, now Transylvania University. His first employment was as paying teller in the Union Bank and Trust Company, from 1907 to 1909, when he became assistant cashier of the Phoenix and Third National Bank, where he remained until 1913, when he engaged in the general insurance business. He has during the subsequent years built up a large and representative clientele and commands as large a business in his line as any insurance house in this section of the state. Mr. Walton is a man of fine business qualifications, possessing a soundness of judgment, a nicety of discrimination and an integrity of motive which have not only won for him the prosperity which he enjoys, but, what is more important, the honor and esteem of his fellow citizens.

On November 8, 1916, Mr. Walton was married to Laura Kinkead, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of Judge and Mrs. George B. Kinkead. To Mr. and Mrs. Walton have been born two children, Samuel B., Jr., and Laura Stone. In all that constitutes true manhood and good citizenship, Mr. Walton is a notable example, his career having been characterized by duty faithfully performed, and by industry, thrift and wisely directed effort. He is a public-spirited, unassuming, conservative gentleman whom to know is to respect and admire.

William Townsend Smith. Among the leading members of the legal profession in Fayette County, Kentucky, is the gentleman whose name heads this paragraph, who has not only attained to a position of respect in the community and esteem among his colleagues, but is intensely public spirited in his attitude toward all movements for the advancement of the community along all legitimate lines. William Townsend Smith was born on his father's farm at Farmington, St. Francois County, Missouri, on the 13th day of November, 1883, and is the son of William T. and Eva (Bradley) Smith. His father was born in St. Francois County on May 24, 1854, and died in May, 1885, and his wife was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, on September 9, 1853, and died on December 9, 1908. They were married in Missouri and became the parents of four children, two of whom died in infancy, the survivors being George Walter, who is engaged in the lumber business in Lexington, and William Townsend, of this sketch. William T. Smith was educated in the public schools of Missouri and spent his entire life on a farm in that state, carrying on a general line of farming and also breeding and raising Shorthorn cattle and Norman horses. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in politics was a democrat.

William T. Smith, Jr., attended the public schools of his native city, completing his academic studies in Carleton College, at Farmington. He then decided to take up the practice of law and to this end he entered the law department of Transylvania University, where he was graduated with the class of 1911. Immediately thereafter he entered upon the practice of his profession in Lexington and has gained a large and representative cilentage. He has been connected with much important litigation in the local courts and is considered a lawyer of more than ordinary keenness and acumen.

Politically Mr. Smith gives his support to the democratic party, while fraternally he is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. On September 30, 1916, Mr. Smith was married to Edith Higgins, who was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, the daughter of Charles V. and Cynthia (Embry) Higgins, both of whom also are natives of Kentucky, Mr. Higgins being at the present time a successful farmer in Bourbon County. As a citizen, Mr. Smith is public-spirited and enterprising; as a friend and neighbor he combines those qualities of head and heart which win confidence and command respect; and as an attorney, he has brought dignity to his profession.

John Bruce Davis. One of Lexington's younger men of enterprise in business, active in real estate and insurance circles, John Bruce Davis is also a prominent Mason, and has held the highest posts in practically all the Masonic bodies represented at Lexington.

His family is an old and prominent one. His maternal grandfather, James Morrison Bruce, was a leading physician, at one time was demonstrator of anatomy at the old Transylvania University Medical School, and gave a faithful performance of his duties as city physician during a yellow fever epidemic. He held diplomas in medicine from Heidelberg University of Germany and Paris University.

John Bruce Davis was born in Lexington September 30, 1881, a son of Dr. Horace and Charlotte Bush (Bruce) Davis. His mother is still living in Lexington, in which city she was born. Dr. Horace B. Davis was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, in 1845 and died in 1901. He was well educated, and for many years practiced medicine in Paris and Lexington, but for a number of years prior to his death was in the drug business at Lexington. He was a member of the Christian Church and in politics a democrat. All his three children are living, John B. being the oldest. Margaret is the wife of D. C. Cruise, at Lexington, and Jo Ida is unmarried.

John Bruce Davis is a graduate of Transylvania University, receiving his B. A. degree in 1901. For some years following he was in the service of the Southern Railway Company, and in 1910 resigned as chief clerk to the superintendent to become sales manager for the John D. More Tobacco Manufacturing Company. Since 1914 his chief business interests have been in the real estate and insurance field. He is also president of the City Board of Equalization.

A brief record of his Masonic connections is as follows: He is past master of Lexington Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M., past high priest of Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., past thrice illustrious master of Washington Council No. 1, R. & S. M., past eminent commander of Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T., past patron of Chapter No. 110 of the Eastern Star, is a member of Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is now president of the Masonic Temple Association. He is also affiliated with Merrick Lodge of the Odd Fellows, is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, is president of the Rotary Club, is a republican and has served two terms as president of the Lexington Board of Commerce, and is a director of the Guaranty Bank & Trust Company.

November 1, 1917, he married Susie Dunreath Evens, who was born at Nicholasville, Kentucky, a daughter of C. S. and Mattie (Glass) Evens. Her parents are still living, and Mrs. Davis is the youngest of their three children.

Linzy Otto Thompson, a Lexington lawyer, member of the law firm of Thompson & Thompson, had from a date prior to the beginning of the World war until November 1, 1920, been the special agent of the United States Department of Justice in charge of the Eastern District of Kentucky and assisted in the investigation and prosecution of many important cases arising in the Federal Jurisdiction.

Mr. Thompson was born in Lawrence County, Kentucky, February 23, 1883, a son of James Franklin and Amanda Watson Thompson. His grandfather, John Thompson, was a son of Martin Thompson, Jr., who was also born in the same county, near Yatesville. Martin Thompson, Jr., was the son of Martin Thompson, Sr., who settled in Lawrence County about 1800, having come from Wise County, Virginia. John Thompson was a second lieutenant in the 45th Kentucky Volunteers of the Union Army, was elected and served two terms of four years each as sheriff of Lawrence County and was an influential democrat in that locality. James Franklin Thompson was also born in Lawrence County, July 25, 1860, was a farmer and stock raiser, served sixteen years as deputy county clerk of that county, but now resides at Ashland, Kentucky.

Linzy O. Thompson, the oldest of eight living children, was reared on the farm and acquired his early education in the public schools. He taught five years in the public schools of his native county, his first being the old Caney Fork School, which was established in the time of his grandfather. He and three of his brothers all began teaching in the same schoolhouse. After receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science at the Southern Normal School at Bowling Green he taught three terms as principal of the high school at Carson, Mississippi, and one term in the same position at Baskin, Louisiana. In the summer of 1909 he entered the law department of Kentucky University, was graduated in 1910, and for the first year was associated in practice with A. L. Watson at Ashland. In June, 1910, he was admitted to practice before the Lexington Bar and the Kentucky Court of Appeals. Mr. Thompson began practice at Lexington in June, 1913, in association with his brother, Grover C. Thompson. In December of the same year he was appointed to special duties by the Federal Department of Justice in enforcing the White Slave Traffic Act, and in this work had many unusual experiences, but from January, 1917, to November 1, 1920, he gave his entire time to the Federal Department of Justice in investigating neutrality cases and cases arising mostly under the war statutes. On the last named date he resigned his position with the Government and resumed the practice of law at Lexington. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Lexington Bar Association, the Kentucky Bar Association, and the American Bar Association.

He is affiliated with Merrick Lodge No. 31 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a democrat. September 3, 1919, Mr. Thompson married Lola Darrell Gray, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of James and Catherine (Landram) Gray. Her father is a native of Kentucky, while her mother was born at Charleston, West Virginia, and died May 25, 1906, at the age of forty-two. Mrs. Thompson was the fifth in a family of nine children. On August 17, 1920, there was born to Linzy O. Thompson and wife a boy, Roger Gray Thompson.

William B. Respess, who served with the rank of captain in the American forces in France, is a member of an old Kentucky family, and is actively identified with his father and brother in the general insurance business at Lexington.

He was born at Maysville in Mason County, July 6, 1885, son of Augustine C. and Nannie (Baldwin) Respess. His grandparents were Thomas A. and Jane M. (Fox) Respess, both natives of Mason County, Kentucky. His grandfather was born in 1826 and died in 1919, at the age of ninety-three, while the grandmother died at the age of fifty-five. Thomas Respess was a man of fine education, having attended Transylvania University, Miami University in Ohio, Princeton University and for many years was a prominent lawyer of Mason County and for twelve years clerk of the Circuit Court. He and his wife had two children, Augustine C. and A. Fox Respess. Augustine C. Respess was born at Dover in Mason County, Kentucky,

David Atkinson

May 19, 1850, and his wife was born near Maysville, Kentucky. They had three children: Augustine C., Jr.; Lutie, who died November 13, 1914, wife of Richard Anderson; and William B. Augustine C. Respess received a good practical education and for about ten years served as deputy Circuit Court clerk under his father. He then entered the coal business at Maysville, continuing from 1875 to 1883, and during that time acted as receiver for the Thompson & Piles Coal Company, an organization owning a line of steamboats and barges and many other facilities for handling coal. In 1886 he was appointed receiver for the Maysville & Lexington Turnpike, and during the trouble over turnpike roads in Kentucky represented the main turnpike roads in the state. He was appointed to the office of receiver by Governor Luke Blackburn. For four years he was postmaster of Maysville during President Cleveland's first administration, and continued a year and a half into the administration of President Harrison. Later he represented the Whiskey Trust and other distillers of Kentucky, serving in that capacity fourteen years. In 1901 he located at Lexington, and has since been engaged in the general insurance business under the firm name of Respess & Company. He served as captain of the Maysville Guards during the administration of Governor Blackburn. Capt. A. C. Respess was a democrat until the first McKinley campaign, and since then has voted the republican ticket.

William B. Respess acquired his early education in the public schools of Maysville, and for several years was employed by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. August 27, 1917, he entered the Second Officers' Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, and was commissioned captain November 27, 1917. He was first attached to the 355th Regiment, 84th Division, and later put in command of the 309th Supply Train. He spent ten months in France and returned to the United States June 30, 1919, and was honorably discharged July 19th. Since then he has been engaged in the general insurance business at Lexington, and is also special agent for the Niagara Fire Insurance Company and the Life, Fire & Casualty Insurance Company. Captain Respess is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M., Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T., Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and politically is independent.

Jacob Speyer. One of the oldest established commercial houses of Lexington is Speyer & Sons, hide, fur and wool merchants. They have done business all over the Ohio Valley and the Middle West, and for years the name has been associated with financial stability and the highest degree of commercial integrity.

An active member of the firm for thirty years, Jacob Speyer was born at Fort Smith, Arkansas, December 4, 1861, son of Joshua and Betty (Shane) Speyer. His parents were both born in Germany, his father July 25, 1829, and his mother May 1, 1831. They were married in Cincinnati, Ohio, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary April 18, 1905. The mother passed away six years later on February 10, 1911. Of the nine children of their union one died in infancy, while eight grew to manhood and womanhood, Jacob being the fourth in age. Joshua Speyer came to this country as a young man, landing at New York practically penniless. For a time he worked for a railroad, and later became a pack peddler out of Cincinnati, and when his resources justified it he bought a horse and buggy and traveled all through the South, making trips requiring his absence from four to six months. In the meantime he married, and later established a permanent mercantile business at Cincinnati, leaving that city to enter business in Fort Smith, Arkansas, where he continued until the close of the Civil war. For a few months he was located at Plymouth, Indiana, then came to Kentucky, and in 1867 entered the auction and general mercantile business at Lexington, with his headquarters on Main Street. As an auctioneer he sold goods in many different towns, but later turned all his attention to the hide, fur and wool business as a partner with his brother, Julius. Their establishment was at Spring, Vine and Water streets, where the firm is today. As Speyer Brothers the title continued until 1890, in which year Jacob Speyer bought the interest of his uncle and the title was changed to Speyer & Son. Later another son of Joshua, Sigmund, was taken into the firm, and after his death his share was acquired by his brother, Simon, and since then the firm has been Speyer & Sons. Joshua Speyer is still living, past ninety years of age. For many years he has been a Mason and politically is a democrat.

Jacob Speyer acquired his early education in the public schools of Lexington, and his first business experience was as a traveling representative of the firm, buying hides, furs and wool. In 1890 he entered the partnership, and has been one of the moving spirits in the continued progress and success of the business for the past thirty years. Mr. Speyer is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks, he and his father are prominent members of the B'nai B'rith, and in politics he is an independent democrat.

February 14, 1893, he married Bertha C. Lauer, who was born at Plymouth, Indiana. They have one daughter, Caroline B. Mr. Speyer is a director in the Phoenix and Third National Bank of Lexington.

David Alexander Keller. In the half century of his residence at Louisville, David Alexander Keller has been through many grades of responsibility and service in a business way. For a number of years he was an official of one of the leading tobacco companies located at Louisville, and is still active as a lumber and building material manufacturer and dealer.

Mr. Keller was born at Courtland, Alabama, July 27, 1853, a son of Alexander Moore and Jane (Sheegog) Keller. Mr. Keller is a cousin of the famous American woman, Helen Keller, whose beautiful life is known to every American. Both of them trace their ancestry from Alexander Spottswood, one of the Colonial governors of Virginia. Mr. Keller's grandparents were David and Mary Fairfax (Moore) Keller, Mary Moore being the granddaughter of Governor Alexander Spottswood. Alexander Moore Keller was born in Alabama in 1812, was educated in his native state, and was a graduate of medicine at the University of Louisville and the University of Pennsylvania. He was in the active practice of his profession at Courtland until his death in 1857, four years after the birth of his son, David A. He was a man of high standing in medical circles and medical organizations, was a Presbyterian and a democrat. His wife, Jane Sheegog, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1820 and died in 1865. Of her five children only two are living, David A. and William, the latter a resident of Alabama.

David Alexander Keller had somewhat limited advantages, partly due to the death of his father and also to the breaking out of the Civil war when he was only eight years of age. He attended school at Courtland, Alabama, and was only twelve when his mother died. Mr. Keller came to Louisville in 1872, at the age of nineteen, and went to work at wages of $15 a month for the Traders Bank and Warehouse. In 1878 he became assistant bookkeeper for John Finzer & Brothers in the tobacco business, and was associated with that widely known tobacco firm for twenty years, taking an increasing share in the business and eventually was secretary and treasurer of Finzer Company. He negotiated the sale of the business in 1898 to the American Tobacco Company. After that Mr. Keller was for about five years out of active business, at the end of which time he bought and operated the Colgan Gum Company, one of the pioneer chewing gum enterprises of the United States. In 1911 he sold his business to a New York syndicate. Mr. Keller in 1913 was elected president of the Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Company, and was at the head of the company until it closed out its business. In 1918 he organized the Star Wood Products Company, manufacturers of lumber and building supplies, and has since been president of this leading industry of its kind in Louisville.

Mr. Keller is a member of the Episcopal Church and in politics is a democrat. On October 4, 1883, he married Alice Lee Cooke, whose father, the late Lyttleton Cooke, was for many years in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company. Mrs. Keller died in Louisville, May 18, 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Keller had two children, Alice L., the older, dying in infancy. The living daughter, Jane Spottswood, was married January 20, 1917, to George Danforth Caldwell, a prominent young attorney of Louisville.

Hector F. Hillenmeyer. For about fourscore years the name Hillenmeyer has been intimately identified with the nursery industry at Lexington. The Hillenmeyers were nurserymen and landscape gardeners in France as far back as 1768, and a large business of that kind is still carried on by Hector F. Hillenmeyer at Lexington.

Mr. Hillenmeyer was born in Fayette County August 28, 1849, son of Francis H. and Mary (Hahn) Hillenmeyer. Both his parents were born in Eastern France, in a district that was taken over by the Germans during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. The father was born in 1812 and the mother in 1810. They were married in France. Francis Hillenmeyer had first come to the United States when about twenty years of age. As a youth he was bound out to learn the nursery trade in France, his father having paid his tuition of 500 francs. When he came to the United States the first time he was in quest of adventure, and in 1838 joined Sam Houston's army in Texas, and for his services to the Texas Republic was granted a tract of land of 640 acres near Galveston. He traveled all over the South and eventually became associated with a wealthy Georgia planter named Munchen, for whom he managed his extensive properties. For Munchen he planned a park in the center of the City of Savannah, Georgia, and was given a commission to go to France and buy a large consignment of ornamental plants and trees. On his return to France he married, and a few weeks later, having shipped the valuable cargo of plants and trees, he and his bride followed and for several years lived at Savannah, Georgia, where he superintended the planting of the park. In 1840 he came to Kentucky, and the following year bought a tract of land in Fayette County. This land, in part, is still owned by Hector F. Hillenmeyer. Francis Hillenmeyer remained a Kentuckian the rest of his life and died in 1892, while his wife passed away in 1890. They were faithful Catholics and in politics the father voted as a democrat. Of their five children two are now living, Hector being the youngest child.

Hector Hillenmeyer acquired his education in public schools and attended the oldest collegiate institution of Kentucky, St. Mary's College in Marion County. He took up the traditional family profession, and he still owns 185 acres of the old Hillenmeyer estate, most of it being devoted to the growing of nursery stock. At one time the Hillenmeyer farm contained 600 acres, but Mr. Hillenmeyer has given two places to his children and has sold two farms. He is a man of wide experience and authoritative knowledge in all branches of plant and tree growing. He has spent several years in France, the home of his ancestors, and has traveled widely elsewhere. Mr. Hillenmeyer is a director in the First and City National Bank of Lexington, is a director of the City Gas Company, the Waterworks Company, and is a practical business man and has never sought the honors of political office. He votes independently and is a member of the Catholic Church.

July 17, 1877, he married Mary Ossenbeck, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. Six children were born to their marriage: Herbert, the oldest, is a Catholic priest; Ernest B. married Martha Scott and has one daughter; Raymond J. is the third; Louis married Anna Bain and has three children; Mazie B. is the wife of Edward T. Houlihan and has two children; and Walter W. married Marie Reiling and has two sons.

Gus Macey. Among the strong and influential citizens of Kentucky the record of whose lives has become an essential part of the history of this section, the gentleman whose name appears above has exerted a beneficial influence throughout the community where he resides. His chief characteristics are keenness of perception, a tireless energy, honesty of purpose and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also to largely contribute to the advancement of the interests of his own state.

Gus Macey was born on his grandfather's farm in Franklin County, Kentucky, August 28, 1855, and is the son of Theodore James and Sallie F. (Gay) Macey, both of whom also were natives of Franklin County. Both are now deceased, the father dying in 1871, at the age of forty-seven years, and the mother in 1903, she having survived her husband for thirty-two years. They became the parents of ten children, and the subject of this sketch is the fourth child in order of birth. Theodore J. Macey was educated in the schools of Franklin County, Kentucky. In mature years he became a dealer in horses, especially of the better class, in which he was successful, shipping them to the New York markets. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and also served in the Civil war, on the side of the North, acting as provost marshal, with the rank of captain. He received a saber wound in the head at the battle of Perryville, and also a bullet wound, which eventually caused his death. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the Christain Church, while in politics he was independent.

Gus Macey attended the public schools of his native county, and his first employment was with the Sellers Carriage Company in the making of buggy bodies. Later he engaged with his brother, Robert W. Macey, under the firm name of Macey Brothers, in the breeding, training and racing of trotting horses, in which they have been eminently successful, having for years been numbered among the leading horsemen of this state. They have owned at different times many of the leading trotting horses of this country, among whom may be mentioned the following: County Jay, 2:05¼, who made fifteen world records; Colorado E., 2:04¾ as a three-year-old and the holder of seven records; Spanish Queen, who made a record of 2:04¼ and won over $30,000 in one season; Benzetta, 2:06¼, who won the biggest Futurity ever trotted in Kentucky, it being worth $30,000; also, with Boralma, they won the biggest stake ever offered in a trotting race up to that time; they also owned C. the Limit, 2:03¼.

Mr. Macey has taken an important part in racing affairs in Kentucky and served as patrol judge at the running races in Louisville and Latonia in 1920. While living in Versailles he took an active part in local affairs, having served for about fifteen years as a member of the City Council and one term as mayor. He moved to Lexington in 1904, and has since been identified with the life of this community. In political affairs he is not closely identified with any particular party, voting according to the dictates of his own judgment. He has been a member of the Christian Church since boyhood.

On October 2, 1883, Mr. Macey was married to Lena Postwood, who was born in Anderson County, Kentucky, the daughter of Ambrose and Eliza (Miller) Postwood. Both of her parents were also natives of Anderson County and both are deceased, her father dying at the age of ninety years and the mother when seventy-five years old. They were the parents of ten children, of whom five are living. Mr. Postwood was a farmer by vocation, and also served as sheriff of Anderson County. He was a member of the Christian Church and a democrat in his political views. To Mr. and Mrs. Macey have been born two children, Louisa, the wife of George R. Connell, and they have a son, Balfour; and Reamy, who married Laura Clay and is the father of a son, John Ireland. Reamy Macey is a successful trainer and driver of trotting horses, having charge in Chicago of the trotting stable of E. T. Bedford, of New York City. Reamy Macey is credited with being the only young driver in the world who has made world records with trotting horses, having handled and driven Counter, Jr., to a world record of 2:08¼ under the saddle and Spanish Queen, who made a world record to harness for a six-heat race, and The Wanderer, who made a world record of 2:14½ under the saddle on a half-mile track.

McKee Brothers, James and Frank, are sons of Dr. John Robert McKee, whose story is told elsewhere, and are the active proprietors of Forest Home Farm in Woodford County, five miles northwest of Versailles. This has been a fine pedigree livestock breeding farm for over 100 years, beginning with the forefathers of the present McKee Brothers. Doctor McKee, as noted elsewhere, always had a deep interest in thoroughbreds, though hogs have always been a feature of the livestock industry here. Many years ago the family began with the Essex hog imported directly from England. About 1900 the McKee Brothers began building up a highly specialized hog farm, and for the past sixteen years the Duroc Jersey has received their exclusive attention.

They began with "The Colonels," adopting the biggest of the big type of Duroc. In 1913 they paid $5,000 for the famous Defender, the highest price ever paid up to that time. The Defender weighed over 1,000 pounds, and his qualities, including bigness, have been transmitted to all the generations at Forest Home. McKee Brothers were the chief pioneers in "line breeding," and their methods have resulted in intensifying the superior characteristics of their original stock. McKee Brothers have exhibited the Defender line and won championships until blue ribbons and other trophies are a commonplace at Forest Home. Defender was the only boar who ever won the grand championship twice at the International Live Stock Show in Chicago.

Recently McKee Brothers paid another record-making price, $15,000, for Woodford Sensation, a son of the grand champion boar at the National Swine Show of 1919.

McKee Brothers introduced the Duroc over the South, but their farm now ships to every state in the country, and they register and sell more Duroc Jerseys than any other breeders in America. At the first sale they held the average price was $30 and the average price of each pig, $10. At the last of their sales, held in August, 1920, the average price of a large consignment was $490. McKee Brothers are the only breeders who ever won the National Silver Trophy awarded by the National Duroc Association three times in succession.

The secretary of the American Duroc Jersey Association, in his history of the strain, says: "The line of breeding known since 1912 as the Defenders is really an intensifying of the Orion and Colonel blood. This Defender blood has been line bred and in bred by the McKee Brothers, who purchased old Defender in 1913, and have continued to improve and perpetuate this line. They have proven themselves real swine builders and have produced a type peculiar to that blood line and type that conforms in every particular to the large, stretchy, high-backed hog which all breeders are striving to produce."

Forest Home farm consists of about 1,000 acres of fine rolling lands of Central Kentucky, and nearly the entire tract is used as an ideal environment and feeding ground for the famous Durocs. Every branch of the business is conducted with a systematic thoroughness justified by commercial results. Forest Home farm is a beautifully attractive place, but aside from the stately residence and its grounds the breeding farm itself is quite devoid of the fancy adornments found on less useful farms owned by wealthy men who are breeding stock largely as a pastime. Nevertheless McKee Brothers have contributed to breeding progress not only through the quality of their animals but through improved methods of feeding, and for a number of years have maintained a special service to their customers, including detailed instruction to every buyer so that the benefits to the hog derived from its birth and early life at Forest Home may be continued under the new owner. All their sales are protected by substantial guarantees that only breeders of the highest financial standing and integrity could afford to make good.

The history of Kentucky may properly take note of this outstanding institution in a state long famous for its livestock farms. In conclusion a brief paragraph can be quoted from a writer in The Country Gentleman, since what he said five years ago is in the main characteristic of the character and activities of the brothers today:

"Frank and Jim McKee, aside from being good breeders of red hogs, are good farmers, good salesmen, good buyers, good talkers, good listeners. They keep in close touch with the work at the experiment station and are always on hand with their support when a movement for the betterment of farmers and farming is being considered. Frank is the head of the Tobacco Growers' Organization in the Burley belt and a live wire in the Farmers' Union, taking a leading part in the management of the co-operative store and the farmers' flour mill. The boys are great corn growers, exhibits of Boone County White from their farm having repeatedly pulled down the best ribbons at the Kentucky State Corn Show."

James McKee was for five years vice president of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of Kentucky. He was the cause of Hon. David Lubin, the founder of the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, coming to Kentucky to lecture and expound the merits of Rural Credits. He was appointed by Governor James McCreary to go with Hon. David Lubin to Europe to study rural credits and co-operation.

William M. Jones has been for a number of years one of the notably successful farmers of the famous Blue Grass section of Kentucky. Since 1904 he has owned and occupied Sunny Valley farm, 1½ miles west of North Middletown and eleven miles southwest of Paris. To the practical business of farming he has devoted the best years of his life, and some of the products of his farm and stables have gained their proper degree of esteem in the records of Kentucky horses.

Mr. Jones was born in Bourbon County, November 25, 1854. His grandparents were William S. and Nancy (Ashurst) Jones, pioneers of Bourbon County and whose descendants have constituted one of the families of importance in the business and social life of the North Middletown community for a century. The father of William M. Jones was Josiah A. Jones, also born in Bourbon County. He married Leoma Talbott, daughter of Mason and Susan (Leach) Talbott.

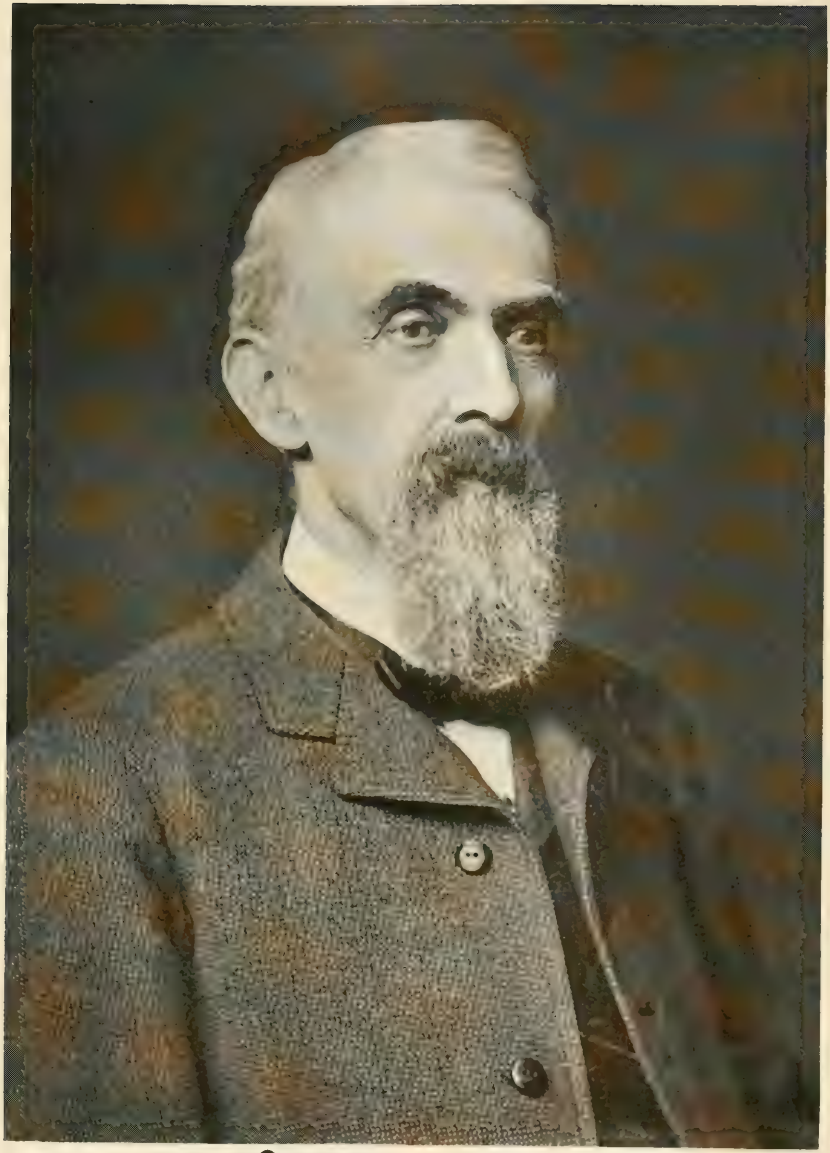
The oldest son of his parents, William M. Jones was educated in the public schools and had a practical training in the field work of the farm and in handling livestock, beginning at an early age. He was only sixteen when he began dealing in livestock, and much of his success in business has been due to his ability and expert judgment in handling livestock. His Sunny Valley farm is one of the largest bodies of land under one ownership in Bourbon County, comprising over 800 acres, much of it extremely productive and with building improvements and other facilities that mark it as one of the most attractive country homes in the county. For many years Mr. Jones made a specialty of breeding registered saddle horses, and that industry is still carried on by one of his sons. Some of the horses owned and bred at Sunny Valley and giving fame to the farm were Sterling Denmark, Montgomery Chief, Bourbon King, Marvel King and Brilliant King. Mr. Jones has lived in the North Middletown community all his life, but after his marriage lived on a farm near Sunny Valley, which was the original estate of his wife's father and which he has occupied since 1904.

On May 31, 1882, Mr. Jones married Miss Fannie Evans. She was born in Clark County, Kentucky, August 27, 1857, daughter of Thomas J. and Mary J. (Rice) Evans. Her father was born in Clark County, October 2, 1832, and her mother in Bourbon County, February 9, 1837. Her parents were married November 22, 1855, and in 1873 established their home at Sunny Valley in Bourbon County. Her mother died August 16, 1904, and her father March 7, 1906. Thomas J. Evans was the first president of the North Middletown Deposit Bank when it was organized in 1869, and thus his name became officially associated with one of the oldest and strongest banks in Bourbon County, an institution with more than half a century of creditable history.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones became the parents of four children: Luella, born June 23, 1883; Mary Graham, born December 7, 1884; Thomas J., born October 4, 1887; and Lawrence Raymer, born April 25, 1895. The daughter, Luella, remains at home and is her father's housekeeper; Mary Graham was educated in the Campbell-Hagerman College at Lexington and is the wife of J. Caldwell Turnipseed of McIntosh, Florida. The son, Thomas J. Jones, graduated from the Classical and Business College of North Middletown under Professor Elliott, and is continuing the breeding of fine saddle horses on his father's homestead. He married Mary Thomas Tucker, of Huntington, West Virginia, and has five children: Ruth, Frank, William, John and Graham. The youngest child, Lawrence Raymer, was educated at Danville, Kentucky, and for eighteen months was with the colors during the World war, becoming a first lieutenant, but was never sent overseas. William M. Jones has always given his active support to the democratic party. His wife is an active member of the Christian Church.

Philip P. Johnston, Jr., another prominent member of the Johnston family, whose interests have for many generations been identified with Lexington and its neighborhood, was born on a farm and has been engaged in farming and stock raising for many years.

He is a son of Philip P. Johnston, Sr., and the farm on which he was born was part of the original grant to Joseph Rogers, who moved to Kentucky in 1778, the grant being signed by Patrick Henry, at that time governor of Virginia and whose name and life loom large in American history. This family consisted of eight sons, one of whom remained on the farm and the others lived on adjacent holdings. The son who settled on the old farm had a daughter, Nancy, who married Richard Henry Childs, and their daughter, Sally, married Philip Preston Johnston, born in Shiloh, King George County, Virginia. Sally Johnston died in 1904. She had become the owner of 456 acres. Her husband is still living.



Philip P. Johnston, the subject of this sketch, spent two years as a draftsman in the railroad service at Chattanooga. He was a graduate of the engineering department of the Kentucky State University. In 1901 he returned to the home place and took charge of the farm, consisting of 350 acres, of which he owns 175 acres. He carries on general farming and is extensively engaged in the breeding of export cattle and of sheep and hogs. He enjoys a reputation as an expert agriculturist outside the district where he conducts his operations. He now resides in a house which was erected by his grandmother more than forty years ago, and it is still in an excellent state of preservation.

His father, Philip P., Sr., is a well-known breeder of trotting and thoroughbred horses, in which line of activity he has for years been prominent. He was president of the National Trotting Horse Association for a long period, and while acting in this capacity he did much to advance the welfare of the association and of horse breeding. He still keeps trotters and thoroughbreds on his place.

Philip P. Johnston, Jr., takes an earnest interest in educational matters and is a member of the Examinations Committee of the State University Board. He was married to Margaret Wickliffe Preston, a daughter of Wickliffe Preston, the latter being a son of General Preston. Her father, who was a horseman and farmer, lived for many years in Lexington, where he died. His widow, who was Sarah McDowell, is still living. Mrs. Johnston was educated at Bryn Mawr School, Philadelphia. She is prominent in club life and takes an active part in the social and cultural movements of the community. They are the parents of two children, Philip Preston, Jr., and Robert Wickliffe.

Sandford C. Lyne has long held high reputation in the nation's leading turf circles by reason of having bred and raised on his farm many fine thoroughbred horses, and his operations in this field of enterprise brought fame to his Larchmont Farm, which is one of the show places of Central Kentucky, and which is situated seven miles south of the City of Lexington, judicial center of Fayette County. Aside from his personal prestige in the breeding of fine horses Mr. Lyne has the satisfaction of knowing that his son, Lucien, has been one of the foremost riders in connection with the world's turf events, with many racing victories to his credit, both in the United States and Europe. Of this son more specific mention will be made in later paragraphs of this review.

Sandford Connelly Lyne was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, on the 15th of October, 1850, and he was reared and educated in that county, where his father was a representative agriculturist and stockgrower. At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Lyne married Miss Ida Farra, of Jessamine County, and since that time their home has been maintained almost continuously on the present fine homestead, Larchmont Farm. Here Mr. Lyne has achieved unqualified success as a breeder and grower of thoroughbred horses, the most of which he has sold when they were colts. For a long period he conducted a large and important business in this interesting field of farm industry, but since 1908 he has gradually reduced the scope of his operations, with the result that he now keeps on the farm only a few young mares and consequently is breeding on a much less extensive scale than in former years. Mr. Lyne has sold his horses largely in the New York Market, and among the most noted horses bred on his farm were "Parrott Polly," "Daisy Platt,"

D. Wesson

"Polls" and others. He was the owner of the imported stallion "Deceiver," which had won the Epsom grand prize of $20,000 in England, and which thereafter he imported for breeding purposes, this fine animal having remained in his possession until its death. "Deceiver" was the sire of "John Cooper," "Ducat" and "John Berkeley," all of which were bred at Larchmont Farm and all of which made fine turf records. In 1898 Mr. Lyne sold from his farm one colt that brought a price of $4,200, and another which sold for $9,700. In the season of 1920 he has sold one yearling for $5,000.

Larchmont Farm comprises 215 acres of the unrivaled Blue Grass land of Central Kentucky, and in connection with this estate Mr. Lyne operates also the old Farra farm of 285 acres in Jessamine County, this being owned by his wife, who inherited the property, and by their son, Lucien. The son, William, is a well-known and successful breeder of Duroc-Jersey swine and White Leghorn poultry, and the home farm is the stage of his operations. In 1913 he began growing chickens on a small scale, and at the time of this writing, in 1920, he has about 400 laying hens and about 1,000 pullets. He has the finest strain of White Leghorns and has given careful study to the scientific and practical details of poultry breeding. He is a bachelor and remains at the parental home. Of the three sons the eldest is Frank F., M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Brooklyn, New York. Of the daughters the eldest is Lillie, who is the widow of Samuel D. MacPherson and who resides with her parents, as does also her next younger sister, Miss Jane; Ida is the wife of S. L. Yerkes, a prosperous coal broker in the City of Birmingham, Alabama; Nancy, who likewise is at the parental home, is the wife of W. Bradley Johnson and has one child, Nancy Connelly Johnston.

Lucien Lyne, the youngest of the three sons, was born in the year 1884, and initiated his remarkable career as a jockey when he was a lad of but ten years. It was in 1894 that he thus won his first race—a pony race at a 4th of July picnic. At Little Rock, Arkansas, he rode his first race on a thoroughbred in 1900, and victory was won by his mount on that occasion. During that season he continued as a successful rider on the Grand Circuit for the stable of J. B. Hoggins. In 1902 he rode for John B. Drake, of Chicago, in which city he won with his mount the American Derby of that year with "Wythe." In the same season, at Sheepshead Bay, New York, he won the American Futurity race on "Savable." In 1903 he rode for James R. Keene in England, where he and his mounts made a successful record. In the season of 1904 he rode again in the United States, for Middleton & Youngbooth, with whom he continued his association in 1905-06, characteristic success attending his work in this connection. In the season of 1907 Mr. Lyne rode for Lord Carnavan in England, and in the following season he rode for Richard Croker in English turf events. In the autumn of that year, until the inception of the World war, he was in Belgium, riding for Count Ribancourt, for whom he won the Ostend Derby on the 29th of July of that year. On the 2d of the following month the great World war was precipitated, and two days later young Lyne sailed for his native land. He remained at the parental home until 1917, when he was retained as a rider for King Alfonso of Spain, whose racing stable was conducted under the title of Duke of Toledo. On "Brabant" Mr. Lyne won for the king the grand prix of San Sebastian, representing $20,000. Besides a handsome salary he has received ten per cent of all prizes won by his mounts. This gallant young American rider won other foreign victories than those of the turf, as is evident when it is stated that he married Miss Edith DeNeuter, of Brussels, Belgium. They now reside at Madrid, Spain, but each year they visit the home of Mr. Lyne's parents, and the famous rider here renews the associations of earlier years, his popularity being unqualified.

Iverson William Twyman, of LaRue County, was a member of the Kentucky bar nearly forty years. His life was distinguished by the attainments and leadership usually associated with an accomplished lawyer, and in character he measured up to the highest standards of his time and generation.

He was a descendant in the sixth generation from Samuel Twyman, a native of England, who founded the family in Virginia in Colonial times. His grandparents, Elijah and Elizabeth (Bell) Twyman, were born in Albemarle County, Virginia, were married there, and were among the pioneers of what is now LaRue County, Kentucky, where they lived out their useful lives. Their son Thomas Bell Twyman was a native and life long resident of LaRue County and married Belinda Read, also a native of that county, a daughter of Lewis and Aylsie (Brown) Read, of Virginia ancestry.

A son of Thomas Bell and Belinda (Read) Twyman, Iverson William Twyman was born in LaRue County October 23, 1837, and died at his home in Hodgenville September 2, 1902. He was liberally educated, graduating in law from the University of Louisville in 1864. He also studied law under his uncle, Col. W. B. Read, and was actively associated with Colonel Read until the latter's death. Mr. Twyman was busied with a large and varied general practice as a lawyer. His abilities were widely recognized, and he had the choice of an extensive clientage for many years. During the last nine years of his professional career his law partner was L. B. Handley. He was one of the organizers of the LaRue County Deposit Bank and its first president. In every sense he was a gifted and influential public leader, was active in the councils of the democratic party but sought no political honors for himself, a fact which is a tribute to the volume of success he achieved as a lawyer, and in his profession he found gratification for all his honorable ambitions. He was a member of the Kentucky State Constitutional Convention of 1890-91. For many years he was a leading member of the Hodgenville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On June 8, 1869, he married Miss Louise Enlow, who lives at Hodgenville. She was born in LaRue County, June 4, 1843, daughter of Dr. Anthony Vernon and Elizabeth (Kennedy) Enlow, natives of the same county. Doctor Enlow was for many years a physician at Munfordville. Mrs. Twyman since the age of twenty has been an active member of the Methodist Church. She is the mother of two daughters. The older, Willie, is the wife of Rev. C. A. Humphrey, the popular pastor of the Temple Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Louisville. The younger daughter, Sadie, is the wife of Charles J. Hubbard, of Hodgenville, son of the late Jacob Hubbard and grandson of the late Dr. Jesse Rodman of Hodgenville.

Jefferson Davis Purcell. In compiling this volume of representative citizens of Kentucky occasion has been afforded to give the records of men in many walks of life, and at this juncture we are permitted to offer a resume of the career of one of the leading business men of Lexington, where he has been engaged for a number of years and where he has attained a high degree of success in his chosen field of labor and enterprise.

Jefferson Davis Purcell was born in Denver, Colorado, on the 21st day of October, 1860, and is a son of Volney and Sarah (Fenton) Purcell. His father was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, in 1824, and died in 1905, and his mother was born in Mason County, Kentucky, and died in 1887. Of their five children three are living, and the subject of this sketch is the next to the oldest of the family. Volney Purcell was engaged in the mercantile business in Blumont, Virginia, for some time, later engaging in farming in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, until his retirement from active business, when he moved to Washington, District of Columbia, and spent his last days there. He was a democrat in his political views and was a man of fine qualities of head and heart.

Jefferson D. Purcell received his education in the common schools of Loudoun and Clark counties, Virginia, and then became associated with his father in the mercantile business. Later he engaged in business for himself at Petersburg, Virginia, where he remained until 1887, when he came to Lexington and opened a dry goods store, which he has operated to the present time. He has by a policy of square dealing and the best of service always enjoyed his full share of the public patronage and is numbered among the leading business men of his city. Politically he is a democrat and takes a keen interest in public affairs, especially as relating to the community in which he lives. He is intensely public spirited and gives his unreserved support to every movement which has for its object the betterment of the community in any way.

In 1887 Mr. Purcell was married to Ida C. Plummer, who is a native of Petersburg, Virginia, Virginia, a daughter of William and Rebecca (Purnell) Plummer. Her parents were natives, respectively, of Virginia and North Carolina. Her father is deceased but her mother is living in Petersburg, Virginia. Of their six children Mrs. Purcell is the oldest. Mr. Plummer was engaged in the wholesale and retail hardware business. To Mr. and Mrs. Purcell have been born three children, namely: Pauline; William Plummer, who married Margaret McCrystal, and they have two children, Margaret and Jane; and Mazie became the wife of Stanhope Wiedeman, and they have three children, Naomi, Stanhope and Mary. Mr. Purcell enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout Fayette County and an enviable standing in the community. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability enter very largely into his make-up, and have been contributing elements to the material success which has come to him.

Henry Ernest Curtis has for thirty years been identified with the agricultural department of the State University, is a well-known scientist, and as chief chemist and in charge of the fertilizer department at the state's experiment station his official duties have made him known to practically every progressive farmer in Kentucky.

Mr. Curtis was born on his father's farm in Woodford County, Kentucky, August 30, 1869, a son of John James and Sarah Malinda (Spurr) Curtis. His father was born in Mason County, Kentucky, and died in 1917, at the age of seventy-three, and his mother was born in Fayette County and died in 1898, aged fifty-five. John James Curtis gave his life largely to farming, but became widely known as a breeder of trotting horses. He was a life-long Baptist and in politics a democrat. He and his wife had nine children, and all of them are still living: Susan, widow of John H. Wilson; Henry Ernest; Richard, who married Allene Elkin; Carlton, who married Loretto Reily; Clintie, wife of James Kirk; Corinne, wife of Dr. Tasker P. Polk; Raymer, who married Mamie Cosby; Martha Ray; and John J., Jr., who married Mae Peak.

Henry E. Curtis grew up on a farm, attended local and district schools, and in 1888 graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science and in 1891 received the degree of Master of Science from Kentucky University. His first service to agricultural education in the state was as second assistant chemist at the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station. Later he was made assistant chemist, and still later chemist in charge, and in that capacity is still a factor in the agricultural education of the state. He is a member of the American Chemical Society, the Kentucky Academy of Science, and is also well known socially in Lexington. He belongs to the Baptist Church, votes as a democrat, and is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Order of Elks.

On April 28, 1891, he married Jennie Morton, who was born in Lexington, a daughter of Jonathan B. and Sarah (Embry) Morton. Her father died at the age of seventy-four and her mother at sixty-three. Her father was a druggist and proprietor of a drug store for many years in Lexington. Mrs. Curtis was the fourth of the five children of her parents.

The Browning Brothers, who maintain a partnership alliance in their well directed operations as agriculturists and stock-growers in Jessamine County, are representatives of a family whose name has been identified with Kentucky history for four generations, their great-grandfather on the paternal side having been numbered among the early settlers in Mason County, where he owned and operated a pioneer grist mill that was supplied with primitive water-power facilities. The grandfather, Theodoric Browning, was born and reared in Mason County, where he became a successful farmer, and he continued to reside there until the time of the Civil war. He then sold his property and removed to Batavia, Clermont County, Ohio, where he passed the remainder of his life. He married Miss Fanny Parry, and she died in Maysville, Mason County, Kentucky. Prior to his removal to the Buckeye state he had been for a term of years engaged in the general merchandise business in his native county. Thomas Browning, father of John W. and Kenaz A. Browning of this review, was born and reared in Mason County and there became a prosperous representative of farm industry, with which he continued his associtaion until his death, at the age of eighty years. His wife, whose maiden name was Peresha Walton, was a daughter of Watkins Walton, and the latter's father, Simeon Walton, was an early settler and prominent citizen of Mason County. Mr. and Mrs. Browning were earnest members of the Baptist Church and Mrs. Browning was about seventy-five years of age at the time of her death.

Natives of Mason County, John Walton Browning was born June 23, 1860, and Kenaz A. Browning on the 16th of July, 1864. The brothers were afforded the advantages of the schools of their native county and one of their schoolmates was Judge Charles Kerr, who became an influential and honored citizen of Fayette County, and about the year 1880 the brothers settled not far distant from the Fayette County home of Judge Kerr. They later passed twelve years in Bourbon County and eight years in Simpson County, in the southern part of the state. In 1911 the family home was established in Jessamine County, and it was on the present farm of his two sons that Thomas Browning passed the closing days of his long and useful life, he having attained to the venerable age of eighty years. His wife died at the time when the family home was in Bourbon County. Of the children John Walton is the eldest; J. Wood, the second son, now resides in the City of Lexington but still continues his service as an elder of the Bethany Christian Church in Jessamine County, his former home; Kenaz A. is the next younger son; and the only daughter, Lena, is the wife of Henry Heard, who likewise is a representative farmer of Jessamine County.

In their progressive activities as agriculturists and stock-growers John W. and Kenaz A. Browning have been associated in an effective fraternal partnership since 1913, the elder of the two brothers having located on the farm in 1911. This place is situated on the Brannon and Hickman Turnpike, eight miles south of Lexington, and is one of the old and valuable places of Jessamine County. The area of the farm is now 111 acres, and the place is better known as the old homestead of Leonard Cassell, representatives of the Cassell family having become the original owners of the property in the early pioneer days. The portion of the Cassell estate now owned by the Browning brothers includes the substantial old house which was erected about a century ago and which is in an excellent state of preservation. The brothers are successful exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry, and in addition to growing excellent crops of tobacco on their farm they are stockholders in the Fayette Tobacco Warehouse at Lexington. Though never animated by any political ambition they have held to the ancestral faith and are staunch supporters of the principles of the democratic party. Both are members of the Christian Church, known as the Providence Church, not far distant from their home, and it may be noted in this connection that their maternal grandparents were early members of this church in Kentucky. John W. Browning is a bachelor. Kenaz A. is married but they have no children.

William Marrs, whose fine old homestead farm in Jessamine County is situated eight miles south of the City of Lexington, is one of the venerable native sons of this county and is not only a representative of an old and honored Kentucky family but also a scion of distinguished Scotch ancestry. In Scotland three brothers, descendants of the Earl of Marr, were born and reared, and prior to the war of the American Revolution one of these brothers came to this country. He gallantly espoused the cause of the colonies in the great struggle for independence, and as a disguise of the family name in the event of his being captured he added a final "s" to his surname. The family estate in England and Scotland is one of vast order, but American representatives of the family have made no specific claims to the same. It is from this Revolutionary ancestor that the representative of the Marrs family in Kentucky are descended.

James Marrs, grandfather of the subject of this review, became a resident of Jessamine County, Kentucky, as did also his cousin, Jane Marrs, who became the wife of Thomas Caravens. Jane was a resident of Henry County at the time of her death. One of the brothers of James Marrs became editor and publisher of the Danville Advocate and was one of the influential citizens of Boyle County at the time of his death. James Marrs married Mary Foley, a sister of the late William Foley, of whom more specific mention is made in the personal sketch of his grandsons, Jacob S. and Sanford Foley, on other pages of this work. The old homestead farm of James Marrs is situated on the Walls Branch Turnpike, one mile west of the Nicholasville Turnpike, and the property is now owned by Oliver Troutman. On this farm James Marrs erected the substantial old house that is still on the property and which has withstood the ravages of about 100 years. On this farm James Marrs remained until his death and his wife survived him by many years, she having been of venerable age at the time of her death. Both were zealous members of the Baptist Church at Providence and when the same was changed to a church of the Christian denomination he and his wife transferred their membership to the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church. They became the parents of five sons and seven daughters: Polly died in young womanhood, as did also Sinnea; Betsy died in infancy; Richard was a resident of Lexington at the time of his death, when upward of seventy years of age; Samuel likewise attained venerable age and was a resident of Lexington at the time of his death; James, father of the subject of this review, was the next younger son; William, who died in 1852, left two children, Mrs. Mary McClellan, who accompanied her husband to Porto Rico, where they established their home, and William, who became a resident of Denver, Colorado; John had three sons by his second marriage, Theodore, now a resident of Washington, District of Columbia, and two other sons who are deceased, besides which there were three daughters and John Marrs was a resident of Lexington at the time of his death; Eliza, Peggy and Nancy all lived to old age and their remains rest beside those of their parents in the old family burial plot on the home farm.

James Marrs was reared to manhood on the home farm and was afforded the advantages of the common schools of the locality and period. As a young man he married Miss Lucinda Foley, a daughter of William Foley, previously mentioned, and thus his first cousin. James Marrs established his home on the farm now owned by Russel Johnson in the year 1849, and the place is of historic interest as having been the site of the old-time Forest Hill Academy, conducted by a man named Wilson. This school was an excellently conducted institution and had as students representatives of many leading families, including sons of Henry Clay and of Gen. Sam Houston of Texas. The ancient schoolhouse, now used as a stable, remains on the farm of Russel Johnson, and on its door are still visible the carved names of students in the days long past, the building having been near the residence of Mr. Wilson, whose former house is now owned by Russel Johnson. On this fine old farm James Marrs continued to reside until his death in 1887, at the age of seventy-two years, his birth having occurred in 1815. His widow survived him by several years. Mr. Marrs was an old-line whig and was a great admirer of Henry Clay, it having been a matter of pride to him that he voted for this distinguished Kentuckian in his original campaign for Congress. He and his wife were earnest members and liberal supporters of the old Republican Christian Church. They became the parents of two sons and two daughters. Martha became the wife of James Smith and both are now deceased, their children having been five in number—James, Benjamin, William, Henry and Mary. Annie married Robert Smith, a brother of James above mentioned, and she still resides in Jessamine County, the mother of six children—Charles, Elmer, Lucien, Robert, Arthur and Florence. George, the younger of the sons, died at the age of twenty years, and the older son is William, to whom this sketch is dedicated.

William Marrs was born July 22, 1841, and he passed the period of his childhood and youth on the old home farm, the while he duly profited by the advantages offered in the common schools of the locality. He early engaged in independent activities as a farmer and huckster, and for twenty-five years he conducted a small general store. In 1876 he established his residence upon his present farm, and here his attention has been given largely to the raising of fruit and to market gardening, in both of which enterprises he has been notably successful. Though now venerable in years, his mental and physical powers are those of a man many years his junior, and he enjoys his continued association with the practical activities of life, besides retaining a vital interest in community affairs and in the questions and issues of the hour. Among his treasured possessions is the old rifle which he used effectively in hunting squirrels and other game in his youth. In 1870 Mr. Marrs was elected county assessor, and of this office he continued the efficient incumbent four years. His labors in this office were of important order, as the assessed valuation of the county at the time was about $4,000,- 000. He has been vigorous and progressive as a citizen and was a stockholder in corporations that developed some of the excellent turnpike roads of this section.

In the career of Mr. Marrs there has been no dearth of interesting incidents, and he reverts with special satisfaction to the fact that he attended the funeral of the great statesman, Henry Clay, where the high honors paid to the deceased Kentuckian constituted an impressive event. He was present also at the laying of the cornerstone of the Henry Clay monument in the City of Lexington. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Marrs became active members of the Providence Christian Church, and here he has heard such distinguished clergymen of this denomination as Alexander Campbell, John Smith and Benjamin Franklin. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he has given yeoman service in behalf of its cause.

The year 1870 recorded the marriage of Mr. Marrs to Miss Amanda Hamon, who was at that time a resident of Scott County but whose parents, Eliud and Catherine Harbaugh Hamon, had formerly been residents of Jessamine County, where she was born. The supreme loss and bereavement in the life of Mr. Marrs came when the devoted wife and mother was summoned to eternal rest in 1887, after an ideal marital companionship of seventeen years, she having been three years his junior and thus having been forty-four years of age at the time of her death. She was survived by nine children, the eldest having been fifteen and the youngest three years of age at the time. Of the children all are living except one. Mr. Marrs kept his children at the home, cared for them with utmost solicitude and gave them good educational advantages. He was called upon also to give filial care to his loved mother, who was an invalid during the last five years of her life, and he girded himself staunchly for all these responsibilities, as well as that of completing payments on his farm. Of the children the eldest is George, who is engaged in the insurance and real-estate business in the City of Lexington and who is the owner of valuable realty in this section of his native state. Lulu is the wife of Edward H. West, and they reside on a farm near that of her father. Lida is the wife of James L. Garnett, of Scott County. Charles is a prosperous farmer in Fayette County. Mattie is the wife of A. L. Brumfield, and their farm is in Fayette County near Lexington. James, who remains with his father and has active charge of the farm, was here born on the 27th of February, 1880, and he was given the advantages of the public schools. He was for nearly fourteen years engaged in business at Portland, Oregon, as a contractor and builder, and since that time has been associated with his father in the operations of the old home farm. On the 28th of February, 1906, he married Miss Emma C. Stark, of Louisville, and they have three children—Alice Lucile, James Jackson and Evelyn Catherine. Foley, the next younger son, is one of the substantial farmers of Bourbon County. Clarence is successfully engaged in farming on a place one-half mile distant from his father's home. William died at the age of six years.

Leonard C. Berry, M. D., resides upon one of the excellent farms of Fayette County, and his attractive rural demesne is a part of the ancestral landed estate that was here accumulated by his paternal grandfather. He is a representative of one of the old and influential families of this section of Kentucky, and though he gained distinction in connection with the educational and general work of his profession while a resident of the City of Louisville, he finally returned to the old home in Fayette County, principally on account of the somewhat impaired health of his wife, and here he has found an excellent field for the successful practice of his profession, as well as a home of idyllic order and most gracious social environment.

William, Newton, Nathaniel and John Berry, brothers, came to Kentucky from their native state, and of these Nathaniel was the grandfather of Dr. Berry of this review. Of this generation of the family further data will be found in other personal sketches appearing in this publication. Nathaniel Berry married Miss Lucy Farra, daughter of Aaron Farra, of Jessamine County, and he became the owner of a fine landed estate of 1,800 acres in Fayette County, this large property having remained intact until his death. The land extended across both the Tates Creek Turnpike and the Nicholasville Turnpike, and was 1½ miles in length. Nathaniel Berry became one of the leading exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in this section, and was an influential citizen who commanded unqualified popular esteem. On this fine landed estate he continued to reside until his death in 1885, at the age of seventy-five years, and his widow attained to the venerable age of eighty-seven years, her death having occurred in 1905. Of their children only one attained to maturity, Nathaniel, Jr., who was reared on the home farm and who prepared himself for the medical profession by completing a course in the celebrated Bellevue Hospital Medical College in the City of New York. After his marriage, however, he resumed his active alliance with farm enterprise. At the age of twenty-two years he married Miss Nannie Cassell, daughter of Leonard Cassell, a representative farmer in the vicinity of the old Providence Christian Church in Jessamine County. At the time of his marriage his father gave him 800 acres of land on the Nicholasville Turnpike in Fayette County, and he and his young wife established their home in the substantial brick house that had been erected on the property by a former owner, whose name was Lewis, this being one of the oldest of the fine old rural mansions of this locality. On this farm Dr. Nathaniel Berry turned his attention especially to the breeding of Jersey cattle, this enterprise having engaged his attention about the year 1890 and having been successfully continued by him until his death, at which time he had on his farm the largest herd of pure-blood Jersey cattle in the entire state. He bred largely from stock which he imported direct from the Island of Jersey in 1895, and at the time of his death his fine herd comprised about 200 head. In a subsequent sale one cow from this herd brought a price of $2,450,—which represented the maximum record at that time in the state. He had exhibited Jersey cattle at all leading stock fairs and shows in the country, and never failed to secure prizes on his exhibits—and usually the highest awards. He sold from his herd for breeding purposes, and became a leader in the Jersey cattle industry in the United States, while as a man and a citizen he ordered his course upon the highest plane of integrity and honor. His fine stock farm was known as Goldmont Farm, and his herd of Jerseys was known by the same name. In his agricultural and live-stock activities he had utilized the entire landed estate of 1,800 acres that had been owned by his father. Doctor Berry was liberal and progressive in the support of measures and enterprises advanced for the civic and material welfare of his home community, county and state, was a director in the First National Bank of Lexington, and was influential in local affairs, though he had no predilection for political activity or public office. He was but fifty-seven years of age at the time of his death, which occurred on the 30th of March, 1905, and his widow survived him by several years, both having been devout members of the old Providence Christian Church and he having been a leader in the movement that resulted in the remodeling and modernizing of the venerable church edifice. He was affiliated with the democratic party until 1896, when his convictions concerning the free-silver plank and other policies of the party led him to transfer his support to the republican party, in the ranks of which he continued until his death. Of the four children who survive the honored parents the eldest is Henry Skillman Berry, who was graduated in the law department of the University of Virginia and who is now a representative member of the bar of the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, besides which he is attorney for the Federal Reserve Bank in that city. Nathaniel Pettit Berry is engaged in the automobile business in the City of Lexington. Lulu Farra, the only daughter, is the wife of H. E. Hall, and they reside on a part of her father's old homestead farm. Dr. Leonard Cassell Berry, whose name introduces this review, is the youngest of the children.

Doctor Leonard C. Berry was born on the home farm in Fayette County on the 3rd of June, 1874, and after having pursued a higher academic course in the University of Kentucky he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of New York, this being the medical department of Columbia University. In this old and celebrated institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1900. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he was for five years engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Louisville, and during this entire period he also held the chair of bacteriology and clinical pathology in the Kentucky Medical School. He is actively affiliated with the American Medical Association, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the Fayette County Medical Society, and he keeps in close touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science, with the incidental recourse to the best in the standard and periodical literature of his profession.

On the 8th of September, 1904, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Berry to Miss Marie Orendorf, daughter of Dr. Henry and Martha (Ormsby) Orendorf, of Louisville. Dr. Orendorf was engaged in the practice of his profession in Louisville for fifty-five years, and was for many years professor of genito-urinary diseases and skin diseases in the Kentucky School of Medicine, in the ownership of which institution he was associated with Drs. Wathen, Samuels and Coomes. His wife was a daughter of Col. Stephen Ormsby, of Louisville, a man whose name is one of distinction in the military history of this state and of the nation. Dr. Orendorf has recently retired from the work of his profession, and he and his wife now reside in the home of their daughter, the wife of Doctor Berry of this review.

Shortly after his marriage Doctor Berry returned to the old homestead in Fayette County, and here he resides in the old home of his parents, the same being equipped with electric lights and other modern improvements. On his farm of 140 acres he continues to breed and raise the same fine strain of Jersey cattle introduced by his father, and in the agricultural department of the farm special attention is given to the raising of high-grade burley tobacco. While maintaining a general supervision of the farm, Doctor Berry continues in the active practice of his profession, with secure standing as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county. Dr. and Mrs. Berry have one son, Jack Berry, who is a member of the class of 1922 in St. Mary's Academy in Marion County.

Roger H. Smith. The history of the career of Roger H. Smith has all the elements of the biography of a self-made man, including the familiar rural boyhood surroundings, clerkship in a big city, and gradual rise to independence and affluence. At present he is senior member of the Smith-Watkins Company of Lexington, dealer in hardware and implements, and is numbered among the substantial and progressive men of his community.

Mr. Smith was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, Kentucky, November 2, 1864, a son of John and Winifred Augusta (Nichols) Smith, natives of Kentucky. The former, who was born in 1815, died in 1886, and the latter was born in 1834 and died in 1917. They were the parents of eight children, of whom six are living, Roger H. being the fifth in order of birth. John Smith passed his life in Clark and Fayette counties as a farmer and breeder of fine horses, in addition to which he raised standard cattle, and was a man looked up to in his community. He was a member of the Christian Church, and his political faith was that of the democratic party.

Roger H. Smith was educated in the public schools and resided on the home farm until he reached the age of twenty-eight years, at that time going to Lexington, where he secured employment as a clerk in a hardware store. Three years later he was made superintendent of the Lexington Street Car Line when the change was made from horse-car service to electrically driven cars, and held this position for three years. He next bought an interest in the business formerly known as DeLong & Company, hardware and implements, and at that time was formed the firm of Reneck, Smith & Watkins, which subsequently became the Smith-Watkins-Darnaby Company. In 1917 this was changed to the Smith-Watkins Company, its present style. It has become one of the leaders in its line in the city, and Mr. Smith's connection therewith has brought him into prominence in business circles generally and more particularly in the hardware and implement trade. While his interests have been large and important, necessitating close application, he has found the time and inclination to be of service to his city in public capacities. On September 1, 1893, he was elected on the fusion ticket as city alderman, serving one term, during which he took an active part in street improvement and in changing the fire department from horse-drawn apparatus to engines and trucks driven by motors. He is an active and valued member of the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce, holds membership in the Broadway Christian Church, and in politics is a democrat.

Mr. Smith married Katherine Long, who was born in Scott County, Kentucky, a daughter of Gabriel and Lizzie (Davis) Long, both deceased, who were natives of Kentucky and farming people in Scott County. Mr. Long was a democrat, and he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. They had five children, Mrs. Smith being the fourth in order of birth.

Mrs. Elizabeth McDaniel Kane since the death of her husband, Edward Kane, has had in association with her youthful son Alfred the active management of the world's greatest farm for growing thoroughbred colts, "The Nursery Stud," owned by Maj. August Belmont. While Lexington has long been the center for the breeding of thoroughbreds, probably no one farm has contributed more to that fame than "The Nursery Stud," which has an international reputation wherever good horses are known. This farm is four miles north of Lexington on the Georgetown Pike.

The late Edward Kane was a great horseman who enjoyed the complete confidence of the Belmonts, father and son, for over forty-one years. He was born in New York City February 18, 1857, and died May 27, 1916. His brother William Kane for many years was an official of the Jockey Club of New York. Edward Kane began his career under the old jockey William Hayward, and entered the employ of August Belmont, Sr., at Babylon, New York. He had charge of nearly all the famous horses owned by the Belmonts. One of these was St. Blaise, imported from England, and for several years the chief stallion at "The Nursery Stud." After the death of the elder Belmont this stallion was sold at Tattersall's in New York in 1891 for $100,000, but subsequently August Belmont, Jr., bought the horse back and allowed him to die at the nursery at the age of twenty-three. His hide was made into a robe still prized at the nursery. Mr. Kane became manager of the Kentucky farm and stables under the younger Belmont, and continued that responsibility until his death, when he was succeeded by Mrs. Kane.

Edward Kane was survived by three brothers, Thomas, of New York City, John, of Jersey City, and James, of Mount Vernon, and two sisters, Mrs. William H. Martin, of Denver, and Mrs. Helen Driscoll, of Brooklyn. His own family included Mrs. Elizabeth Kane, two daughters, Frances and Mrs. Charles W. Wolverton, and two sons, Kenneth and Alfred.

On September 10, 1889, Mr. Kane married Miss Elizabeth McDaniel, who was then eighteen years of age. Mrs. Kane is a daughter of S. E. and Jemima (McAfee) McDaniel. Her father was born in Missouri, a son of Rev. Ben McDaniel, a native of the same state where his parents were pioneer settlers. Rev. Ben McDaniel was a Methodist minister and when his son S. E. was a child he moved to Kentucky and made his home in Harrison County. S. E. McDaniel was a farmer and for forty-one years was superintendent of the Georgetown Pike, but spent his last days in Lexington, where he died at the age of eighty-five. Mrs. Kane's mother died a year before her husband, at the age of eighty-two.

Mrs. Kane has spent all her married life at the Nursery Stud Farm, and enjoys the highest esteem among her old neighbors in that community. Mr. Kane was ill for eighteen months before his death, but always maintained the closest interest in the work of the farm and the stables. Mrs. Kane for many years had interested herself in the details of the management and was therefore well qualified to take the responsibility given her by Major Belmont when her husband died. Nursery Stud has a force of twelve employes, and the present foreman, Joseph Rogers, has been on the farm thirty years, while some of the others have been on the payroll nineteen or twenty years. Her son Alfred even as a child showed an instinctive genius for the work of his father, and was only sixteen when he was put in full charge of the valuable stallions in the stud. At that time Major Belmont said to the young man: "When your father at twenty-seven took charge of my father's stables he thought him too young. I am placing you in the most responsible position any young man has ever held in a horse breeding establishment, but I have watched you from a child and do not believe my confidence in your selection will prove wrong." Major Belmont visits Nursery Stud twice a year, has a fine bungalow on the farm, and takes the keenest interest in this branch of his great estate and business.

Only a few references can be made here to some of the great stallions that have featured the Nursery Stud. One of them was Rocksand, imported from France at a cost of $125,000, and head of the stud for three years. He was the world's best as the sire of brood mares, one of which was Tracery, a great winner in England and sold there for $265,000, and was also sire of Friar Rock, who as a three-year-old sold for $50,000 to John E. Madden; Rocksand was also sire of Trap Rock, a noted winner for Belmont, and of Mahubah, the dam of Man of War. Prior to Rocksand was Hastings, American bred sire of Fair Play, sire of Man of War. Hastings was in Nursery Stud eighteen years, until he died, and was the sire of many noted stallions. Fair Play is still standing and $160,000 has been refused for him. Man of War bred here and sold as a yearling, was sacrificed by Mr. Belmont on account of his service in France. He had selected Man of War as a colt to be kept, but with him and his two sons in the service he decided to let him go. Another great horse in Nursery Stud is Hourless, whose dam was sent to France to be bred. The sum of $100,000 was refused for Hourless as a three-year-old. Hourless beat Omar K for a $10,000 purse which Major Belmont donated to the Red Cross.

On the average about thirty colts are produced annually at Nursery Stud, and all are sent to New York for training. The farm itself comprises 400 acres of blue grass sod and soil. The land was bought in 1887 by August Belmont, Sr., who was the first eastern capitalist to invest in a Kentucky farm for horses. For over thirty years it has been completely devoted to the breeding of thoroughbreds. Mr. Belmont erected about thirty-five stables for the accommodation of 150 horses, and in recent years about 120 horses, young and old, have been in the stables.

James A. Hulett. One of the fine specimens of the old-time colonial houses that lend stately beauty to the landscape of Fayette County is the rural home of James Allen Hulett, who is here the owner of the Waveland Stock Farm, six miles south of the City of Lexington. The house on this farm is a commodious structure of brick, with the facade adorned by classical Doric pillars extending to the height of the second story, and with rooms whose spaciousness and high ceilings could not but cause envy in the mind of an observer whose habitation is a modern city flat or apartment of crimped concentration. The interior finishing is of the finest hardwood, and the grounds about the gracious mansion are beautified by a number of sturdy pine trees, as old as the house itself. It is much to have habitation in such a dwelling, and it is much also to be numbered among the substantial and successful exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in so favored a section as Fayette County,—and these privileges and honors pertain to him whose name introduces this paragraph.

On a farm near Bethany Church in Jessamine County, Kentucky, James Allen Hulett was born November 1, 1858, and he is a son of Edmund and Eliza (Burch) Hulett, the former of whom was born at Lexington, Fayette County, July 16, 1828, and the latter of whom was born near Union Mills, Jessamine County, June 2, 1835, a daughter of Dr. James J. Burch, whose home was in the northern part of that county. Doctor Burch having been born in Virginia and having been a child when he was brought by his parents from Jamestown, that state, to Kentucky, his means of transportation having been a pack-saddle on one of the horses which his father brought to the new home. The doctor's father owned and extended urbane hospitality in an old-time tavern or inn at Nicholasville, the judicial center of Jessamine County, where the son was reared to manhood. Doctor Burch became one of the leading physicians and surgeons of that county, and his practice extended also into the southern part of the Fayette County. He continued his residence in Jessamine County until his death, May 12, 1898, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years, and his remains rest in the cemetery of Nicholasville. He married Mary B. Robinson, daughter of John and Fanny Robinson, whose marriage was solemnized near Chilesburg, Fayette County, on the 23d of June, 1802. John Robinson was born May 8, 1779, and he died September 11, 1862; his wife was born September 4, 1784, and her death occurred September 15, 1859. Mrs. Mary B. (Robinson) Burch survived her husband by about two years and entered into eternal rest on the 7th of April, 1900.

Edmund Hulett passed the closing years of his life in the home of his only child, James A., of this sketch, and here the venerable mother still resides, secure in the affectionate regard of all who know her.

Edmund Hulett likewise was an only child. He was graduated in Bethany College in the State of Virginia, at the time when Rev. Alexander Campbell was at the head of that institution, this able man having been the founder of the Christian or Disciples Church. Mr. Hulett taught school in Jessamine County when a young man, but the major part of his active career was marked by his association with farm enterprise. He served as treasurer and also as a deacon of the Christian Church at Providence, the original church edifice having been erected in 1817 and the present building having been completed in 1914. His son, James A., succeeded him and still serves as treasurer and a deacon of this church, even as Edmund had been the successor of his father in the office of treasurer, so that the family name has been prominently identified with the history of this religious organization for three generations. Edmund Hulett was the only child of Allen and Emily (Peyton) Hulett, who were married in Jessamine County and who there remained until their deaths. Allen Hulett was born in that county April 7, 1807, and his death occurred May 12, 1895. His wife was born February 5, 1809, and her death occurred December 24, 1879. He was a tailor by trade but resided on and had supervision of his farm, of which his only son later became the owner.

James A. Hulett was reared to manhood on the old family homestead mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, and his early education was obtained in the schools of his native county. After his marriage in 1881 he established his residence on a farm near Nicholasville, Jessamine County, and there he remained until 1894. He then purchased and removed to his present fine farm estate in Fayette County, formerly owned by Joseph Bryan, who erected the substantial house on the place in the year 1847, so that the old mansion is a landmark, even as it is one of the most attractive houses in this section of the county. To the original purchase of 302 acres Mr. Hulett has added until he now has 344 acres, besides which he has utilized additional land in his vigorous and successful operations as an agriculturist and stock-grower. Waveland Stock Farm is specially well known as the breeding place of the best type of trotting horses of pedigreed stock. In the agricultural department Mr. Hulett has given attention to the raising of tobacco of fine grade, and he is vice president of the Fayette Warehouse Company at Lexington, which handles much of the tobacco grown in this section.

He has been loyal and liberal in his civic attitude, and while he has never desired public office he served a number of years as tax commissioner. He and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church, as was also his first wife, and, as previously noted, he is serving as deacon and treasurer of the same.

February 21, 1881, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hulett to Miss Lizzie Carlisle, of Jessamine County, her father having been a cousin of Hon. John G. Carlisle, United States senator from Kentucky. Mrs. Hulett was summoned to the life eternal on the 30th of March, 1901, and is survived by three children: Sally C., the wife of D. D. Slade, of Lexington, who formerly was a member of the faculty of Kentucky University at Lexington; Carlisle is a prosperous farmer in Jessamine County, the maiden name of his wife having been Hallie Dean; and Eliza is the wife of F. B. Wood, assistant cashier of the Security Trust Company at Lexington.

On the 7th of April, 1904, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hulett to Miss Bessie Rowland, daughter of John and Martha (Hawkins) Rowland, of Jessamine County, and the two children of this union are James Allen, Jr., and Elizabeth, the former being, in 1920, a student in the high school at Lexington, and the latter is attending preparatory school for Hamilton College.

Blastock Brothers, Robert S. and Alfred H. Blastock, proprietors of the Walnut Hall Farm on the Versailles Pike, eight miles west of Lexington, are undoubtedly America's foremost authorities as importers, breeders and growers of Hampshire sheep, the great mutton breed. Their work has been appreciated in national and international circles, and has been regularly commented upon by the livestock publications. The purpose of the present article in the History of Kentucky is to give a brief outline of their achievements largely as they relate to Kentucky.

Both are natives of Leicester, England, were educated in Queen Elizabeth's grammar school of Leicester, and from boyhood grew up in practical contact with the sheep industry. Robert spent 2½ years in New Zealand as a flock master and a year in Canada. He first came to the United States in 1906, and in the State of Iowa had some further experience prior to his accepting the post of flock master for Abe Renick in Clark County, Kentucky. Abe Renick is a grandnephew of the senior Abe Renick, the celebrated Shorthorn breeder of Kentucky. In 1908 Robert Blastock went with the Walnut Hall Stock Farm, six miles northeast of Lexington, one of the largest stock farms in Central Kentucky, then owned by L. V. Harkness, a prominent Standard Oil official. Mr. Blastock became manager of the flock of thoroughbred Hampshire sheep at Walnut Hall. His brother Alfred left England and came to Canada in 1908, and in 1909 joined his brother on the Walnut Hall Stock Farm.

Some of their greatest work was done while with the Walnut Hall place. There they built up the largest flock of pure bred Hampshire sheep either in North or South America. At one time the flock numbered 2,000 head. In 1912 Alfred Blastock became manager of the sheep interests on the Virginia estate of Thomas F. Ryan, the New York capitalist, and a warm friendship grew up and was maintained between Mr. Blastock and the New Yorker. He remained 3½ years, until the disbursal of the Ryan live-stock interests. He next became manager of the largest pedigreed sheep flock in the world, consisting of 8,000 registered animals, owned by the firm Miller & Lux in California. In 1918 he returned and succeeded his brother Robert as manager of Walnut Hall during the latter's absence abroad, Robert having remained in charge of that farm until 1918. In 1917 Robert Blastock had bought a breeding farm at Fila, Idaho, and placed upon it an imported flock of Hampshires. He went to the Northwest to take personal charge of that farm in 1918, leaving Alfred at the Harkness farm.

In 1919 the Blastock Brothers established the Walnut Hall Farm, their individual enterprise, at the point above noted. Their aim throughout has been to improve America's mutton breeds and introduce and extend the Hampshires, probably the greatest example of mutton sheep. The first great importation of these sheep was made in 1909 by Robert, who in the interests of the Walnut Hall Farm brought over 662 head from England. That was the largest individual importation made up to that date. Every year these importations were supplemented until 1919, Robert making repeated trips to England, where he selected breeding stock to satisfy his exacting taste. His brother Alfred was called upon to serve 1½ years during the war and was then discharged on account of his interests as a stock breeder.

In 1916, at Salt Lake City, Robert Blastock sold a ram for $1,600, that being the record price ever paid up to that time for a mutton type ram. The following year he sold another imported ram for $1,700. The Blastock Brothers have sold and distributed Hampshires to every state in the Union, Canada, South America and Cuba, and for years have been exhibitors at all the leading state fairs, and in almost every instance since 1910 their exhibits have been awarded first and second prizes. Every animal of the Hampshire breed for the past three years shown at the International Stock Show in Chicago has won first and championship premiums, and all these are part of the importations of Robert Blastock. Both brothers have served as judges at the International.

The Idaho ranch at Fila is still maintained for the purpose of a distributing center for western sheep states, while the Walnut Hall Farm is headquarters for the East. Due to their influence and energies the Kentucky sheep industry is now practically seven-eighths Hampshire, and nearly every farmer has a little flock producing mutton with wool as a side line. The Blastocks have extended sheep growing into the mountainous districts of Eastern Kentucky, and altogether their efforts have proved of incalculable value to the farming prosperity of the state. Annually they hold sheep sales at Lexington, Kentucky and Columbia, Tennessee, under the auspices of the Kentucky Pure Bred Livestock Association and the Kentucky Sheep Breeders Association. Robert Blastock was for many years president of that association, and for the past four years has been president of the American Hampshire Association, while Alfred Blastock is vice president of the Kentucky Sheep Breeders Association. Both are members of the National Wool Growers Association and directors of the Kentucky Pure Bred Association. Alfred is an advisory member of the committee of the State Wool Pool, Kentucky having been the first state in the Union to organize such a pool in 1920. It was representative of the sheep growers under the leadership of Blastock Brothers who were chiefly influential in securing the enactment of legislature to prevent the ravages of dogs. No eastern state is more ideal for sheep raising than Kentucky, and the state boasts more pedigreed Hampshire registered flocks than any other commonwealth east of the Mississippi River.

William Strange is a Kentuckian whose life has been one long devotion to the interests of farming, home and family. He laid the foundation of his success as a renter, and was quite well advanced in years before he was satisfied to invest his capital in land of his own. He is now retired and lives seven miles west of Lexington, on the Versailles Pike, at the old community of Fort Spring. Fort Spring now contains merely two stores and a blacksmith shop, and the remains of the old mill, once a prominent institution of that section, are still visible.

Mr. Strange was born on Mundy's Pike in Clover Bottom of Woodford County, July 25, 1848. The family were pioneers in the Clover Bottom community. His parents were John and Elizabeth (Smith) Strange, the former born in the same vicinity in 1826. The grandparents were Billie and Lucy (Kendrick) Strange, the former also a native Kentuckian, son of a pioneer said to have been a Revolutionary soldier, who came to Kentucky from Virginia. Billie Strange lived all his life in his native community, and was not an old man when he died, his wife, Lucy, surviving him to the age of eighty. The Strange family still maintain an interest in the old Clover Bottom Christian Church, and were organizers of that society. John Strange lived all his life there as a farmer, and died when about fifty-nine. His wife, Elizabeth Smith, was a daughter of Richard Smith, and survived her husband about ten years. Of their ten children five are still living: David is on the old homestead in Clover Bottom, Lucy is the wife of Allen Jeff, near Pinkard, Miss Margaret lives at Lexington, the next in age is William and Mary Ellen is the wife of Will Chapman. Robert was a farmer at Clover Bottom and died in 1888. George died September 11, 1920, at the age of sixty-two, at his farm home at Midway, where his widow and three daughters still remain.

William Strange was reared and acquired his early advantages in his native community. At the age of twenty he married Zerelda Smith, aged sixteen, a second cousin of his own mother and daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Veach) Smith. Mr. Strange at the time of his marriage hired out to work for Harvey Hieatt, and remained in his employ for six years, at wages of $30 a month and board. After that he rented the Hieatt farm two years, and since then has lived in the Fort Spring community of Fayette County. He was a renter here for twenty-four years, being on the Davis farm eight years, and fifteen years on the farm of Mrs. Pattie Parker. The Parker farm contained 300 acres. During his tenancy Mr. Strange paid Mrs. Parker over $20,000 in rent, and he has estimated that the total he paid in rent money during the years of his experience amounted to fully $45,000, which is some measure and index of his earning capacity as a farm manager.

Several years ago when he left off renting Mr. Strange bought the old Berry farm of 110 acres. He paid $88 an acre for this, and still owns it. He built a good frame house at Fort Spring, on the Pinkard Pike. His farm is now regarded as one of the most valuable in that section of Fayette County, and he has refused $550 an acre for it. For the past ten years he has not lived on his own farm but at the home of his daughter, who owns the Rice farm of 100 acres. Eighty acres of the Rice farm was acquired in 1910 at $140 an acre, while the remaining twenty was bought in 1919 at a cost of $400 an acre.

Mr. Strange is a man of pleasant manners, interested in his community, and its welfare, but has never sought the diversions of politics and has always been too busy to take part in any of the outdoor sports. He recalls only one fishing experience in his entire life. That was when he was ten years of age, when he accompanied his father and several others to a fishing haunt. One of the fishermen laid down his pole to light his pipe, and the boy William picked it up and within a minute had caught a fine fish and caught several more in quick succession. None of the other members of the party had any luck whatever, and the owner of the pole claimed the fish caught by young William, and that perhaps was one reason why fishing never appealed to him. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Farmers Union, and the Pisgah Presbyterian Church. As a farmer he has made his success by diversified production of wheat, corn and particularly hemp, and always kept some cattle, sheep and hogs.

Mr. Strange lost his good wife in 1913, after they had been married forty-five years. He has two daughters. Elizabeth is the widow of I. T. Bridges, who died in 1912. Her two children are Anna May, Mrs. R. A. Scherer, of Lexington, and Clifford, a schoolboy. The other daughter, Anna, is the wife of F. M. Murray, operating Mr. Strange's 110 acre farm.

George Percy Sprague, M. D. A resident of Lexington over twenty years, Doctor Sprague is owner and superintendent of the High Oak Sanitarium in that city.

He was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 28, 1863, son of George Sidney and Lucretia (Worcester) Sprague. His father was born at Littleton, Massachusetts, March 15, 1838, and his mother at Woodbury, New Jersey, May 22, 1842. They now live with their son Doctor Sprague at Lexington. The father was a farmer during his active years, and is a republican in politics. Of their six children the oldest was Stella R., who died at Philadelphia aged thirty-four, wife of Sherman Vanaman. Dr. George P. is the second in age, and the next two children died in infancy. Frances A. D. is the wife of Philip Stocke and Frank Howard married Blanche Barr and has four children.

George Percy Sprague was educated in the Philadelphia public schools, and in 1890 graduated from Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia. He did postgraduate work in the New York Psychological Institute. After a few months in general practice in his native city he became assistant physician of the Friends Asylum at Philadelphia, remaining there a year and a half, and was then for two years first assistant and manager of the Dr. Henry R. Stedman Private Sanitarium at Boston. For six years he was connected with the State Insane Asylum at Danvers, Massachusetts, beginning as second assistant superintendent and later became acting superintendent.

Doctor Sprague came to Lexington in 1899 and bought and has since developed to a high degree the facilities of the High Oak Sanitarium.

He is a member of the Fayette County Medical Society, Kentucky State Medical Association, Southern Medical Association, the American Medical Association, Mississippi Valley Medical Association and the Medico-Psychological Association. He is a Knight Templar Mason, being affiliated with Webb Commandery No. 2, and in politics is independent. He is a director of the Y. M. C. A. at Lexington and president of the Board of Directors of the Good Samaritan Hospital.

May 9, 1893, Doctor Sprague married Marion B. Stabler, a native of Maryland. They have four children: George S., Marion, Anna and John S. The son George married Susanna Beitz and has a son Sidney. Doctor Sprague traces his ancestral line back to William Sprague of Sussex, England, whose three sons, William, Henry and John, came to America in 1628 and settled at Hingham, Massachusetts.

John Skain. While for many years known to the general public through his good offices as landlord at Lexington, John Skain has also been prominent in that city in a public way and as a stockholder and director in many of the leading business and semi-public undertakings.

Mr. Skain was born in Lexington, September 20, 1868, a son of Martin and Ellen (Lanphear) Skain. His parents were both born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and are now deceased. Martin Skain came to this country by sailing ship when a young man, landed in New York City, and later settled in Fayette County, Kentucky. He was married at Lexington and for many years was engaged in business as a contractor of road building, and later was a grocery merchant. He died in 1871, at the age of forty-eight. He was a member of the Catholic Church. Of four children John was the third in age and the only survivor.

John Skain acquired a good education, attending private schools, the public schools of Fayette County, the Walnut Hill School, St. Mary's College at Lebanon, Kentucky, and also the University of Kentucky. On June 9, 1921, St. Mary's College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. For a time he was clerk in a hotel, and in that capacity acquired a fundamental knowledge of hotel management which eventually brought him more important associations with the business. In 1915 Mr. Skain became a stockholder and the manager of the Phoenix Hotel of Lexington, and was the responsible head of this well known hostelry until 1920, when he sold out and retired from that business. Prior to that time and since he has been engaged in looking after many other property interests and business connections involving the ownership of city and farm lands in Fayette County and Lexington. For ten years he has been a director in the Phoenix Hotel, is a director of the Phoenix and Third National Bank and the Phoenix and Third Trust Company, is a director in the Kentucky Traction Terminal Railway Company, in the People's Building and Loan Association, and is a stockholder in the Lexington Leader. During the past eight or ten years much of his capital and enterprise have been directed to the development of the wonderful mineral resources of Eastern Kentucky, and he is a director in the Kentucky Union Land Company.

In politics he is a sterling democrat and has attended every state convention since 1896. He was a member and chairman of the city committees of the party and was appointed a member of the city council by Mayor Joseph V. Simrall, and later was elected and served four years as president of the City Council. Governor Beckham appointed him a commissioner of the Eastern State Hospital, an office he filled seven years. In 1907 he was elected mayor of Lexington, and held that office with a high degree of credit for one term. Mr. Skain is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks, a member of the Kiwanis Club, Lexington Club, Country Club, and served as president of the Board of Commerce one term. He is a member of Lake Ellerslie Fishing Club and is one of the trustees of St. Peter's Catholic Church of Lexington. On December 17, 1896, Mr. Skain married Nellie Hinks, a native of New Jersey.

Albert Howard is among the favorably known and representative citizens of Kentucky, in which he has spent his life. He has by his indomitable energy and progressive methods contributed in a material way to the advancement of his community, and during the course of an honorable career has met with success as a contractor and builder, being a man of unusual technical ability, sound judgment and honesty of purpose.

Albert Howard was born on his father's farm in Madison County, Kentucky, on January 26, 1864, and is the fourth in order of birth of the eleven children who blessed the union of John P. and Mary J. (Taylor) Howard. Both of these parents were also born and reared in Madison County, and both are now deceased. John P. Howard followed the vocation of farming in his native county, where he was well and favorably known. In politics he was first a whig, but later supported the republican party. He and his wife were earnest members of the Christian Church.

Albert Howard spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, attending the district schools during the winter months, and also was a student in the Kentucky State College. His first money was earned as a farm hand, but later he learned the carpenter trade, at first receiving 50 cents a day and later $1 a day, all of which he turned over to his mother. During these years he was acquiring an intimate knowledge of building methods and in 1890 he began contracting on his own account. He was successful from the beginning, and in 1893 he built the race track for the Grand Island Kentucky Trotting Horse and Breeders Association. By this time he was gaining a wide reputation for the high quality of his work and the honesty of his methods, and during the years following he erected many of the most prominent buildings in the state, including the Fayette County Court House at Lexington; the State Reform School, four buildings; the Agricultural Hall at the State University; the Post Office Building at Maysville, Kentucky; the Young Men's Christian Association Building at Lexington; the Rowan County Court House; the college buildings at London, Kentucky; the Sue Bennett Memorial Building; the S. P. Lees Institute Building at Jackson, Kentucky; the college building at Hazel Green, Kentucky; the college building at Moorhead, Kentucky; the Midway Orphan School at Midway, Kentucky; the Good Samaritan Hospital at Lexington; Pattison Hall at the State University; the Lexington Brewery, and many other public buildings, as well as hundreds of the best residences in the state.

Politically Mr. Howard is a stanch supporter of the republican party, and has taken a commendable interest in public affairs. His only public office was as a member of the Lexington School Board, in which he served one term. Fraternally he is a member of Devotion Lodge No. 160, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he has been secretary for the past ten years; Lexington Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templars; Endre Consistory, Scottish Rite (thirty-second degree) at Covington; joined Korsair Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Louisville, but demitted and is now a member of Oleka Temple at Lexington.

On March 28, 1886, Mr. Howard was married to Alice Havely, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of John and Margaret (Christin) Havely, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Howard have been born three children. Eula is the wife of Prof. Charles E. Hodges, of the American College of Texas, and they have two children, Howard and Dorothy, Minnie is the wife of Prof. E. G. McColskey and the mother of two children, Katherine and Dorothy. Professor McColskey was principal of high schools, but is now editorial manager for the National Fertilizer Company of Baltimore and Chicago. Margaret is at home.

Mr. Howard has been a constant and close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his life work, and he has therefore met with eminent success all along the line, being today numbered among the leading constructors of his section of the country. He is a man who in every respect merits the high esteem in which he is universally held, for he is a man of public spirit, high attainment and excellent character.

Will Ward Duffield, manager of the Kentenia Corporation at Harlan, and a director of the Harlan State Bank, is also interested in a number of other concerns of the city. He was born at Detroit, Michigan, November 12, 1858, a son of Gen. William Ward Duffield, grandson of Rev. George Duffield, and direct descendant of Rev. George Duffield, a Presbyterian divine, who served as chaplain of the Continental Congress, and all through the American Revolution on the staff of Gen. George Washington, with the rank of captain. Through him Will Ward Duffield obtains his membership in the Sons of the American Revolution. Mr. Duffield is a life member of the Society of California Pioneers, being eligible to membership in it because of the fact that his father crossed the plains to California in 1849 as a lieutenant in the United States regular army, in charge of a paymaster's company. Mr. Duffield also maintains membership with Washington Commandery of the Loyal Legion.

The Duffield family is one of the very old ones of this country for its representatives, of Scotch-Irish descent, left Ireland and sought better conditions in the New World, at a very early day, settling in Maryland, and from then on took a prominent part in the history of that colony. Rev. George Duffield, grandfather of Will Ward Duffield, was born in New York State in 1792, and died at Detroit, Michigan, in 1868, his death resulting from a stroke of apoplexy while he was in the pulpit. He was a distinguished clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and a noted writer on Presbyterian theology. After having a pastorate at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, he was called to Detroit, Michigan, and for thirty-one years was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of that city, dying, as before stated, while in the active discharge of his duties. He married Miss Isabella Graham Bethune, a sister of Dr. George Bethune of New York City, one of the most distinguished clergymen of the Presbyterian Church in America. Mrs. Duffield was born in New York City, and died at Detroit, Michigan.

Gen. William Ward Duffield was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, November 19, 1824, and died at Washington, District of Columbia, in June, 1907. His boyhood was spent at Carlisle, and he was graduated from Columbia College, New York City, in 1843, in civil engineering. Love of adventure led him to run away from home and go to sea, and he remained a sailor until the outbreak of the Mexican war, when, leaving his ship at Vera Cruz harbor, he joined General Scott and was made a lieutenant in a Tennessee regiment. After serving all through the war with Mexico, he followed civil engineering and railroad construction, and then, with the outbreak of the war between the North and the South, once more saw an opportunity to serve his country, and was not backward in embracing it. He raised the Third Michigan Volunteer Infantry in 1861, of which he was lieutenant colonel, and later in that same year raised the Ninth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and was its colonel. He participated in the battles of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, where he was wounded, and several other important engagements, and for nine months of the war was military governor of the State of Kentucky, with headquarters at the Louisville Hotel. Following the close of the war he went to Pennsylvania as superintendent of the Schuylkill Collieries, and in this connection had many contests and much trouble with the "Mollie Maguires," and several of his mine superintendents were killed by this lawless element. Through his tact and good management, a better understanding was brought about, and his mines were operated without much opposition.

In 1867 General Duffield came to Kentucky, and took charge of the Belmont & Nelson iron furnace at Belmont, and held that position for several years. He then went to the north of Michigan and established the Leland Iron Furnace Company, and after he had put it on a firm foundation, interested himself in farming for a few years. However he found that he was better suited when following his profession, so returned to it and made the survey for the Kentucky Union Railroad from Lexington to Big Pond Gap, completing the work in 1879, and his successful handling of the problems involved in this contract, led to his being engaged to make important surveys in Bell, Harlan, Letcher, Leslie, Clay and Perry counties, during the decade from 1884 to 1894. In the latter year he was appointed superintendent of the United States coast and geodetic survey, and going to Washington, discharged the duties of this position until William McKinley was first elected, when he resigned, and lived in retirement until his death. General Duffield was a democrat of the old school. He was a Mason. The maiden name of his wife was Louise A. Ladue, and she was born at Troy, New York, in 1837, and died at Harlan, Kentucky, in 1917. General and Mrs. Duffield had two children, namely: Will Ward, who was the elder; and Louise L., who is unmarried, lives with her brother.

Will Ward Duffield attended the public schools of Detroit, but was mainly educated by private tutors and his mother, who was a very talented and accomplished lady. Having been thoroughly prepared, he matriculated at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and completed the sophomore year in 1879, in which year he began working for the Kentucky Union Railroad Company as rodman, under his father who was then its chief engineer. After a year with that road he went to Colorado as United States deputy mineral surveyor, and so served for a year. He then spent two years in Dakota and Montana as United States land surveyor, and was also for a short time with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on the construction of the bridge at Mendon, Montana. In the fall of 1884 he came to Harlan County and followed land surveying until 1895, and then went to Washington, District of Columbia, as assistant to the coast and geodetic survey, and was in charge of the drawing and engraving division. In this connection he surveyed the Priboloff Islands, Behring Sea, for the United States Seal Commission, and also did some surveying in Alaska, during the summer of 1888. Mr. Duffield then returned to Washington, and continued in the same position until 1907 when he resigned and returned to Harlan County, settling at Harlan, where he began the surveying and development of the Kentenia Corporation's holdings, of which he has since been general manager. This corporation owns 50,000 acres of coal and timber lands in Harlan and Bell counties. He has adjusted all the titles, surveyed the land, and begun the development, and has already nine operating leases of coal mines. His offices are in the First State Bank Building. In addition to being general manager, Mr. Duffield is also treasurer, and a stockholder in the corporation. The main parent company has gone out of operation in the State of Kentucky, its holdings being now owned by the Wallin Coal Corporation, the Kentenia-Catron Corporation, and the Kentenia-Puckett Corporation, and Mr. Duffield is treasurer of the Kentenia-Catron Corporation, and also of the old parent company, and is local manager of all three. He is a director and stockholder of the Harlan State Bank, and was a director of the First State Bank of Harlan. He is vice president of the Harlan Fuel Company and also a member of its board of directors. Prominent as a democrat, he has served as a member of the Harlan City Council, and is now a member of the Harlan Board of Education. The Presbyterian Church holds his membership. Very active in Masonry, he belongs to Harlan Lodge No. 879, F. & A. M., of which he is past master and present secretary; and held the former office for two years; Harlan Chapter No. 165, R. A. M., of which he was first high priest, and of which he is now secretary; Duffield Commandery No. 42, K. T., of Harlan, which is named after him because of his interest in it. He is past commander of Pineville Commandery No. 39, K. T. He also belongs to London Council No. 60, R. & S. M.; the Grand Consistory of Louisville, No. 1, in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree; and Kosair Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Louisville, Kentucky, and Harlan Chapter, O. E. S. All of the Masonic bodies at Harlan owe their existence in large part to his interest and energy, for he assisted in organizing them all. He was one of a committee of five of the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., formed to raise $1,000,000 for the Masons to build a new home for widows and orphans of the order. Mr. Duffield belongs to other fraternities and societies, and is a member of the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of the Maccabees, the National Geographical Society, the Washington, District of Columbia Society of Engineers, and the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers of New York City. He was elected on the board of trustees of Centre College, Kentucky, October 8, 1921. This is a great honor conferred on him, as Centre College is one of the leading old Kentucky schools. Boy Scouts were organized at Harlan in June, 1912, and Mr. Duffield was made scout master. This was the first company organized south of the Ohio River, starting with fifty-seven members, and there are now over 100 members. Mr. Duffield was the leading spirit in getting up this organization and has been its master ever since. He devotes his time and money to it.

During the late war Mr. Duffield took an active part in all of the local war work, was chairman of all of the Liberty Bond sales in Bell County, helped in the Red Cross, and all of the other drives. He bought bonds and war savings stamps, and contributed to all of the war organizations to the limit of his means.

YOUNGER ALEXANDER has been distinguished in the citizenship of Kentucky as a builder and operator of railroads, a banker and man of affairs. For many years his home has been in the City of Lexington.

He was born at New Liberty in Owen County, Kentucky, February 10, 1868. His grandparents were John D. and Elizabeth P. (Orr) Alexander, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Culpeper County, Virginia. They were early settlers in Owen County, Kentucky, and the Orr family was one of distinguished lineage in Virginia.

Lewis Alexander, father of the Lexington banker, was born in Owen County, Kentucky, August 29, 1831, and was a twin brother of Phil Alexander. The brothers were very closely associated in their business relations as farmers and tobacco growers of Owen County, and bore a striking personal resemblance. Both were educated in Hanover College in Indiana, and Lewis served three years in the Fourth Kentucky Cavalry in the Confederate army, being wounded at the battle of Mount Sterling June 7, 1864. He married Mrs. Belle (Crutcher) Rice, daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Hill) Crutcher, natives of Sumter County, Kentucky. They became the parents of three children: Younger; Flora B., wife of R. G. Vance, of Waynesboro, Virginia; and Annie L., who died at the age of eighteen. Lewis Alexander, the year following the adoption of the new State Constitution, was elected and served one term in the State Legislature. He was active as a democrat and as a member of the Baptist Church.

Younger Alexander acquired his early education in the State College of Lexington. In 1890 he was elected cashier of the Bracken County Bank at Brookville, Kentucky. In 1898 he built the Brookville Railway from Brooksville to Wellsburg, and served as president of the company. After removing to Lexington Mr. Alexander built the Georgetown & Lexington Traction Railway, subsequently known as the Blue Grass Traction Railway, from Lexington to Paris, and was president of both railway companies. He was elected vice president of the Third National Bank, and when that was merged with the Phoenix Bank as the Phoenix and Third National he was chosen president and wisely guided the affairs of this prosperous institution until he resigned in 1917. In recent years Mr. Alexander has been prominent in the development of the great oil territory in Eastern Kentucky. In 1917 he organized the Woodford Oil and Gas Company, and has been its president. In a public way he served as county treasurer of Bracken County and also of Fayette County. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Lexington Country Club, the Lexington Club, the Baptist Church and politically acts independently.

In October, 1891, Mr. Alexander married Lyda M. Day, who was born at Brookville in Bracken County, a daughter of Hiram and Eliza M. (Smarr) Day. Her parents were also natives of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Day had two children, Louis and Mrs. Alexander. Her father for many years was a merchant at Brooksville. To Mr. and Mrs. Alexander were born three children: Louis, the oldest, is associated with his father in the oil business, and by his marriage with Martha Thompson has two children, Younger and Martha. Gayle Alexander is also interested with his father in the oil industry. The only daughter is Margaret Louise, still in school.

JOSEPH A. GOODSON, M. D. The world has little use for the misanthrope. The universal brotherhood is widely recognized, as is also the truth that he serves God best who most serves his fellow men. There is no profession or line of business which calls for greater self-sacrifice or more devoted attention than the medical profession, and the most successful physician is he who through love of his fellow men gives his time and earnest attention to the relief of human suffering. The successful physician is bound to make friends wherever he is known, and will retain the respect and esteem of all classes.

Joseph A. Goodson was born in Louisville, Kentucky, on the 1st day of December, 1876, and is the son of Jacob P. and Catharine (Morrison) Goodson, the latter of whom was born in Adair County, Kentucky, and died in 1896. Jacob P. Goodson was born in Indiana in 1825, and his death occurred at the age of seventy-four years. When twenty-one years old he enlisted and took part in the war with Mexico. He was a self-educated man, but consecrated his life to the ministry of the Gospel when twenty-three years old, becoming one of the best known ministers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. During all the years of his ministry he was a member of the Louisville Conference, in which he held many of the best appointments, the last one being the Louisville circuit. He was active and successful in building up the congregations over which he was pastor and he erected the first large Methodist Church in Louisville. For many years he served as presiding elder and was numbered among the leading and most influential members of his conference. To him and his wife were born eight children, of whom Joseph A. is the youngest. Four of them are now living, namely: Ida G., the wife of W. L. Reynolds; Edward F., who married Mary Allen, and is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and now pastor of the Temple Church at Louisville, Kentucky; Frances J., the wife of James W. Legg, of Marietta, Georgia; and Joseph A.

Joseph A. Goodson received his early education in the public schools of Louisville, graduating from the high school at Hawesville, Kentucky, and old Rugby School, later known as a training school for boys, under the management of Prof. Henry K. Taylor. Mr. Goodson here won a scholarship at Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee, where he attended for two years, spending his summers in various employments. In 1896 he engaged in the mercantile business in partnership with his brother-in-law, W. L. Reynolds, at Slaughtersville, Kentucky, but in the fall of the following year returned to Vanderbilt University, to complete his medical examination. He was active in athletics and was captain of the football team. He had matriculated in the medical department and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1899, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Goodson then located at Dixon, Kentucky, and engaged in the active practice of his profession up to 1912, meeting with splendid success and gaining a wide reputation as an able and conscientious physician. In 1912 Doctor Goodson was appointed superintendent of the Eastern Kentucky State Hospital for the Insane, and he at once came to Lexington, where he has since remained. In assuming the management of the hospital Doctor Goodson quickly demonstrated that he possessed progressive and well-formulated ideas as to the treatment of the mentally unfortunate, and he quickly put his ideas into practical operation. Among his first acts was the abolishment of all forms of physical restraint, all appliances for that purpose being removed from the hospital. With the viewpoint that the persons in his charge are really sick, he treats them as such, and the wisdom and good results of his method of handling the patients sent to this hospital are apparent to all who have been in touch with the hospital work. An average of 1,400 patients are usually in the Eastern Hospital, and Doctor Goodson has three assistant physicians and ninety-five nurses. In 1914 Doctor Goodson recommended the construction of a building for the accommodation of tuberculosis cases alone, and his suggestion was adopted and the building erected.

Doctor Goodson does not confine his interest and activities entirely to the insane hospital and his profession, but is interested in every phase of community life, contributing to the extent of his ability to the advancement of the general welfare. He is president of the Lexington Rotary Club, and among the successful early efforts carried out under his direction was the recent raising of a fund of $1,250,000, with which it is proposed to erect new school buildings, a new city hall and make extensive street improvements. The doctor is also a member of the Lexington Country Club and the Board of Commerce. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, while politically he is an earnest supporter of the democratic party, having served for five years as a member of the state executive committee from the Second Congressional District. He is a member of the Fayette County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Doctor Goodson was married to Lalla Rookh Rasco, who was born in Trigg County, Kentucky, the daughter of Milton and Ida (McNichols) Rasco, the latter of whom is still living, her husband having died in 1919, at the age of seventy-two years. These parents had seven children, six of whom are living, and Mrs. Goodson was the first child in order of birth. To Doctor and Mrs. Goodson have been born two children, Joseph A., Jr., and Lalla R. Doctor Goodson stands admittedly in the front rank of Kentucky's distinguished professional men, possessing a thoroughly disciplined mind and keeping closely in touch with the trend of modern thought relating to his profession, besides which those qualities of mind and heart which do not pertain to the mere knowledge of medical science, but greatly enhance the true worth of the physician, are not wanting in him. Because of his professional success and his excellent personal qualities he is held high in the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Willard Samuel Cramer. In touching upon the life history of Willard S. Cramer, well-known citizen and chief engineer of the Lexington Hydraulic and Manufacturing Company, the writer aims to avoid fulsome encomium and extravagant praise; yet he desires to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life—a life characterized by persistent industry, well-defined purpose and absolute integrity. To do this will be but to reiterate the dictum pronounced upon the man by the people who have known him long and well.

Willard Samuel Cramer was born at Rock Island, Illinois, July 13, 1867, and is the son of Frederick Allen and Mary Catherine (Reddig) Cramer. His father was born in Groshelmsdorf, Prussia, in 1845, and died on April 17, 1919, and his mother was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in 1848, and died in January, 1915. They became the parents of four children, three sons and a daughter, namely: Willard S., the subject of this sketch; Frederick R.; Henry C.; and Anna May, who died in infancy. Frederick A. Cramer was brought to the United States by his parents when eleven months of age, the family first locating in New York state. In 1852 they moved to Rock Island, Illinois, where he was reared to manhood. During the Civil war he enlisted in the United States navy, serving from 1861 to 1866, under Admiral Porter on the Mississippi River, and during three years of that time he served on the flagship. From 1866 to 1870 he served as chief engineer on various United States packet boats plying the Missouri River from St. Louis, Missouri, to Fort Benton, Montana. During these trips they had trouble with the Indians at various times, frequently being compelled to lay up at nights on account of the red men, who were on the war path, and they also had to come to a stop many times on account of big herds of buffalo crossing the river ahead of them. He was on the steamer "Rubicon," under Captain Bixby, in 1867-8, and during the winter months he ran on boats between St. Louis and New Orleans.

In 1870 Mr. Cramer left the river service and began work as a constructing engineer, his first contract being in Rock Island, Illinois, where he constructed the city waterworks system, that being one of the first cities in the country to adopt the Holly system of waterworks. Subsequently he installed the Holly system in various cities in the country, and finally came to Lexington, where he constructed the first Holly system of waterworks in Kentucky. He was then appointed chief engineer of the water system of this city, retaining that position up to 1890, when he relinquished that position and engaged in the manufacture of brick, having acquired the major interest in the Lexington Brick Company, of which he was president and manager up to the time of his death, being succeeded in these offices by his son Henry C. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and was a man of high character and ability.

Willard S. Cramer received his educational training in the public schools of Rock Island, Illinois, and at the age of thirteen years he obtained employment as an apprentice with the Holly Manufacturing Company at Lockport, New York. Later he was put on construction work, and remained with the Holly Company up to the spring of 1885, when he came to Lexington and became associated with his father in the operation of the waterworks plant. In 1890 he succeeded his father as chief engineer of the company, and has held that position to the present time, a period of about thirty years, certainly a marked testimonial to his faithfulness and efficiency. Mr. Cramer has been continuously identified with the line of work he now follows practically since boyhood, and is considered an expert in his line. He has maintained the water service of Lexington at the highest degree of efficiency and has given universal satisfaction in the responsible position which he occupies.

On September 20, 1888, Mr. Cramer was married to Matilda Johnston, who was born and reared in Rock Island, Illinois, the daughter of James and Elizabeth (Hamilton) Johnston. Both of her parents were born in Ireland, whence they went to London, and then came to the United States, their marriage occurring in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Later they went West and located in Rock Island, where they spent the remainder of their days. They became the parents of four children, the second and third in order of birth being Mrs. Cramer and a twin sister. To Mr. and Mrs. Cramer have been born five children, namely: Hugh, who married Gladys Gormley, is engineer in charge of the pumping station of the Lexington waterworks; Mary Elizabeth is secretary and treasurer of the J. J. Fitzgerald Plumbing Company of Lexington; Hiram C., living in Flint, Michigan, where he is employed as a constructing engineer with the DuPont Engineering Company, married Anna Bell Luigart, and they have a daughter, Mary Louise; Clark Johnston, who is engineer in charge of the light and power station at Danville, Kentucky, married Russella Thompson, and they have a son, Clark Johnston, Jr.; and Grace Angin is attending school. Mr. Cramer and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church, while in his political views he is a republican. He has been a close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his chosen life work. In every respect he merits the high esteem in which he is universally held, for he is a man of public spirit, fine attainments and exemplary character.

Archibald Henry Barkley. It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that move a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestation in the career of the individual under consideration. The medical profession of Kentucky has an able exponent in Dr. Archibald H. Barkley, of Lexington, who long ago firmly established himself in his vocation and won the confidence and esteem not only of his professional brethren but also of the people generally, for he not only possesses the natural endowments and scholastic training essential to the successful practitioner, but also has ever shown a public spirit that is commendable, and which has made him a potent factor in the advancement of the community along material, civic and moral lines.

Archibald Henry Barkley was born in Georgetown, Kentucky, July 16, 1872, and is the first born of the two children who blessed the union of John L. and Bettie (McMeekin) Barkley. His father was born in Georgetown, Kentucky, November 17, 1847, and died on January 27, 1909, in the sixty-second year of his age, while the mother, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, is still living. Archibald H. Barkley has a sister, Sarah, the wife of Frank B. Carter. John L. Barkley was a successful business man, being an extensive dealer in turf goods, and was also closely identified with the banking business. He was one of the organizers of the Central Bank of Lexington, of which he became president, holding that position until the merging of that bank with the National Exchange Bank, under the new name of the Lexington Bank and Trust Company, of which he was president until 1906, when he retired from that position. He was president of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Lexington for several years. Fraternally he was prominent, being one of the leading members of the Masonic Order in Kentucky. He was a member of Lexington Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which Henry Clay was once a member; Lexington Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; and Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, of which he was a past eminent commander and for a long period prelate.

Archibald H. Barkley received his elemental educational training in the public schools of Georgetown and Lexington and in private schools. He then became a student in Transylvania University. Having determined to devote his life to the medical profession, he then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the medical department of Columbia University, New York City, where he was graduated in 1896, wth the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Thereafter for a time he served in Dr. William T. Bull's Surgical Hospital in New York City, and in 1897 served in the Roosevelt and New York hospitals. He then came to Lexington, Kentucky, and entered upon the practice of his profession, in which he has been engaged continuously ever since, being eminently successful in his work and winning a wide reputation as a skillful and expert surgeon, in which branch of medical practice he has specialized. Doctor Barkley also took a post-graduate course in the Polytechnic School of New York City, and keeps in close touch with all advances made in his profession. He has written much on the subjects of medicine and surgery for the professional periodicals, is the author of a standard work on "Surgery and War Nursing," and has been a frequent contributor to the Sunday papers of Lexington, touching the early medical pioneers of the Blue Grass state. Doctor Barkley has had extensive experience in lithotomy and is today considered one of the most successful operators in this phase of surgery in the country. During the Spanish-American war he was one of the head contracting surgeons and was assigned to Fort Thomas, Kentucky, with the rank of captain, being head surgeon and chairman of the Medical Administration Board for the Sixteenth District of Kentucky. He has served efficiently for a number of years as a member of the city board of health.

The doctor is active in the various professional organizations, being a past president of the Fayette County Medical Society, past president of the Kentucky Valley Medical Association, and a member of the American Medical Association, having served as a delegate from Kentucky to the meetings of the last-named body. He is also a member of the Clinical Congress of North American Surgeons and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, of which he was one of the organizers. Fraternally he is a member of Lexington Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Lexington Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons, and Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar.

On October 17, 1900, Doctor Barkley was married to Roberta Johnson, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of Robert F. and Mildred (Randall) Johnson, who were the parents of seven children, of whom Mrs. Barkley is the youngest. To Doctor and Mrs. Barkley has been born a daughter, Roberta.

In his chosen field of endeavor Doctor Barkley has achieved success such as few attain, and his eminent standing among the leading medical men of Kentucky is duly recognized and appreciated not only in Lexington, the city long honored by his residence, but also throughout this section of the country. In addition to his long and creditable career in one of the most exacting of professions, he has also ranked with the most influential of his compeers in affairs looking to the betterment of his community. He is essentially a man among men, ever moving as one who commands respect by innate force as well as by superior ability.

Harry Benjamin Miller. The legal profession in Fayette County has an able representative in the person of Harry B. Miller, of Lexington, one of the leaders of the younger members of the bar. His success since entering upon the practice of his profession has won him many warm friends and admirers in the city and county—in fact, he has spent his life in this community, being the representative of one of its excellent old families, members of which have ever sought to promote such movements as have for their object the general betterment of the locality.

Harry B. Miller is a native son of the city now honored by his citizenship, having been born in Lexington on the 16th day of June, 1893, and he is the son of I. J. and Jennie F. (Faller) Miller. Both of his parents are natives of Ohio, the father having been born in Cincinnati on April 2, 1851, and the mother, in Middleport on January 27, 1867. They became the parents of three children, Jesse I., Harry Benjamin and I. J., Jr. The father received his education in the public schools of Cincinnati and then became a traveling salesman, following that occupation for several years. He then formed a partnership with his brother Benjamin, and they engaged in the clothing business in Lexington, under the firm name of Miller Brothers, which continued successfully up to 1915, when I. J. Miller retired from active business. A democrat in his political alignment, he served two terms as a member of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Lexington and was a street inspector for several years.

Harry B. Miller received his education in the public schools of Lexington and in the Millersburg Military Institute, where he was graduated with the class of 1912. He then entered the law department of Kentucky University, where he was graduated in 1914, and was admitted to the bar of Kentucky in that year. He then formed a law partnership with his brother Jesse, under the firm name of Miller & Miller, and has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, in which he has been eminently successful. In June, 1913, Mr. Miller was appointed city attorney by Mayor James C. Rogers, being the youngest man ever appointed to that responsible office, but so satisfactory was his discharge of his official duties that he has held the office continuously since with the exception of the period when he was in the United States military service during the World war. At the entrance of the United States into the war Mr. Miller went to the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, but was rejected on account of being under weight. He was determined, however, to get into the service and went to Washington, District of Columbia, and enlisted in the ordnance department. Later he was sent to State College, Pennsylvania, and from there to Camp Hancock, Georgia, as a member of a special commission on machine guns and high explosives. Subsequently he was assigned to the ordnance department at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, where he served until honorably discharged on December 9, 1918.

Mr. Miller is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association and the American Bar Association, and also of the Delta Chi law fraternity. He belongs to Lexington Lodge No. 89, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he gives his earnest support to the democratic party. As a lawyer he has demonstrated in no uncertain way his ability as a trial lawyer and in office practice, and he is enjoying a large and representative clientele, having appeared as counsel in a number of important cases in the courts of this and neighboring counties. Personally he is a man of generous disposition and likable qualities, and enjoys a marked popularity in the circles in which he moves.

Edwin Barker. Ten miles southeast of Lexington, on rural mail route No. 9 from that city, is situated the fine farm estate of Mr. Barker, who is one of the well-known and highly-esteemed citizens of Fayette County, which has been his home from the time of his birth and in which he is a representative of a sterling pioneer family. He is a descendant of William Barker, who was a member of a little colony of Virginians who came from the Old Dominion state to Kentucky in the early days. He and his wife established their home on a pioneer farm near the present Bryant Station in Fayette County, and here they passed the remainder of their lives. Their son, Joseph, who was a boy at the time of the migration to Kentucky, was here reared to manhood, and here was solemnized his marriage to Miss Nancy Jones, whose mother, Rebecca (Boone) Jones, was a niece of Daniel Boone, the historic frontiersman and patriot whose name is prominently linked with the early history of Kentucky. Joseph Barker settled on a farm three miles south of Chilesburg, Fayette County, and eventually became the owner of a valuable landed estate of 1,200 acres, all in one body. This property is in large part still retained in the possession of his descendants. One of the records portraying an early survey made by Daniel Boone in this section of Kentucky was given to Mr. Barker by his wife, and the ancient document is now a prized heirloom in the possession of Edwin Barker, of this review, who is a grandson of Joseph Barker and who owns a portion of the latter's old homestead. Joseph Barker was nearly ninety years of age at the time of his death, March 19, 1861, and he was a sterling citizen who had contributed much to the civic and industrial development and progress of Fayette County. After the death of his first wife he eventually contracted a second marriage, when he was nearly eighty years of age, his second wife having been a widow named Stivers, and their one child, Dillard, having eventually established his home in Missouri. Of the children of the first marriage Thomas F. remained in Kentucky until his death, as did also Joseph R., and the two became owners of the major part of their father's landed estate; James removed to the State of Indiana; one daughter died when a young woman; Rebecca (Mrs. Erskine) removed with her husband either to Indiana or Missouri. Joseph R. Barker cared for his venerable father in the latter's declining years, became the owner of the old family house and long continued to occupy the same, the building having finally been destroyed by fire, in 1908. Thomas F. Barker acquired a portion of the old home farm and added to the same until he was the owner of a well improved place of 155 acres. On Baughman Creek he erected the house which continued his place of abode until his death and which is still standing, in an excellent state of preservation. Mr. Barker was a man of much mechanical ability, and on his farm he established and conducted a well-equipped shop in which he worked at the blacksmith trade and also did all manner of wagon and carriage manufacturing and repairing. In this enterprise he was senior member of the firm of Barker & Baker, which name is familiar to all old residents of Fayette County. Mr. Barker served a number of years as magistrate, and was a leader in community sentiment and action. A staunch advocate of temperance he deplored the selling of liquor in rural mercantile establishments, and in 1892 he expressed his sentiments by writing and publishing a work entitled "The Cross-roads Store, or Evils of a Dram Shop." This honored and influential citizen passed from the stage of life's mortal endeavors in September, 1913. He married Miss Penelopy Jane McDonald, who was born and reared near Clintonville, Bourbon County, a daughter of Rice and Mary (Moxley) McDonald, and she was fifty-seven years of age at the time of her death, December 7, 1888. They became the parents of five sons and two daughters: William, who resides at Chilesburg, Fayette County, was formerly a rural mail carrier but is now living practically retired; James is a well-known horseman and resides in the City of Lexington, he having formerly been the owner of "Grover Hughes," a horse that made a fine turf record; Robert owns and resides upon a part of the old home farm and has served as local magistrate and at present is a member of the Fayette County School Board of Education; Hugh resides in the City of Lexington, where he is employed as a bookkeeper; Edwin is the immediate subject of this sketch; Bettie, who resides at Lexington is the widow of A. N. Warnock, who was a farmer and who also served as railroad station agent at Chilesburg; and Nannie is the wife of William Searcy, of Winchester, Clark County. Thomas F. Barker served for twenty years as a deacon in the Baptist Church, and three of his sons are now deacons of the same religious denomination, with which the entire family has maintained earnest affiliation.

Edwin Barker was born on the 25th of August, 1868, received the advantages of the schools of his native county, and he has resided continuously on the old homestead farm which was the place of his nativity and a portion of which he now owns. For five years he was general manager of the Fraternal Brotherhood, for which he organized lodges in all parts of the state and with which he still maintains active affiliation as one of its prominent members. Mr. Barker has achieved high reputation as an auctioneer, and in this connection his services have been much in requisition in the crying of public sales in this section of the state. He gives his personal supervision to his farm. He is a democrat in politics, but has had no ambition for political office of any kind. He and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church at Athens.

At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Barker was united in marriage to Miss Araminta Drane, who was born near Eminence, Henry County, a daughter of Benjamin F. and Betty (McDonald) Drane, her father having been a prosperous farmer in that county. To Mr. and Mrs. Barker have been born four children: Charles, who is a locomotive engineer in the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, resides in the City of Lexington. The maiden name of his wife was Wellie McGuire Coffee, and their one child is a son, Lewis Forrest. Lewis and his wife, whose maiden name was Maybelle Schultz, formerly of Richmond, Virginia, reside with his parents, and, like his father, he is an expert auctioneer and has been prominently associated with the sale of tobacco as auctioneer in leading warehouses at Lexington, Cynthiana and other points in Kentucky, as well as at Goldsboro, North Carolina. Edith is the wife of Waller Forrest Stivers, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work. Ida is the wife of Walter Pollard, an expert electrician, their home being in the City of St. Louis, Missouri.

Claude Logan Ryley is a Lexington business man who conducts his business and all his relations on a broad and big scale, and for years has been an intimate associate of many of the noted men of affairs of Kentucky and other states.

Mr. Ryley is one of Kentucky's leading coal producers and coal dealers. He is president of the C. L. Ryley Coal Company and was sole owner of this business for fifteen years. January 1, 1921, the business was incorporated with a capital of $200,000. It is one of the large coal sales companies and handles the entire output of several mines in Eastern Kentucky, including the Trace Fork Mining Company's mines, with eight cars daily capacity, the Happy Coal Company's product of ten cars daily, the Number Four Superior Coal Company's mines with ten cars daily capacity. All these mining companies are practically owned by Mr. Ryley and his son C. Reginald Ryley, and he is president of the Number Four Superior Coal Company, the Trace Fork Mining Company, the Happy Coal Company and the C. L. Ryley Coal Company. Mr. Ryley is also president of the Fayette Coal, Grain and Feed Company, a $50,000 corporation, of which his son C. Reginald is vice president. The Number Four Superior Coal Company and the Trace Fork Mining Company are both $200,000 corporations. These companies operate in the best fourth vein district of Perry County. Mr. Ryley in recent years has been shifting some of the details of management to his son C. Reginald, who now has practically the general management of these various corporations.

Mr. Ryley began his career in the coal business as a retailer in Woodford County in 1893 Subsequently he acquired an interest and became general manager of production of the White Ash Coal Company at White Ash, Kentucky, this mine having a capacity of 500 tons daily. He sold this property after a few years and became a wholesale coal dealer at Versailles. Mr. Ryley sold the first Millers Creek coal handled in Kentucky.

Mr. Ryley and his several companies have had general headquarters in the Fayette National Bank Building since it was erected. His coal business in 1920 aggregated a value of $3,000,000. He has been a director of the Elkhorn Star Company on the Big Sandy River and has had interests in other large producing companies in that field and has handled a considerable part of the output through his organization.

Mr. Ryley was born at Troy in Woodford County, Kentucky, May 19, 1869. His father, Samuel E. Ryley, who died at the age of fifty-five, had some extensive interests as a farmer, merchant and breeder of trotting horses, was an influential worker in church and Sunday School, and had a wide circle of friends over Central Kentucky.

C. L. Ryley finished his education in the University of Kentucky. He is a member of the Rotary Club, the Lexington Club, the Country Club and the Pendennis Club at Louisville. For several winters he has sojourned in the South, in Florida, and several years ago he bought at the Madison Square Garden Horse Show eight trotting horses which he sent to the Insular Fair at San Juan, Porto Rico, selling them at public auction. These were the first horses sold in Porto Rico from the United States for breeding and track purposes. Mr. Ryley was associated for a number of years with Gen. Cassius M. Clay of Richmond, Kentucky, they being owners of the famous flock of Southdown sheep that was produced by Cassius M. Clay, and for years was the general's advisor and close friend.

In 1891 Mr. Ryley married Lena Myers. Her father was Doctor Myers of Anderson County, Kentucky, and her grandfather, John Allen, was one of the prominent characters of Central Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Ryley have four children: Mae Taft is Mrs. E. P. Avent, Jr., and has a daughter, Bettie; C. Reginald, the active business associate of his father, married Ethelwyn Landsburg, a granddaughter of Thomas Seller, the founder of the Harris Seller Bank of Versailles, Kentucky, and has a daughter, Joyce; and Gladys and Phyllis are still at home. Mr. Ryley and family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

A. M. Durbin purchased in the year 1910 one of the fine Blue Grass farms of Fayette County, and on this place, the old Watts homestead, he has made a record of progressive and effective achievement in connection with agricultural and live-stock industry, the while he has gained high civic standing in the community and is a most loyal and public-spirited as a citizen. The farm is one of the best in this section of the county and is eligibly situated twelve miles south of the City of Lexington, on rural mail route No. 11.

Mr. Durbin was born in Estill County, Kentucky, on the 25th of February, 1856, and is a son of Edward and Mrs. (Lynch) Durbin, both likewise natives of Estill County, where the former was born in the year 1818 and the latter in 1819, the respective families having been founded in that county in the pioneer days, upon migration from North Carolina. Edward Durbin and his wife passed their entire lives in Estill County, the major part of his active career having been marked by active association with farm industry, and he was seventy-four years of age at the time of his death. Of the large famly of children only four are now living, and of the number the subject of this review is the only one in Fayette County, his brother Edward being one of the substantial agriculturists of Estill County.

A. M. Durbin was reared and educated in Estill County, and early in his career he manifested the initiative energy and constructive enterprise that have characterized him during the long intervening years. For twenty-four years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Irvine, judicial center of his native county, besides continuing his active association with farm industry and becoming a successful lumber dealer. From 1896 to 1899 he held the office of sheriff of Estill County, and he continued his business activities in Estill County for ten years after his removal to Fayette County, his connection therewith having terminated in March, 1910. His farm in Fayette County comprises 475 acres of the fine Blue Grass land, for which this section has long been celebrated, and here he gives his attention to diversified agriculture and the raising of excellent grades of live stock, including mules and swine. Mr. Durbin is a director of the Farmers Bank of Irvine in Estill County, an institution of which he was one of the organizers, in 1906, and of which he refused to accept the office of president. Mr. Durbin has owned several tracts of farm land, as well as city and village property, and is still associated in the ownership of coal lands in Breathitt County. He is a stanch supporter of the cause of the Republican party, and thus had reason to view with satisfaction the significant results of the national election of November, 1920. He has been active in the local councils of the party and has served as a delegate to its state conventions in Kentucky, as well as to congressional and county conventions. He maintains affiliation with the time-honored Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Durbin was a youth of eighteen years at the time of his marriage to Miss Rebecca Wells, of Lee County, Kentucky, and her death occurred fourteen years later. Of the five children of this union four attained to maturity: Elysses died at the age of twenty-one years; Eva is the wife of James Ashcraft, of Owen County; Nannie is the wife of Edward Dunnaway, of Estill County; and Minnie is the wife of J. D. Webb, of Estill County. The second marriage of Mr. Durbin was with Miss Emma Stamper, of Estill County, and they have five children—Emma, Vernon, Stanley, James and Susie. Emma is the wife of Wlliam Spicer, who is associated in the management of the Durbin farm in Fayette County. Stanley, who likewise is identified with the active supervision of this valuable farm property and its operations, made a splendid record of service in the United States Navy, in which he enlisted in September, 1916. On the United States Steamship Delaware, on which he crossed the Atlantic with the American fleet, and later was in service on the United States Steamship "McCook," on which he visited the chief ports of the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas. He was on the "Delaware" when that vessel became the first to fire a shot within the zone of the World war, and his service continued during the entire period of that great conflict after the United States became involved therein. He received his honorable discharge on the 26th of February, 1920, and has since remained at the parental home, which is a center of generous hospitality. The house on the Durbin farm is surrounded by a beautiful grove of native trees.

John C. B. Combs has profited substantially through the leasing of his farm in Lee County where successful oil production is now in process on the property, and in 1919 he purchased his present valuable and well improved residence farm, the old Fishback place of 144 acres on the Richmond Turnpike, eleven miles south of the city of Lexington. He has been fortunate in thus acquiring one of the fine farms of the famed Blue Grass District of Fayette County, and here he is giving his attention to vigorous and progressive enterprise as an agriculturist and stock-grower.

John C. Breckinridge Combs was born in Breathitt County, Kentucky, on the 20th of January, 1870, and is a son of Claiborne and Grace (Mayze) Combs. Claiborne Combs was born in Perry County, this state, a son of Preston Combs, he removed thence to Breathitt County, where he passed the remainder of his life and where he died at a venerable age. Claiborne Combs was reared and educated in Breathitt County, and there continued his residence until 1871, when he purchased and removed to a farm in Estill County, where he passed the remainder of his life on this old homestead, he having been in his seventy-sixth year at the time of his death and his widow having passed away at the venerable age of eighty-one years. Mr. Combs had the unique distinction of having served both as a Confederate and as a Union soldier in the Civil war, his initial service having been in the Confederate army.

John C. B. Combs was an infant at the time of the family removal to Estill County, where he received in his youth the advantages of the public schools and where he remained on the home farm until he had attained to the age of twenty-two years, when he was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Crabtree, daughter of Simpson Crabtree, a substantial farmer of Lee County. After his marriage Mr. Combs and his wife established their home upon the farm given to the latter by her father, in Lee County, the same comprising 102 acres. Much of this land was covered with timber and underbrush, and Mr. Combs set himself vigorously to the task of reclaiming the tract to cultivation. He thus cleared forty acres and brought the same into effective productiveness, besides making other substantial improvements on the place. For a number of years he gave much of his time during the winter seasons to working as a sawyer in lumber mills, his services in this capacity having covered a period of about twelve years, and the salary which he received having aided materially in his constructive work in the improving of his farm. This farm lies in a territory in which oil production has become an industry of major importance, and in 1918 Mr. and Mrs. Combs leased this tract, together with an additional seventy-five acres which Mrs. Combs purchased from her father, to oil companies operating in that field. Upon the farm at the time of this writing, in 1920, are twenty-four producing oil wells, which yield an average output. From this source Mr. and Mrs. Combs receive a substantial income.

In 1919, as previously stated, Mr. Combs purchased the Fishback farm in Fayette County, and here he is successfully engaged in diversified agricultural enterprise and the raising of good grades of live stock. He is found aligned in the ranks of the Democratic party, takes loyal interest in community affairs, and attends and supports the Christian Church, of which his wife is an active member. It is worthy of special note that the substantial brick residence owned and occupied by Mr. Combs and his family was erected in 1873 by Daniel Boone, a former owner of the property and a descendant of the great pioneer and frontiersman, Daniel Boone, in whose honor he was named. Mr. and Mrs. Combs have seven children, of whom the four youngest remain at the parental home—Minta, Eller, Darwin and Ada. Ruth, the eldest of the children, is the wife of Thomas Sloan, and with her four children resides in the home of her parents; Floyd is a salesman in a mercantile establishment; and Mamie, the wife of Floyd Sloan, likewise remains at the parental home.

Reuben M. Clark was born in Claiborne County, Tennessee, September 18, 1864, where he spent his early years and secured his education. After finishing school at Carson and Newman College, Jefferson City, Tennessee, he was professor of mathematics in Walnut Grove Academy, near Knoxville. Later he moved to Rome, Georgia, and engaged in the mercantile business for six years, returning to Tennessee in 1892.

On October 12, 1898, he was married to Miss Sara Elizabeth Graves, eldest daughter of Jacob H. Graves, of Fayette County, Kentucky, a well known banker and extensive land owner. Several years before his marriage Mr. Clark had a valuable riding horse stolen, which he finally traced to Lexington, and recovered. It was during this trip he met his future wife.

After his marriage Mr. Clark decided to locate in Kentucky and purchased a farm on the Walnut Hill Pike, seven miles east of Lexington. His present residence, a substantial brick structure, with all modern conveniences, was erected in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Clark are the parents of two children, a son and a daughter, Julius Graves and Virginia Rosalie.

Mr. Clark is an extensive reader, keeping well posted on current events. He is independent in politics, and has never been a seeker after any political office. He is a member of the Baptist Church but attends regularly the services of the Macedonia Christian Church, of which his wife and children are devoted members.

Ever since moving to Kentucky Mr. Clark has directed his attention to farming and stock raising. In addition to the land originally purchased, he has bought several adjoining tracts. This, with land Mrs. Clark has inherited from her father's estate, makes the Clark's entire holdings amount to about fourteen hundred acres. Some of this land when acquired, was tired from too much cultivation, but Mr. Clark, believing, that the safest bank in which to deposit gains, is the soil, has consistently stayed with the live stock business, and by feeding his crops to cattle, hogs, sheep, and horses, has so enriched his land, that it compares favorably with the best in the Blue Grass. Breeding and feeding of cattle for the export trade has been his principal business, in which he has made a great success. He keeps a splendid flock of Hampshire sheep, and is a great fancier of saddle horses. While not an exhibitor at the fairs, he has succeeded in breeding and raising horses, good enough to bring customers to his place, from all over the United States, as well as some from foreign countries, having sold and shipped to Russia the only saddle stallion ever exported to that country from America. He has sold other horses to British West Indies, to Cuba and throughout the United States.

Mr. Clark believes that the best heritage he can leave to posterity, is a Christian example, an untarnished name, and a landed estate so fertile that it will be an inspiration to others, and a fitting monument to his memory.

Richard Martin Squires. The late Richard Martin Squires, formerly owner of Meadowbrook Farm, which he operated for a number of years, was born near Carlisle, Kentucky, in 1847, and died in his seventy-first year, October 1, 1918. His father died when forty-seven and his widow married a Mr. Crewshaw, and they became the parents of one child, John. Mr. Crewshaw had a son, Ben, by a former marriage.

The mother of Richard M. Squires, Mary Squires, with her husband, Mr. Crewshaw, came to the Donerail vicinity, near Lexington, and there remained to the end of their lives. Mrs. Crewshaw lived to be over ninety years old. She was a zealous member of the Christian Church, in the good works of which she took an active part.

Richard M. Squires was educated at Transylvania University, where he was a classmate with Joseph Lane Allen. Mr. Squires remained on the old farm place until he was thirty-five years old, when he married Mary Hood Graves, a daughter of Dr. George Owings Graves. Soon after the marriage they took charge of the farm of two hundred and sixty-five acres, given them by Doctor Graves. The house in which they lived was erected in 1854 by Samuel Hayes, a cousin of Doctor Graves.

Mr. Squires continued to add to the original land holding, until at the time of his death it consisted of seven hundred acres of prime land, on which farming and stock raising were carried on. On October 1, 1918, Mr. Squires passed away. His death was very generally regretted. He had been an excellent citizen, ever mindful of the welfare of the community in which he resided. He had always taken an active interest in movements intended to develop agriculture. He was founder of the Corngrowers' Association, of which he was president for eight consecutive years, during which period its influence spread rapidly. He won many honors at corn exhibits, and his fine stock was among the best ever raised in this part of the state.

To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Squires four children were born: Mary Callaway, who became the wife of Dr. Charles H. McChord, reference to whom is made in the sketch following; Waller Spencer Squires, of Lexington; Julia, who married M. P. Fears, of Newcastle; and Richard Coleman, who died in infancy. Mr. Squires has never been prominent in politics nor was he a seeker after political office. He preferred to devote his attention to his vast farming interests, and along this line he was a pronounced success.

Dr. Charles H. McChord, for years a well-known member of the medical profession, is a descendant from one of the oldest families in this part of Kentucky, where for generations they have been well and favorably known.

Charles H. McChord is a native of Lebanon, Kentucky, where he was born May 5, 1884, a son of Robert Caldwell and Lizzie (Harrison) McChord, the former a prominent surgeon, still active in his profession at Lebanon. He is a son of Robert Caldwell McChord, of Washington County, Kentucky, whose father was John Caldwell McChord. These men, in their respective generations, were well-to-do and worthy citizens of Kentucky, who nobly did their part in the upbuilding and development of the state.

Charles H. McChord received his preliminary education in the public schools of Lebanon. He later entered Center College, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1905. He then entered the University at Louisville and in 1910 received his degree of M. D. Doctor McChord immediately began the practice of his profession at Lebanon, where he was associated with his father in general practice and surgery.

On October 14, 1915, Doctor McChord was united in marriage to Mary Callaway Squires, a daughter of the late Richard M. Squires, the ceremony taking place in the same room that witnessed the marriage of her parents. The Doctor and his wife are the parents of one son; Hood Squires McChord. During the progress of the World war, Doctor and Mrs. McChord were active in war work and in the Red Cross, giving freely of their time and ability to help in all the good deeds connected with the latter organization.

Since January, 1919, Doctor McChord has had charge of the Squires estate at Meadowbrook Farm, located about eight miles from Lexington, and on this place he superintends the operations of general farming and stock raising. He gives his support to the Democratic party, but has never been a seeker after office. He is an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, as were all his ancestors. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order and in the Knights Templars.

Robert Meteer, who resides on his finely improved homestead farm five miles west of Paris, Bourbon County, was born and reared in this county, is a representative of an honored pioneer family of this section of Kentucky, and a scion of a family that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial era of our national history. The original spelling of the family name was McTeer, but the present orthography has been retained for many generations. William McTeer was granted, on the 19th of September, 1791, charter to a tract of land at Rock Spring, Augusta County, Virginia, and with his wife, Sarah, and their daughter, Elizabeth, he finally came to Kentucky and became one of the pioneer settlers in the locality later known as McTeer Spring, six miles distant from Mount Sterling in Montgomery County, and situated on the present Lexington Turnpike. This worthy ancestor reclaimed and improved a productive farm, and the family became one of prominence and influence in connection with the pioneer annals of Montgomery County. Robert, son of William McTeer, passed his entire life in Montgomery County, and old records and tombstone inscriptions indicate that he had adopted the present spelling of the family name. His remains rest in the ancient cemetery at Mount Sterling, as do also those of his wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Davis and who was of venerable age at the time of her death. They became the parents of a large family of children, but most of them died when young.

William Meteer, son of Robert and Sarah (Davis) Meteer, came into possession of the old family homestead in Montgomery County, a property that later passed out of the possession of the family. In 1863 William Meteer married Miss Sally Simpson, an orphan girl of nineteen years, who had been reared in the home of one of her aunts at Mount Sterling. In 1865 William Meteer purchased and removed to the old Stark farm, near Hutchison, Bourbon County, where his son, William, now resides, the place having comprised 143 acres at the time when it came into his possession. William Meteer not only became one of the successful agriculturists and stock-growers of Bourbon County but also developed a prosperous business in buying mules for shipment to the Southern market. He was a sterling citizen who commanded unqualified esteem, but he never desired or held public office. His death occurred in March, 1879, from an attack of pneumonia, and he was about sixty years of age at the time. His widow and children remained upon the old homestead, and there the devoted mother died in the year 1901, when of venerable age. The husband was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, and he served as an elder of the Hopewell Church of this denomination, an office to which each generation of the Meteer family in Kentucky has furnished an incumbent. Mrs. Meteer was a member of the Methodist Church. Of the children of William and Sally (Simpson) Meteer three are living: Mary died when about sixteen years of age; Sarah Davis is the wife of James Myers, of Orland, Florida; William remains on the old home farm; and Robert, immediate subject of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

On the old homestead above mentioned Robert Meteer was born September 11, 1871, and he remained with his widowed mother on the farm until he had attained to the age of twenty-eight years, his educational advantages in the meanwhile having been those of the public schools of Bourbon County and of Transylvania University. He still retains his interest in the old home place, and has continued to be associated with its operations, besides which he was for some time engaged in farm enterprise in Fayette County. In February, 1911, Mr. Meteer purchased his present home farm, the old Wilson place, the same having been sold to him by Miss Kate Wilson, member of a well-known family of which specific mention is made on other pages of this work. Miss Wilson had erected in 1909 the fine modern house which is now the Meteer family home. This well-improved farm, on the Lexington Turnpike, five miles west of Paris, is the stage of vigorous and successful enterprise in the field of agriculture and stock-growing, and upon the place are to be found excellent grades of cattle, sheep and swine. In his agricultural enterprise Mr. Meteer gives a measure of attention to the growing of tobacco. He is vice president of the Peoples Bank at Paris, and is one of the substantial and progressive citizens of Bourbon County. He supports the democratic party with all loyalty, but has had no ambition for political preferment. He and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church at Paris, and he is serving as an elder in the same.

On the 12th of October, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Meteer to Miss Frances Claybrook, who was born in Mason County, this state, but who was a child at the time of her parents' removal to their present farm, near Hutchison, Bourbon County. She is a daughter of Eldon P. and Florence (Worthington) Claybrook, who still reside on the homestead farm near Hutchison. Mr. and Mrs. Meteer have no children. Their attractive home is known for its gracious and unostentatious hospitality, and is a center of much social activity.

Robert Stuart Taylor represents one of the families that was established in Clark County in the years immediately following the Revolutionary war for independence. His ancestor was a commissioned officer in that struggle and bore the name of Jonathan Taylor. He died toward the close of the eighteenth century, and was buried in a private cemetery on the old farm known as the Basin Spring Farm. Much of that land is still owned by his descendants, including Robert Stuart Taylor, who lives 1½ miles south of Pine Grove and eight miles southwest of Winchester. Across the pike from the present home of Robert Stuart Taylor is a large body of land originally included in the grant to Jonathan Taylor for his services as a soldier.

Two of the sons of Jonathan Taylor were George and Samuel. He also had a daughter, Betsy, who became the wife of Doctor Martin and lived and died in Clark County. Samuel Taylor owned a large tract of land at Winchester, an his old home in that city is now occupied by Frank H. Haggard. George Taylor, the other son of Jonathan, married Sally Fishback and lived and died on the old Taylor homestead 1½ miles south of Pine Grove. His children were: James, who died in Kentucky; William, who moved out to Illinois; Robert Stuart, mentioned in the following paragraphs; Jonathan, who died in Kentucky, leaving two sons, Horace M., of Carlisle, and George B., of Nicholasville, and two daughters, Phoebe, who married Reuben Mann and died in Carlisle, and Belle, who was married and died near Lebanon Junction; Thomas, who went to Illinois; Jesse, who went to Montana; Phoebe, who became the wife of Dr. John F. McMillan, of Carlisle, Kentucky; and Dorothea, who died near the old homestead.

Robert Stuart Taylor, Sr., grandson of Jonathan Taylor, was born on the old farm March 26, 1820. He was baptized by and named in honor of Rev. Robert Stuart, who for forty years was pastor of the Salem Presbyterian Church, a church which many members of the Taylor family have attended. It is interesting to note that a great-grandson of Rev. Robert Stuart, named Robert Stuart Sanders, just a hundred years after the beginning of the pastorate of his ancestor was installed as pastor of Walnut Hill Church. Robert Stuart Taylor, Sr., married for his first wife Elizabeth Huston. Her grandfather, James Huston, was one of the pioneers of Clark County and her father, John Huston, lived and died on the same farm. The wife and several of the children of John Huston died of cholera in 1833, only two daughters surviving, Nancy and Elizabeth. Nancy became the wife of James Hall, one of Kentucky's most prominent Shorthorn cattle breeders. Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor died five years after her marriage. She left two daughters, Sally and Anna. Sally, who died at the age of sixty-eight, became the wife of Robert Cunningham and lived on a part of the old Taylor property. Anna is still living at Winchester, widow of Squire Turner Tevis, who died December 27, 1919, at the age of seventy-six, at his home in Winchester, where he had lived for six years. Squire Tevis is remembered as one of the last survivors of that distinguished company of Confederates who made the raid into Canada under Bennett Young. Of the twenty-one participating in this adventure fourteen were captured. Two years after the war Squire Tevis was pardoned by President Andrew Jackson, and two years later he married Miss Taylor, and in 1869 they built the residence on a portion of the Basin Spring Farm, the present home of Robert Stuart Taylor, Jr. They lived in and occupied that home until they sold it twenty-seven years ago.

The second wife of Robert Stuart Taylor, Sr., was Elizabeth Thompson, of Harrisburg, Kentucky. She is still living at Winchester at the age of ninety-one. Of her ten children only seven survived childhood, the oldest being Robert Stuart Taylor; Thompson James was a physician at Richmond, Kentucky; Betsy Martin is the wife of Joseph G. Lyle at Lexington; Lucy Thompson died young; Mary Willis lives at Winchester, widow of Rev. Barbee Betts; Emma died young; Nina also passed away in early years; George William was a lawyer at Great Falls, Montana, and his widow, Mary (McCord) Taylor, is now living at Lexington; Jessie is the wife of Rev. J. V. Logan, pastor of the Crescent Hill Presbyterian Church of Louisville; and Graham is an extensive farmer in Fayette County.

Robert Stuart Taylor, Jr., was born September 27, 1849, on the Basin Spring Farm, on a portion of which he lives today. He grew up the son of a large land owner and prosperous farmer. His father died in 1886, at the age of sixty-six. He had never cared for office, but was a very influential citizen and for many years was the chief supporter and elder of the Salem Presbyterian Church mentioned above. He was a man whose probity of character and good judgment were widely known, and he was frequently called upon to settle family and neighborhood disputes. Robert S. Taylor, Jr., had a good education and his early life was wisely guided and directed. After reaching manhood he devoted himself to farming and for many years rented a large farm, Some years ago he acquired the share of his sister, Mrs. Tevis, in the Basin Spring Farm, containing eighty-four acres, but he owns much other land nearby. In past years he has been very extensively interested in the growing of stock and grain and tobacco, frequently harvesting 200 acres of wheat in a single season, and hemp has also been one of his chief crops. For many years he was an extensive cattle feeder. Mr. Taylor had the unusual faculty of being able to handle and manage extensive farming properties, some of which were twelve or fifteen miles away from his home. He would rent these farms and employ capable tenants to look after his crops of hemp. He made a practice of keeping four or five managers in his employ the year around, and at other seasons would have from thirty to forty hands. Through all the years he kept his interests on the farm. He has been satisfied merely to vote and give incidental support to the democratic party. For many years he has been an elder in the old Salem Presbyterian Church.

In 1874 Mr. Taylor married Miss Etta Jones, and adopted daughter of Roger Jones, one of the well-known citizens of this section of Clark County. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were happily married for thirty-four years, their union being broken in 1908 by the death of Mrs. Taylor. Five children were born to their marriage. The oldest, Roger Jones Taylor, has for twenty years been a resident and American official at Honolulu, where he is a United States custom inspector. He married Miss Ada Lysid and makes his home in Honolulu. Robert S., Jr., who has active charge of the original Taylor farm, married Nannie White. Walter G., who is unmarried, is a contractor of public works, such as concrete structures and pikes, living at Knoxville, Tennessee. The two daughters, both at home, are Etta and Lucy.

George W. Bales. The personal efficiency of Mr. Bales has pervaded his administration of the office of sheriff of Daviess County, and his administration is the more notable because he was the first republican ever elected to that post of responsibility in this county.

Mr. Bales, a resident of Daviess County many years and well known both in the country districts and the City of Owensboro, was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, January 19, 1875, son of John H. and Eliza (Ray) Bales. His parents were born, reared and married near Knoxville, Tennessee. His father was a Union man at the time of the Civil war and served in the Third Union Tennessee Infantry and was wounded in battle. After the war he settled in Ohio County, Kentucky, and lived as a farmer until his death in 1880. He was survived by four sons and a daughter and his widow, who now lives at Pleasant Ridge in Daviess County.

George W. Bales grew up in the Pleasant Ridge community, acquired a common school education, and early launched himself into serious tasks and responsibilities. He began dealing in livestock at an early age and continued that business for twenty years, offering an important medium between the growers and the breeders and the markets. The better to handle his business he removed from Pleasant Ridge to Owensboro in 1906, and that city has been his home for fifteen years.

Mr. Bales made his successful campaign for election as county sheriff in the fall of 1917, and began his four year term in January, 1918. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the fraternity of which his father was also a member. In January, 1921, he was made a director in the First National Bank of Owensboro, and is one of the stockholders in the institution. He is president of the county fair association and active in public affairs. In 1906 Mr. Bales married Miss Minnie Daly, of Ohio County, who died April 12, 1921. They had two children, named Daly Ray and Josephine. Mr. Bales is a member of the First Baptist Church of Owensboro, as was also Mrs. Bales.

Dr. John Robert McKee, who died at his home at McKee Cross Roads February 15, 1921, was a graduate of medicine, but through many years was best known as one of the prominent citizens and extensive land owners of Woodford County. He was born on the McKee farm five miles from Versailles April 3, 1842. He was the father of McKee Brothers, a record of whose enterprise as Kentucky stockmen is found on other pages of this publication.

Doctor McKee was a son of James and Christine (Chrisman) McKee. The land contained in the McKee farm was obtained by Doctor McKee's grandfather, James McKee, about 1790. He acquired at that time a section. His death occurred before the birth of Robert McKee. His widow survived him to the advanced age of ninety-nine. She was a pioneer Kentucky woman greatly esteemed for her abilities as a practical physician. James McKee, father of Doctor McKee, was born on the old homestead and died in 1871, at the age of seventy. His wife, Christine Chrisman, was the daughter of a pioneer hat manufacturer who lived on what is now known as the Alexander farm, and built the handsome stone house still standing there, in which Christine was born in 1801. She died in 1898, at the age of ninety-seven. Her father had a very extensive business as a hatter, employing many hands. James McKee, Jr., during his lifetime acquired a very extensive property in land. His older half-brother, Squire John McKee, lived in the same locality until his death. James McKee, Jr., owned three or four other farms, aggregating altogether 1,800 acres.

The home of the late Doctor McKee was built by James McKee in 1861, though it stood unoccupied until after the war, when he finished it. It is a large brick house, the brick having been made on the farm. James and Christine McKee had only two children to reach mature years, the daughter, Catherine, becoming the wife of John Withrow, and they died in Woodford County.

Dr. John Robert McKee before the outbreak of the Civil war was sent abroad to complete his education in Europe. He studied medicine and other subjects at Wurtzburg, Bavaria, in Berlin, at Prague and graduated at Wurtzburg, Bavaria. After the war he returned home and, owing to his father's failing health, took active charge of the farm. He finally abandoned the profession of medicine altogether and for the rest of his life devoted himself, with the aid of his sons, to the management of his farm in Woodford County, now for many years past the home of one of the most noted Duroc-Jersey breeding plants in the South. Doctor McKee also made his farm and stables famous for the training of many noted race horses. For six years he kept his racing stable in Canada. He was one of the leading growers of hemp and barley in his section of the state. He inherited property to the extent of about 800 acres, all of which is now used by his sons, McKee Brothers.

Doctor McKee was a gentleman of the old school, widely known throughout Central Kentucky and highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. At the age of twenty-nine he married Agnes Morancy, daughter of a planter and physician of Millikens Bend, Louisiana. As a child Agnes came to live in the home of her grandfather, Col. Zach White, on the Kentucky River at Lock No. 5, a few miles above Frankfort. A great deal of interesting Kentucky history is associated with the name of Agnes Morancy McKee, much of which is told in some recent issues of the Kentucky State Historical Magazine. A soldier of the American Revolution was Col. William Steele, who came to Kentucky as early as 1783. He married Sarah Bullock, sister of Judge Edmund Bullock, of Lexington. Their home was near Lock No. 5 on the Kentucky River, and Colonel Steele was deeply interested in many of the pioneer undertakings of the new state. He attended one of the first constitutional conventions at Danville, and also the second convention at Frankfort in 1799. He was a member of the Legislature in 1792, when he and Robert Alexander secured a charter for the Kentucky River Improvement Company, as a result of which the Kentucky River was locked and dammed to provide transportation to the coal fields. Lock and Dam No. 5 were on the land of Col. William Steele. Agnes Steele, a daughter of Col. William, became the wife of Col. Zach White, and they in turn were the grandparents of Agnes Morancy McKee. Col. Zach White was a member of the Legislature in 1840, and his son, Zach, Jr., served with Morgan's army during the war between the states and died while sheriff of Woodford County.

The five children of Dr. John Robert McKee and wife were; James and Frank, who comprise the firm of McKee Brothers; Dr. E. M. McKee, a physician at Lexington; Elizabeth, wife of T. Vernon Foreman, of Lexington; and Agnes, the wife of Dr. John W. Gilbert, of Lawrenceburg, Kentucky. The late Doctor McKee was never interested in politics. His parents were Presbyterians, but he became affiliated with the Catholic Church with his wife at Versailles, Kentucky.

Jeremiah James Reagan. It is a compliment worthily bestowed to say that the City of Lexington is honored by the citizenship of Jeremiah J. Reagan, who for over thirty years has been connected with the police department of that city, seventeen years of that time as chief of the department. He has achieved definite success through his own efforts and is thoroughly deserving of the proud American title of a self-made man, a term that must appeal to all who are appreciative of our national institutions and the privileges afforded here for individual accomplishment.

Jeremiah James Reagan was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and is the seventh child in order of birth of the nine children who were born to Cornelius and Margaret (Donohoe) Reagan. These parents were born and reared in County Cork, Ireland, where they were married and some time later they came to the United States, the long trip across the ocean in a slow-going sailing vessel being characterized by severe storms. They landed at New York City in the early '50s, whence they came by the Pennsylvania Canal and the Ohio River to Louisville, Kentucky. They first located in Bourbon County, where Cornelius Reagan engaged in railroad construction work as a contractor up to the close of the Civil war, when he turned his attention to farming in Bourbon and Fayette counties, following that vocation during the remainder of his active life. In politics he gave his support to the democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Roman Catholic Church. He and his wife are both deceased, he dying in 1880, when eighty years of age, and her death occurring ten years later.

Jeremiah J. Reagan received his education in the public schools, his boyhood days being spent on his father's farm. His first employment was as a shipping clerk for the C. F. Brower Company, with whom he remained for several years. In 1888 he was appointed a member of the Lexington Police Force, serving as a patrolman for about eleven years, when he was promoted to a captaincy. In 1903 he was appointed chief of the Lexington Police Department, and so eminently satisfactory has been his performance of the duties of that office that he has been retained during all the subsequent years. Chief Reagan's record is one of which he has just reason for pride, and throughout Kentucky he is regarded as one of the very best police chiefs in active service, his long retention in this position testifying to the esteem in which he is held in his own city.

Politically Jeremiah J. Reagan has always been a supporter of the democratic party, while his religious membership is with the Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus. Personally he is a man of genial disposition, popular among his associates and ever standing firmly not only for the enforcement of law but also for all things which contribute to the advancement of the community along all legitimate lines.

Asa Morrison Hall. The life of Asa M. Hall, well-known attorney of Lexington, has been one of hard study and research from his youth and since maturity of laborious professional duty, and the high position which he has attained in the profession to which he belongs is evidence that the qualities which he possesses afford the means of distinction under a system of government in which places of honor and usefulness are open to all who may be worthy of them.

Asa Morrison Hall was born on his father's farm in Harrison County, Kentucky, on August 5, 1886, and is the son of James W. and Mollie (Wolf) Hall. Both of his parents, who are still living, are natives of Harrison County, the father having been born on December 1, 1858, and the mother on February 9, 1862. They were married on February 10, 1881, and their union has been blessed in the birth of seven children, as follows: Lena, the wife of J. L. Bales, of Lexington, and the mother of three children, Alexander, Fannie May and Virginia; James V.; Asa M., the immediate subject of this sketch; Fannie May, who died at the age of seventeen years; Mary Elizabeth, the wife of Ira Brown, of Des Moines, Iowa; Lucile; and Lillian, who is the wife of James Pool, of Lexington, and they have a son, James, Jr. James W. Hall, the father, received his educational training in the common schools of Harrison County, and up to the age of eighteen years he followed the vocation of farming and stock trading. Since that time he has been engaged in the retail grocery business in Lexington and has been successful in his business affairs. Politically he is a democrat, while he and his wife embrace the religious faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The paternal grandfather, Volney Hall, and his wife were both natives of Harrison County, where he followed farming and stock raising. He was a democrat in his political alignment and stood high in the community in which he lived. To him and his wife were born eight children, of whom James W. Hall was the second in order of birth.

Asa M. Hall attended the public schools of Harrison County and the City of Lexington, and then entered the law department of the University of Kentucky, where he took a special course. He had read law aside from his university work, one of his preceptors having been Judge Charles Kerr. He was admitted to the bar in 1912, and after spending one year in the law office of Allen & Duncan he entered upon the practice on his own account and has been eminently successful as a general practitioner. He has been connected with much of the important litigation in the local courts and has earned a wide reputation as a safe and sound counsellor. A pleasing, earnest and forceful speaker, he makes a strong impression on court and jury and has won many hard-fought cases. Mr. Hall is a member of the Fayette County Bar Association and the Kentucky State Bar Association. Fraternally he is a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, into which none are admitted except one-hundred-per-cent Americans, and to the Fraternal Brotherhood, as well as the Columbian Union, in which he holds the office of grand magus. Politically he is an earnest supporter of the democratic party. He has achieved a splendid record at the bar at an age when many men are just starting out on their real life work, for from the beginning he has been intensely methodical and unswervingly persistent in his search of the essentials of the legal foundations, therefore the public recognition and appreciation which are accorded him have been richly earned.

Chester Dorland Adams. There is no member of the Fayette County bar who occupies a higher position in the esteem of the people than Chester D. Adams, of Lexington. During his years of practice he has built up a large clientele and is regarded as an exceedingly safe counsellor in all matters pertaining to legal questions—in fact, as a lawyer he is easily the peer of any of his professional brethren. Not only is he well versed in the law, but he is a close observer of the trend of the times and an intelligent student of the great questions and issues upon which the best thought of the world is centered.

Chester Dorland Adams is a native son of the old Blue Grass State, having been born in Henry County, Kentucky, on the 4th day of October, 1883. He is the son of Henry S. and Alice D. (Reese) Adams, both of whom also were natives of Henry County. Henry S. Adams was born May 13, 1839, and his death occurred on June 24, 1916. He spent all his life in Henry County, where he was reared and where his early days were spent on the home farm. He was educated in the common schools and taught for eight or ten years in the earlier part of his life. In 1882 he was made school commissioner of Henry County and served two years. Later he engaged in farming and tobacco raising, in which he was successful. During the administration of President Benjamin Harrison he served as postmaster at Eminence, Kentucky, one term. On the 14th of February, 1882, he was married to Alice D. Reese, who was born on November 1, 1842, and survives her husband. Chester D. Adams is the only fruit of that union.

Henry S. Adams was deeply interested in Free Masonry, in which he was an active member and worker for over half a century. May 17, 1915, the fiftieth anniversary of his initiation into Free Masonry was celebrated by Eminence Lodge No. 282, and was one of the most noted events in the history of Masonry in this section of the country. Three noteworthy facts were emphasized at that time, namely, that Mr. Adams was the oldest man in the lodge, the oldest member of the lodge and that he had been a member of the lodge continuously for fifty years, or from the night of his initiation. On that occasion the master's degree was exemplified by his son, Chester D., of this sketch, who also delivered the lecture accompanying the degree. Mr. Adams gave a reminiscent address, covering his experiences in Masonry for a half century and other addresses were made by fellow members and visitors from other cities.

In further reference to the Masonic record of Mr. Adams it seems entirely consonant at this time to reproduce the address sent to the members of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky Royal Arch Masons on the occasion of Mr. Adams' death:

"Eminence, Ky., July 3, 1916.

"To the Officers and Companions of the Grand and Subordinate Chapters of the State of Kentucky, and to All Royal Arch Masons:

"Companions—It becomes my painful duty to announce the death of Excellent Companion Henry S. Adams, Grand Master of the Third Vail, which occurred at his home June 24, 1916.

"Companion Adams was born in Henry County, Kentucky, May 13, 1839, and was married to Miss Alice Reese February 14, 1882.

"He was initiated as an Entered Apprentice May 22, 1865, in Eminence Lodge No. 282. He was elected and installed as master of that lodge in 1873, and served in such office about seventeen years.

"He was made a Royal Arch Mason in Todd Chapter No. 88, at Christiansburg, Kentucky, in 1874, and in the same year demitted for the purpose of organizing Eminence Chapter No. 121, at Eminence, Kentucky. He served as Secretary while the chapter was working under dispensation, and was elected captain of the host in 1875, and in 1876 was elected high priest, a position he held with that chapter for thirty-five years, and was continuously high priest of that chapter, except two years, during which time he voluntarily retired to permit other companions to pass the chairs.

"He later took the degrees of Royal and Select Master in J. P. Foree Council in 1874. Later this council surrendered its charter, after it had been removed to Eminence, but was revived in 1904. He served five years as thrice illustrious master.

"He became a member of the Order of High Priesthood in Louisville, Kentucky, in October, 1876, and for the past nine years had been an officer in that order.

"At the time of his death he was king of Eminence Chapter No. 121; secretary of Eminence Lodge No. 282, and recorder of J. P. Foree Council.

"He served as Superintendent of County Schools in Henry County; was postmaster at Eminence under the Harrison administration, and at the time of his death was City Assessor of Eminence and Registrar of Vital Statistics.

"His fiftieth anniversary as a Mason was observed a short time ago by his lodge, in which celebration all the Masonic organizations of Henry County joined.

"In 1915 he was appointed by the Grand High Priest of Kentucky as Grand Master of the Third Vail of the Grand Chapter of Kentucky, and held that position at the time of his death.

"Companion Adams was an exceptionally bright Mason. He was studious, thoughtful, and well informed upon all Masonic traditions and history. He was a sturdy oak in the forest of Masonry, and he bore his part at all times with courage, courtesy and fortitude.

"He was a constant attendant at the Grand Lodge each year for nearly a half century, and had been just as regular in his attendance in the Grand Chapter for more than thirty-five years. His familiar face will be missed by his Brothers and Companions, and his memory will endure for all time.

"It is my order that this memorial be read at the first convocation of each subordinate chapter after its receipt, and be either copied in or attached to the minutes of such convocation.

"JOHN W. JUETT,
"Grand High Priest."

Chester D. Adams received his educational training in private schools at Eminence, Kentucky, and then engaged in the reading of law in the office of Turner & Turner at New Castle, Kentucky. He then entered the law department of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and in 1909 he was admitted to the bar of Kentucky at Owenton. In 1912 Mr. Adams came to Lexington and engaged in the practice of his profession in association with Judge D. Gray Falconer. Two years later he became associated with John R. Allen and H. T. Duncan, in 1915 became a partner of C. L. Williamson, under the firm name of Williamson & Adams, but since 1916 has been alone in the practice. As a lawyer Mr. Adams evinces a familiarity with legal principles and a ready perception of facts, together with the ability to apply the one to the other, which has won him the reputation of a safe and sound practitioner, his years of conscientious work having brought with them not only increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment, the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession.

Politically Mr. Adams gives his support to the republican party, while his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. He belongs to the Columbian Union, the Lexington Bar Association, the Kentucky State Bar Association, the American Bar Association and the Commercial Law League of America. He is also a member of the Lions Club. He is an earnest member of the Masonic order, his father having conferred upon him the Entered Apprentice degree in Eminence Lodge No. 282 on October 4, 1904. He is a past master of that lodge and is an honorary member of Lexington Lodge No. 1. He is also past high priest of Lexington Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; holds membership in Washington Council No. 1, Royal and Select Masters; in Webb Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, of which he is the present captain general; in the Grand Consistory of Scottish Rite Masons (thirty-second degree) of Kentucky, and in Oleika Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of which he is the present illustrious potentate. On September 1, 1918, Mr. Adams was located at Camp Gordon in the infantry service and was attached to different companies while there and served until January 31, 1919, when he secured his discharge. Personally he is genial and approachable and is a popular member of the circles in which he moves. He has taken a public-spirited interest in the welfare of the community, giving his unreserved support to every legitimate movement for the material, civic or moral advancement of the people.

Richard Joseph Colbert. Owing to his extensive connection with public affairs in Lexington and Fayette County for many years, the name of Richard J. Colbert needs no formal introduction to the readers of this work who reside in that section of the state. In a straightforward, conservative manner he has ever sought to perform the duties of his official position and as a progressive citizen, and his support has always been depended upon in the furtherance of any laudable movement having for its object the welfare of the general public.

Richard Joseph Colbert, the present master commissioner and receiver of the Fayette Circuit Court, was born in Fayette County on June 10, 1873, and is the son of William and Rose (McGlone) Colbert. William Colbert was born in the city of Limerick, Ireland, and his death occurred in Lexington, Kentucky, on January 13, 1910. For a number of years he was engaged in farming in Fayette County, and afterward served as a member of the Lexington Police Department. His wife was born in Fleming County, Kentucky, and is the daughter of John and Mary McGlone, and now resides in Lexington. These parents were married in Saint Peter's Catholic Church in Lexington on January 23, 1869, and became the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are living, namely: Richard J. (who is the third in order of birth), John, James, Mary (wife of Louis Vedder), Johanna, Nellie (wife of John C. Clancy) and William.

Richard J. Colbert received his education in Saint Paul's parochial school and Saint Catherine's Academy at Lexington, and then was a student in the State College of Kentucky (now the State University) at Lexington. For four years prior to 1897 Mr. Colbert was employed as a clerk in a grocery store, but on May 14, 1897, he was appointed deputy clerk of the Fayette Circuit Court by James C. Rogers, circuit clerk, serving in that position until January 3, 1910. On the latter date he was appointed by Circuit Judge

Herman A. Birkhead

Watts Parker as master commissioner and receiver of the Fayette Circuit Court for a term of six years. He then turned his attention to the study of law, entering the law departments of Transylvania University at Lexington, and later the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. On the death of Judge Parker, Mr. Colbert was re-appointed to the position of master commissioner and receiver by Circuit Judge Charles Kerr on March 17, 1911. On January 3, 1916, he was again appointed to that position by Judge Kerr, his present term expiring in 1922. On the 6th of October, 1913, Mr. Colbert was admitted to the bar at Williamstown, Kentucky. The position of which Mr. Colbert is the incumbent is an important and responsible one and he has so discharged his official duties that he has won the universal approbation of all who know him.

Politically Mr. Colbert maintains an independent attitude, preferring to cast his vote according to the dictates of his own judgment, regardless of political lines. He has taken a keen interest in public affairs, especially as pertaining to his community, and is now president of the Public Health Nursing Association, director and treasurer of the Associated Charities and director of the Boy Scouts. He is a member of the Board of Commerce and of the Kiwanis Club of Lexington. Fraternally he is a member of Blue Grass Council, Knights of Columbus, of which he was grand knight in 1916-17, and of Lexington Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His religious membership is in Saint Peter's Catholic Church, of which he is a member of the Board of Trustees.

On September 21, 1916, at Lexington, Mr. Colbert was married to Katharyn Florence Treacy, the daughter of Bernard J. and Mary Treacy, and they have become the parents of a son, Richard J. Colbert, Jr. Although a quiet and unassuming man, Mr. Colbert has contributed to the general advancement of the community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart have won for him the esteem and confidence of the circles in which he has moved.

William F. Klair. One of the most conspicuous figures in the legislative and political history of Kentucky in recent years, as well as a representative business man of Lexington, is he whose name heads this sketch, and who is too well known to the readers of this work to require any formal introduction here. Equally noted as a citizen whose useful career has conferred credit upon the state and whose marked abilities and sterling qualities have won for him much more than local repute, he holds today distinctive precedence in his community.

William F. Klair was born in Lexington, Kentucky, on December 14, 1874, and is the son of Henry M. and Barbara (Voltz) Klair. His father was born in Germany and died in 1902, at the age of seventy-four years, while his mother, who was a native of Indiana, died in 1899, when sixty-four years of age. They became the parents of nine children, of whom three are living, namely: Leattia, the wife of Jesam Weitzel, William F. and Emma. Henry M. Klair came to the United States in young manhood, making the journey by sailing vessel and landed at New York City. His first permanent location was in Versailles, Indiana, where he followed his trade, that of a tailor, for some years. Later he moved to Lexington, Kentucky, and there followed the same business up to the early '80s, when he moved to Louisville, Kentucky, and was there engaged in business during the remainder of his active life. He was a democrat in politics and was a man of many excellent qualities of mind and heart.

William F. Klair secured his educational training in Saint Paul's parochial school, Lexington, and his first employment was as a newsboy, at which he worked from the age of seven to fourteen years. In 1889 he was appointed a page in the State Legislature, was re-appointed in the session of 1891-2, and in 1894 was appointed page to the Speaker of the House. In the sessions of 1896-98 he was assistant sergeant-at-arms of the Senate. In November, 1899, Mr. Klair was elected on the democratic ticket as a member of the House of Representatives, and by successive re-elections served continuously until 1909. In 1911 he was elected State Railroad Commissioner, serving four years in that capacity, and in 1917 was again elected to the House of Representatives, serving one term.

Mr. Klair has ever since attaining his majority been active in his participation in political affairs, having at the age of twenty-one years been elected a member of the Fayette County Democratic Committee. In 1916 he was elected chairman of the Democratic joint city and county committee, and was also elected a member of the Democratic State Executive Committee from the Seventh Congressional District. In the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore in 1912 he served as assistant parliamentarian to the chairman, Ollie L. James.

In 1900 Mr. Klair engaged in the liquor business in Lexington, and in 1905 bought the Leland Hotel, which he conducted up to 1911. In 1912 he engaged in the general insurance business, under the firm name of Klair & Scott, in which he has met with splendid success, his agency being one of the best known in this community.

On November 15, 1900 Mr. Klair was married to Mayme Slavin, who was born and reared in Lexington, Kentucky, the daughter of Patrick and Mary (Hafey) Slavin, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Slavin was born in Ireland and was long engaged in the grocery business in Lexington. He served on the Common Council and also as a member of the Board of Aldermen. Politically, he was a democrat.

Mr. Klair is a man of great force of character and has usually been found in the lead when any movement has been on foot for the betterment of the city, county or state. Tenacious of his own rights, he respects the rights of others, and in the best sense of the term is a self-made man, having worked his way up to his present position solely by virtue of his innate ability and enterprise. Genial in disposition, he easily makes friends and enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and good will of his fellow citizens.

Herman A. Birkhead. While qualified for the profession of law twenty-five years ago, Herman A. Birkhead has been active in his profession only seventeen years, but in that time has taken high rank as a lawyer and as a member of the Owensboro bar.

He was born on a farm in Daviess County, Kentucky, April 7, 1870, son of Benjamin T. and Rosa (Williams) Birkhead, also natives of Daviess County. His paternal grandfather was James Birkhead, whose parents came to Kentucky from North Carolina. James Birkhead married a Miss Cottrell. Benjamin T. Birkhead was a farmer by occupation. He was a member of the Kentucky State Constitutional Convention in 1891, and after the ratification of that constitution served as a member of the Legislature for several terms, being elected as an independent candidate. Though deeply interested in public affairs and leaving his impress upon them, his home was always on a farm and farming was his vocation. He died at the age of sixty-six and his wife at the age of forty-six. She was a daughter of J. D. Williams, whose parents also came from North Carolina, and he was a farmer and Confederate soldier.

One of the family of two sons and one daughter, Herman A. Birkhead grew up on his father's farm. He graduated from Western Kentucky College, took a special course at Georgetown, and spent one year in the law school of the University of Michigan. He was admitted to the bar in 1895, but ill health obliged him to remain out of doors and he worked on the farm until 1903, when he began in earnest his professional career at Owensboro. Until 1911 he was associated in practice with R. E. Watkins, and since then his partner has been Hon. George S. Wilson. Mr. Birkhead was elected county attorney of Daviess County in 1913, and four years later was re-elected, so that he is now rounding out eight years of consecutive service with an enviable record for the impartial discharge of his duties. Mr. Birkhead is a democrat, a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, and belongs to the Baptist Church. In 1915 he married Miss Orabel Blanton Crockett.

Mr. Birkhead is not only a successful lawyer but is a representative and progressive citizen. In early manhood school teaching served him as a stepping stone to acquire an education. For seven terms he was employed in country schools. A man of democratic manner, frank and open in all his relations with his fellow men, he has hosts of friends and a large circle of acquaintances.

John Ambrose Geary. Kentucky has been especially honored in the character and career of her active men of industry and commerce. In every section have been found men born to leadership in the various vocations, men who have dominated because of their superior intelligence, natural endowment and force of character. It is always profitable to study such lives, weigh their motives and hold up their achievements as incentives to greater activity and higher excellence on the part of others. These reflections are suggested by the career of one who has forged his way to the front ranks of the favored few, and who, by a strong inherent force and superior business ability, directed and controlled by intelligence and judgment of a high order, has stood for many years as one of the leading men of his state. In this age of colossal enterprise and marked energy the prominent and successful men are those whose ambitions and abilities lead them into large undertakings and to assume the responsibilities and labors of their respective fields of endeavor. Success is methodical and consecutive, and it will be found that Mr. Geary's success has been attained by the same normal methods and means—determined application of mental and physical resources along a rightly defined line. He has long been a dominating power in public utilities as well as extensive private operations of a varied nature, achieving a position as one of the substantial capitalists of his section of the country, and he stands as an admirable type of the successful self-made man.

John Ambrose Geary was born near Newcastle West in County Limerick, Ireland, on the 24th day of June, 1841, and is the fourth in order of birth of the six children born to his parents, John David and Mary (Ambrose) Geary. His parents also were born and reared in County Limerick, the father having been born in 1804 and te mother in 1812. They are both now deceased, the father dying in 1875 and being survived a number of years by his widow, who passed away in 1890, at the age of seventy-eight years. Of their six children one died in infancy, one in mature life, and those surviving are as follows: Mary, the widow of James Roche; John A., the immediate subject of this sketch; Ellen, who resides in Chicago; Margaret, the widow of Philip Brady and now living in Denver, Colorado. John D. Geary followed farming in his native land, but in 1848 he came to the United States. He immediately took up railroad contracting, his first work being that part of the Kentucky Central Railway lying between Paris and Lexington, and which at that time was known as the Maysville Railroad, now controlled by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. He also built many miles of country roads and much stone fencing, and did much work of a constructive line and which contributed largely to the development of this state. He was an active and industrious man and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. Politically he was a democrat, and his religious faith was that of the Roman Catholic Church.

John A. Geary received his educational training in the public schools of Castlemahon in his native country, where he remained until 1854, when, at the age of thirteen years, he came to the United States. His first employment here was in driving a horse in excavating a cellar for a hotel in Paris, Kentucky, but later he learned the plumbing business. His private affairs were then interrupted by the outbreak of the war between the North and the South, and on April 27, 1861, he enlisted at Oxford, Mississippi, in what was then known as the University Grays, which eventually became a part of the Eleventh Mississippi Regiment. He was mustered in at Corinth, Mississippi, and his regiment became a part of the army under General Joseph E. Johnston, who was their commander-in-chief. They took part in the first battle of Bull Run, where General Bee lost his life. Here also Mr. Geary was wounded in the right knee by a spent ball, this being the only injury he received during his entire service. Next they took part in the battle of Seven Pines, or Fair Oaks, and here Mr. Geary was commissioned a second lieutenant, a first lieutenancy coming to him in 1863. Then followed the seven days fight before Richmond, the second battle of Bull Run and many other engagements and skirmishes, leading up to the great Battle of Gettysburg, after which the Southern forces retreated in order and later fought the battle at Gaines Mill, having withheld the rush of Grant's troops, who eventually were compelled to withdraw, with a loss of 10,000 men. The army then went to Petersburg, Virginia, which they fortified and were engaged in the terrific fighting which preceded the surrender at Appomattox. Mr. Geary proved a faithful and valiant soldier and retired from the service with the rank of a captain.

At the conclusion of the great American conflict Captain Geary's first thought was to give his military experience to aid the liberating movement in the land of his birth. Through his exertions a fine circle of the Fenian Brotherhood was formed in Lexington, Kentucky, and under his direction it became one of the most efficient in the organization. He made early application to be placed on the roll for military service, and when called upon he promptly reported in New York, fully prepared for duty, without the expense of a dollar to the general organization. He went to Ireland, and on his arrival was assigned to duty in Limerick. A short time previous to the "Habeas Corpus Suspension Act," in February, 1866, he was ordered to Dublin. When the Government coup'd' etat took place, on the 17th of that month, several of the Irish-Americans were at once arrested in their lodgings. Luckily for Captain Geary he had left his lodgings early that morning. During his absence three of his fellow-officers, who stayed at the same house, were arrested, on being informed of which the Captain determined to go southward by the evening train. Arriving at the railroad depot, he found several policemen and detectives on the lookout for "suspects." This brought his quick wit into play. Touching with his foot a large trunk lying on the platform, he authoritatively inquired for its owner; that individual appearing, he was ordered to open the trunk at once, and the assumed detective occupied himself busily examining its contents until the train was just starting, when, having expressed himself satisfied that it contained nothing "contraband," he coolly stepped on board the train, as if for the purpose of watching or examining parties thereon, and was carried off from under the very noses of her Majesty's vigilant detectives.

The second day following found Captain Geary in the streets of Newcastle, County Limerick, where a rencontre occurred, in which Geary's decisive, soldierly traits were well illustrated. A six-foot sergeant of police, named Sullivan, observing Captain Geary alone in the vicinity of the barrack, thought it a favorable opportunity to distinguish and recommend himself for the long-coveted sub-inspectorship, by capturing single-handed one of those detested "propagandists of American ideas." Confidently walking up to the Captain, he claimed him as the Queen's prisoner; but this was a slight miscalculation. Geary had gone to Ireland prepared for such little contingencies. He did not think an Irish-American officer, who had faced death on so many bloody fields, should be captured on the streets of his native town by a solitary "peeler"; the combined honor of Limerick and old Kentucky forbade it. So, drawing his revolver, he, not caring to kill the fellow, sent a bullet through the shoulder of the aspiring sergeant. The first shot not disabling him, another near the same spot leveled him and then, after a single glance in the direction of the barrack, the Captain made for the neighboring mountains. The effect of Captain Geary's lesson was that the police thereafter always went in squads when attempting the capture of a Fenian officer, especially if he wore "square-toed boots."

On arriving in the mountains Captain Geary received temporary shelter in a turf-stack, provisions being conveyed to him at night. After the lapse of a few days he was provided with more comfortable quarters in the house of one of those patriotic Irish priests who form the great majority of the clergy of the people, the acts and assertions of the "Queen's ecclesiastics" on the one hand, and flippant, ignorant, self-proclaimed atheistical freethinkers on the other, to the contrary notwithstanding. In Captain Geary's case the character of the true Irish priesthood was nobly sustained, for, knowing his history, and honoring the bravery and humanity displayed in the action which caused him to be proclaimed an outlaw, with a price on his head, he was for the six weeks during which he remained in Ireland after the event sheltered exclusively by members of their order. He attended a funeral in their company in the guise of a priest, and finally left Ireland as a youthful missionary, being accompanied by several of his clerical friends on board the ship, who left him with fervent prayers for his safety. The pistols, which, stood him in such good need, he left in charge of a priest until the time arrives when they can be again used in the good cause of liberty and fatherland.

Captain Geary arrived safely in New York in the latter part of April, when he at once reported to John O'Mahony. Some members of the Canadian party, then maturing their plans for the raid across the frontier, meeting the Captain, offered him a colonel's command in the expedition. Not wishing to identify himself with that party, he declined the proffered honor; but, on relating the occurrence, "he expressed," says an informant, "the intention of taking part in the movement should it be actually made, as, well knowing from recent experience, that a successful rising in Ireland was impossible for some time, he was willing to devote part of the interim in striking a blow at the upholders of the 'Felon flag' whenever an opportunity offered."

After his return home, Captain Geary organized a company of fifty men in Lexington, which joined with two other companies, making a body of about two hundred men, Captain Geary being captain of his company. On May 31, 1866, the Captain and his men crossed the frontier at Buffalo, New York, and entered Erie, Canada. On June 1st they fought the battle of Ridgeway, which they won, and then returned to Erie. There they had a battle with troops in considerable numbers who has just been disembarked. The battle went against the English, many of whom were killed and the rest captured. The expedition was commanded by General John O'Neill. The odds were heavily against them, the British having a large force of regular troops, comprising infantry, cavalry and artillery. Before daylight the following morning General O'Neill and his force were put on board a scow and, towed by a steam tug, were taken across the Niagara River, where they were captured by the United States Steamer "Michigan." At that time there was a large force of Fenians at Buffalo, including a regiment of about a thousand men from Chicago, all well equipped for a campaign, but they were completely blocked by the United States Government on this side and watchful British troops across the frontier, so they could do nothing. Also, President Johnson placed an embargo on the troops leaving the United States, which settled the matter as far as they were concerned. Among Captain Geary's prized possessions is the flag that was presented to him at Ashland, Kentucky, on August 15, 1865, prior to his leaving for Ireland, the meeting being presided over by Hon. John F. Finnety, of Chicago, while among those present were Judge James Fitzgerald, of Cincinnati, and other prominent Irish-American citizens.

After passing through the varied and somewhat exciting experiences of the past almost six years, Captain Geary now returned to Lexington and turned his attention to more peaceful pursuits. He resumed the plumbing business, in which he had been engaged at the outbreak of the Civil war, and somewhat later became associated in that business with James M. Roche, under the firm name of Geary & Roche. They were eminently successful in their business affairs and, widening their scope of operations, they formed the Kentucky Water Heating and Illuminating Company. The charter for this company, which was granted by the Kentucky Legislature, was prepared by Mr. Roche and has been said to be one of the best corporation charters ever granted in this state. This company entered upon the construction of water works plants, building them at Somerset and Harrodsburg, Kentucky, as well as other places. Subsequently Captain Geary himself built the water works at Nihcolsville, Kentucky, and organized the Nicholsville Water Works Company, of which he is still the president. He also built the gas works at Mount Sterling, Georgetown, Shelbyville and Danville, Kentucky.

The Captain has for many years been heavily interested in mountain lands, having first acquired large holdings in 1878, in what is now McCreary County, in the southern part of the state, on which he developed extensive coal mining interests. At one time he owned twenty thousand acres of this land, but has reduced his holdings at the present time to about eight thousand acres. He also built a number of saw-mills, and his lumber interests have been extensive and profitable—in fact, everything the Captain has given his attention to in a business way has proven a good investment, a marked testimonial to his business sagacity and sound judgment. In another field also Captain Geary has proven a man of good judgment, having been a pioneer in the development of the oil business in Kentucky. He is the owner of extensive oil interests and has been enterprising and progressive in his activities along this line, among his acts being the construction of thirty-five miles of pipe line. His oil, coal and lumber interests are now mainly in McCreary, Pulaski and Wayne counties. The Court House in McCreary County now stands on land which he at one time owned. Thus in many ways has Captain Geary been a potent factor in the development of the resources of Kentucky, and the prosperity which has attended his efforts has been richly merited.

Politically Captain Geary has been a life-long supporter of the democratic party and has taken an intelligent interest in public affairs, though he has never been a seeker after public office, in spite of the importunities of his friends and others who realized his qualifications for almost any office within the gift of the people. Eminently public spirited, he has always been a warm supporter of every movement for the advancement of the public welfare along material, civic or moral lines, and his influence has always been on the side of right.

One June 14, 1869, Captain Geary was married to Ellen Ahern, who was born and reared in Cincinnati, Ohio, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Ahern, both of whom were natives of Ireland and are now deceased. Of the eleven children born to this worthy couple Mrs. Geary is the second in order of birth. To Captain and Mrs. Geary have been born ten children, as follows: Mary. Katharine is the widow of Dr. Frank Simpson and the mother of one son, Frank. The latter was in the military service of his country during the late World war, being a member of the Fourth Regiment of United States Regulars, which formed a part of the Third Division. His last active service at the front was in the Argonne drive, but at the time of the signing of the armistice he was attending a military school in the southern part of France. Col. John T., who graduated from the University of Kentucky, has been in the United States regular army for twenty-two years. During the World war he was on detached service, being detailed as drill master in the organization and training of three artillery regiments. He married Ellchen Slaughter and they have three children, John Ambrose, Florence and Jerome. William J. married May Kendrick and they have a daughter, Jane Allen. Edward married Constance Clark and they are the parents of three chldren, Kathleen, Edward and Robert. Robert, who lives in Seattle, Washington, married Ruth Allen and they have a daughter, Bettie. Ellen is the wife of Paul Weitzel, of Akron, Ohio, and they have three children, Catharine, Sonney and Paul. Thomas, who lives in Lexington, married Legrand Scott and they have two children, Legrand and Judith. Florence is the wife of Thomas Scott, who is engaged in the insurance business in Lexington, and they have two sons, Joseph and Thomas. Ambrose graduated from the Lexington High School and Thomas College in Kentucky and is now in the United States army, a captain on detached service with the South Dakota State School of Mines.

William H. Wilson, world renowned horseman and at one time owner of the Abdallah Park Farm in Fayette County, was born in Whiteside County, Illinois, November 5, 1837, and died in a Cincinnati hospital July 14, 1892, but the credit for his career belongs to the State of Kentucky, where he spent most of his active years. At the age of fifteen he left his home on a flatboat to seek his fortunes in Arkansas. In 1861 he was in Lexington, Kentucky, where he met Miss Annie Cook, whom he married in 1862. He lived at various places, always interested in the trotting horse, until 1873, when he permanently located in Kentucky. He first leased a place opposite Henry Clay's old home and named it Ashland Park. This was the scene of his earliest successes. One of his earliest exhibitions of the qualities that brought him into prominence as a successful breeder was the introduction to that farm of the famous stallion, George Wilkes, in 1873. Three years later he bought a large tract of land near Cynthiana, which became famous under the name Abdallah Park. It was the home of from 100 to 150 blooded horses, including some that are known to every follower of the turf and track twenty-five or thirty years ago, such as Lady de Jarnette, McKinney, New York Central, Simmons, Sultan.

Mr. Wilson was the first president of the Queen City Driving Club, serving two terms, was president and secretary of the Kentucky Trotting and Breeding Association, of which he was the organizer in 1873, and one of its directors at the time of his death, and was also president of the Abdallah Park Association. He died before he was fifty-five years of age, but he had lived a strenuous and productive life. He was an indefatigable worker, and he followed his string of horses all over the United States, and in his search of the purest and best blood went abroad as far as Egypt.

William H. Wilson's wife, Annie Cook, was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, June 19, 1838, and is still living, making her home with Mr. and Mrs. McAdams at Lexington. She was the mother of three children, and the two now living are Laura, wife of R. B. James, in Oregon, and Mrs. McAdams. Annie Cook was a daughter of Stephen B. and Lydia (Beecher) Cook, both natives of Pennsylvania. Of their twelve children nine reached mature years, but Mrs. Wilson is the only one now living.

Harry Kennett McAdams. While actively associated for a number of years with Kentucky's trotting horse industry with his father-in-law, the noted Kentucky horseman W. H. Wilson, Harry Kennett McAdams for a quarter of a century has been in the drug business at Lexington and he and his partner, J. W. Morford, are the oldest merchants in that line in the city today from the standpoint of consecutive service.

He was born at Williamsburg, Clermont County, Ohio, December 10, 1865, son of Oliver Perry and Mary Elizabeth Boulware McAdams. Oliver Perry McAdams was born at Williamsburg January 31, 1836, and died August 7, 1870, being the son of John and Mary E. (Bryant) McAdams. Oliver P. McAdams on December 1, 1858, married Mary E. Boulware, who was born July 11, 1839, and died October 29, 1884, a daughter of William and Melinda (Fisk) Boulware. Of the five children of Oliver P. McAdams and wife two died in infancy and three are still living: Albert C., of Fayetteville, Arkansas; Harry K., who was the fourth in age; and Lillie F. Oliver Perry McAdams enlisted August 13, 1861, in the 27th Regiment of Ohio Infantry, serving with the Regimental Band until August 7, 1862. Later he re-enlisted and was commissioned a second lieutenant in Company G of the 153rd Ohio National Guard, and was with this command in all its service until honorably discharged September 9, 1864. He was a cabinet maker by trade, and followed that occupation until his death.

Harry Kennett McAdams acquired a public school education at Williamsburg, and at the age of sixteen began traveling about over the country selling goods. At the age of nineteen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the drug business at Arkadelphia, Arkansas, was there about two years, and then became manager of the drug store at Hope, Arkansas. Two years later he moved to Cynthiana, Kentucky, where he became associated with his father-in-law, William H. Wilson, owner of the famous Abdallah Park and the home of some of the greatest horses ever bred in old Kentucky. A more complete account of W. H. Wilson is given elsewhere. After the death of Mr. Wilson in 1892 Mr. McAdams sold the farm and most of the horses and in 1894 moved to Fayette County, where he continued in the same business until 1896, operating the noted Orchard Park farm. He then became associated with J. W. Morford in the drug business, and has now been in the drug business at Lexington longer than any other individual or firm. He is also vice president of the First and City National Bank. Mr. McAdams has never cared for the responsibilities or honors of public office, and is independent in partisan politics. He is a past master of Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., a member of Lexington Chapter, R. A. M., is past eminent commander of Webb Commandery No. 2, K. T., and a member of Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

May 23, 1888, he married Ednah Wilson, a native of Cynthiana, Kentucky. They have four children: Gladys W., who is supervisor of arts for the public schools of Lexington; William Henry, whose distinguished military career is noted below; Oliver Kennett, who was a member of Base Hospital Unit No. 40, served overseas in England, returning to the United States in April, 1919, and is now a student of the Medical School of the University of Michigan; and Annie Elizabeth, a graduate of the University of Kentucky and recently appointed state dietitian of the seven state institutions.

Capt. William Henry McAdams was educated in Transylvania University and the University of Kentucky, receiving the Bachelor and Master's degrees of Science at the University of Kentucky, and in 1917 graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston as Chemical Engineer. January 26, 1918, he was commissioned a first lieutenant, and July 19, 1919, was promoted to captain. While in the army he was with the development division of the chemical warfare service, and for several months was chief executive to Col. F. M. Dorsey, chief of the Development Division. He was one of the five men entrusted with the secret process of the manufacture of a destructive gas in a plant at Willoughby, near Cleveland. This gas was perfected and its manufacture begun, but its destructive effects were never in evidence, since the armistice was signed before it could be employed. While the secret is carefully guarded, enough publicity has been released to permit the statement that this gas of American manufacture is far more destructive than any ever devised by the Germans or the Allies. Captain McAdams, who had served as a chemical engineer in the Akron Rubber Company before he entered the plant at Willoughby, Ohio, was, like his companions, exposed to constant danger and risk while perfecting and handling the gas. Since his release from the army he has engaged in his profession as a consulting engineer at Boston, and is also a professor in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Captain McAdams married Helen Heckert.

James Maurice Roche. One of the most conspicuous figures in the recent history of the State of Kentucky is James M. Roche, too well known to the readers of this work to need any formal introduction here, a man actively identified with the business interests of Lexington and widely known as one of the representative citizens of the state. Mr. Roche's extensive busines interests are but the legitimate fruitage of consecutive effort, directed and controlled by good judgment and correct business principles, while in all phases of community life he has ever stood firmly for those things which advance the general welfare of the people.

James Maurice Roche was born near Harrodsburg, Mercer County, Kentucky, on March 31, 1858, and is the second in order of birth and the only survivor of the four children born to his parents, Maurice and Johanna (Mahoney) Roche. Both of these parents were born in County Limerick, Ireland, and both are deceased, the father dying in 1866, at the age of thirty-five years, and being survived many years by his widow, who died in 1912, at the age of eighty years. Maurice Roche came to the United States by sailing ship in the early '50s, landing in New York City, where he remained for a short time, coming thence to Lexington, where his marriage occurred. His first employment here was as a laborer on the turnpikes and afterward he became a builder of stone fences. Eventually he became a contractor in the building of turnpikes, in which he was successful. He moved to Mercer County, and during the period of the Civil war lived at Foxtown, Madison, County, Kentucky, subsequently returning to Lexington, where he spent the closing years of his life. He was a democrat in his political views and in religious faith was a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

James Maurice Roche received his elementary education in the parochial schools and completed his studies in Transylvania University. In 1874 he became connected with Capt. John A. Geary in the plumbing business, the firm eventually becoming known as Geary & Roche. They remained in the business for about ten years, and then they engaged in the construction of water works, under the firm name of the Kentucky Water Heating and Illuminating Company. During this period they built the water works plants at Somerset and Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and other places. In 1903 they engaged in the installation of steam and hot water heating systems, for which they secured from the Legislature one of the most comprehensive and complete charters ever granted by the State of Kentucky. This charter was prepared by Mr. Roche, who still owns it and operates under its provisions. Mr. Roche, by close attention to business and the exercise of sound judgment and discrimination, has been prosperous in his material affairs and has accumulated a comfortable share of this world's goods.

Politically he has always been a democrat in his normal alignment, and in 1896 he was for a short time a member of the Democratic Committee, but because of his refusal to support William Jennings Bryan and his free-silver ideas he was removed from the committee. Subsequently he became chairman of the National Gold Democratic Committee, the nominees of whose party were Palmer and Buckner for President and Vice President, but Mr. Roche cast his vote that year for William McKinley, as did thousands of other conscientious democrats who placed national welfare above party politics. At the present time Mr. Roche supports the democratic party, with strong opinions on states rights, and is a member of the League for the Preservation of the Constitution.

Mr. Roche is widely recognized as one of the best informed men living on the history of Kentucky and is the owner of the largest collection of published works, maps and manuscripts of any private library. He is a close and profound student of world history in all periods, and possesses a number of valuable and interesting old works which are now entirely out of print. Among the valuable works pertaining to this section of the country he has Imlay's "Topographical Description of the West," including John Filson's, 1797; Marshall's, 1824; Butler's, 1836; Collins', 1847 and 1874; Allen's, 1870; and Smith's, 1888. Also, "History of Fayette County," 1882, by William H. Perrin and Doctor Peter. Two other valuable works in Mr. Roche's collection are Keating's "History of Ireland," published in 1738, and Rafinesque's "Medical Botany" and casual works, 1838. Mr. Roche has read all of these works and is thoroughly informed on all phases of not only Kentucky history but also that of the contiguous states and is a most interesting and instructive conversationalist on these subjects.

On the 11th day of August, 1881, Mr. Roche was married to Alice George, who was born and reared in Fayette County, Kentucky, and whose death occurred in 1912. To them was born a son, John George. Mr. Roche's life history exhibits a career of unswerving integrity, indefatigable private industry and wholesome social relations—the record of a well-balanced constitution, strongly marked by those traits of character which are of special value in such a state of society as exists in this country.

Charles Henry Berryman. It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs who makes the real history of a community, and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The examples such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, and there is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting even in a casual way to their achievements in advancing the interests of their community and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which tell so much for the prosperity of their locality. In setting forth the life record of Charles Henry Berryman sufficient will be said to show that he is numbered among the enterprising and progressive citizens and representative men of his section of Kentucky, for in his career have been exhibited those qualities which ever make for success, and as the result of such a life he has long been one of the best known, most influential and highly esteemed citizens of Fayette County.

Charles Henry Berryman was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, on February 27, 1867, and is the son of John G. C. and Helen J. (Cooper) Berryman. The father was born in New York City on December 27, 1830, the son of Upshur and Maria (Coster) Berryman, representatives of old and aristocratic families of wealth and prominence in the East. At the age of fifteen, after the death of his parents, he came to Kentucky and entered old Center College in Danville, graduating in 1848, in the same class with the late Dr. Lyman Beecher Tood, Bethel Veach, of Louisville, and Robert Breckinridge, of Danville. For a number of years after entering upon the active affairs of life he followed agricultural pursuits, but in 1885 came to Lexington and engaged in the grocery business, in which he retained his interest up to the time of his death, on June 10, 1920, in the ninetieth year of his age. Politically Mr. Berryman gave his support to the democratic party, though he never sought public office. He was christened in Trinity Church, New York City, and was a member of Christ Church Cathedral of Lexington. Mr. Berryman married Helen J. Cooper, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1835, and was one of Lexington's most splendid women. Her death occurred in 1907. They became the parents of seven children, as follows: Edwin Upshur; Spencer Cooper, who married Anna Fowler and died at the age of twenty-nine years; John C., Jr., who died at the age of thirty-five years, had married Willie Fowler, and they had two daughters; Charles Henry, the immediate subject of this sketch; Mary B., the wife of David B. Day, of Canton, Ohio; D. C. married Daisy DeLong and is now living in Saint Louis, Missouri; Streslhley, who died at the age of twenty-nine years.

Charles H. Berryman attended private schools in his youth, and then became a student in Kentucky University. On leaving college he became a clerk in the Fayette National Bank, where he remained about five years, and then for two years was connected with the grain business. He then became cashier of the Appalachia Bank at Big Stone Gap, Virginia, but two years later resigned and returned to Lexington to become traveling salesman for the Lexington Roller Flour Mills, with whom he remained for about seven years. He then became a department chief in the United States Internal Revenue office in Lexington, retaining that position for about seven years. In March, 1904, Mr. Berryman became manager for the extensive interests of J. B. Haggin in Fayette County, and also took over the management in Kentucky of H. P. Whitney's business, both of these gentlemen being widely known as among the leading turfmen of the country. In 1915 Mr. Berryman was appointed postmaster of Lexington, succeeding F. Clay Elkin after the latter's death, and holding the office for about two years. Since 1905 he has been personally interested in the thoroughbred horse business and is the owner of "Ballot," one of America's most noted sires. This noble horse has the wonderful record of being winner of the Double Event, Neptune, Matron, Iroquois, Invincible, Great Republic, Century (twice) First and Second Specials, Election Day Handicap, Edgemere, Standard, Advance (twice), Equality and Suburban Handicap, winning $154,602 in America, and also won the Select Stakes at Newmarket England, beating "Valens Succour" and "St. Victrix." "Ballot" was third of the twenty leading sires in 1919, the record of his winning progeny being as follows: Number of horses, 47; starts, 656; firsts, 117; seconds, 102; thirds, 101; unplaced, 336; winnings, $142,894.

Mr. Berryman is a member of the Kentucky Racing Association and has done probably as much as any other one man to elevate and maintain the highest standard of breeding of racing stock. In other ways he has been a potent factor in advancing the business prosperity of his community along various lines. Politically he is a republican.

On April 23, 1891, Mr. Berryman was married to Louisa Brownell, who was born in Little Compton, Rhode Island, the daughter of Frederick and Anna (Cogshall) Brownell, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. Berryman is the second child in order of birth of the five children born to her parents. Frederick Brownell was a lawyer by profession and spent practically his entire life in Little Compton. To Mr. and Mrs. Berryman have been born two children, Brownell, who will be referred to in a later paragraph, and Edith Church, who is attending Miss Wright's School for Young Ladies at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylanvia.

Brownell Berryman was born on November 8, 1893, and after completing the course in the public school he attended the University of Wisconsin. On the entrance of the United States into the World war he entered the Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, Indiana, and in August, 1917, was commissioned a second lieutenant. Later he was transferred to Camp Taylor at Louisville, Kentucky, and still later to the 149th Brigade at Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, where he was detailed as an aide to Brig.-Gen. Roger Williams. Later he was on the staff of Brig.-Gen. William Harvey, of the 75th Infantry Brigade, and on that of Brig-Gen. William Judson, of the 76th Infantry Brigade. In February, 1918, he received a commission as first lieutenant and in the following summer was transferred to Company H of the 149th Infantry Regiment, with which he embarked for overseas duty. They landed at Havre, France, in September, 1918, and soon afterward Lieutenant Berryman was assigned to the 58th Infantry Regiment. With his command he went into Germany, being located on the Moselle River, thence on to the Rhine, where they were quartered in the town of Medun, Germany. In February, 1919, Lieutenant Berryman was transferred to the 26th Division at Ecomoy, France, and on reporting at that place was assigned to the 102nd Infantry Regiment, with which he remained until the following April, when he returned to the United States and received his honorable discharge at Camp Devens, Massachusetts.

On December 27, 1919, Brownell Berryman was married to Evelyn Van Meter, the daughter of Solomon and Evelyn (Trentwope) Van Meter. Her father is a native of Kentucky, and her mother, who is deceased, was born in Virginia. They became the parents of five children, of whom Mrs. Berryman is the youngest. In April, 1920, Mr. Berryman engaged in the automobile business under the name of the Union Motor Company, Inc., of which corporation he is president. He is a man of many fine qualities of character and is universally popular in the community where his entire life has been spent.

Walnut Hall Stock Farm, located on the Iron Works Pike, eight miles north of Lexington, has long been famous as a nursery for thoroughbreds, and some of the greatest performers on the track have some of their life history centered at Walnut Hall.

Walnut Hall was established and was owned by the late L. V. Harkness, and its present proprietor is his son-in-law, Dr. O. M. Edwards, Jr., of Pittsburg. Mr. Harkness started the farm in 1903 with four hundred and fifty acres, and gradually expanded his holdings to more than thirty-seven hundred acres practically in one body, while there are fifteen hundred acres in Scott County, eleven miles away, serving as pasture land for the stock of Walnut Hall. During the time of Mr. Harkness the farm became noted not only for its trotting horses but also as the breeding ground for Hampshire sheep. A flock of fourteen hundred head was developed, many of the finest being exhibited and winning honors at state fairs and the International Stock Show at Chicago, and many sales have been made from the Walnut Hall flock to breeders all over the country, particularly to sheep men on the western ranges.

The stables at Walnut Hall contain a large number of brood mares and stallions, and their colts and yearlings are one of the eagerly sought attractions at big sales in the east and elsewhere.

One of Walnut Hall's great sires and racers was Fereno, by Moko, the first horse ever to win the Futurity both as a two and three year old, making the record of 2:17 as a two year old and 2:10¾ at three years. Fereno later set a record of 2:05½. Ozanam, bred at Walnut Hall, won the Transylvania race at Lexington in 2:07. Other great horses from Moko were Moel, 2:10¼, Lady Belle, the first two year old to trot a mile in less than 2:10, her record being 2:07¾; Real Lady, a champion two and three year old; and Selico, a Kentucky Futurity winner sold for a long price and sent to Europe, where he became a great winner and is now one of John Madden's stud at Lexington. The Harvester, sired by Walnut Hall, is still in the stud and shares the same record as Lu Princeton, another horse bred at Walnut Hall, both being the fastest living stallions and the latter still at Walnut Hall. The Harvester was sold as a three year old for nine thousand dollars before being trained, and later C. K. G. Billings paid fifty-five thousand dollars for him, and he is now in a stud at Terre Haute, Indiana. The world's fastest trotting stallion, The Axworthy, with a record of 1:58¼, was bred at Walnut Hall and sold as a colt, but his son, Guy Axworthy, is still at Walnut Hall, as is also Gaiety Lee, dam of The Axworthy. Another great horse owned at this stud farm is San Francisco, 2:07¾, sire of three of the fastest trotting stallions: Saint Frisco, 2:01¾; Lu Princeton, 2:01; and Chilcoot, 2:04¼. Manrico, 2:07¼, by Moko, set a record of 2:07¼ as a three year old and was in the Futurity in the fastest sixth heat ever raced. Foaled at Walnut Hall was Prince Loree, the fastest double gaited horse in the world, sold as a yearling and now owned by Captain David Shaw of Cleveland. His trotting record is 2:03¼, pacing record an even 2 minutes.

Walnut Hall Stock Farm is also noted for diversified production, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty cattle being fattened every season and about twice as many hogs, largely of the Duroc strain. About six hundred acres are in cultivation, and there has been harvested as high as twenty thousand bushels of Blue Grass seed. It is a great farm and great industry, employing from sixty to a hundred people.

L. V. Harkness died in January, 1915. His daughter Lela is the wife of Dr. O. M. Edwards, present proprietor of Walnut Farm.

The late Mr. Harkness considered it the greatest pleasure of his life to be at Walnut Hall, supervising improvements, working among the stock, and contemplating the varied attractions of the landscape. The closest confidence existed between him and Harry Burgoyne, superintendent of the farm, and that confidence was strikingly displayed when Mr. Harkness selected Mr. Burgoyne as his administrator of the estate.

Harry Burgoyne has given a full quarter of a century to his duties as superintendent of Walnut Hall Stock Farm. He entered the service of Mr. Harkness as superintendent in March, 1895. He was born at Washington in Mason County, Kentucky, in 1860, and was educated in high school, and for several years was associated with John Splan, a great racing man at Cleveland, and through him met Mr. Harkness. Mr. Burgoyne married at Fernley in Mason County Miss Blanche Norris.

Henry Cline. As one of the commissioners of the municipal government of Owensboro, Henry Cline is a notable citizen. He has lived at Owensboro for two decades, and achieved his best success in business affairs here.

He was born at Edmonton, Metcalfe County, Kentucky, October 6, 1869, son of George W. and Mildred (Piper) Cline, the former a native of McLean County, and the latter of Metcalfe County. The paternal grandparents, John and Margaret (Minger) Cline, came to Kentucky direct from the vicinity of Knoxville, Tennessee, and more remotely from Virginia. The maternal grandfather, Thomas Piper, who married a Miss Ferguson, came to Kentucky from Virginia. At the time of the Civil war he enlisted as a Union soldier and died in the service and was buried at Little Rock, Arkansas.

When Henry Cline was a year old his parents removed from Metcalfe to McLean County, and three years later located in Daviess County, where they reared their nine children on a farm. In that country environment Henry Cline grew up and acquired only a limited common school education. Leaving home at the age of eighteen, he has since steered his course relying upon his own good judgment, industry and native qualities of enterprise. Without capital or special training he followed various lines of employment for three years at Curdsville, lived for five years at West Louisville, for one year in Calhoun, and about 1900 established his permanent home at Owensboro. As a young man he learned the barber's trade and for several years was proprietor of a shop in Owensboro. His natural bent for trade led him into the real estate business, and in that line he has gained his prosperity and it is the business which still engages what time he can spare from his duties as city commissioner. He was elected to that post of honor and responsibility in 1917 and re-elected in 1919, his second term coming as a well-deserved tribute to his efficiency in handling the municipal government. Mr. Cline is a democrat, is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, Knight of Pythias and member of the Order of Elks. He and Mrs. Cline are Methodists.

February 7, 1899, he married Miss Cora B. Claycomb. Their only child is now deceased. Mrs. Cline represents some of the old lines of Kentucky ancestry.

Huffman Brothers. James H. and Dr. L. R. Huffman, are continuing an industry established by their father nearly half a century ago, an industry that has been a noteworthy contribution to the improvement of livestock standards in Kentucky. The Huffman Farm, on Russell Cave Pike, one mile south of Centerville and twelve miles north of Lexington, is the home of the "Blue Grass Herd" of Poland China hogs. The big type Poland China is now one of the most widely dispersed swine breeds in the world, and undoubtedly some of the greatest specimens of that breed have been propagated at the Huffman Farm.

The late Lindsey R. Huffman, who died in 1900, took up swine breeding as a special industry on his farm in 1872. He was a pioneer Kentucky breeder of the Poland China, and exhibited at local fairs for years. He was an exhibitor when there was no classification of breeds at fairs, but his Poland Chinas carried off honors against all competition. He shipped to every state, and many of the products of the Huffman Farm have gone abroad to South America and elsewhere. Some of the animals bred here were never defeated in a show ring. For a number of years the Huffmans handled both types of the Poland China, the small boned and the large type. But emphasis has always been placed on the big type, and that has now practically superseded the small, not only at the Huffman Farm but in the opinion of most breeders everywhere. In some years as many as three hundred breeding animals have been produced on the Huffman Farm.

A portion of this farm was settled more than a hundred years ago, and the greater part of the three hundred acres has been in the Huffman family for eighty years. The pioneer of the family was Henry Huffman, who came from Washington Court House, Virginia, and settled in this section of Kentucky, where he lived until his death, at the age of ninety-two. His old home is still standing. His second wife was Hannah Lantern, who survived her husband and reached nearly the age of one hundred. Their children included two sons, Lindsey R. and Benjamin R., the latter dying at middle age, while the daughters were America, who became the wife of Charles Huffman and lived in Kentucky; Polly Ann, who married Joseph Callahan; Roxy Ann, who married Morton Levi; Maria, who became the wife of John Marcum and lived to old age; and Lucinda, who was the wife of John Besore.

The late Lindsey R. Huffman married Amanda Allen, daughter of Adoniram and Polly Allen, of Bourbon County. Their married life was all spent on the old homestead, and his enterprise added to its area until it included the three hundred acres as now. The family of Lindsey R. Huffman comprised six children: James H.; Lou Ann, who was the wife of James Mathews and died in middle life; Lindsey R., Jr.; Norman, of Fayette County; Willard, a farmer in Scott County; and Mary L., who is the wife of Enoch K. Reniker and lives in Harrison County.

Lindsey R. Huffman, Jr., is a graduate veterinarian from Cincinnati and has since been in active practice and lives on the old home farm. He has never married.

James H. Huffman, his brother and active business associate, has had charge of the breeding work, and the achievements of the Huffman Brothers are known in Poland China circles all over the country. Part of the farm is devoted to tobacco culture, but for the most part its activities center around the Blue Grass Herd of Poland Chinas. James H. Huffman married Nannie T. Case, of Bourbon County, and they have one son, Joseph Lindsey Huffman.

Sterling S. Price. A business established nearly sixty years, whose products were appreciated from the start, and with a patronage growing in successive years, is always an appropriate subject for historical comment. Such a subject is that of S. S. Price & Company, Incorporated, pork and beef packers of Lexington. The first lot of Price's famous sausage was manufactured and offered to the public in 1862, and successive years have seen a widening patronage of the palatable products made by this firm. These products are marketed now not only in Lexington and over the state but in other states as well. They are strictly home products, and the fact that the pork and beef were grown in the Blue Grass section add, no doubt, to the enjoyment experienced by the users. It is one of the oldest of Lexington's home industries.

The founder was John Fry Price. His old home just west of Lexington was the place where he made his first sausage in 1862. During successive years he built up an extending business in pork sausage, hams, bacon and lard, and continued the active head of the business until his death, when the industry was one whose products brought in revenues averaging $6,000 per week. His son, Sterling S. Price, has continued the business, and in 1916 he erected the model plant, with modern equipment, a mile west of the Court House, on Leestown Pike. This plant has a weekly capacity for the slaughter and manufacture of 400 hogs, and from 75 to 80 cattle. The sales now aggregate approximately $14,000 a week and there are some 30 employes and the sum of $175,000 capital investment.

Sterling S. Price had active charge of this business for twenty years before his father's death. His father was born in 1834, at the old homestead west of Lexington, a place that has been in the family for over a century. He died January 19, 1914. His father, William Price, was a native of England, of Welsh parentage, and came to Kentucky at the age of sixteen. He married at Lexington a Miss Fry, whose family owned the old homestead west of town. He died leaving one child, John Fry Price, then an infant. John Fry Price from the age of six to ten lived with his widowed mother in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky. After that he grew up on the homestead and finally acquired the property from his mother, who died in advanced years. He began with fifty acres, but in time had 215 acres.

The first wife of John Fry Price was Ann Kirkpatrick, who died leaving two small children, Willie and Mamie. Willie died in childhood, while Mamie passed away in middle age. The second wife of John Fry Price was Mary Kirkpatrick, who died at the age of fifty-one. She was the mother of two sons and three daughters: Bettie, who died at the age of seventeen, and Lottie, who died at the age of nineteen; Anna, widow of John Webb and living at Lexington; John W., who died when twenty-eight years of age; and Sterling S.

Sterling S. Price was born at the old farm May 15, 1876, was reared and educated and began his business career with his father. He now has thirty-one acres surrounding his plant, and his home is a modern residence with all the city conveniences, including water, gas and electricity. He married Miss Elizabeth Scott Jaubert, daughter of the late Gus Jaubert, of Lexington. Her father was a citizen of high standing in Fayette County, and earned a reputation all over the state as past master of the art of making "Burgoo" at barbecues. Practically every barbecue held in the state regarded his presence and participation as indispensable to its success. Mr. Jaubert died March 26, 1920. Mr. and Mrs. Price have one daughter, Charlotte.

Joseph Smith Hays. It is a notable fact that the representatives of the legal profession of the Clark County Bar Association are men of unusual ability and well fitted by natural inclination and long and careful training for the onerous responsibilities of their calling, and one of them who stands very high in it and the county is Joseph Smith Hays of Winchester. Mr. Hays was born at Morristown, Tennessee, March 7, 1864, a son of Joseph E. and Minerva (Bain) Hays, and grandson of John Hays, of Knox County, Kentucky. The great-grandfather was Alexander Hays, who died in 1865, aged eighty years, and his remains are buried on his homestead. He was born in Ireland, but was brought to the United States by his parents, who located in North Carolina about 1800. He was married there to Nancy Gilbert, and came as far west as Vincennes, Indiana, where he lived for a few years, and in 1815 moved to Knox County, Kentucky, bringing with him his family, among whom was his son, John, whose birth had occurred at Vincennes. Alexander Hays bought a farm near the head of Fighting Creek, on the old Wilderness Road crossing of the mountains of the Cumberland Range at Cumberland Gap, but subsequently located on a farm at the mouth of Stinking Creek in Knox County. The Keel Station of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad is on this land, and it is here that he and John and James Hays are buried. James Hays was one of the celebrated attorneys of Kentucky, engaged in practice at Barbourville, Knox County, in partnership with Judge Samuel Miller, later of the U. S. Supreme Court. James Hays died in 1850. Robert Hays, who was also an attorney of Knox County, served as provost marshal at London, Kentucky, during the war between the states. Later he moved to McKee, Jackson County, where he was elected county judge, and held that office until his death in 1875.

John Hays died in Knox County of cholera in 1850, and was laid to rest by the side of his brother, James, who had also been taken by this epidemic of cholera that during the summer of 1850 claimed so many victims in that neighborhood. John Hays was married to Polly Fortney and had two sons, Joseph E. and Napoleon Bonaparte. The latter was attorney-general of Kentucky from 1903 to 1907. In 1906 he was a candidate for governor at the democratic primaries, but was defeated. At present he is living at Columbia, Missouri, having gone there from his old home, Pineville, in Bell County, Kentucky.

Joseph E. Hays served in the Confederate army during the war between the states, and was with General Morgan during his celebrated raid into Ohio, and swam across the Ohio River. Later he met a comrade, James Tuggle, also of Knox County, who had performed the same remarkable feat, both doing so in order to escape capture by the Union troops. Returning to Kentucky at the close of the war, Joseph E. Hays bravely took up the burdens of reconstruction, and became a farmer and stockraiser of considerable importance, specializing in hogs and cattle. In later years he moved to Hiattsville, Garrard County, Kentucky, where he remained until about 1898, when he went to Boone County, Missouri. In 1902, while on a visit to the old home in Kentucky, he died, and was buried in Winchester Cemetery, but his widow survives him and makes her home at Columbia, Missouri, with a daughter. They had eight children, five sons and three daughters, namely: John Tecumseh, an attorney of Hobart, Oklahoma; J. Smith, whose name heads this review; James Madison, who is an attorney of Oklahoma, like his brother, John T., and was formerly engaged in the practice of his profession in Kentucky; Thomas Breckenridge, who in former years lived in Knox County, but later on in life moved to Oklahoma; Dr. George W., who was a physician and was engaged in an active practice at Franklin, North Carolina, until his death in 1905; Arah, who married W. T. Gilbert, died in young womanhood in Knox County; Ora, who married F. A. Henninger, a jeweler of Columbia, Missouri; and Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Skillman, of North Middletown, Kentucky, and now resides with her husband at Columbia, Missouri.

Joseph Smith Hays was reared on his father's farm, and after attending the local schools became a student in Union College at Barbourville. After leaving the latter institution he taught school for some years, and among other places was at the Village of Harlan, Kentucky. During the period he was engaged in school teaching he read law, was admitted to the bar in 1887, and at once established himself in practice at Barbourville, where he remained until 1900, and then located permanently at Winchester. While at Barbourville he was a member of the law firm of Dishman & Hays. After locating in Winchester Mr. Hays practiced alone, and was retained as counsel in some of the most noted cases of the state, in association with Judge J. H. Hazelbrigg, Louis McQuown and Judge John M. Stevenson. The cases in which the above gentlemen were associated attracted much attention for some years, and a number of important points were involved, especially those relative to the limitations of judges in assessing contempt fines. Mr. Hayes has been active politically as a democrat, and was a Presidential elector in 1900.

In 1888 he was married in Knox County to Ella Helton, of that county, a daughter of Milton Helton. They were the parents of the following children: Edna, who is professor of English at Irving College, near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, was graduated from the Winchester High School, the Kentucky Wesleyan College, Hamilton Female College, and Columbia University, New York; Elmer D., who was graduated from the Kentucky Wesleyan College and from Kentucky University in 1914, was associated in practice with his father until 1916, when he was employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is still so employed, but makes his home at Winchester; Joseph Smith, Jr., who was graduated from the Kentucky Wesleyan College and from the University of Kentucky in 1916, is in practice with his father and is also an oil operator in Eastern Kentucky, being associated with one of the important companies of that region; Robert Helton, who was graduated from Yale University in 1918, entered the Field Artillery branch of the service during the great war as a second lieutenant, received his preliminary training at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, and would doubtless have soon been sent overseas had not the signing of the armistice put an end to the hostilities. He taught one year at Asheville School for Boys and one year at the Bingham Military School, both at Asheville, North Carolina. He was graduated from the law department of the University of Kentucky in 1921 and is now engaged in the practice of law. Mary is taking a special course in domestic science in the University of Kentucky, and Walter O. is attending the local schools. After the death of the first wife Mr. Hays was married in 1919 to Iva Coy, of Madison County, Kentucky, a member of one of the old and honored families of that section, many of whose members achieved considerable prominence as agriculturists. The first Mrs. Hays was one of the best known ladies in the state as a leader in various organizations of her sex. She was devoted to her home and family, and although she became one of the most brilliant figures of her day, she never neglected her loved ones. The present Mrs. Hays is a worthy successor to her, and presides with grace and dignity over the Hays hospitable home. Mr. Hays has every reason to be proud of his children, who have developed into fine young people, and the sons have turned to their father's profession, developing a natural inclination for the law.

Strauder D. Goff. Formerly for many years one of the leading cattle men of Clark County, Kentucky, Strauder D. Goff has devoted himself during the past twelve years to the direction of the policy of the Clark County National Bank, one of the oldest national banks in the United States, of which he is president. Mr. Goff was born on the old ancestral estate in this county, September 1, 1858, and, as in the last four generations of the family, is an only son, his parents being Benjamin P. and Anna (Prewitt) Goff.

Thomas Goff came from Virginia (now West Virginia) in 1790, and this pioneer, who was the great-grandfather of S. D. Goff, settled on the land which is still owned by his great-grandson, on Strode Creek, near old Strode Fort. For the first two winters he resided at the old fort at Boonesboro and was engaged in hunting to furnish the meat supply for the fort. Later he settled down to agricultural pursuits and passed his life on the farm where S. D. Goff's son, B. D., and grandson, Benjamin, now reside, the latter being the sixth generation of the family to live on the same farm. This originally was a large tract, but later much of the original land was divided among his heirs. Thomas Goff died here in 1833, during an epidemic of cholera, leaving four sons and some daughters, the sons being: Thomas, Levi, Jonas and Strauder. One son settled at Indian Field, Clark County, where his descendants still reside, and one, a partner of Strauder, died as a bachelor.

Strauder Goff secured the old home place, where Thomas Goff had built the original home about 1825, and in 1839 Strauder Goff erected, at a third spot, the present residence, one of the first brick homes to be erected in Clark County, a large and commodious structure, built along generous lines. The lumber for its building was cut on the farm, hauled fifteen miles to the mill, and seasoned before it was used. Strauder Goff, Sr., added to the family holdings by good management, industry and profitable investment, and had about 1,500 acres in the home estate. He was one of the first to start the breeding of Shorthorn cattle, and the firm to which he belonged, Goff & Miller, were among the first importers of this breed, about 1810. He kept up interest in stock improvement, and was a leading and successful breeder and feeder of stock for the New York market. He frequently drove his animals to that market, and he had one bunch of 100 head which averaged 2,200 pounds per animal. He was not an office-seeker, but was accounted a public-spirited and reliable citizen. He died at the age of fifty-four years, in 1854, while Mrs. Goff, who had been Elizabeth Gay, of Clark County, passed away when forty-seven years of age. They were the parents of three children: Benjamin P.; Elizabeth, who married George R. Snyder and lived later at Louisville; and Margaret, who married John W. Prewitt and still lives at Winchester.

Benjamin P. Goff was born in 1837, on the home farm, and as a young man became a partner of John W. Prewitt in the breeding of Shorthorn cattle. This firm sold the first Shorthorn bull in the United States to bring over $6,000, and sales were held at the farm and elsewhere, not infrequently at Chicago. Mr. Goff was enterprising and industrious and succeeded in adding to the acreage of the property, upon which he died in 1884. He married Anna Prewitt, a sister of John W. Prewitt, of Montgomery County, Kentucky, and a daughter of Nelson Prewitt. She survives her husband and is still living on the farm, in the house in which she has spent sixty-three years of her life. During the period when Alexander Campbell preached in this community Mrs. Goff was baptized by "Raccoon" John Smith.

The only child of his parents, Strauder D. Goff attended Bethany College, West Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1878. He was elected at once the editor of the American Shorthorn Record, and published the eighth and ninth volumes of that publication, following which he devoted himself to the farm, continuing the breeding of Shorthorn cattle until about 1890. Many noted animals came from that farm, and about 500 cattle were fed there annually. At one time he sold 100 head of fat cattle for export trade, which averaged 1,864 pounds. In 1908 Mr. Goff came to Winchester, and his son, B. D. Goff, took charge of the farm and is today one of the largest stock feeders in Clark County. This property is still one of the largest farms in the county. For some years Mr. Goff had been a member of the Board of Directors of the Clark County National Bank of Winchester, one of the oldest national banks in the United States, which was founded in 1867, and in 1914 or 1915 was made its president, a position which he still occupies. For ten years Mr. Goff was a partner in a cattle ranch of several thousand acres in Texas. He is not a politician nor an office seeker, but has faithfully discharged all the duties of good citizenship. He was one of the factors in the building of the telephone line from Winchester to Lexington. During the past ten or fifteen years he has been a curator of Transylvania University at Lexington.

Mr. Goff first married Julia M. Graves, of Fayette County, who died three years later, leaving one son, Benjamin, who attended the University of Virginia, and is now carrying on operations on the Goff farm. He married Elizabeth Spahr, of Clark County, and they have one son, Benjamin D., Jr. The second marriage of S. D. Goff was to Elizabeth Buckner, daughter of Hon. Benjamin F. Buckner, ex-judge of the Circuit Court of Winchester. Mr. and Mrs. Goff occupy a pleasant modern home at Winchester.

Dr. William Burnside Campbell. There is no more insistent demand today than that which calls for a continued maintenance of high educational standards. The success of the democratic experiment, the preservation of our free institutions, are dependnt primarily upon a continuation of lofty ideals. Vocational education, special preparation and citizenship training must be developed. The universities no longer serve as scholarly retreats, but are alive with the progressive spirit of the day, every department of these powerful institutions being conducted with the end in view of equipping the students for helpful, earnest, successful manhood and womanhood. The educators are at the forefront; conditions are ripe for the production of great men and women, and their final training must be acquired in the colleges and universities of the country. The day is past for the self-taught man or woman. Only experts now reach the goal of their desire and take their places among the mighty.

Prominent among the educators of Kentucky, one under whose strong and wise leadership the Kentucky Wesleyan College, at Winhcester, has made steady and consistent advancement in attaining a place among the great institutions of the South, is Dr. William Burnside Campbell, one of the youngest college presidents in the United States. Doctor Campbell was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, February 16, 1886, a son of H. B. and Nannie (Burnside) Campbell, and a grandson of Whittaker Campbell, a native of Culpeper County, Virginia, who went to Garrard County as a young man and there passed his entire career, dying at an advanced age.

H. B. Campbell was born August 13, 1850, in Garrard County, and was for many years engaged in agricultural pursuits, particularly in stock dealing. In his later years he became vice president of the First National Bank of Nicholasville, Kentucky, at which place his death occurred May 1, 1920. He was not a public man or a politician, but was a good citizen and was held in high esteem by his business and personal associates. Mrs. Campbell, who is also a native of Garrard County, survives him as a resident of Nicholasville.

William Burnside Campbell attended the primary and high school at Nicholasville, following which he pursued a course at Threlkeld Preparatory School at the same place. This training was supplemented by courses at Transylvania, Lexington and the Kentucky Wesleyan College, from which latter he was graduated in 1908, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. A post-graduate course followed at Vanderbilt University, and he was then ordained a member of the Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Doctor Campbell's first charge was at Walton, where he remained one year, following which he spent three years at Williamstown and one year at Georgetown, going then to Maysville for five years. When he was only thirty-three years of age, in September, 1919, he was called to the presidency of Kentucky Wesleyan College, at Winchester, being one of the youngest men to have ever been thus honored in the United States. He is president of the Kentucky Association of Colleges and Universities. With laudable ambition for the development of his university, Doctor Campbell has assumed the heavy responsibilities of his present position and has followed out his work with a prayerful enthusiasm that has known no discouragements and brooked no defeats. A man of extensive and profound learning and great eloquence, he is a platform teacher who has few superiors. His intelligent interest in modern affairs, combined with his exhaustive knowledge of those topics which have interested scholars throughout the ages, make him a man well fitted to lead others and to implant in the minds of his pupils during their formative period a love for pure ideals, high standards of living, and thoroughness of action along any line of endeavor, which cannot help but work out for the development of the best type of citizenship. Popular, keen-minded and ever alert, he is never at a loss when asked to deliver after-dinner speeches or baccalaureate sermons. Withal, he is fond of the out-of-doors and his vacations are spent in hunting and outing trips.

Doctor Campbell married, October 6, 1909, Miss Ruth Robb Finney, of Nashville, Tennessee, a graduate of the Curry School of Expression, Boston, and a public reader in connection with the Vanderbilt Glee Club. They are the parents of one daughter, Harriet.

Rev. George J. O'Bryan. The work of the Catholic clergy is recognized to be of a constructive character wherever evidences of it are found, and the men belonging to this body of remarkable men are always among the most scholarly of the residents of any community. Rev. George J. O'Bryan, pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Winchester, is no exception to the general rule, and through his learning, his knowledge of human nature and his wisdom in handling and solving the problems which always arise he is rendering all of the people, as well as those of his own parish, valuable and unselfish service.

Father O'Bryan was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, June 26, 1880, a son of Patrick O'Bryan, an Irishman by birth who, at the age of twenty years, came to the United States, and in time became a locomotive engineer on a southern railroad. His death occurred at Newport, Kentucky, in 1913, after a residence in the state of forty-five years.

Eleven years old at the time of the family migration to Kentucky, Father O'Bryan attended the parochial schools of Newport, that state, and then took the classical course at St. Xavier College at Cincinnati, Ohio. Following the completion of that course he began his theological studies in Mount St. Mary's Seminary at Cincinnati, completing them in April, 1908, and on June 29th of that year he was ordained a priest by the Right Reverend C. P. Maes, bishop of Covington, Kentucky. For a short time following his ordination Father O'Bryan was assistant priest at St. Mark's Church at Richmond, Kentucky, to Rev. William Punch, now of St. Peter's Church at Lexington, Kentucky. Late in that same year he was made assistant to Rev. James McNerney of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Newport, Kentucky, and remained there until October, 1913, when he was made pastor of St. Mark's Church at Richmond, the same church which he had formerly served as assistant. In July, 1914, he was made administrator of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Newport, following the death of Reverend McNerney, and on December 8, 1914, he came to St. Joseph's Church as its pastor, and has been at Winchester ever since.

The parish was in excellent condition, Father O'Bryan's predecessor, Rev. Herbert Hillenmeyer, now secretary to Bishop Brossart of Covington, Kentucky, having built a new church edifice. The debt on this building Father O'Bryan cleared off within a year. He then began to make plans for the establishment of St. Agatha's Academy Boarding and Day School, which was opened in September, 1919, and which already is well attended. There are eight Sisters as teachers, and the school is well equipped with modern furnishings and appliances. Since he has been in charge the parish has increased to a membership of 325. The various church and social organizations are in a flourishing condition and doing excellent work along the several lines for which they have been established. In addition to his regular parish work Father O'Bryan visits outside missions, including those at Jackson and Quicksands, and keeps in close touch with all physical and moral welfare, and through his flaming sincerity and strong personality has been able to bring about a close co-operation of the various forces for good at Winchester. He is a genial, companionable, broad-minded gentleman, whose circle of personal friends is not restricted to religious or political beliefs.

Capt. Thomas Damron Marcum. There are some men for whom the encroaching years have no terrors. To them there is no such words as "age" or "infirmity." They look upon the total of their years as but a warning that they must crowd into a day what formerly they could take a year to perform, and recognize the fact that only when the brain loses interest in current events is one really old. There are not many men of this caliber, but occasionally one is produced who, by reason of a sturdy frame and alert mentality, is permitted to journey way beyond the milestone placed at three score years and ten and still retain the vigor and interest of earlier years. Boyd County was the proud possessor of just such a man, Capt. Thomas Damron Marcum, of Catlettsburg, who, when past eighty years of age held his well-built six-foot frame with erectness, shaming his juniors by many years, and because of a well-spent life was in the enjoyment of excellent health almost to the close of his life. His death occurred on the 23d of November, 1921, after an illness of only one week.

Captain Marcum was born December 17, 1840, at the mouth of Vinson's Branch, on the Tug Fork of Sandy River, six miles above Louisa. He is a son of Stephen M. and Jane (Damron) Marcum. Stephen M. Marcum was born in Wayne County, West Virginia, then Virginia, August 8, 1818, and died July 25, 1893. His wife was born at the mouth of Shelby Creek, on Sandy River, in Pike County, Kentucky, January 27, 1822, and she died December 31, 1906. They were married at Louisa. Stephen M. Marcum was a blacksmith and gunsmith, noted for his great skill, and he made the famous Kentucky rifle. A man of great courage and good judgment, he served as deputy sheriff and as a justice of the peace in Wayne County. His work as a smith was remarkable, and articles made by him are still in existence and are for various uses, for he could make practically anything in iron or steel.

Following his marriage he moved from Lawrence County, Kentucky, to Wayne County, West Virginia, and from there to Catlettsburg, Boyd County, Kentucky, in 1885, and there he rounded out his useful life. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Missionary Baptist Church. Stephen M. Marcum was a son of Stephen Marcum, a native of Virginia and a soldier of the War of 1812, and his father, Joseph Marcum, was a soldier in the American Revolution, and among other engagements was in the historic one at Yorktown. Stephen M. Marcum volunteered for service during the Mexican war, and belonged to a company, commanded by Capt. Green Goble, that was organized in Lawrence County. This unit was on its way to the front when peace was declared, and he was honorably discharged with the rank of first lieutenant. During the war between the states one of the sons of Stephen M. Marcum, Judge W. W. Marcum, served with the Confederate Army, and was at Appomattox with General Lee, and two others, Captain Marcum and James H. Marcum, were in the Union Army. Members of the Marcum family served in the World war, so that this family has a most remarkable military history.

Stephen M. Marcum and his wife had twelve children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are: James H., who is a retired business man of Huntington, West Virginia; Pembroke S., who is active in politics and business, lives at Catlettsburg; John S., who is a noted criminal lawyer; Lazarus, who is an attorney of Huntington, West Virginia; Judge W. W., who was circuit judge, died January 15, 1912, in Ceredo, West Virginia; Anna, who is the widow of Dr. J. M. Baker, resides at Huntington, West Virginia; Nancy, who is the wife of J. B. Dodson, of Fort Gay, West Virginia; Eunice, who is the wife of Robert L. Simpkins, of War, West Virginia; Elizabeth, widow of P. H. Cahill and she resides in New York City; and Captain Marcum, who was the eldest of the family. The youngest living member of the family is now fifty-five years old.

Captain Marcum was a self-educated man, for his schooling covered in all only a year, and ended when he was sixteen years of age. He never spent over two weeks in any one year in school, and yet so educated himself that at the age of eighteen years he was given the appointment as a school-teacher at Tug Falls, West Virginia, and held it for a year. This closed his experience in the schoolroom, for he preferred a more active career. In the meanwhile, however, when only sixteen years old, he drove an ox-team hauling logs to Tug River, and was also engaged in piloting fleets of logs down the Tug, Sandy and Ohio rivers to markets at Cincinnati, Ohio, and Louisville, Kentucky.

The active and useful life of this energetic young man was broken in upon by the declaration of war between the two sections of the country, and he enlisted, August 10, 1861, as a Union soldier, and served until he was honorably discharged in September, 1865. His service was with the Fourteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and he was an officer from March, 1862, and was a junior captain before the close of his service. Captain Marcum was on General Garfield's staff, and was present when that commander took the oath of office at Pikeville as brigadier-general. In addition to a number of smaller engagements Captain Marcum participated in the battles of Middle Creek, Cumberland Gap, Tazewell, and those of General Sherman's command in the Georgia campaign, and the one at Franklin, Tennessee. He had his horse shot from under him at Middle Creek and his uniform riddled with shots in other engagements, but in spite of his having been in the midst of very heavy fighting he was not wounded. From the time he entered the service he was determined not to be taken prisoner, and, although he had many very narrow escapes, he was able to avoid capture.

Returning to private life after his discharge, Captain Marcum opened a store at Fort Gay, West Virginia, but soon thereafter moved to Louisa, where he lived from 1865 to 1874, being engaged in buying and selling timber. During this time he read law, was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of his profession. In 1875 he was elected registrar of the land office, and lived at Frankfort until 1879, when he resigned from office and established the Kentucky Democrat at Catlettsburg, which had a circulation second only to the Courier-Journal in Kentucky. During the fifteen years he conducted this paper Captain Marcum was recognized as an able and fearless editor, and when he sold the business in 1894, universal regret was expressed not only by his readers, but his competitors. Captain Marcum then began handling real estate and writing insurance, and continued in these lines of business until his death. Under President Cleveland's first administration he served as Indian inspector, and his duties took him to all of the Indian reservations for three years. He was the last survivor of the powerful coterie who made up the state ticket in 1875 for the democratic party.

On January 19, 1865, Captain Marcum married, while still in the army, his boyhood sweetheart, Mary Bromley, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Plymate) Bromley, and she died November 17, 1910, having borne him three children, namely: J. Fletch, who is a farmer of South Point, Ohio; Blanch, who is the widow of the late Alonzo Mims, wholesale merchant and banker of Catlettsburg; and Maud, who is the wife of E. C. Walton, an editor of Stanford, Kentucky. Captain Marcum was a Mason and belonged to the Blue Lodge of Catlettsburg and was a charter member of Louisa Chapter, he and Colonel Northrup being the last charter members living. He also belonged to Ashland Commandery and Shrine and Covington Consistory, and was a member of the Odd Fellows and Elks. All his life was a democrat, and was a member of the first convention of his party after the close of the war, which convened to re-organize the democratic party in Kentucky in 1866. From 1860 was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, which he joined in that year, and he was very generous in his donations to it.

Captain Marcum had a long and eventful life. After he entered upon his business career he saw changes take place which, if effected in a short period, would have been a miracle. Three great wars were fought and won after he enlisted as a soldier, and as many great conflicts were waged in industry. Marvelous inventions changed the methods of performing every kind of work and revolutionized commercial life. Kentucky yielded up other treasurers from her boundless stores, and made millionaires out of her sons and daughters, and now promises to become one of the most active producers of coal and oil. The little schoolroom in the timber in which Captain Marcum taught his first and only school gave way to modern schoolrooms equipped with every facility for the imparting of knowledge to the young. The old equipment with which for fifteen years he sent out his newspaper to his eager readers no longer would satisfy his sense of the fitness of things, for printing plants, too, have felt the touch of progress. There is one thing, however, that did not change from the days when Stephen M. Marcum and his good wife took their little ones to the Sunday services in the Missionary Baptist Church, and that was the conception gained by Captain Marcum from his parents of a practical Christianity, not a religion for Sunday use only, but something vital and living, to be used each day of the week, in every transaction, with every person. At the close of his life, just as in 1860, when he enlisted under the banner of Christ as a member of the Missionary Baptist Church Thomas Damron Marcum voiced in his every act his belief in an upright, honorable life and Christian virtues, and his example, his life and his accomplishments were an inspiring impulse to better things on the part of those with whom he associated. He is buried at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, and was laid to rest with Masonic honors.

William Adair McDowell. With William A. McDowell are associated important achievements as an executive in railroad and financial management and corporations that influence the present and future development of some of Kentucky's richest resources. Mr. McDowell is still in the active time of his life, and his career is interesting not only for what he is and what he has done, but also as an illustration of the virility of a family that for generations has produced eminent characters whose deeds are treasured in Kentucky.

The original McDowells belonged to the Scot clan of the Duke of Argyle. During the persecutions of Charles I they removed to Ireland. From Ireland in 1721 Ephraim McDowell came to America. Their reputation as fighters was continued in this country by active participation in the French and Indian war, in the Revolution, in the War of 1812, and in the Civil war. After ten years of residence in Pennsylvania Ephraim McDowell moved to Virginia. His son, John McDowell, was the father of the founder of the family in Kentucky.

This was Col. Samuel McDowell, who was born in Virginia in 1735 and, as has been well said, was the "founder of a family of patriots." He served under George Washington in the western campaign of 1755 during the French and Indian war, and received a commission as captain. For his military services he was granted land in what is now Fayette County, Kentucky. This was in 1775. With the outbreak of the Revolution he was commissioned colonel of a regiment from Augusta County, Virginia, and was under General Greene in the Carolina campaign and was present at the surrender of Gen. Cornwallis at Yorktown. Prior to the war he had been a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses. Afterward he was a member of the State Council of Virginia and was appointed surveyor of public lands in Fayette County, still part of Virginia.

To perform the duties of this office he established his home in Kentucky in 1783, and in the same year was appointed one of the judges of the First District Court. Col. Samuel McDowell died in 1817, near Danville in Boyle County. His wife was Mary McClung, a native of Ireland and of Scotch ancestry. Their family consisted of seven sons and four daughters. Among the sons were Maj. John McDowell, an officer in the War of 1812; Colonel James, who was a soldier in the Revolution and an officer in the War of 1812; William, who became a Kentucky lawyer. The sixth son was Dr. Ephraim McDowell. The story of the pioneer work done in surgery by Dr. Ephraim McDowell belongs to the world of science. Wherever surgery is known his name is known. In the political world Clay reached no greater heights than did Dr. McDowell in the world of medicine. He gained the title of "father of ovariotomy," and performed his first successful operation at Danville. He was born in Virginia in 1771 and died in Kentucky in 1830, his wife being a daughter of Governor Isaac Shelby.

The fourth son in this illustrious generation was Col. Samuel McDowell, Jr., who was born in 1764 and as a youth was with the troops under General Lafayette at the surrender at Yorktown in 1781. Washington appointed him in 1789 the first marshal of Kentucky, a position to which his grandson, Henry Clay McDowell, was afterward appointed by Lincoln. At the beginning of the Civil war twelve of his grandsons were living, and all were in sympathy with the cause of the Union, though nine were residents of southern states. One was killed by bushwhackers at his home in Missouri during the war, nine were officers in the Federal armies, one was physically incapacitated for military service, and the last of the twelve was too young for enlistment. One of these grandsons was Maj. Gen. Irvin McDowell.

Fourth among the sons of Col. Samuel McDowell, Jr., was Dr. William Adair McDowell, who was born near Harrodsburg, Kentucky, March 21, 1795. Much of his early boyhood was spent with his uncle, Dr. Ephraim McDowell, and he became a distinguished disciple of that great surgeon. He made a special study of tuberculosis, and as early as 1843 published a treatise on the curability of that disease, a work that later brought him recognition as one of the pioneers in the fight against this dread disease. The closing years of his life were spent at his country home on the Ohio River in Indiana, where he died in 1853. He married Maria Hawkins Harvey, a native of Virginia, who died in 1876. Their eight children were: Sarah Shelby, Mary, Ann, Henry Clay, Magdalene, John, Maj. William Preston, a Federal officer, and Capt. Edward Irvin, who was killed at Resaca, Georgia, in 1864, at the age of twenty-one.

Maj. Henry Clay McDowell was born at the home of his mother, Fincastle, Virginia, February 9, 1832. He was a graduate in law from the Louisville Law School and practiced in that city for a number of years with his brother-in-law, Judge Bland Ballard. Early in 1861 he enlisted in a Kentucky regiment and was soon commissioned assistant adjutant general by President Lincoln. In 1862 he was appointed United States marshal for Kentucky. After the war he located on a farm in Franklin County, and in 1883 removed to the historic shrine of Ashland, the home of his wife's family. For many years he devoted himself to the breeding of Kentucky thoroughbred horses. He was also president of the old Kentucky Union, later the Lexington and Eastern Railroad Company. Maj. Henry Clay McDowell died at Ashland, November 18, 1899.

On May 21, 1857, he married Miss Anne Clay, who was born at Lexington, February 14, 1837, and died in the spring of 1917. A sketch written by Judge Kerr and appearing in the Lexington Herald about that time gives an interesting picture of her life and its associations, and portions of this may appropriately be quoted here:

"The death of Mrs. Henry Clay McDowell removed from among us one who touched the social and political life of Kentucky and the nation at as many angles as almost any person that ever lived in the state. Of a stock that was present when the foundation of the state was laid; of an ancestry that gave course and direction to that state and made of it the brightest constellation in the firmament of states; linking her name through a happy matrimonial alliance with another whose ancestral stock bore no less a part in the political, scientific and social organizations not only of the state but of the nation, serve to emphasize the fact that those things in life we treasure most are not appreciated at their true worth until they are lost.

"Her mother, Julia Prather, was the daughter of Thomas Prather, one of the early settlers in Louisville. Her mother died in 1840, when Mrs. McDowell was only three years old. Her father, Henry Clay, Jr., was killed at the battle of Buena Vista when she was only ten years old. (See Clay family history on other pages.) The grandmother of Mrs. McDowell was Lucretia Hart, the daughter of Col. Thomas Hart. Nearly every prominent family in Kentucky is touched somewhere by the Hart infusion.

"Through the stock of which Mrs. McDowell descended on her father's side there is a blood strain that brought her into political and social contact with the most prominent and the most eminent families of the state. Through her grandparents on her father's side she could reach back into the days of the Revolution and bring down with her to the present time a personal touch that comprehends the whole stretch of the Republic and the State, in the formation and direction of which those who bore her name and through whose veins ran the same blood had taken no inconspicuous part. In that fourscore years there is comprehended more of human achievement than all the years that have hitherto been told. From the Mexican War 'home they brought her warrior dead,' in the Civil War two brothers gave their lives in defense of principle, and in the Spanish-American War the soldiers camped on the lawn in front of her house.

"She saw Louisville (though born in Lexington, where much of her childhood was spent) pass from a village into the metropolis of the state. In the home of her fathers with her chosen mate she graciously took up life where they had left it, endearing herself to its people by that same charm of manner and gentility of bearing which had won for them the love and respect of 'all sorts and conditions of men.'

"That Ashland, so famed abroad and cherished at home as the seat of its illustrious founder, should have returned to the family seems but fitting; that it should have returned to those who not only cherished it as an historic shrine, but who with a grace and dignity that kept aflame the memory of those days when pilgrim votaries from every land were wont to there repair, was more fitting still. In retiring self-effacement, much in keeping with its first mistress, yet with a gentleness of manner and a mien of grace that held with enduring grasp all who came within its spell, this kindly, gracious gentlewoman reigned with queenly dignity in a home of hallowed memories, but aside from what her lineage may have been, ennobling as it was, she will longer survive in the memories and affections of those who knew her for what she was rather than for what they had been."

A brief record of the children of Major Henry Clay McDowell is: Nanette, wife of Dr. Thomas Bullock, of Lexington; Henry C., Jr., of Lynchburg, Virginia, United States district judge of the Western District of Virginia since 1901; William A.; Thomas C. McDowell, whose interests as a Kentucky horseman are noted elsewhere; Julia P., wife of William Brock, of Lexington; Madeleine, who died in 1920, the wife of Desha Breckinridge, of Lexington; and Ballard, who died at the age of four years.

William Adair McDowell was born at the family home in Pewee Valley, Franklin County, Kentucky, August 16, 1863, and his early life until the family moved to Ashland was spent at Woodlake, near Frankfort. He attended public schools in the country and at Frankfort, and graduated in the scientific course from Yale College in 1885. After a varied experience in engineering and mechanical enterprises he became engineer of the Lexington and Eastern Railroad and in 1906 was promoted to general manager of that line. In 1913 he became vice president and general manager and with the merging of the Lexington & Eastern with the Louisville & Nashville in 1915 became general agent of the executive department, resigning that post in 1917. Through his railroad and financial connections Mr. McDowell for a number of years has been interested in the development of Eastern Kentucky, particularly in its coal and timber resources. He was formerly vice president of the Third National Bank of Lexington, and on the consolidation resulting in the organization of the Phoenix & Third National Bank in 1917 he became its president, and also president of the Phoenix & Third Trust Company. He is president of the Kentucky Union Company, a holding company with title to thousands of acres of mineral and timber lands in Eastern Kentucky; he is president of the Lexington Union Station Company, a company owning the Union Station at Lexington; and is president of the Goff Coal Land Company.

In 1887 Mr. McDowell married Miss Alice Dudley, a daughter of Bishop Thomas Underwood Dudley, who in 1870 became assistant bishop of the Kentucky Diocese of the Episcopal Church, and from 1884 until his death, twenty years later, was bishop of Kentucky. Mrs. McDowell died January 1, 1911. She was the mother of two children, William C. and Henry Clay, the latter dying in infancy. William C., a Lexington business man, married Columbia Whitney and has a daughter, Alice Dudley. In May, 1914, Mr. McDowell married Miss Katherine Ramsey, daughter of James P. and Jennie (Davidson) Ramsey.

Leonard G. Cox, for more than thirty years one of the representative business men of Lexington, entered upon his activities in this city at a time when the community began to enjoy a period of prosperous commercial growth and to reach out into the surrounding country with those instrumentalities of commerce which have since made it one of the great trade centers of its state. Since then he has been identified with numerous enterprises of prominence and importance and has likewise contributed materially to his city's advancement by his connection with educational and civic affairs.

Mr. Cox was born at Lexington May 9, 1867, a son of Richard and Edith M. (Cook) Cox, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Lexington. His grandfather, Peter Cox, lived with his father, a native of England and owner of a large plantation on Chesapeake Bay, Virginia, whence he came with his large family to Kentucky at an early day. Richard Cox was still a child when brought to Kentucky, and here he grew to manhood and engaged in a general merchandise business at Lexington. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and a democrat in politics, and is now deceased, being survived by his widow.

Leonard G. Cox attended the public schools of Lexington and Kentucky University (now Transylvania College), being graduated therefrom in 1888 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Subsequently he pursued a course in law at the University of Michigan, but after leaving that institution did not follow the legal profession, instead giving his attention to the merchandise business. At this time he is president of the firm of Graves, Cox & Company, one of the leading concerns of its kind at Lexington. He has various other interests of importance, being chairman of the board of directors of the First and City National Bank, and a member of the board of directors of the Phoenix Hotel Company and Fayette Home Telephone Company. He has never cared for public office of a political character, but has rendered excellent service as a trustee of Transylvania University, and as chairman of the executive committee, and is also a trustee of Hamilton College of this city. He was one of the pioneer producers of crude oil in Kentucky, and was prominently identified in the organization of the Indian Refining Company and the Great Southern Refining Company, and served as vice president of each of these organizations. He has always been interested in the development of his native city, serving two years as president of the Chamber of Commerce, also aided the real estate development, serving as president of the City Development Company, also as a director of the Aylesford Land Company, and the North Side Land Company. Politically he maintains an independent stand, and he and the members of his family belong to the Central Christian Church.

In August, 1895, Mr. Cox was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Clark Roberts, who was born at Lexington, Kentucky, and to this union there have been born a son and a daughter: Marjorie R. and Leonard G., Jr.

Samuel Justus Harris, M. D. It is given to few men to perform a service to humanity over such a long period of years as Doctor Harris has practiced medicine in one community in Daviess County. He began practice there nearly half a century ago and still responds to some of the calls upon his professional ability. He is a Confederate veteran, and his life has in every way been a long and successful one.

A native of Virginia and representative of some of the best families of the Old Dominion, he was born in Pittsylvania County, June 4, 1842, son of Samuel and Martha (Pritchett) Harris. His parents spent all their lives in Virginia and both were descended from Revolutionary stock, many people of distinction having borne the names Harris and Pritchett. Doctor Harris' Revolutionary ancestry in the paternal line was Col. Samuel Harris, who also distinguished himself for his years of earnest work as a Baptist minister in Virginia. Samuel Harris, father of Doctor Harris, was a Virginia planter, his plantation being located sixteen miles west of Danville. He died at the age of seventy-two, while Martha Pritchett Harris died when her son Samuel J. was six years of age. Samuel Harris subsequently married Miss Sarah Elliot, who was the mother of five children, and his third wife was a widow, Mrs. Payne. There were three sets of children.

Samuel J. Harris grew up on his father's Virginia plantation and was eighteen years of age when the war broke out. He became second lieutenant in Company D, Thirty-eighth Virginia Infantry, and participated in the exploits and campaigns of that regiment until the battle of Gettysburg. He participated in the famous Pickett charge, was made a prisoner of war, and for twenty months and eleven days was in the custody of the Northern Government, the greater part of the time being spent on Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, Ohio. Toward the end of the war he was scheduled for exchange, and after returning South was given a furlough and while at home the surrender of General Lee's army occurred. He remained on his father's plantation, taking active charge of its management and supervised the work of the negroes after they had been freed.

While he was in prison on Johnson's Island he took up correspondence with a cousin, Mrs. Ray, living at Owensboro, Kentucky. Largely through her influence he left Virginia in the fall of 1867 and rode horseback over the mountains to Kentucky. At Owensboro he continued his education under the able teacher H. P. Hart, head of the public school system at that time. Later he taught school in several rural districts in Daviess County for a few years, and from his earnings as a teacher paid his expenses in medical college. Doctor Harris graduated in medicine from the University of Louisville in 1872 and began practice at Sorgho in Daviess County. He had been there only a few months when he received a petition from people in the vicinity of Philpot, where he had previously taught school, that he should come to that vicinity, then deprived of the services of a physician through the recent death of Doctor Tichenor. Thus Doctor Harris became identified with Philpot in the fall of 1872, and as an old soldier and teacher, a man of sound ability in his profession, he quickly earned a high place and esteem as a physician and citizen, and has always enjoyed the fondest regard of the community. It is said that Doctor Harris has practiced in nearly every home in and around Philpot during a residence there of nearly fifty years.

For many years he was affiliated with the McDowell Medical Society, now the County and State Medical societies, is a Fellow of the American Medical Association and is a former president of the County Medical Society. For twenty years he rendered efficient service as county physician, and has always kept abreast of the advances in his profession. Doctor Harris long ago earned the privilege both by his service and his material accumulations of retirement from active duty. He has always indulged his taste for farming, and is owner of more than 500 acres of Daviess County land. His home is on a farm about a mile from the Town of Philpot. Doctor Harris is a Methodist, in politics a prohibition democrat, and has been a Master Mason for over half a century.

April 4, 1874, he married Miss Adaline Williams, of an old and respected family of Daviess County. She died June 27, 1890. January 12, 1892, he married Miss Emma Vitula Dyer. The children of Doctor Harris, all by his first marriage, are: James Samuel, born March 15, 1875, now a merchant in the State of Kansas; William Justus, born December 2, 1879, a resident of Atlanta, Georgia; Robert Asbury, twin brother of William J., died at birth; Mary L., born July 19, 1885, wife of Rev. Joseph Randolph Sasnett, living in Oregon; Robert Adilee, born April 16, 1889, wife of James H. Duncan, of Owensboro.

Hon. James Milton Benton, former circuit judge, is an able and virile product of the state and county which he has so honored as lawyer, jurist and progressive citizen. During the thirty-six years that he has been identified with the legal profession at Winchester, Clark County, he has evinced an earnest devotion to the cause of good and patriotic citizenship. He has trusted nothing to chance and owes nothing to fortuitous circumstances, but ceaseless toil and endeavor, based upon a splendid endowment of mental strength, have brought him to an honorable leadership in the fields of law and jurisprudence.

Mr. Benton belongs to a family which was founded in Indian days in Kentucky by Jesse Benton, who came as a pioneer to Boonesboro, Madison County, and at one time lived on the east prong of Otter Creek, but later is supposed to have removed to Indiana, where his death occurred. His son, James, born March 6, 1796, probably within a few miles of the fort at Boonesboro, remained in Madison County, where he married Emma Henderson and passed his life as an agriculturist near the Estill county line. He died in 1863, and his wife passed away about the same time, their children being: Joseph, who removed to Missouri about 1870; Eli, who went to Texas about the same time; Milton, Daniel and Jesse, who passed the greater part of their lives in Madison County; Cyrus, who went to Kansas; John, who died as a soldier of the Confederacy during the war between the states; William; Eliza, who married Frank Berryman and lived in Estill County; Susan, who married Joseph Pearson and lived in that county; and Margaret, who married Andrew J. Lackey and resided in Madison County.

William Benton, father of James Milton Benton, was born January 30, 1839, in Madison County, Kentucky, and was a life-long merchant and miller at Waco, Madison County, at which village his death occurred in November, 1913. He was a man of numerous splendid traits of character and wielded a strong influence in his community, where in his younger years he had been a teacher of the public school and where later he served as justice of the peace. He was likewise a leader in the Christian Church at Flatwoods, which was organized by the great divine, Alexander Campbell. In the spring of 1860 Mr. Benton was united in marriage with Miss Ann Covington, a daughter of Milton C. and Paulina (Dillingham) Covington. Her grandfather was William Covington, a son of Robert and Mary (Duncan) Covington, and Robert Covington was a son of the immigrant from Scotland, whose wife was a Kavanagh. Robert Covington was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, July 3, 1760, and his wife was born in the same county, November 10, 1764. Robert Covington served as a soldier during the war of the Revolution and in 1792 came to Madison County and settled near Richmond, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life, dying August 10, 1847, and being buried in Madison County. William Covington was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, July 31, 1783, and was about nine years of age when brought by his parents to Madison County, Kentucky. Like his father, he passed his life in the pursuits of farming, and died when about ninety years of age. His wife was Edith Moberly, whose father, Benjamin Moberly, was born in South Carolina in 1760.

Milton C. Covington was born October 4, 1812, in Madison County, Kentucky, married at the age of twenty-one years, and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits until his early death when he was about forty years of age. His wife survived him as a widow for many years, and passed away when she was more than eighty years of age. They were the parents of the following children: William J., who removed to Clay County, Missouri, and there died when past eighty years of age; Henry, who also died in that county; John, who resides at Liberty, Missouri; Elihu, a resident of Clay County; Charity, who died unmarried; Lizzie, who married Milton H. Benton and resided in Madison County; Ann, who married William Benton and died at Waco in 1913; Martha, who first married T. J. Scrivener and later John Sagerser, and lived and died in Jessamine County, Kentucky; and Amanda, who married E. P. Benton and died in Madison County in 1919.

James Milton Benton, the only child of his parents, was born near Waco, Madison County, Kentucky, March 28, 1861, and after attending the Central University at Richmond pursued a course in law at the University of Virginia, from which he was graduated with his degree in 1883, his preparation for his profession also including a period of experience as a public school teacher. In January, 1884, he came to Winchester and became associated with Rodney Haggard, a leading lawyer of this locality who was then serving as state senator. He remained with Mr. Haggard for eight years, during which time he gained much valuable experience. It was in this period that Mr. Benton and his associate were named as counsel in the Renick will case, which is noted in the annals of Kentucky jurisprudence. Abram Renick was the original Shorthorn cattle breeder of Clark County, with 2,700 acres of land and the finest herd of cattle of this breed in the state. He died as a bachelor, and his will gave all his land to four great-nephews, and the document was thereupon assailed by other kin of the dead man on the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence. For the contestants, counsel included John G. Carlisle, William Lindsay, Harry Ward, Emmett Dickson and others; and for the beneficiaries under the will, Joseph C. S. Blackburn, Charles I. Bronston, George C. Lockhart, William M. Beckner and about all the members of the local bar acted.

After severing his connection with Mr. Haggard Judge Benton engaged in a general practice until 1902, in which year he was appointed by Governor Beckham as circuit judge of his district, which included Clark, Madison, Jessamine and Powell counties, to succeed Hon. Thomas J. Scott of Richmond. The period of this appointment continued for two years, following which Judge Benton was retained in that office by an election carrying with it a term of six years, this being followed by a similar re-election. He was finally defeated for renomination, after fourteen years of capable and high-minded service. During his incumbency of the circuit bench, Judge Benton was called upon to preside at numerous important cases, none of which attracted such great interest among educators as that known as the Berea College case, involving the validity of an act of the Legislature of 1904 to abolish mixed schools in Kentucky. The validity of this act was assailed by the college in question, represented by Hon. John G. Carlisle, then an attorney in New York City after his long and honorable service as a member of Congress from Kentucky, speaker of the House of Representatives and a member of the cabinet of President Cleveland. The act was upheld by the court and the decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Another case which attracted nation-wide attention and interest, and which was presided over by Judge Benton, was that following the killing of James Marcum in a feud in Breathitt County. Suit for damages amounting to $100,000 was brought by the widow and children of the deceased against James Hargis, county judge of Breathitt County, Senator A. H. Hargis, and B. F. French, the latter said to be one of the leaders in the French-Eoensale feud of Perry County, and Ed Callahan, sheriff of Breathitt County. After a jury trial lasting a month, at Winchester, a verdict for $8,000 was rendered against James Hargis and Ed Callahan, and a finding for A. H. Hargis and French. This case involved about all the phases of law conspiracy, and the brilliancy of the lawyers, Hon. Charles J. Bromson for the plaintiffs and Hon. Lewis McQuown for the defendants, added to the great interest steadily maintained in the case, the addresses of their distinguished legists to the jury being particularly scintillating efforts.

Since his retirement from the bench Judge Benton has continued to be engaged in general practice and has further solidified his reputation as one of Clark County's leading attorneys. He is a member of the Christian Church and as a fraternalist is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Judge Benton married Miss Bessie Smith, who was born in Madison County, Kentucky, a daughter of Doctor Curran C. Smith, a practicing physician of that county. Mrs. Benton is a member of and active worker in the Presbyterian Church. She and her husband have had four children: Curran S., a resident of Lansing, Michigan, where he is sales manager for the bean department of the Michigan State Farm Bureau, and for two years was traffic manager for the Supply Division of Military Aeronautics during the World war, with the rank of major; Sara Goodloe, the wife of Willis W. Battaile, a farmer of Clark County; William C., a graduate of West Point Academy, November, 1918, who resigned in order to engage in the study of law at the Kentucky State University, where he secured a B. L. degree, and is now associated with his father in practice; and Bessie Edgar, a student at Kentucky Wesleyan College at Winchester.

John M. Hodgkin, of Winchester, has devoted practically all the mature years of his life to banking. To say that he is a successful banker might mean only that he has risen in his profession and has been influential in keeping his bank sound and prosperous, but the patrons of the Peoples State Bank and Trust Company regard his character and abilities as much more far reaching than that. Evidently Mr. Hodgkin has naturally been guided by a high ideal as to the functions of a banker. Not all successful bankers are popular, but Mr. Hodgkin is undoubtedly the best liked cashier in Clark County, the success of his bank has devolved upon him, and he has practiced the quality of a square deal to all. To this is added in a large degree those agreeable qualities characteristic of the entire Hodgkin family, and his influence has thoroughly pervaded the bank of which he is the responsible head.

Mr. Hodgkin was born in Clark County October 28, 1860, a son of James and Rachel (Bush) Hodgkin and grandson of Samuel Hodgkin. James Hodgkin spent a long and active life as a farmer and farm owner near Winchester, and died in the city in 1895, in his seventy-fifth year. He was a practical agriculturist and also dealt in farms. He was also for many years a director in the Clark County National Bank and its vice president at the time of his death. He was never identified with any public office, but was an active member of the Forest Grove Christian Church. His wife, Rachel Bush, whose life was devoted to her home and family, died on the old homestead in January, 1884. Her father was Fielding Bush. Of the six children five reached mature years: John M.; Fielding Bush, who was a graduate of the Transylvania Law School of Cincinnati and a successful lawyer who died at the age of thirty-five; Adelaide, who died at the age of thirty-two, the wife of J. R. Martin; Rachel, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-eight; and William who is a farmer and also a member of the firm Martin & Hodgkin, dealers in coal and building materials at Winchester.

John M. Hodgkin grew up on a farm, had the advantages of the schools of the county and the city, and was twenty years of age when he entered the Clark County National Bank. From the beginning he regarded banking as his career, studied the business and was soon promoted to paying teller. For twenty-one years he was an official of the Clark County National Bank. He then organized the Peoples State Bank and Trust Company, which began business on December 21, 1915. Mr. Hodgkin from the beginning has been cashier and the responsible official in charge of every important transaction. The president of the bank, J. L. Brown, lives on his farm four miles from Winchester. Mr. Brown has been president from the organization and L. B. Cockrell vice president. The directors include many of the substantial business men, farmers and professional men of Winchester and Clark County. The success of the bank has exceeded the fondest expectations of its founders. It has a capital stock of $100,000, surplus and undivided profits of $80,000, and at the beginning of 1920 the total resources were not far from $1,000,000. the deposits alone aggregating three quarters of a million.

Mr. Hodgkin is a democrat. At the age of thirty-two he married Miss Mary Miller, a daughter of Dr. Washington Miller. In earlier years Mr. Hodgkin was much interested in the interesting sport of fox chasing and kept a pack of hounds, but for a number of years past he has not been a participant in field sports and confines himself to interesting recollections of such past times.

Charles G. Stephenson, M. D. To some individuals are given diverse talents which they have the ability to utilize for the benefit not only of themselves but humanity at large. With a broader field in which to labor such men can direct their efforts in more directions and therefore reach a greater number of beneficiaries. Coming into close touch with such, their own sympathies are broadened, their scope of usefulness widened and their own characters strengthened. Dr. Charles G. Stephenson, who resides at the little hamlet of Becknerville, seven and one-half miles from Winchester, is not only a substantial member of the medical profession and an ex-official of several medical bodies, but has contributed materially to the welfare of his community in the capacity of secretary of the Board of Education of Clark County.

Doctor Stephenson was born in Brown County, Ohio, November 15, 1869, his parents being Joseph A. and Elizabeth (Bennett) Stephenson, natives of the same county, and his grandfather, Mills W. Stephenson, who passed his entire life in Ohio. In 1881 Joseph A. Stephenson came to Lexington, Kentucky, and spent two years on the old Henry Clay place, Ashland, then removing to a farm at Pine Grove Station, "Boscobel," where he spent eighteen years, this being the former home of Levi Prewitt. In later life Joseph A. Stephenson retired from active affairs and moved to Lexington, where his death occurred in March, 1919, when he was eighty-two years of age. His widow passed away in 1917, when seventy-two years of age. He was a zealous Mason and a life member of Lexington Lodge, A. F. & A. M. In the family there are, in 1920, four daughters and two sons living, four others having lived to reach ages of maturity: Cora, who died at the age of twenty-four years, as the wife of J. W. Newman, an agriculturist of Fayette County; Augusta, who died at the age of twenty-three years as the wife of S. D. Miller, a farmer of the same county; Mills W., who died at the age of thirty-seven years, having been a member for years of the Lexington Fire Department; George H., secretary of the Bessemer Land and Improvement Company of Bessemer, Alabama, and a real estate man who assisted in laying out that enterprising town; James Robert, who was identified with the office force of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company at Bessemer, Alabama, and died in January, 1921; Dr. Charles G., of this notice; Emma C., the wife of W. C. G. Hobbs, an attorney of Lexington; Mary Etta, the wife of Coleman Prewitt, residing at the old Prewitt home at Pine Grove; Nancy N., the wife of Judge T. J. North, of Louisville; and Julia A., of Lexington.

Charles G. Stephenson resided on the home farm until he was twenty-one years of age and graduated from the State University, where he took a special course, with the class of 1889. He also took a normal course at Danville, Indiana, and graduated in 1893. Previous to this time he had commenced teaching, and this vocation he continued in Fayette County for seven years, in the meantime commencing his medical studies in the Hospital School of Medicine at Louisville, from which he was graduated with the class of 1898. At that time he located at his present place of residence, but three miles from his old home. Becknerville, located in the heart of an agricultural community, is a hamlet of two stores, a church and several residences, but is given importance as the site of Pine Grove Masonic Lodge.

Doctor Stephenson has continued to be engaged in the general practice of his calling, with a constantly increasing professional business of the most desirable character. He is a member of the American Medical Association and has won distinction in his profession and the esteem of his fellow-practitioners, being an ex-president of the Kentucky Valley Medical Association and of the Clark County Medical Society, and at present being on the staff of the Clark County Hospital. He has kept in close touch with school work, and at this time is secretary of the Board of Education of Clark County, which has four members and which is directing the building of the new Clark County high school at Winchester. Doctor Stephenson is also extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. He had not lived in this community long ere he was interested in farming, and at this time is the owner of a 550-acre farm, operated by tenants, on which he raises stock, tobacco and general crops. He is at this time erecting a beautiful country home commensurate with the surroundings on a pleasant location on his property. Politically the Doctor is a democrat. He is active in the work of the Disciples of Christ Church, in which he was formerly a deacon and is now an elder, and has been Sunday School superintendent for many years. A Mason from young manhood, he is now a member and past master of Pine Grove Lodge No. 680 at Becknerville, and a member of the Chapter at Winchester, and on several occasions has served as representative to the Grand Lodge. He was one of the original stockholders in the Peoples State Bank and Trust Company of Winchester, and is a member of the Board of Directors of that institution.

Doctor Stephenson on April 26, 1900, married Catherine Leer Haley, who was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, a daughter of the late Ambrose Haley, an agriculturist of that county. She is a granddaughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Albertie and J. L. B. Albertie, both of whom died at advanced ages, and she is a great-granddaughter of Dr. John Albertie, a native of Genoa, Italy, who was a pioneer physician of the locality. Mrs. Stephenson is a lady of numerous graces and accomplishments and a graduate of Tiptonian Institute, Paris, Kentucky. Three children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Stephenson: Nancy Walters and Ambrose Haley, high school students at Winchester; and Charles G., Jr.

Taylor Hurst, M. D. In war and peace without doubt the physician is the most useful member of society, and as he has to be subjected to so rigid a training before he assumes the responsibilities of his profession, the most desirable traits of his character are developed and he is able to render his fellow citizens a service which is valuable and unselfish. Many times he is called upon to hold public office; at all times he is expected, and to his credit be it said that he seldom fails to do so, to give his community the benefit of his expert knowledge with reference to sanitary measures, and to act with vigor whenever an epidemic threatens the people. One of the members of the medical profession who is living up to the highest requirements of his calling and has won an enviable position in Perry County, is Dr. Taylor Hurst of Hazard.

Doctor Hurst was born near Jackson, Breathitt County, Kentucky, August 5, 1879, a son of Samuel H. and Charity (Hollons) Hurst. Samuel H. Hurst was born in Breathitt County in 1842, a son of Hardin Hurst, and grandson of Samuel H. Hurst, Sr., who came to Breathitt County, Kentucky, from Virginia, and became a very prosperous farmer. For twenty years he served as a justice of the peace, and he was County Court clerk for four years. The Hursts have been either farmers, lawyers or physicians, and all of them have been reliable, honorable and upright citizens. During the war between the states the Hursts were in sympathy with the Union, and strong republicans. The Hollons, on the contrary, were equally zealous as democrats. Mrs. Hurst, mother of Doctor Hurst, was born in Wolfe County, Kentucky, and died in 1907, when she was sixty-nine years of age. Her husband, father of Doctor Hurst, is still living, and resides on his farm, which is located thirteen miles from Jackson in Breathitt County. They had nine children, five daughters and four sons, of whom seven are still living, namely: Lizzie, who is the widow of A. L. Hagins, lives at Wilhurst, Kentucky; Hardin, who is a farmer of Osgood, Indiana; John, who is a farmer of Wilhurst; Doctor Taylor, who was the next in order of birth; Fanny, who is the wife of C. B. Amyx of Chanute, Kansas; Capt. S. H., who resides at Simpson, Kentucky, was named in honor of William Hurst, who was a captain during the war between the states and lost an ear during that conflict; Lilly, who is the wife of R. E. Mason, of Westpoint, Kentucky; Dulcina, who was the wife of W. A. Hampton of Simpson, Kentucky, died in 1916 when forty-seven years of age; and Lou, who was the wife of James Meier, died at Vancleve, Kentucky, at the age of forty-five years.

Doctor Hurst was graduated from the Jackson High School in 1900, and then for thirteen years taught school at Vancleve and Hampton, and took his medical course at the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated with class honors in 1909, being the first student from Breathitt to be graduated from this institution. Immediately thereafter he went to Whitney, North Carolina, on the Clinch River branch of the Cincinnati & Ohio Railroad, and was engaged there in a general practice for one year. In 1910 he came to Hazard, and during the time he has been here has built up a very large practice. At one time he practiced in twenty-six mining camps, but now his general practice is so large he has to confine his industrial practice to five camps.

Doctor Hurst is unmarried, but is one of the most charitable men and is caring for a number of orphan children, who, but for his benevolence, would be utterly dependent upon the public. During the late war he was examining physician of seven local draft boards, and was otherwise useful to the administration in assisting it to carry out its policies. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Doctor Hurst belongs to the Masonic fraternity, Jackson Lodge No. 649, Free and Accepted Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Professionally he is a member of the Perry County and the Kentucky State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. In his practice and private life Doctor Hurst has been stalwart in his support of what he has felt was right regardless of the consequence, and his fearlessness has brought him honors and respect.

Goodloe McDowell. Among the earnest and enterprising men whose depth of character, patriotism and courage have gained him a prominent place in the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens is Goodloe McDowell, of Lexington. He is the scion of one of the honored old families of Kentucky, and because of his excellent qualities of character and genial attitude towards those with whom he comes in contact he enjoys a well-deserved popularity throughout the community honored by his citizenship.

William Cassius Goodloe McDowell was born in Lexington, Kentucky, on the 3d day of July, 1895, and is the son of Thomas C. and Mary Mann (Goodloe) McDowell. His father is widely and favorably known as one of the leading handlers of thoroughbred horses in the Blue Grass state and is a successful business man and public-spirited citizen. To him and his wife were born two children, the subject of this sketch and Anne Clay, the wife of Dr. William S. Stucky. After completing his course in the common and high schools in Lexington Goodloe McDowell entered Phillips Academy at Exeter, New Hampshire, where he was graduated in 1915. He then became a student in Yale College, but in the spring of 1917, on the entrance of the United States into the World war, he entered the Yale Officers Reserve Training Corps. From there he went to the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, where on August 14, 1917, he received his commission as first lieutenant of Field Artillery. In September following he was ordered to France. He sailed by the way of Halifax, and landed at Liverpool, England whence he went to Southampton, and across the Channel to L'Havre, France. On October 3d he entered the Field Artillery School of Instruction at Saumur, and in December, after completing the course, he was attached to Battery C, One Hundred and First Artillery, of the Twenty-sixth Division. Later he was detached from the Battery and assigned to the One Hundred and First Regimental Wagon Train on the front line at Chemin des Dames. Subsequently the Twenty-sixth Division was relieved from that duty and was sent to the Seichprey Sector, where he remained until April 1, 1918, when he was relieved from duty there and assigned to the Sixth Field Artillery, with the First Division, then en route to the Montdidier Sector, taking part in the engagement at Cantigny, Soissons (Martincourt), San Mehiel and Meuse-Argonne. On October 10, 1918, he was commissioned a captain in the United States Army, and thereafter served as regimental adjutant, regimental personnel officer, regimental liaison officer and regimental gas officer. On November 10th the First Division was ordered to proceed to Germany with the Army of Occupation. He proceeded with the Division on through Luxemburg, acting as reconnaisance officer in front of the Sixth Field Artillery. A slight gassing caused him to be taken to the hospital at Treves, and after his recovery he rejoined his command at Ransbach, where he remained until it became necessary for him to return to the hospital at Coblenz, remaining there about a month. He was then sent to the convalescent hospital at Nice, in Southern France, where he rapidly regained his health. In May, 1919, Captain McDowell returned to the United States and on May 26, 1919, was mustered out of the service at Camp Meade, Maryland. His was a record of which he may well be proud, for he rendered faithful and efficient service in all his assignments and gave the best he had to the cause for which he fought.

On his return to Lexington Captain McDowell engaged in the automobile business, being a partner in the organization of the Union Motor Company, of which he has since acted as secretary and treasurer. Though a comparatively new concern, this company has already taken its place among the leading enterprises in its line here and is enjoying a remarkable degree of prosperity.

Mr. McDowell is a member of the American Officers of the Great War, the American Legion, and the Military Order of Foreign Wars. His religious faith is that of the Protestant Episcopal Church. While at Phillips Academy he became a member of the Phi Epsilon Sigma Society and at Yale he belonged to the Delta Kappa Epsilon Society and the Elihu Club.

One of the leading society events in Lexington in recent years was the wedding of Goodloe McDowell and Virginia Schnaufer, which was solemnized on July 28, 1920, at Christ Church Cathedral. Rev. William Lever Settle, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, officiated, assisted by Rev. Alexander Patterson, of Beattyville, formerly of Lexington. Mrs. McDowell, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thomas Schnaufer, was graduated from Hamilton College and then attended Smith College at Northampton, Massachusetts.

Joseph LeCompte. Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record in the annals of history wherever found. By a few general observations the writer hopes to convey in the following paragraphs, succinctly and yet without fulsome encomium, some idea of the high standing of Joseph LeCompte, of Lexington, who stands in the front ranks as a business man and as one of the representative citizens of his state. Those who know him best will readily acquiesce in the statement that many elements of a solid and practical nature are united in his composition and which during a series of years have brought him into prominent notice throughout the central West, his life and achievements earning for him a conspicuous place among his compeers.

Joseph LeCompte traces his paternal ancestral line back to Anthony LeCompte, a native of Picardy, France, where he became wealthy, owning much land. He got into disfavor and was compelled to leave his native land, going to England, where he joined the English army and, because of his valor, was knighted by the king. About eleven years later, he came to America, landing here in 1634 and at once locating in Maryland. The great-grandfather, Charles LeCompte, was born in Maryland in 1749 and died in Henry County, Kentucky, in 1822. He was an explorer and in 1775 he came down the Ohio River from Pittsburgh and up the Kentucky River to Lexington. Later he settled in Scott County, where he engaged in hunting and trapping along the Kentucky River. He was with Gen. George Rogers Clark on his expeditions against the Indians. He married Elizabeth Coons and became one of the most prominent pioneer farmers of his day in that section of the country. He, with others, built a fort for protection against the Indians where Georgetown, Kentucky, now stands. He served through the war of the Revolution and it is through him that Joseph LeCompte and his sister were eligible and became members of the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution. The paternal grandparents were Joseph and Margaret Morison (Mitchell) LeCompte. The former was born in Scott County, Kentucky, on December 15, 1792, and died on April 25, 1851, while his wife, who was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, on December 11, 1806, died on November 30, 1858. They became the parents of eight children, four sons and four daughters, of whom six lived to maturity, Charles C. being the oldest of these children. Joseph LeCompte was numbered among the pioneers of the Blue Grass State, in which he became a man of considerable prominence in public life, having served several terms in Congress and as a member of the convention which framed the State Constitution. He was an orator of considerable note and was also a veteran of the War of 1812, having fought under Jackson at the battle of New Orleans.

Charles C. LeCompte, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Henry County, Kentucky, on June 15, 1825, and his death occurred on the 20th day of August, 1865. He was educated under the direction of private teachers, and his first business occupation was as a wholesale grocer in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio. Later he gave up commercial life for farming, in which he was engaged during the remainder of his active days. He was a whig in his political views, being an ardent supporter of Henry Clay, but never a seeker after public office. His religious faith was that of the Presbyterian Church. On February 10, 1853, he was married to Sarah Allin Black, who was born in Franklin County, Kentucky, on June 22, 1833, and whose death occurred on October 15, 1913. To these worthy parents were born three children, of whom two are living, Margaret J. and Joseph. Both have joined the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution through the Allin line which traces back to Joseph Allin of Mecklenburg County, Virginia.

Joseph LeCompte was born in Henry County, Kentucky, on the 1st day of October, 1856. He received his educational training in the public schools of Frankfort, Kentucky, graduating from high school. He engaged in the retail drug business in Frankfort, which he followed until 1884, when he turned his attention to the flour milling business, becoming one of the organizers of the Lexington Roller Mills Company of which he is president. This has been a prosperous enterprise and is numbered among the important manufacturing concerns of Lexington. Mr. LeCompte is widely recognized as a leader in the flour milling world and his ability and enterprise have made him an important leader in movements for the stabilizing and advancement of that important industry. Besides his local milling interests, Mr. LeCompte is a member and vice president of the Millers National Insurance Company, whose headquarters are in Chicago; a member and director in the Integrity Mutual Casualty Company, of Chicago; a director of the Millers National Federation, of Chicago, of which he has been an active member for twenty years; president of the Central Kentucky Millers Association; vice president of the Southeastern Millers Association, with headquarters at Nashville, Tennessee, and a director of the Security Trust Company, of Lexington. Politically, Mr. LeCompte gives his support to the democratic party and his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. A public-spirited citizen, he is ready at all times to use his means and influence for the promotion of such public improvements as have been conducive to the general welfare, and there is probably not another man in the community so long honored by his residence who is held in higher esteem by his fellow citizens, regardless of sect, politics or profession.

Luther Stivers. Another of the worthy native sons of Kentucky is Luther Stivers, a prominent business man and one of the city commissioners of Lexington, who is easily the peer of any of his fellows in the qualities that constitute correct manhood and good citizenship. He is what he is from natural endowment and self culture, having attained his present standing solely through the impelling force of his own strong nature, and he therefore commands to a notable degree the confidence of all who have had dealings with him.

Luther Stivers was born at Athens, Fayette County, Kentucky, on the 19th day of October, 1865, and is the ninth in order of birth of the ten children who were born to his parents, Edward and Lucy (Falconer) Stivers. His father was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, and his death occurred in 1878, when sixty-three years of age, while his wife, who also was a native of the Blue Grass state, died at the age of seventy years. Of these children, eight grew to maturity. Edward Stivers was a cooper by trade and followed this pursuit as a manufacturer in Athens up to the time of his death. In politics he was a democrat, and his wife was a member of the Christian Church, to which he was a generous contributor. He was a man of sterling character and stood high in the community in which he spent his life.

Luther Stivers was educated in the public schools of his native community and at the age of fifteen years he engaged in farming, in which he was successful. Later he became a dealer in leaf tobacco, in which also he was prospered. He has erected several tobacco warehouses and handles tobacco on commission. At one time he was the owner of 600 acres of fine land in the blue Grass Country, but has sold a part of this land, being the present owner of 240 acres, which he is devoting mainly to the raising of tobacco. In 1919 he had 100 acres out in tobacco and 100 acres in wheat, and his farm is most eligibly located near Athens.

A number of years ago Mr. Stivers became interested in the breeding, raising and training of horses, in which he has met with most pronounced success, having produced some horses of great merit. He was the breeder and owner of "Forest B.," one of the best trotting horses reared in Kentucky and which he sold as a two-year-old in 1915; "Walter Stone," a pacer, which he drove in 2:08½; "J. Mack," a trotter, which he drove in 2:09, and several other good horses. Mr. Stivers has driven these horses in matinee races and all of them have been consistent cup winners.

Mr. Stivers has a splendid home in Lexington, where he spends the greater part of his time, and he takes an active interest in the affairs of this community, being an ardent supporter of all movements for the commercial development of this locality. He is a democrat in his political faith, but has never been an office holder until 1919, when he was elected a member of the Board of City Commissioners, in which office he is now serving to the entire satisfaction of the voters of Lexington, and having charge of the department of public safety. In the business affairs of the city, he is prominent as one of the organizers and at present a member of the board of directors of the Bank of Commerce.

On December 14, 1892, Mr. Stivers was married to Lulu Flanagan, who was born and reared in Fayette County, Kentucky, and they are the parents of a son, Walter Forrest. Although his life has been a busy one, his every-day affairs making heavy demands upon his time, Mr. Stivers has never in any way avoided his duties as a citizen and his obligations to his fellow citizens, by whom he is held in universal esteem.

William Wallace Estill has for many years been widely known as a careful and skillful breeder of Kentucky trotting stock, also a cattleman and farmer, proprietor of the widely known farm Elmwood in Fayette County.

He is one of the Estills who represent in the present generation a family that was identified with the first permanent marks of civilization in the district around Lexington. He is a descendant of Capt. James Estill, a friend and admirer of Daniel Boone, and one of the Kentucky patriots who gave up their lives while defending their country from Indian attacks. The Estills came to Boonesboro as early as 1776, and it was early in 1780 that Capt. James Estill completed his cabin home in Madison County. Capt. James Estill was leader of the whites in the battle of Little Mountain, March 22, 1782, and lost his life in that bloody encounter. He was born in Augusta County, Virginia, and married Rachel Wright, who survived him and married a second time. Capt. James Estill, in whose honor the State of Kentucky erected a monument, standing near Richmond, was a son of Wallace Estill and a great-grandson of Thomas Estill, who came to America in 1664. A son of Capt. James Estill was also named Wallace and was born in Madison County, Kentucky, inheriting a part of the land granted his gallant father. He spent his life as a farmer and planter on an estate about four miles from Richmond, and died at the age of fourscore years. He married Elizabeth Rodes, of another pioneer family of Madison County. The oldest of their children was William R. Estill, father of the prominent stockman first mentioned above.

William R. Estill was born on the homestead farm in Madison County, and after his marriage bought a place on the Winchester Pike in Fayette County. He employed slave labor in its management, and did an extensive business in the raising of cattle and mules. He died in May, 1875, at the age of sixty-three. William R. Estill married Amanda Ferguson Fry, who was born in Clark County, Kentucky, daughter of Christopher and Eliza Fry. She died in 1868, at the age of forty-seven. The oldest of her three sons was Clifton F. Estill, who was born February 3, 1842, served as a Confederate soldier, and for many years was a farmer and stockman in Fayette County and also in public office. The second of the children is William Wallace. The third is Robert C., who was born April 22, 1855, and is owner of the noted Elmhurst Farm, on which have been bred and trained some of Kentucky's most famous race horses, including Kentucky Todd. Elmhurst Farm adjoins Elmwood Farm, and thus the two brothers, Robert C. and William W. Estill, live side by side and share with each other the many distinctive honors as Kentucky horse men.

William Wallace Estill was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, April 12, 1848, and was educated in private schools at Lexington, in B. B. Sayre's private school at Frankfort, attended Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and finished with the class of 1868. Since then for half a century he has been active as a farmer and stock raiser. He has not specialized in horse breeding to the extent of his brother Robert C., and while known as a horseman of rare judgment, he is still better known as a farmer and breeder of cattle. Elmwood Farm has been noted for its Shorthorns, and also for its Southdown and Cotswold sheep. His farming interests for a number of years past have been chiefly under the direction of his sons.

Mr. Estill is a director in the Phoenix and Third National banks of Lexington. He is an independent in politics and a member of the Sons of the American Revolutions. September 6, 1870, he married Harriet Hughes Sheffer, who was born in Fayette County, June 11, 1851, daughter of John H. and Julia (Hughes) Sheffer. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and died at the age of eighty-eight, and her mother passed away at the age of fifty-three. Mrs. Estill was the fifth in a family of five daughters and one son, three of whom are still living. Four sons were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Estill. The oldest, Jacob S., was actively associated with his father on the farm until his death at the age of forty-five. The son William Rodes now has charge of the livestock on the Elmwood Farm and sustains the reputation of the Estill family as farmers and stockmen. The third son, Howard S., married Anna Adams. The fourth, George C., married Alice Garth, of Huntsville, Alabama, and has a daughter, Alice G.

William Joseph Treacy. Among men who have stamped the impress of their characters and their strong individuality on the people and the business interests of Kentucky is William J. Treacy, whose entire life has been devoted to the horse business in one phase or another. Faithfulness to duty and a strict adherence to a fixed purpose have been dominating factors in his life, which has been replete with success worthily attained. He is a scion of one of the worthy old families of this locality, and many of the strong characteristics of his progenitors seem to have outcropped in him, so that he has ever enjoyed to a marked degree the esteem and good will of all who know him.

William Joseph Treacy was born in Lexington, Kentucky, on June 14, 1868, and is the son of Bernard J. and Mary (Ganly) Treacy, who are mentioned specifically in a separate sketch elsewhere in this work. Mr. Treacy received his educational training in St. Paul's High School and St. Catherine's Academy, which he attended to the age of seventeen years. In 1885 he became a student in Georgetown University, where he was graduated in 1890, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then went to work for his father, who was extensively engaged in the breeding, raising and training of thoroughbred trotting horses, and remained with him until 1897. He then became connected with the well-known Thoroughbred Record as assistant editor, which position he held up to 1904, when he became one of the organizers of the Kentucky Sales Company, of which he became vice president and also served in the capacity of pedigree expert. This company became one of the best-known and most reliable sales corporations in the State of Kentucky, and their sales, which are held four times a year, are considered important events, being attended by prospective buyers and interested horsemen from all over the United States. Mr. Treacy also formed a partnership with Ken Walker, under the firm name of Treacy & Walker, a firm which has risen to prominent place in the horse world. Besides the successful handling of a racing stable, including some high-class horses, they are performing valuable service as racing statisticians, registrars of horses, pedigree experts, catalogue compilers and theoretical breeding experts. They are also agents for the livestock department of the

F. J. Turneaure

Hartford Insurance Company and publishers of the American Thoroughbred Stallion Record.

Politically Mr. Treacy is a democrat, but aside from the exercise of his right of franchise he has never taken an active interest in political affairs, having no aspirations for public office. He is a member of the Jockey Club and is popular among his associates.

Mr. Treacy was married to Elizabeth Wolf, who was born and reared in Lexington, the daughter of Frank J. and Kate (Canning) Wolf. Her father was a native of Germany, and he died at the age of seventy-six years, being survived by his widow, who was born in County Roscommon, Ireland. Frank J. Wolf was a teacher of music, in which he was an expert. They were the parents of but one child, Mrs. Treacy. To Mr. Treacy and his wife have been born three children, namely: William Joseph, Jr., who died in 1905, at three years of age; James Rogers and Margaret Josephine. Mr. Treacy is eminently public spirited in his attitude towards community life, giving his unreserved support to all movements looking to the advancement of the general welfare, and has been a potent factor in the development and prosperity of this section of the country.

William Penick Averett, general agent at Lexington for the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, has been in the insurance business for many years and came to Kentucky with his present company after a valuable record for them in his native State of Virginia.

In Virginia the Averetts have been a family prominent socially, in education and civic affairs for many generations. Mr. Averett's ancestry is a mixture of French Huguenot, English and Scotch strains. He was born in Halifax County, Virginia, a son of John T. and Louisa F. (Penick) Averett. His grandfather, Thomas Hamlet Averett, for several terms represented the Fifth Virginia District in Congress. John T. Averett, who died at the age of seventy-one was educated in Emory and Henry College, and had a long and distinguished record as an educator. Before the war he established a military school at Ringgold, Virginia. He enlisted in the war and was made a captain in the Thirty-eighth Virginia Regiment. After the war he returned to Ringgold and opened another male school, and after running that successfully for a few years he moved to Danville and took charge of a boys school. This he conducted many years until the public schools were opened and he was elected the first principal. After serving as principal for several years his brother, S. W. Averett, had been elected president of Roanoke Female College and he was persuaded by his brother to go in as co-president. They conducted this school most successfully for about twenty-five years. It was originally called Union Female College and was afterwards changed to the Roanoke Female College. After his death the school was taken over by the Baptist denomination under their co-ordination arrangement, and has been named Averett College. Averett College for Young Women still continues a prosperous and high-class junior college, one of the distinctive institutions of learning in Danville. John T. Averett was for many years a deacon in the Baptist Church, and was also very active in Masonry, being past master of Roman Eagle Lodge at Danville and at one time district deputy grand master of the state.

William Penick Averett was fourth in a family of eight children, four of whom are still living. His mother died at the age of thirty-nine. He acquired his early education under his father at Danville, but at the age of fourteen began self supporting activities as clerk in a shoe store, and subsequently engaged in that line of business for himself at Danville. Mr. Averett in 1897 sold out and entered the general insurance field at Danville. In 1899 he became a special agent for the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company at Danville, and has been serving that great insurance organization for twenty-two years. In 1907 he became district agent at Lynchburg, Virginia, and in 1912 came to Lexington, Kentucky, as general agent. He has succeeded in building up a great volume of business for his company in Kentucky. His offices are in the Fayette National Bank Building.

Mr. Averett was made a Mason in Roman Eagle Lodge at Danville, his father assisting in conferring the Master's degree. Later he demitted to Hill City Lodge at Lynchburg, and in 1912 became a member of Lexington Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M. He is also affiliated with Lexington Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Webb Commandery No. 1, K. T., and is a past potentate of Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Averett is a Baptist and in politics a democrat.

November 9, 1880, he married Mollie E. Wilson, who was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, a daughter of James H. and Mary (Price) Wilson. Her parents were born in Virginia, and of their four children Mrs. Averett was the third. Her father at one time owned extensive planting interests in Virginia and was a Confederate soldier. The Wilsons were Presbyterians.

Fielding Jones Pentecost. For over half a century the name Pentecost has been familiarly associated with some of the best abilities and qualifications of the Henderson bar. The present lawyer of that name at Henderson, Fielding Jones Pentecost, is a son of the late William B. Pentecost, who for many years occupied an enviable position as a lawyer in Kentucky.

William Blackman Pentecost was born at Mount Vernon, Indiana, January 17, 1832, and came to Henderson County, Kentucky, before he was twenty-one years of age. He was reared in Indiana, was carefully educated for the law, but on coming to Henderson engaged in business as a merchant for a time. When he took up practice he threw himself with characteristic energy into his profession and soon achieved an enviable name and reputation. He was an eloquent speaker, very successful in the trial of cases, and had a large general practice. He died at Corydon in Henderson County, Kentucky, January 21, 1897, at the age of sixty-five. He was a democrat. His first wife was Virginia Green, of an old Henderson County family, and all her five children are deceased, a daughter and two sons having reached mature years. William Blackman Pentecost married for his second wife Mary Jones, a daughter of Fielding Jones of Henderson County.

Of her three surviving children Fielding Jones Pentecost is the oldest. He was born in Henderson County, September 11, 1876, and as the son of a successful lawyer was well reared and carefully educated. He was admitted to the bar in 1897, before attaining his twenty-first year, and for over twenty years has enjoyed a large and successful practice as a lawyer, having engaged in and tried many important criminal and civil cases. Mr. Pentecost has probably tried more cases in Western Kentucky than any man of his age, having defended more than fifty murder cases, and has had cases in the Supreme Court in nine different states. Having had greater success in criminal practice than any man in Western Kentucky, and being one of the best known criminal lawyers in Kentucky. In 1918 he made a race for the republican nomination for judge of the Court of Appeals, and was defeated by only fifteen votes in sixteen counties. Since that time he has congratulated himself many times in that he escaped from exile. He is a republican in politics, and in different campaigns has been prominent in the councils of the party. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order is a Shriner and belongs to the Elks, and in 1900 married Miss Emma Ringo.

Hon. William Howard McCorkle. Among the citizens of Lexington and Fayette County to whom is vouchsafed an honored place in local history is William Howard McCorkle, at present vice mayor and city commissioner of Lexington. It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs who makes the real history of a community, and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. There is always a full measure of satisfaction in adverting in even a casual way to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellow men and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which tell so much for the prosperity of the community. In the life history of Mr. McCorkle are found evidences of those characteristics that always make for achievement—persistency, integrity and sound common sense—and as a result he has long been numbered among the substantial, successful and influential citizens of this locality.

William Howard McCorkle was born on May 9, 1861, near Lexington, Rockbridge County, Virginia, and is the son of William H. and Virginia (Wilson) McCorkle. He spent his childhood and youth under the parental roof and secured the rudiments of his education in the rural schools of Rockbridge County. Later he attended the preparatory schools of Profs. Jacob Fuller and J. B. Jones at Lexington, and after being well grounded there he entered Washington and Lee University, where he remained for two years, 1878-9. Shortly after reaching his majority Mr. McCorkle decided to locate in Kentucky and reached Lexington on August 23, 1883. Having had considerable experience on his father's farm, upon his arrival in the Blue Grass state he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits and engaged in farming and stock raising in Fayette County, in which he met with a satisfactory degree of success. Later he removed to Lexington and embarked in the wholesale and retail mercantile business, with which he remained identified for a number of years, winning a high reputation as a business man of broad views, shrewd sagacity and sterling integrity.

Mr. McCorkle's public and political career began in 1892, when he was elected a member of the general council of the City of Lexington, in the administration of Mayor Henry T. Duncan, father of Gen. George B. Duncan, one of the American generals who achieved distinction on the western front in the World war just ended. Mr. McCorkle served as chairman of the ways and means committee during his four years' term, and also about this time he served as a member of the Lexington Board of Education. When Joseph B. Simrall was elected mayor Mr. McCorkle was chosen a member of the board of aldermen and elected president of the board, a position which he filled with credit to himself and the administration. He was president of the Chamber of Commerce one term, and was largely instrumental in inducing the American Tobacco Company to locate its first warehouse in Lexington. This was the first move to establish the tobacco industry in Lexington, which has since become the largest loose-leaf tobacco market in the world and the home of quite a number of large warehouses, factories and stemmeries. For several terms Mr. McCorkle also served as a member of the County Board of Equalization by appointment of County Judge Bullock, being chairman of that board a number of times.

When John Skain was elected mayor of Lexington he appointed Mr. McCorkle superintendent of public works, which position gave him entire supervision of the streets of the city. He discharged the duties of that office so faithfully and efficiently that when Lexington adopted the commission form of government in 1912 he was elected one of the five city commissioners. He was promptly assigned to the head of the Department of Public Works, a position which he has held ever since with such distinct ability and success that he has won the commendation of the public. Upon his re-election as city commissioner with Mayor James C. Rogers he was chosen vice mayor. After the death of Mayor Rogers Mr. McCorkle was elected mayor by the board of commissioners and served the remainder of the unexpired term. Every time he has stood for election to the office of city commissioner he has run ahead of the ticket, evidencing his popularity and the confidence that his fellow citizens have in him. So faithfully and energetically has he stuck to his post of duty that he has been dubbed "The Man on the Job," and well has he deserved this appellation, as the results he has achieved will show. Since he became commissioner of public works he has built twenty-six miles of improved streets, mostly asphalt; erected two large steel and concrete viaducts in the West End of the city; completed the city sewerage system, including outfall sewer, and constructed a modern sewage disposal plant at a cost of more than $200,000. Mr. McCorkle has been a life-long supporter of the democratic party and has ever taken a deep interest in public affairs, both local and national. The splendid success which has accompanied his efforts have been directly traceable to the salient points in his character, for he started in life at the bottom of the ladder, which he has mounted unaided. In all the relations of life he has displayed those qualities which make for confidence and friendship, and he is a deservedly popular member of the circles in which he moves.

Waller O. Bullock, M. D. A Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, Doctor Bullock has confined his professional work to surgery, has been in practice at Lexington for over twenty years, and his individual success supplements the honor in which the name Bullock is held in the history of medicine due to the achievements of his honored father, the late Dr. Waller O. Bullock, Sr.

The senior Doctor Bullock was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, April 16, 1842, and died in May, 1904. He served four years in the Confederate army. He was a graduate of Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York City, and began practice in Washington County, Mississippi. He remained there about three years, and then came to Lexington, where for three years he was superintendent of the Eastern Kentucky Hospital for the Insane, receiving that appointment under Governor Luke P. Blackburn. Doctor Bullock instituted many desirable reforms during his administration of the insane hospital. After giving up his post there he practiced medicine for a long period of years at Lexington. He was an honored member of the various medical societies, was a democrat and a Presbyterian. Doctor Bullock, Sr., married Sally Overton, who was born in Fayette County, February 8, 1844, and is still living at the age of seventy-six. All of her six children are still alive, Waller O. being the second in age.

Waller O. Bullock was born in Frankfort, Kentucky, November 28, 1875, completing his literary education in Transylvania University at Lexington and graduated in medicine from the University of Virginia in 1896. After graduating at the University he was assistant demonstrator of anatomy for two terms and later was an interne in the Polyclinic Hospital at Philadelphia. Doctor Bullock located in Lexington in 1899, and has devoted practically his entire time and energies to his professional work. He is a member of the Lexington Medical Society, the Fayette County Society and the State and American Medical associations. He has been president of the local board of health for several terms. He served as major of the Medical Corps, United States Army, from September, 1917, to March, 1919, in this country and France and England, being assigned to the base hospital at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky, Base Hospital No. 40 at Sarisbury Court, Hampton, England, and Evacuation Hospital No. 12, near Royaumeix. He is a Presbyterian and votes as a democrat.

July 17, 1907, Doctor Bullock married Minnie Pettit, daughter of Benjamin and Martha (Barbee) Pettit. Her parents are now deceased, and of their six children Mrs. Bullock is the fourth.

Snelling Wilkirson was a Kentucky pioneer, and has a number of descendents still living in the state, one of them being Steve B. Featherston of Lexington.

Snelling Wilkirson was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, in 1778. His father, John Wilkirson, came from England to Virginia and was killed by the Indians the year his son Snelling was born. Two of the latter's brothers, John and William, removed to Georgia about 1792. Snelling Wilkirson came to Kentucky when a young man. His mother, Betsy Breedlove, became the wife of David Page, who died of poison administered by a negro woman, and her third husband was Sammons. Snelling Wilkirson married Sally Featherston, daughter of Carolas Featherston and Lucy Elmore, of Virginia. To this marriage were born the following children: Robert; William; James, who moved to Texas, where he died at the age of eighty-six; Nancy, who became the wife of Joseph Jones and lived in Scott County, where she died at the age of eighty-four; Elizabeth, who died in Indiana at the age of eighty, the wife of Robert Bradley; Sally, who never married; Mary, who died in Franklin County in middle life, the wife of Hawkins Faulkner; Mrs. Lucy Wood, who died in Scott County at the age of seventy; John, who lived in Fayette County and died at the age of sixty-three, married Mary Featherston; Charles, who died in childhood; Carolas, who lived in Scott County and afterward moved to Texas, where he died at the age of sixty. Snelling Wilkirson, father of these children, died at the age of eighty in Scott County, where all his married life was spent. His old home is in the southwest part of Scott County.

His son William Wilkirson married Martha Black, daughter of Rev. J. D. and Sally Black. Her father was a Baptist minister at Stamping Ground, Kentucky. William Wilkirson had a farm about five miles from Frankfort in Franklin County. Though a constant sufferer from rheumatism for twenty-five years, he lived to the age of seventy-five, and his wife lived to the age of eighty-one. Of their fifteen children twelve reached mature years and nine are still living, all residents of Kentucky.

Of these children of William and Martha Wilkirson, Sally, in 1869, at the age of twenty, became the wife of Lloyd Featherston, then a young man of twenty-one. His parents, William and Eliza (Graves) Featherston, moved from White Sulphur in Scott County to the Forks of the Elkhorn when Lloyd was a child, and he and Sally Wilkirson grew up together. Lloyd inherited part of his father's farm and Sally had a portion of the Wilkirson tract a mile distant, their home being on the Featherston farm. In 1900 they removed to Midway, where Lloyd Featherston became manager of the stock farm of Robert Pepper and superintended the breeding of the thoroughbreds. After the death of Mr. Pepper, Lloyd Featherston moved to Fayette County and continued farming until 1910, when, on account of failing health, he moved to Lexington and died there September 17, 1915. His son William Vernon had active charge of Pepper's horses at exhibits and sales.

The children of Lloyd Featherston were: William Vernon, who owns a farm near Georgetown in Scott County, and is a stock dealer; Tera, owner of a large fruit farm in Virginia; Claude a stockman and farmer near Midway; Miss Mattie Lee, a musician; Eliza, wife of Claude Payne, of Lexington; Steve B., of Lexington; Sudie, wife of John Allen, an insurance man at Memphis; and Elizabeth, a graduate of the State University and language teacher in the high school at Greenville, Kentucky.

William Henry Cassell. This name recalls one of the honored and highly successful merchants and bankers of Lexington and a citizen whose life was an example of the highest integrity of character and of business energy.

He was a son of Leonard Cassell and a grandson of Abram Cassell. Leonard Cassell was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1810, and died in 1899, at the age of ninety, having spent his active career on a farm in that county. He was twice married and reared a large family. His youngest child is Robert L. Cassell, also a Lexington business man. His first wife was Miss White.

The late William Henry Cassell was born in Fayette County, December 5, 1840, and died at his home in Lexington, September 24, 1916, at the age of seventy-five. He grew up on his father's homestead and attended the school of J. William Dodd in Jessamine County, and was also a pupil at Nicholasville under Professor Woodrow, grandfather of President Woodrow Wilson. For three years he served in the Confederate army as a member of the signal corps under Gen. John C. Breckinridge, and for part of the time was a prisoner at Fort Delaware. Returning home after the war, he began the task of achieving success without capital as clerk in a store at Lexington. This was the dry goods house of Allen & Plunkett. His ability brought him promotion to the responsibility of buyer for the firm, and later he was made a partner by Dr. Robert Gibney in the firm of Gibney & Cassell. This was one of the old firms of dry goods merchants of Lexington. On the death of Dr. Gibney Mr. Cassell took in as a partner his nephew, Leonard Cassell Price, and the business was continued as Cassell & Price until 1895, when Mr. Price became sole owner. Mr. Price soon sold the business and, moving to a farm two miles from Lexington, on the Nicholasville Pike, developed an extensive enterprise as an importer and breeder of ponies, having about 200 head of stock and importing all his breeding animals. He exhibited at local and state fairs.

For a few years while recovering his health William Cassell gave up most of his commercial activities at Lexington and devoted his attention to farming. His good business judgment attracted the attention of banking men, and he served as the first president of the Phoenix National Bank of Lexington. He was also one of the first stockholders in the Security Trust Company, and was interested at different times in the Waterworks Company and in the first steam laundry established in Lexington. In 1900 he resumed merchandising as a member of the dry goods firm of Mitchell, Cassell & Baker, with which he was identified for five years. Then, having been elected president of the Security Trust Company, he sold his business and thereafter devoted all his time to banking until his death in October, 1916, at the age of seventy-six.

An official memorial prepared by the Security Trust Company contains the following tribute to his services to that institution: "The Security Trust Company was organized in the year 1881 and Mr. Cassell became a member of the Board of Directors of the company April 25, 1894, and continued a member of the board until the time of his death. On January 9, 1901, after the death of the late Joseph Clark, he was chosen by his associates on the board as president and continued as such until his death. William H. Cassell was a gallant and faithful soldier, a good and conservative business man, a wise counsellor, a warm and sympathetic friend, a faithful and efficient officer, a devout Christian and an honest man, and he drew to himself a wide circle of friends, richly deserved, and had the confidence and esteem of this community. He brought to the performance of his duties as president and chief officer of the Security Trust Company the mature wisdom of his sterling character, which was always tempered with the kindness and courtesy of his generous nature. The Security Trust Company, the individual members of the Board of Directors, the officers and the entire working force of the company feel that they have sustained a great loss, second only to that of his beloved family." It was during the later years of his administration that the Trust Company reached its greatest development.

The late Mr. Cassell was an active worker in the Broadway Christian Church, being a member of the Official Board and Building Committee, and taking the deepest interest in the plans for the rebuilding of the church. He was a curator of Transylvania College, a trustee of Hamilton College, and was president of the board of directors of the Lexington Cemetery Company.

William H. Cassell practiced and lived the gospel of work. The best expression of his life was some form of activity that would satisfy his ideas as to usefulness and service. This fact was well brought out in an editorial tribute published in one of Lexington's papers after his death, from which the following two paragraphs are taken:

"William H. Cassell was at seventy-five years still a young man. His thoughts and plans were the ambitious ideas of youth. His friends and associates were young men. Marked as had been his success in life, pleasant as would the landscape have been had he given himself over to its contemplation, the last week of his life found him giving to the affairs of his business, his church and his friends as diligent attention as might be expected of one twenty years his junior.

"His life was well ordered, well planned, well balanced, and had it been indefinitely prolonged every day would have found William H. Cassell bringing to maturity new plans for the development of his community."

The late Mr. Cassell married for his first wife Miss Margaret Patterson, of Fayette County, who died many years ago. Her son, Francis Henry, is now living in California. Mr. Cassell was survived by his second wife, whose maiden name was Minnie Rose, of Nelson County. The two children of this union are Mary, wife of Willis T. Stewart, of Lexington, and George Cassell. Mr. Cassell was also survived by three sisters, Mrs. Albert Karsner, Mrs. Sue Arnett and Mrs. Lizzie Bryant.

George R. Cassell, son of the late William Henry Cassell, the Lexington banker, was reared and educated in Lexington and is now a member of the firm Cassell & Karsner, though most of his time is devoted to his interests as a farmer on the Nicholasville Pike. He married Frances Davidson, daughter of W. R. Davidson, a retired Baptist minister of Lexington. Mrs. Cassell was born in Lincoln County, where her father for many years was a Baptist preacher. Mr. and Mrs. Cassell, who are members of the Broadway Christian Church, have two children, William and Mary.

J. M. Vaughn is one of the principal owners and is secretary and treasurer of the Commercial Automobile Company of Lexington, an organization that handles the Fayette County business in Ford cars and Fordson tractors, and is an example of steady and continuous growth and progress.

The origin of the business dates back to about 1909. On August 19, 1912, J. N. Gibbons, W. R. Williams and E. N. Williams incorporated the present Commercial Automobile Company, with an initial capital of only $1,500. August 7, 1914, the stock was increased to $12,000, W. R. Williams being manager at that time. Soon afterward another increase in capital was made from $12,000 to $25,000, and in November, 1917, the stock was increased to $80,000. At the organization at that time W. R. Williams became president, F. A. Forsythe, vice president; J. M. Vaughn, secretary and treasurer, with T. B. Satterthwaite an equal stockholder with the other three. The next increase in capital to $150,000 was made February 21, 1919, the three executive officers remaining the same. On October 15, 1919, F. A. Forsythe became president, H. A. Forsythe, vice president, and J. M. Vaughn, secretary and treasurer, these three men being virtually owners of all the stock. The company, besides handling Ford cars and Fordson tractors, does a general garage and repair service, and carries a full line of Ford equipment. The home of the business is on East Main Street, where they have a building 90x190 feet and storage for 200 cars. The company employs about twenty-four men. In 1912 this organization sold only twelve cars. The sales for 1920 aggregated 400 cars and about thirty tractors.

J. M. Vaughn came into the business three or four years ago, after having been identified for a number of years with farming and stock raising in Fayette County. He was born in Wolfe County, Kentucky, October 26, 1883. His father, J. N. Vaughn, was a merchant in Wolfe County for thirty-five years, but since 1899 has lived in Fayette County, having a farm on the Versailles Pike. He was a native of Wolfe County. J. M. Vaughn finished his education in the State University and until three years ago had some extensive farming interests in Fayette County, including the breeding of trotting horses, largely as a diversion and sport.

At the age of twenty-three Mr. Vaughn married Miss Bessie Smith. Her father, W. D. Smith, is now living retired, but for many years was express agent at Winchester. Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn have two children, James Martin and Jane Harriet. Mr. Vaughn is affiliated with the Elks and the Kiwanis Club.

S. Winstead Spears, who is a joint proprietor with William Russell Spears in the noted Hickory Wood Stock Farm, elsewhere described, lives 2½ miles from that farm, so widely known to American horsemen, and is individual owner of the Breck Smith farm. He was born at Hickory Wood January 25, 1885, and spent two years in Transylvania University. The Breck Smith farm, where he lives, comprises 123 acres and is in Bourbon County. He acquired this farm in 1914 at $100 an acre, and has since remodeled the residence and employs the farm as a supplement to the stock industry centered at the Hickory Wood Farm.

Mr. Spears at twenty-one married Miss Hattie Lee Houston, then twenty years old. She is a daughter of Joseph Houston, whose home is near Shawhan in Bourbon County. They have one daughter, Shelby May. Mr. Spears is an active worker in the democratic party and is a member of the Antioch Christian Church.

William Russell Spears, with his brother S. W. Spears, is proprietor of the Hickory Wood Stock Farm, eight miles northeast of Lexington, on the Maysville Pike. This farm was established and operated by their father, W. L. Spears, and for many years its operation has contributed to the high standards of Kentucky thoroughbreds and is also widely known as a general stock farm.

The late W. L. Spears was one of Kentucky's best known horsemen, and was active as a breeder for at least forty years. He established a half-mile track on the Hickory Wood Farm, and bred and trained many famous horses for the track. However, the farm was maintained primarily as a breeding center, and it was customary to sell ten or a dozen colts each season at weaning time. The stables at Hickory Wood also sheltered many mares owned by others. Among the notable animals at Hickory Wood was Jay McGregor, who in 1903 was beaten only once in track performance. He had a record of 2:07¼, and after a few years as a stud the Russian Government paid $35,000 for him. A son of Jay McGregor was Shakespeare, a great pacer that set a record of 2:04¼ as a three-year-old. Another son of Jay McGregor was Baldy McGregor, with a record of 2:06½, and which was sold from Hickory Wood as a two-year-old. Tramp Fast as a two-year-old at 2:12¼ had a world record. Susie J, 2:06¼, made the record for four-year-old mares. The dams of both these horses were kept at Hickory Wood, and produced some other fine animals. Hickory Wood still has Ima, 2:04¼. Colorado E, which is a three-year-old was a world champion at 2:04¼, sold as a colt from Hickory Wood, and a subsequent owner refused $75,000 for him.

W. L. Spears, who died in 1915, had formed a partnership with his sons in 1913, and since his death the business has been continued by the firm of S. W. Spears and W. R. Spears. Hickory Wood Stock Farm contains 555 acres, and for years has been the home of fine cattle and hogs. The farm ships to market about 100 cattle every year and about 200 hogs. About thirty-five acres are in tobacco.

William Russell Spears lives at Hickory Wood. He is a stockholder in Tattersall's Tobacco Warehouse at Lexington. He was born at Hickory Wood March 30, 1893, and was educated in the Lexington High School. At the age of twenty-three he married Frances Lynn Humphrey, of Richmond, Virginia, and they have one daughter, Geraldine Frances. Mr. and Mrs. Spears are members of the Antioch Christian Church.

James Henry Thorpe, M. D. It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that move a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestation in the career of the individual under consideration. James Henry Thorpe has long held distinctive prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge, with the skill to apply the same, without which one cannot hope to rise above the mediocre in administering to human ills.

James Henry Thorpe, of Owensboro, one of the most eminent members of the medical profession in Northwestern Kentucky, was born on his father's farm near Pleasant Ridge, Daviess County, on the 5th day of October, 1875, and is the eldest of two children who blessed the union of Terry and Elizabeth Ann (Bennett) Thorpe, the other child being a brother, Terry. The father also was a native of Daviess County, the son of Terry and Polly E. (Howard) Thorpe. The Thorpes were among the pioneer settlers of Daviess County, the first member of the family to settle here having been Mr. Thorpe's great-grandfather, whose given name was John, and who, in company with a Negro slave named Squire, walked all the way from their former home in South Carolina to Kentucky, hunting as they came. Elizabeth Ann Bennett was born in Ohio County, Kentucky, and was a daughter of Joseph and Ann Elizabeth (Huges) Bennett.

James H. Thorpe was reared on the paternal homestead, where during the summer months he aided his father in the farm work, while during the winters he attended the public schools of Pleasant Ridge. When eighteen years of age he began teaching school, and during the following three years he alternately taught and attended school. Having determined to devote his life to the practice of medicine, in 1896 he matriculated in Barnes Medical College at St. Louis, Missouri, where he was graduated in April, 1899, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter Doctor Thorpe located at Pleasant Ridge and practiced his profession for about two years, when he moved to Utica, Daviess County for four years and then to Beech Grove, McLean County. In 1913 Doctor Thorpe, desirous of a larger field for practice, moved to Owensboro, where he has since remained and where he has built up a large and representative patronage, covering a wide radius of surrounding country. Since locating at Owensboro he has limited his practice to diseases of the ear, eye, nose and throat, in which he has gained a widespread reputation because of the splendid success which has crowned his efforts. Doctor Thorpe did post-graduate work in 1909 at the Post-Graduate Hospital, Chicago, and also at St. Louis in 1912, while in 1913 he made special preparation for his present work in the Ear, Eye, Nose and Throat Hospital, Chicago. The doctor is a member of the Owensboro City Medical Society, the Daviess County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In 1912, while residing at Beech Grove, he was elected president of the McLean County Medical Society. He is a member of the staff of the Owensboro City Hospital, instructor in ophthalmology, otology, rhinology and laryngology in the Nurses Training School, ophthalmologist for the Welfare League, consulting surgeon to Mary Kendall Home, and attending specialist in the United States Public Health Service.

In September, 1899, Doctor Thorpe was married to Georgia Boston, of Beech Grove, and they have a daughter, Ilma Anitra, who is now a student in the University of Kentucky. Doctor Thorpe is a Baptist and Mrs. Thorpe is a member of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his chosen field of endeavor Doctor Thorpe has achieved more than ordinary success, and his eminent standing among the leading medical men of his section of the state is duly recognized and appreciated. In addition to his creditable professional career he has proved an honorable member of the body politic, rising in the confidence and esteem of the public, and in every relation of life he has upheld the dignity of true manhood.

Col. James Maret, who occupies a modest home at 133 East Second Street, Lexington, is known all over Kentucky as the "Boone Way Man," having originated and by a remarkable exercise of zeal and undaunted effort translated the vision of a modern highway that would fitly commemorate the trail laid out out by Daniel Boone into a reality based on official recognition, appropriations, and construction that is rapidly transforming the route into one of the great scenic motor ways of the country.

Colonel Maret, who has his title from his service on the staff of Governor Stanley, originated the plan and route of the Boone Way at his home at Mount Vernon, Kentucky, in January, 1913. His first active support was given by the Mount Vernon Commercial Club, and the original route was a way of about ninety-five miles from Crab Orchard, Kentucky, to the Cumberland Gap. Then followed years of patient work on the part of Colonel Maret until he had succeeded in interesting prominent individuals and organizations all over Kentucky and eventually the great national organization interested in good roads planning and construction. Eventually more than $1,000,000 of bonds were sold for the construction of the highway through the mountains, and for a distance of eighty-five miles the Boone Way is the officially designated route of the Dixie Highway. Colonel Maret has worked for this culmination with unselfish motives at all times. He has walked literally thousands of miles in performing his duties as inspector on state highway work and on using his influence at every opportunity to promote the Boone Way and other good roads movements.

Among the many appreciative honors bestowed upon him by men of prominence over the country, the most concise in meaning is that found in the Louisville Courier Journal: "As surely as Daniel Boone wrested an empire from the wilderness, so has Jim Maret carved Boone Way through the Cumberlands with that little old battered typewriter of his." He has been made a member of many state, local and good roads organizations, including the National Highways Association.

James Maret was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, near Wallace's Mill, nine miles east of Lancaster, on August 6, 1855. His grandfather, Jacky Maret, came from Tarboro, North Carolina, about 1797 to Garrard County, and died there in 1863. A part of his farm descended to his son, George S. Maret, who in 1872 moved to Columbus, Texas, where he died in 1877. James Maret in the meantime had grown up and acquired a common school education in Kentucky and in 1876 returned to this state from Texas. While in the Southwest he had learned telegraphy, and for twenty years he was telegraph operator and railroad agent for the Louisville & Nashville at Mount Vernon.

In 1887 Colonel Maret established the Mount Vernon Signal, the first paper in Rockcastle County, and conducted it three years. After an interval of six years he bought the paper again and continued it about four years. He then organized a stock company and established the Telegraph Exchange of Mount Vernon and Livingston, and for fourteen years was manager of this excellent service, which constituted a pioneer work in that section of the state.

Colonel Maret was for twenty-five years town clerk of Mount Vernon. Besides his unselfish enterprise in behalf of good roads he was equally active in the improvement of his town, and led the progressive element against much opposition to lay concrete walks and other permanent improvements until at one time Mount Vernon had more concrete walks than any other town of the same population in the state. He also brought about the organization of an electric light plant, and was not satisfied until Mount Vernon could take rank as one of the most progressive towns in the eastern section of the state. He was a very influential and active democrat in a strong republican county. He is a member of the Dixie Highway Committee and the Dixie Highway Association, and is president of the Boone Way organization.

He is one of the organizers of the Lexington Aviation Company, and is secretary of that organization, for the establishment of civil aviation in the "Heart of the Blue Grass," creating "airways" in addition to his activities in highways.

John Dolan, now retired at Lexington, is one of the interesting figures of the Blue Grass agricultural district of Fayette County. He has been a farmer, interested at different times in the thoroughbred industry, and grew up and lived for a number of years on the Dolan farm owned by his father, the late Patrick Dolan, who bred, owned and trained a number of the famous horses of Central Kentucky.

John Dolan was born near Payne's Depot in Fayette County October 8, 1859, a son of Patrick and Frances (Faulconer) Dolan. His grandfather, William Dolan, came direct from Ireland to Kentucky in 1818, accompanied by his wife and three children. For a time he lived at Irishtown, a suburb of Lexington, where Patrick was born, and later bought a small farm on the Leestown Pike, three miles from Lexington. William Dolan reached the age of ninety. He was twice married, and by the second marriage had a son, John G., who died in childhood. The children of his first marriage were: Thomas, who died a bachelor when about sixty, was well known in banking circles, for many years was associated with the D. A. Sayre & Company, Lexington bankers, and also took a prominent part in the Sunday School work at Sandersville, near his home. The second child was Kittie, who reached advanced years, surviving her husband, William Sproul, and their daughter, Miss Rosa Sproul, is still living at Lexington. Susan Dolan became the wife of Mr. Wise, moved to Glencoe, Missouri, where he died, but she subsequently returned to Kentucky.

Patrick Dolan grew up on the farm on Leestown Pike, and married about 1849 Frances Faulconer. Her father, Joseph Faulconer, lived at South Elkhorn and owned the present Rankin Clemmons farm, but later moved to Boyle County. Mrs. Frances Dolan died at the age of seventy-one. Patrick Dolan in 1845, some years before his marriage, bought a farm at Payne's Depot. That place is still owned by his children, and he lived there until his death at the age of eighty-two, in February, 1904. He was active in looking after his business until the very last. Patrick Dolan became noted as a breeder of saddle horses, and was an exhibitor of some of the finest of the Danish strain. Some of the animals he owned were Jewell, Hamlet, Washington, Preston, and John Dillard, and he also owned Star Almont, noted for his performance as a trotter on the track and as a sire. Some of these horses were shown at state fairs. Patrick Dolan was president of the institution known as "The World's Fair," first held in Utterback's Woods about 1859. It began as a colt show. Later the grounds were in Morris Woods, seven miles from Lexington, on Leestown Pike, and Patrick Dolan owned this property. Later it became a two-day fair and was continued for about twenty years. Patrick Dolan became owner of about 1,200 acres of farm land, and was engaged in breeding livestock of different kinds, usually keeping from 75 to 100 cattle. This extensive business he always kept under his direct management. His horses furnished him all the diversion he needed from active business. He was an elder in the Bethel Presbyterian Church, but never sought any of the honors of politics.

Patrick Dolan and wife had seven children, four of whom reached mature years. These four children still retain the undivided estate of their father. Mr. Dolan gave his children all possible educational advantages, and the daughters attended Sayre College at Lexington, and the sons were students of Central University at Richmond, Joseph being a graduate of that school. The four children are John; Fannie, who died at the age of thirty, leaving two children by her marriage to S. B. Prewitt, who lives in Lexington; Joseph F., who married Sally Moore and lives in Lexington; and Annie, Mrs. C. B. Williams, of Lexington.

John Dolan after leaving college became associated with his father on the stock farm and was active in that business until the death of his father. He then continued the operation of a portion of the old homestead, inheriting about 300 acres. He exhibited some of his horse stock, in early days kept a pack of hounds, and engaged in the fox chase and usually spent some of his vacation time hunting and fishing. He has never indulged in public life of any kind. He is a member of the old Bethel Presbyterian Church, in which his brother is an elder.

At the age of twenty-eight Mr. Dolan married Miss Minnie Carr, of Greendale, Fayette County. She was a daughter of Thomas Carr. Mrs. Dolan died six years after her marriage. The present wife of Mr. Dolan was Naomi Trogden, of Owensboro.

John T. Perry. What he may lack in age, John T. Perry has supplied in enthusiasm and enterprise during his brief connection with Lexington commercial affairs. He has built up one of the chief lumber and building supply concerns of the city, the Perry Lumber Company, and has shown a healthful spirit of cooperation in civic as well as business affairs.

The Perry Lumber Company was established February 12, 1917, by John T. Perry and his father, B. F. Perry. The company is incorporated with a capital of $40,000, and other stockholders in the business now are K. N. DeHaven, B. P. Eubanks and S. B. Combs. B. F. Perry is retired, and John T. Perry had active charge of the business from the start. The plant and yards of the company are on Walton Avenue, where they have three acres, with approximately $30,000 invested in real estate and improvements. One feature of the business is a mill for the production of all grades and classes of interior finish and mill work. A hundred people are on the pay roll. The company has a special co-operative service for contractors and home owners, and, being a member of the National Builders' Bureau, places the service of this bureau at the disposal of its patrons.

B. F. Perry for many years was an extensive farmer of Montgomery County, near Mount Sterling. About 1913 he bought a 200-acre farm on Leestown Pike, six miles from Lexington, but is now making his home in Lexington. While in Montgomery County he was active in politics and was once defeated by a small margin for county judge. He had a wide acquaintance over that county and over the mountainous section of Eastern Kentucky, and enjoyed the complete confidence of the mountaineer class, and was frequently called upon for advice and counsel by them. B. F. Perry is a native of Montgomery County, and his father is still living. He married Rena Cowgill, of Montgomery County. She was recently president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Lexington. Both are active members of the Central Christian Church.

John Tom Perry was born at Mount Sterling, acquired a high school education and had the experience of farm training until he moved to Lexington with his parents. For five years he was connected with the McCormick Lumber Company, and then with his father established the Perry Lumber Company. He is a member of the Lions Club at Lexington. At the age of twenty-one John Tom Perry married Miss Hazel Stephenson, of Paris, Kentucky. They have one son, John T., Jr.

Elijah Lee Martin. Among the men who during the last quarter of a century have developed the financial and business interest of Lexington, one of the most worthy of mention is E. L. Martin. He is sole proprietor of the wholesale grocery firm trading and doing business as E. L. Martin & Company, and has developed that business from comparative insignificance to rank as one of the leaders of its class in the entire State of Kentucky. He is also a director of the First & City National Bank; has served as a member of the Board of Aldermen; and was for fifteen years a director in the Commercial Club of Lexington.

Some thirty years ago, a lad from the country, Mr. Martin started his business career in Lexington as a retail groceryman. This continued for five years. Later on he and a partner, W. T. Woolfork, established the wholesale grocery firm of Martin & Woolfork. The initial capital stock of this firm was estimated at $8,000. Ten years later Martin & Woolfork dissolved partnership, and since that time Mr. Martin has been sole owner of the wholesale grocery of E. L. Martin & Company. This business, from the point of continued service, is one of the oldest wholesale houses in the city, and, with an employment of fifteen traveling salesman, has been able to build up such an extensive trade over Central, Eastern and Southern Kentucky, and even close around Louisville and Cincinnati, that Lexington, as a center of commerce, owes much to this firm. In 1917 fire partially destroyed this plant, but it now occupies the entire four-story and basement building on Main Street, near Broadway, covering 50x225 feet, and is indeed such a business that the owner deserves praise.

Mr. Martin is progressive as well as conservative, and his success is due mainly to that remarkable volume of energy, time, study and personal resourcefulness which he always puts into whatever he undertakes. He is always interested in and loyal to old friends and customers, and business men of Lexington feel him a great asset to the community, due to keen insight and practical judgment in civic affairs.

Mr. Martin was born in Woodford County, Kentucky, March 23, 1866. His father, Elijah Martin, was a Kentucky farmer, and when the son, E. L., was six years of age the parents moved to the old ancestral Allen farm, the home of his mother, whose maiden name was Louisa Jane Allen. Mr. Martin married Miss Anna L. Allen, who was the granddaughter of Adoniram Allen, one of the pioneer settlers of Kentucky in Bourbon County. They have five children: Allen J. and Lillian Annette, associated with their father in business; Dr. William Curry, who is a graduate in medicine from Johns Hopkins University; Grace Lee, who is an instructor in the public schools of Lexington; and Lena, wife of H. R. Douglass.

Joshua Marsh Corbin. For the greater part of half a century Joshua Marsh Corbin has been diligently employed in his profession as a civil engineer, and most of that time his headquarters have been in Lexington. He is the present county surveyor of Fayette County, and altogether his official association with that office covers twenty years.

Mr. Corbin was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, a son of Joshua and Rachel (Marsh) Corbin. His parents were also natives of Kentucky and of Bourbon County. His father was born in 1800 and died in 1869, and his mother died in 1887, at the age of seventy. Of their seven children, Joshua M. is the only survivor, and he was next to the youngest. His father was a farmer, and like many Kentucky gentlemen was distinguished by a love of fine horses and high-class cattle. During the Civil war period he was a stanch Union man, but in politics usually voted independent.

Joshua Marsh Corbin acquired a public school education, and attended Professor Clark's High School at Paris, Kentucky, and took the scientific course of Center College at Danville. It was in 1871 that he received his first important promotion in his profession, when he was made assistant city engineer of Lexington. Later he was engaged in the practice of architecture with P. L. Lundon, under the firm name of Lundon & Corbin. In 1878 Mr. Corbin was first elected county surveyor, and he held that office consecutively for sixteen years. For eight years of that time he also acted as city engineer of Lexington. In 1896 he was appointed by John G. Carlisle, then secretary of the treasury, as assistant superintendent of construction of United States Life Saving Stations, and he performed the duties of that office for about two years. In that connection his duties involved a great deal of travel. He then practiced as a civil engineer, and in 1918 was again elected county surveyor of Fayette County. Mr. Corbin is an active democrat in politics.

In 1876 he married Jennie Lyle Cook, a native of Lexington and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, who are now deceased. Mrs. Corbin was the youngest in a family of two daughters and five sons. She and Mr. Corbin have five children: Ina, Nathan Marsh, Margaret (wife of Walter Caspe), Burnie B. and Chester C.

Maury Kemper, who began the practice of law at Lexington twenty-five years ago, has sustained and added to the dignities and useful service associated with a family that has been distinguished for scholarly and professional accomplishments for generation after generation.

Mr. Kemper is descended from John Kemper, who came with a German colony to Virginia in 1714 and established his home in a locality known as Germanna. Thereafter all the generations, including Maury Kemper himself, were born in Virginia. The great-grandfather of the Lexington lawyer was Charles Kemper, and the grandfather was George Whitefield Kemper, who in early manhood went to Philadelphia, studied medicine and after receiving his degree engaged in his profession at Port Republic, Virginia, and was long one of the able physicians of Rockingham County. He married Matilda Graham, a native of Virginia and of Scotch ancestry.

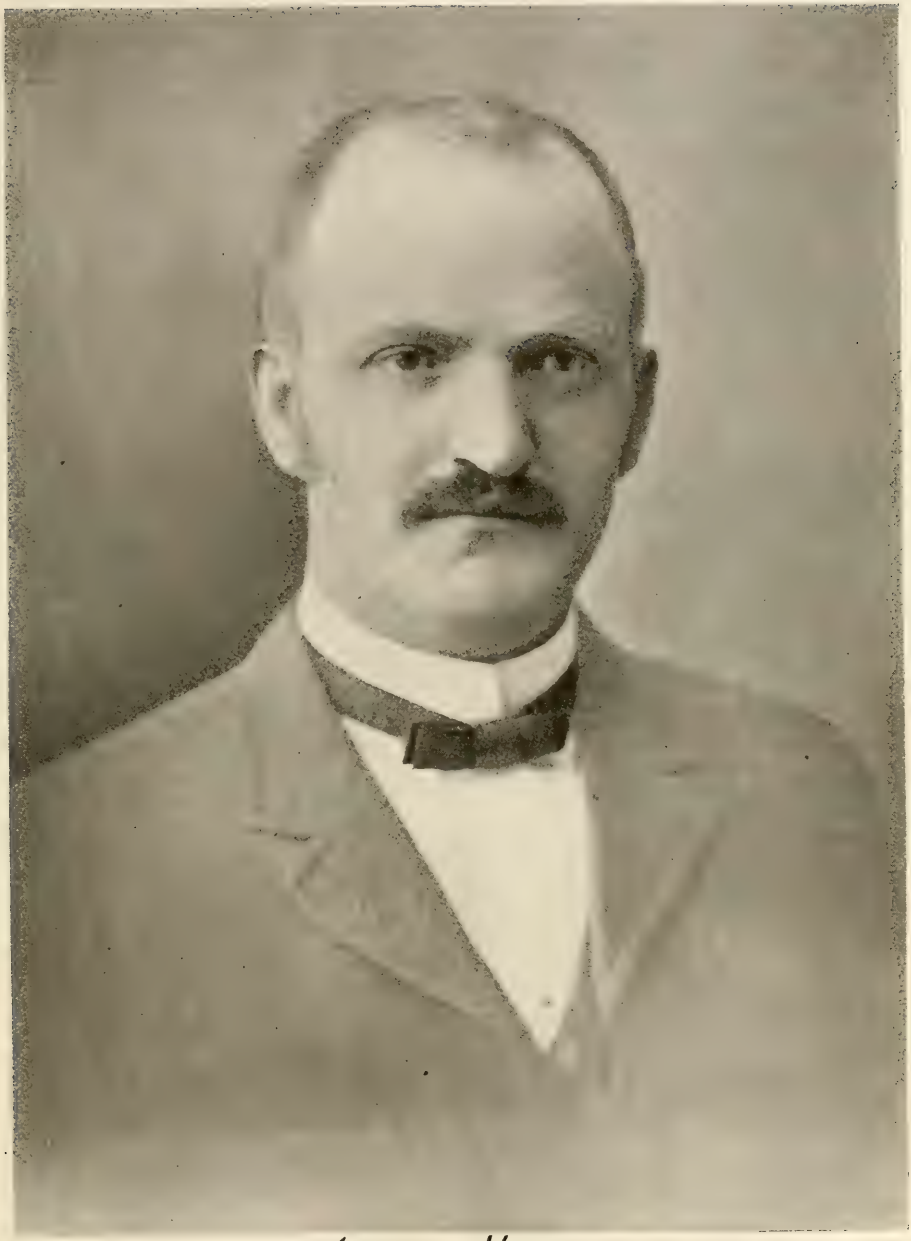
A son of Dr. George W. Kemper was Charles Joseph Kemper, whose name in later years became a prominent one in Kentucky educational affairs. He was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, in 1829, was liberally educated, receiving a Master's degree from the University of Virginia, and at the beginning of the war between the states was a teacher in Bethany College at Bethany, West Virginia. He served the Confederacy as an engineer, and subsequently as captain of engineers at the seat of the Confederate Government at Richmond. The war over, he resumed his chair in Bethany College, and subsequently established a private high school in Louisa County, Virginia. In 1889 he came to Kentucky to fill the chair of astronomy and applied mathematics and engineering in Kentucky University, now Transylvania University. He was one of the prominent members of the faculty there until 1897, when he resigned and returned to his old home in Louisa County, Virginia, where he died in 1902. His wife was Mary Burnley Pendleton, also a native of Louisa County, and daughter of Dr. Joseph Winston and Elizabeth (Goodwin) Pendleton. She died in November, 1903, the mother of four children, named Charles Pendleton, George Whitefield, Matthew Fontaine Maury and Graham Hawes.

Matthew Fontaine Maury Kemper, the namesake of his close kinsman, Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury, was born in Louisa County, Virginia, July 29, 1874, and profited from the cultured associations of his home and the companionship of his father and mother, both scholars. He attended his father's high school in Virginia, and after coming to Lexington was a student in Transylvania University, from which he graduated with the A. B. degree in 1893, received his Master of Arts degree the following year and in 1895 graduated from the Law Department. He also studied law under his kinsman, John B. Minor, one of the most distinguished jurists of his time, head of the law faculty of the University of Virginia. For a quarter of a century Mr. Kemper has been busily engaged in an increasing practice at Lexington, and is one of the city and state's able attorneys. His offices are in the Trust Company Building. Mr. Kemper is a democrat and is affiliated with Lexington Lodge No. 89 of the Elks. He married in 1902 Esther Field Whitney, a native of Fayette County and daughter of George H. and America Innes Whitney. They have one son, George Whitney Kemper, and a daughter, Mary Pendleton Kemper.

Edwin Hodge, at present general manager of the Imperial Tobacco Company's business in Kentucky, is probably one of the best known tobacconists in the state. He has been closely identified with the industry for practically half a century, and his influence has been steadily directed along constructive lines for the benefit and welfare of all engaged in any branch of the tobacco business.

Mr. Hodge, whose home for many years has been at Henderson, was born at Marion in Crittenden County, Kentucky, July 2, 1854. He is descended from Henry Hodge, who was one of three brothers to come from England in Colonial days and settle in North Carolina. His son, Robert Hodge, was born in North Carolina, and came to Kentucky at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Edwin Hodge, grandfather of the Henderson tobacco man, represented the third generation of the family in America. He was born in Livingston County, Kentucky, in 1805, spent his life as a farmer, and died in 1837. He married Nancy S. Hughes in 1828, and after his death she became the wife of Dr. J. S. Gillium. Her father, Joseph Hughes, was a native of North Carolina and an early settler in Livingston County, Kentucky, and was the son of a Revolutionary soldier. Joseph Hughes served at one time as a member of the Kentucky Legislature.



The only son of Edwin and Nancy Hodge was the late Dr. Joseph A. Hodge, who was born February 2, 1829, in that portion of Livingston County subsequently Crittenden County. He grew up in the home of his stepfather, Doctor Gillium, whose example and influence were the chief factors in directing him to the study of medicine. After completing his common school education he began the study of medicine under Doctor Gillium at Marion, and in 1850, at the age of twenty-one, graduated from Louisville University. From 1850 for thirteen years he practiced in Crittenden County, and on April 28, 1863, moved to Henderson, where for many years he was one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Western Kentucky. He was honored with the office of president of the Kentucky State Medical Society in 1875. He was also a member of the oldest medical organization in the state, the McDowell Medical Society, and was a member of the Henderson County and American Medical associations, and for a number of years was on the Board of Examiners of the Third Judicial District in Kentucky. He was reared a whig in politics but after the war voted as a democrat, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. This highly honored physician and surgeon and citizen of Henderson died August 30, 1908, when nearly eighty years of age.

On December 4, 1851, Doctor Hodge married Susan A. Linthicum, who died May 1, 1891. Her father was Doctor Rufus Linthicum. She became the mother of nine children: Rufus L., Edwin, Mary L., Eliza A., Emma, Antonia M., William A., Susan and Nellie H. Rufus and Susan died in infancy, while the others reached maturity and all but one married.

Edwin Hodge was nine years of age when his parents moved to Henderson. He grew up in that city, attended private and public schools, and at the age of eighteen became a bookkeeper for a Henderson tobacco firm. In 1877 he began his independent career as a tobacconist, and for forty years has been a buyer, rehandler and exporter. He was in business under his own name until 1891, and for four years following was associated with Arthur B. Jarvis under the firm name of Hodge & Jarvis. Then from 1895 until 1902 he was again in business and in 1903 became general manager of the western business of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Great Britain and Ireland. This great corporation was organized in 1902, with a capital stock of $75,000,000. Mr. Hodge has the general management of the company's business in Kentucky, with headquarters at Henderson. For many years he has kept in close touch with thousands of tobacco growers and dealers, and has always maintained the highest reputation for fairness and justness in all his dealings. His business interests have required a great deal of travel, and for many years he was a regular visitor to England in the interest of his business.

Mr. Hodge became one of the original directors of the Ohio Valley Bank & Trust Company of Henderson. He has been active as a member and official of the Presbyterian Church, and is one of the liberal and public spirited citizens of Henderson.

In 1883 Mr. Hodge married Miss Frances Alexander Ditto, of Meade County, Kentucky, daughter of Thomas H. Ditto. They have two sons, Thomas Ditto Hodge and Edwin Hodge, Jr.

Edwin Hodge.

James Nathan Elliott has been a leading member of the Lexington bar for two decades, and is a lawyer who has given readily of his time and services to the cause of education and to the promotion of patriotism and good citizenship both in times of war and peace.

He was born at Kirksville in Madison County, Kentucky, October 22, 1877, a son of Milton and Juan (Phillips) Elliott. His father was born in Estill County, Kentucky, in 1837, and died February 5, 1907. The mother was born at Monticello in Wayne County, Kentucky, June 3, 1842. All of their nine children are still living: Minnie L., wife of Robert D. Steele; Henry H., teacher of Latin in the Boys High School at Louisville, Kentucky; William M., a prominent physician at Lancaster, Kentucky, married Margaret Cochran and has eight children; Milton married Mable (Armstrong) Magoffin; James N. is the fifth in age; Florence is the wife of John A. Heer; Mary E. is the wife of Charles R. West; Julian G. is the eighth; and Lucy Cecil is the youngest.

Milton Elliott, the father of this family, was educated in Transylvania University and in the College of the Bible, and became widely known as an educator and preacher in the Christian Church. He established the Elliott Institute at Kirksville, Kentucky, subsequently was president of the Garrard Female College at Lancaster, was president of the West Kentucky College at Mayfield, and was president of the Kentucky Classical and Business College at North Middletown. He was an early advocate of temperance, and also took part in various public movements. He was a Mason and a democrat.

James Nathan Elliott acquired most of his education in the various schools of which his father was in charge and graduated in 1896 from the West Kentucky College. In 1897 he received his A. B. degree from Transylvania University, and studied law at Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. Mr. Elliott located at Lexington in 1900, being admitted to the state bar in that year, and has steadily advanced in the work of his profession and enjoys an enviable prestige in the State Bar Association. Since 1913 he has served as a member of the City Board of Education, is a curator of Transylvania University, and a member of the Board of Trustees of Hamilton College. During the World war he was one of the able Four Minute Men identified with the varied program of war activities, and was also especially interested in the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. He has served on the Court of Honor of the Boy Scout organization, is a member of the Central Christian Church, a democrat, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Lexington Country Club.

On June 17, 1909, Mr. Elliott married Mary Louise Powell, who was born at Madison, Indiana, a daughter of Louis and Mary (Casey) Powell. Her father was born at Madison, Indiana, a son of Capt. Nathan Powell, a prominent banker and steamboat owner. Mrs. Elliott was only a child when her father died, but her mother lived until 1909. She was the only child of her parents. Her mother's family, the Casey's, were connections of the noted Marshall family of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have three children: Mary Powell, James Nathan, Jr., and Lucy Marshall.

Abraham Franklin Corbin, Jr. The name of A. Franklin Corbin, of Lexington, hardly needs to be introduced to the majority of the readers of this chronicle, for it has been identified with the building record of this state for many years. The splendid success which has come to him is directly traceable to the salient points in his character. With a mind capable of planning, he has combined a will strong enough to execute his well-formulated purposes, and his great energy, keen discrimination and perseverance have earned for him a well-deserved prosperity. He carries to successful completion whatever he undertakes and his business methods have ever been in strict conformity with the ethics of advanced business codes, so that he has ever enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Abraham Franklin Corbin was born on June 15, 1866, in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and is the son of Abraham Franklin and Lucy Jane (Williams) Corbin, of whose twelve children he was the sixth in order of birth. His father was a harnessmaker in his younger days, but later took up the vocation of farming, which he followed until his retirement from active business life, when he moved to Lexington and there spent his last days. He died in 1897, at the age of sixty-six years, and his wife died at the age of sixty-nine years. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and his political views were those of the democratic party.

Abraham F. Corbin, Jr., attended the public schools in Bourbon County and then was a student in Hutchison's Academy. He learned the carpenter's trade, at which he was employed for a time. He then came to Lexington and for seven years was employed by the Spottswood Planing Mill Company. He then again turned his attention to contracting and during the years since then he has done a vast amount of construction work, of which the following are only a few conspicuous examples: Three school houses in Lexington; the Russell, Booker Washington and Constitution Street College School; J. D. Persell; the Milward business block; First Baptist Church; Broadway Christian Church; Hutchinson Chapel; First Christian Science Church; Hill Street Methodist Church; Providence Christian Church; Mt. Vernon Baptist Church; St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church; the Lexington Dry Goods Company building; the Wolf-Wile Company building; Science Hall, dormitory and heating plant for Transylvania University, besides many fine and costly residences in various parts of the country, many of them of brick, with stone trimmings. He has built eight churches and remodeled five others, and has done a large amount of miscellaneous work not classified here.

On July 29, 1897, Mr. Corbin was married to Myrtis L. Finch, the daughter of William D. and Margaret Ann (Williams) Finch. Her father was a native of England and died at the age of seventy-seven years, while his wife, who was born in Winchester, Kentucky, died at the age of sixty-one years. They became the parents of fourteen children, nine of whom are living, and Mrs. Corbin is the eleventh child in order of birth. William D. Finch came to the United States when thirteen years of age, making the trip by sailing vessel and landing at New York City. He eventually drifted west and located in Bourbon County, Kentucky, where he followed the vocation of farming up to about twenty years prior to his death, when he retired from active business. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church and in his political views he was a democrat. By a prior marriage, Mr. Corbin is the father of a daughter, Edith.

Politically Mr. Corbin is an earnest supporter of the democratic party, though not a seeker after public office. He is a member of the Christian Church, to which he gives generous support. He has always stood ready to identify himself with his fellow citizens in any good work, and extends a co-operative hand to advance any measure for the general advancement of the community along any line. Because of these qualities and his genial disposition, he enjoys the good will and esteem of the entire community.

Thomas A. Combs for many years has been identified with the lumber business in Kentucky and is widely known over the state for his active participation in public affairs in former years, particularly as mayor of Lexington and member of the State Senate.

He comes of an old Eastern Kentucky family and was born on a farm in Breathitt County February 25, 1868, son of Alfred and Esther (Horton) Combs. He was reared and received his early education in Menifee County and at the age of fifteen took his place in his father's general store at Cornwell in that county. In 1889 he removed to Powell County, conducted a country store, operated a sawmill and there first entered the lumber business. From Powell County he removed to Lexington in 1893, and was an associate with his father and brothers in the organization of the Combs Lumber Company. This business was incorporated in 1895, and Mr. Combs has directed the affairs of the corporation as its president for a quarter of a century. It is one of the large organizations of capital and facilities engaged in the lumber business of the state today, having absorbed several other lumber companies.

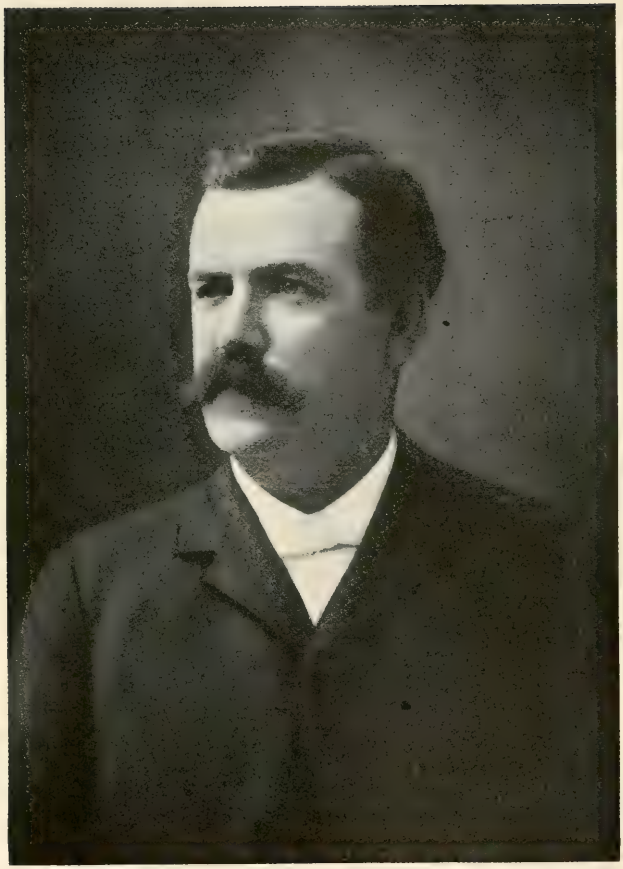
Mr. Combs, while a very busy man, has exerted his influence at all possible times for the benefit of his home city. He served several terms in the City Council, and in 1903 was elected mayor of the city without opposition. His administration during the following four years is still remembered and recalled as an example of high efficiency in municipal affairs.

He resigned in 1907 to accept the nomination for the State Senate, to which he was elected, but since retiring from the Senate in 1912 has sought no further cares and responsibilities of a public nature and has devoted his time to his private business and as a worker in various organizations to meet the emergencies caused by the World war.

He formerly was a director of the Fayette National Bank, Lexington, and is now a director of the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland. He is active in the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, is also affiliated with the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Elks and Maccabees, is a member of the Lexington Club and Country Club, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1889 he married Miss Viola Downs, who was born and reared in Menifee County, daughter of George W. and Mary Downs. Two children were born to their marriage, Iva Maye, who became the wife of Thomas N. Duff, of Montgomery County, Kentucky; and Ethel Ruth, who died in 1898 at the age of six years.

Robinson Adair McDowell. No profession develops with so much of accuracy and masculine vigor the native intellectual predominancies as that of the law. While it opens a vast field for profound philosophic inquiry, it at the same time imperiously demands an acute and close observation of the daily workings of practical life. The materials for the foundations of society, which are scattered around broadcast and in profusion, often the most heterogeneous and crude, have to be molded into form and symmetry by the application of great principles. These rude materials and these great principles have to be fused together in the crucible, and the process of melting and refining the former is undergone by firm and unyielding contact with the latter. The very highest development of intellectual vigor, the most profound and comprehensive knowledge of principle, is often found inadequate to this arduous task; for with these must be united a clear and quick sagacity, an adaptation to the habits and modes of thought by those surrounding the legislator or judicial functionary, or all his well-meant labors will, like the fabled fruit of the plain, "turn to ashes on the lip." Among those who act conspicuously in thus moulding and fashioning society at Louisville, one who has reached a recognized position among the leaders of his profession is Robinson Adair McDowell.



Mr. McDowell was born at Louisville, Kentucky, November 4, 1870, a son of William Preston and Kate Goldsborough (Wright) McDowell. The father, born at Louisville in 1838, enlisted in the Federal army at the outbreak of the war between the states, and became assistant adjutant general on the staff of General Rousseau, subsequently participating in the various engagements in which his command took part. At the battle of Stone River he received a severe wound in his left arm, and, while he continued to serve until the close of the war, this wound gave him a great deal of trouble throughout his life, and was the cause of the complication which resulted in his death in 1901. When his military career was ended he returned to Louisville, where he was engaged in various lines of business, and while his poor health handicapped him and kept him from accumulating a fortune, he was known as a man of sound integrity and honor. Politically he was a republican and his religious faith was that of the Episcopal Church. He held membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, the Society of the Army of the Cumberland and the Loyal Legion. Mr. McDowell married Kate Goldsborough Wright, who was born in 1845, and they became the parents of six children, all of whom survive, Robinson Adair being the third in order of birth.

Robinson Adair McDowell was educated in the public schools of Louisville, and when eighteen years of age entered the service of the Louisville Electric Light Company, by which concern he was employed until 1896. During this time he studied law and in 1896 was appointed second assistant to the city attorney, a post which he held for about two years. Mr. McDowell thus earned the money to put him through a course in the law department of the University of Louisville, and in 1897 was admitted to the bar. He has since been engaged in a general civil practice and has risen steadily in public esteem and reputation. His offices are located in the Lincoln Bank Building. Mr. McDowell was secretary of the Kentucky State Bar Association from 1904 to 1915. He belongs to the Kentucky State Bar Association, Louisville Bar Association, Board of Trade, the Pendennis Club and the Rotary Club of Louisville, and the Louisville Lodge of Elks, and was first vice president of the International Association of Rotary Clubs in 1917 and 1918. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church, and in politics he is a republican.

Mr. McDowell was married October 6, 1906, to Mrs. Virginia (Robb) Morey, who was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky.

James Edwin McFarland has rounded out a consecutive period of thirty-five years of service to the banking institutions of Lexington. While there was nothing particularly to distinguish his early service beyond that of an ability to work and a fidelity to all interests entrusted to his charge, Mr. McFarland for a number of years past has been a man of prominence among Kentucky bankers, as vice president of the First and City National Bank of Lexington.

He was born at Nicholasville, Jessamine County, Kentucky, December 21, 1860, son of David S. and Elizabeth (Welsh) McFarland. His father was born in Kentucky, December 21, 1836, and died March 16, 1899, while his mother was born in Jessamine County, May 7, 1839, and died, July 4, 1915. They were married August 8, 1856, and were the parents of two children, William T., a resident of Detroit, Michigan, and James Edwin. Davis S. McFarland acquired a common school education, and later took up the practice of veterinary surgery and enjoyed a busy career in that profession at Lexington from March, 1877, until his death. He was a Knight Templar Mason affiliated with Frankfort Commandery No. 4, and in politics gave his vote to the candidates who best deserved it. He gained well deserved esteem, and had made his own way in the world from the time he was left an orphan at the age of seven years. Though he lived as a man amongst men, it is said that he never tasted liquor of any kind.

James Edwin McFarland attended the district schools of Franklin County, the city schools of Frankfort, and the first money he ever earned was as a worker on a farm in Fayette County at 25 cents a day. For a short time he clerked in a livery stable, also clerked for McChesney & Martin, grain merchants of Lexington, and was a clerk in the freight department of the Louisville & Nashville Railway until February 14, 1885, a date he has always remembered as marking his first employment in the National Exchange Bank of Lexington. He was put on the pay roll as collection clerk, and remained with that institution for a period of seventeen years, during which time he earned steady promotion and for the last several years was cashier. June 2, 1902, he became assistant cashier of the Lexington City National Bank and in May, 1908, was elected cashier. When the Lexington City National Bank took over the First National Bank of Lexington and the consolidated institutions continued under the title of the First and City National Bank, beginning July 3, 1913, Mr. McFarland was chosen vice president of the larger institution, and has continued in that office and is also cashier. He has given all his mature years to banking, and his successive promotions are a real measure of his ability.

January 25, 1888, Mr. McFarland married Effie Rowland, who was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, a daughter of Nelson H. and Fannie (Hedges) Rowland. Her parents were natives of Harrison County, and her father died January 13, 1913, and her mother is still living. Mrs. McFarland is the oldest of three children, and is herself the mother of three children. Fannie, the oldest, is the wife of G. K. McCorkle, of Chicago, and has one daughter, Jean; Elizabeth, the second daughter, is the wife of T. L. Lloyd and her two children are Edwin and Elizabeth; the only son James Rowland McFarland is a student in the Lexington High School.

Albert Creath Karsner, member of the Lexington real estate firm of Cassell & Karsner, has spent the greater part of his active life in practical farming operations in the famous Blue Grass section of Kentucky. His middle name was given in honor of the famous blind Baptism preacher Creath, who is remembered by many for the wholesale influence he exercised over this country for a generation, and his remarkable oratorical ability.

Mr. Karsner was born at Lexington, August 12, 1873. His father, Albert Gallatin Karsner, was a native of Woodford County. Mr. Karsner's mother was Frances Cassell, eldest daughter of Leonard Cassell. She is still living at the age of ninety. Albert C. Karsner was for many years engaged in the livery business at Lexington and Danville. About 1874 he moved to the farm now owned by the State University just south of Lexington. In 1881 he went to another farm north of Lexington, and about 1896 to a farm on Nicholasville Pike, three miles south of Lexington. This farm is still occupied by his son William C. He lived there about ten years and died at the old homestead in March, 1906, at the age of eighty. Mrs. Karsner is still living in the south part of Lexington.

Her first husband was James Price and they spent their brief married life in Jessamine County. Her two sons by that marriage were Leonard C. and James C. Albert C. Karsner is the youngest of the surviving children. The oldest, George D., is a farmer on Clays Mill Pike, near Lexington; William C. has already been mentioned as owner of the old homestead farm; Allie W. is Mrs. C. N. Cochran, of Lexington.

Albert C. Karsner grew up on the several farms mentioned as having been occupied by his father. He acquired good advantages in the local schools and learned the practical business of farming under his father. For over twenty years he was an independent farmer, and he still lives in the country on Versailles Pike. November 1, 1920, he became associated with Mr. Cassell in the real estate business.

Mrs. Karsner is a daughter of Rufus and Belle (Pettit) Bryant. Mr. Karsner's grandmother was born in Virginia in 1800 and when two years of age rode in front of her mother on horseback to Kentucky. Belle Pettit's father, William Pettit lived south of Lexington on Nicholasville Pike. He erected the present Burt residence, which for years has been an interesting and historical landmark in that section. Being a Southern sympathizer William Pettit was ordered to leave the country during the Civil war, and his residence was occupied as headquarters for the Federal General, Burbridge.

William Rodes, M. D., was for nearly thirty years one of Lexington's leading physicians. Devoted to his profession, his sympathies also extended to many other interests, and he is remembered as a man of wide experience, of gentle disposition, a friend to the poor and needy, and was much beloved by patients and friends to whom he had endeared himself by his faithfulness and sympathy.

Doctor Rodes was born in Fayette County, January 1, 1852, at the home of his parents on the Richmond Road. He died at Clearwater, Florida, May 14, 1907, where he had gone in search of health. He stood in the seventh generation of an old American family, while the name is one of honorable importance through a number of preceding generations in England. The successive steps in his ancestry are given in the following paragraphs, beginning with

I. John Rodes of Stavely, Woodthorpe, Yorkshire, England, as far as the ancestry has been traced at this time. He married Attaline, daughter of Thomas Hewet, of Wales, Yorkshire.

II. Francis Rodes, Esq., of Stavely, who died in 1591, married Elizabeth, daughter of Brian Sanford.

III. Sir John Rodes of Barlborough was born in 1562, knighted in 1603 and died in 1639. His second wife, Frances, was the daughter of Marmaduke Constable.

IV. A son of Sir John was Sir Francis Rodes of Barlborough. He was knighted at Whitehall and created Baronet in 1641 and died in 1645. His wife, Elizabeth, born in 1595, was a daughter of Sir George Lascelles of Sturton and Gateford, Knight.

V. John Rodes of Sturton, England, married Elizabeth, daughter of Simon Jason of Edial, Staffordshire, England. A brother of John of Sturton was Sir Francis Rodes, who died in 1651 and who married Ann, daughter of Sir Gervas Clifton. The name Clifton thus introduced into the Rodes family has been handed down in all of the branches.

VI. Charles Rodes was one of two brothers who came to America from England during the seventeenth century. Tradition is that they were banished from England by Cromwell, as they were adherents of the throne, and they fled to the colony of Virginia. Charles Rodes was living in Virginia and was married there in 1695.

VII. His son, John Rodes, and great-great-great-grandfather of Dr. William Rodes, lived in Hanover County, Virginia. He was born November 6, 1697, and died May 3, 1775. His wife was Mary Crawford, born in 1703, daughter of "Good old Captain David Crawford" of New Kent County, Virginia, born in 1667, and Elizabeth Smith, his wife; and grandaughter of David Crawford, born in 1625 in Kilbrine, Ayrshire, Scotland, whose father was John Crawford, also of Kilbrine, Ayrshire.

VIII. The next successive member in the lineage,

Clifton Rodes, lived in Albermarle County, Virginia, near Ivy Depot; was a magistrate of that county and high sheriff in 1783-85. He was a private in the Militia of Louisa County, Virginia, in 1758, during the French and Indian wars (Henning). In 1788 he sold his plantation and migrated to Fayette County, Kentucky, and bought land in the neighborhood of Bryan's Station and David's Fork Church. He afterward bought land in Scott County, where he lived at the time of his death, in 1819, and there he is buried in the Rodes-Burch family burying ground. He married Sarah Waller, daughter of Colonel John and Agnes (Carr) Waller. The Waller family is a very ancient one, tracing the ancestry to Alured de Waller, who went to England with William the Conqueror and died there 1183. Many of the name have distinguished themselves by their patriotism, bravery and ability, so much so that the Waller family is considered one of the most noble, as well as most ancient in England. The Virginia Wallers are descended from Edmund Waller, who immigrated to America and settled in Spotsylvania County at an early date, and his descendants are found among the burgesses and military organizations as well as holding many civil offices. Agnes Carr Waller was the daughter of Major Thomas Carr (1678-1737) of "Bear Castle," Carolina County, Virginia, and Mary, daughter of Cornelius d'Aubigne, who left Wales between 1715-1717 and sailed for America, and whose ancestors left France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685) because they were no longer allowed to worship God with freedom of conscience. Major Thomas Carr of "Bear Castle" was the son of Thomas Carr and his wife, Miss Garland of "Topping Castle," King William County, Virginia who was sheriff of that county, 1708-9.

Two of the daughters of Clifton Rodes married Joseph and James Rogers, of Bryan Station; Agnes married Major William Boone; Dorothy married in Virginia Capt. David Kerr, who settled in Scott County; and Mary Rodes married in Virginia Joseph Burch, who settled also in Scott County. This couple were the parents of Mary, wife of vice president John C. Breckenridge, and Maria, wife of Rev. J. J. Bullock, the noted Divine.

IX. Waller Rodes, son of Clifton Rodes, was born in 1768 and died 1808. He lived in Scott County. His wife was Elizabeth Thomson, born in 1770 and died in 1843. After his death she became the wife of Gabriel Slaughter, who was governor of Kentucky in 1816. The Thomson family to which Elizabeth belonged trace this line back to Samuel Thomson, born at Avondale, Scotland, May 5, 1613, whose son William, born 1635, married and had three sons, one of whom was Samuel, born 1667. This Samuel Thomson had a son Samuel, born 1691, Gentleman, of Blair Manor, Argyleshire, Scotland, who was driven by religious persecution from Scotland in 1715, and in 1717 emigrated from Wales to America, where he married Mary McDonald, a young Scotchwoman of Glenco, Balmowhaple, near Glasgow. They had among other children a son, William Thomson, born August 13, 1727, in Spotsylvania County, Virginia, who served as captain in the Revolutionary war. His wife was Ann Rodes, daughter of John and Mary (Crawford) Rodes, of Hanover County, Virginia.

X. Colonel William Rodes, grandfather of Doctor Rodes, was born in 1792 and died in 1856. He served his state in the Legislature, being a member of the Senate in 1841-45, and was a lieutenant on the staff of Lieut.-Col. Gabriel Slaughter, (his stepfather) in Slaughter's Regiment, Kentucky Detached Militia, in the War of 1812. His first wife was his cousin, Sarah Waller Burch (1789-1818), a daughter of Joseph Burch and Mary Rodes, his wife. His second wife was Margaret Todd, daughter of Gen. Levi Todd, by whom he had an only son, Levi Todd Rodes.

XI. Joseph Waller Rodes, father of Doctor Rodes, was born in 1817 and died in 1878. He married Sarah Evans Marshall, whose ancestors were among the earliest to come to Kentucky, while it was still a wilderness, and who helped in the settlement of the state. Her grandfather, Robert Marshall, was born in Virginia about 1756, migrated to Fayette County, Kentucky, and died in 1814. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of George Simpson, of Virginia. Sarah Evans Marshall was born in Fayette County May 29, 1827, and is still living in Lexington at the age of ninety-four. She was the daughter of Robert Marshall, born in 1802, and his wife, Elizabeth Evans, born in 1808 and died in 1900. The parents of Elizabeth Evans were Richard Evans (1783-1836) and Sarah Pulliam (1786-1857), and her grandparents were Capt. Peter Evans (1755-1814), a soldier of the Revolutionary war in Virginia, and his wife, Ann Newman (1755-1836), daughter of Capt. John Newman of Prince William County, Virginia, whose wife was Miss Posey. Sarah Pulliam, wife of Richard Evans, was the daughter of Joseph Pulliam of Spottsylvania County, Virginia, and his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin Holliday (who died in 1785) and his wife, Susannah, and granddaughter of John Holliday (died in 1742) captain of the Virginia Rangers of Spottsylvania County, Virginia, and his wife, Elizabeth.

Dr. William Rodes was educated in the county schools and Transylvania College. He early decided to study medicine, and accordingly entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, graduating from that institution in 1876. He remained as resident physician at the hospital for two years. On his return home he commenced the practice of his profession, forming a partnership with Dr. A. S. Allen, with offices in Lexington. His unusual talents quickly gained recognition and with his social connections gave him the broadest possible latitude for usefulness in his chosen work.

Doctor Rodes was the ruling elder of the Maxwell Street Presbyterian Church for many years, was a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, and had served on city boards of health, boards of education and other civic bodies. He was a member of the State and County Medical societies, and was at one time examiner for one of the large life insurance companies. He was instrumental in opening up a beautiful residence section of Lexington, many of the choicest homes being on the avenue which bears his name.

April 26, 1883, Doctor Rodes married Mary Ford Higgins (see Higgins family sketch). The children of Doctor and Mrs. Rodes were: Allen Higgins Rodes, president of the Two Republics Life Insurance Company at El Paso, Texas; Louise Webb Rodes, wife of Wallace Kelly, of Plainfield, New Jersey; William Rodes, B. S., M. S., a graduate of Kentucky University and an active business man of Lexington; Joseph Headley Rodes, who was born in 1889 and died in 1894; Mary Ford Rodes, wife of Horace H. Wilson, of Lexington; and Ensign Joseph Waller Rodes, of the United States Navy.

HIGGINS FAMILY. Mary F. Higgins Rodes, widow of the late Dr. William Rodes of Lexington, is a member of the historic Higgins family of Kentucky and in the maternal line represents the Webbs of old Virginia and Kentucky. The successive generations of these families leading down to her own are traced briefly in the following paragraphs.

I. William Higgins had land surveyed for himself in King William County, Virginia, in 1720. He had seven sons and one daughter, William, Moses, Aaron, Captain James, John, Joel and Jesse. All were probably soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Aaron was the first to come to Kentucky, and claimed a settlement and preemption of land for himself and his brother, Captain James, on the South Fork of Licking River, in the year 1776. (Fayette Preemptions, Book I, page 227-8.) After this he went back to Virginia, but returned to Kentucky in 1783, with all his brothers, their wives, children and household goods. Embarking at Pittsburg on flatboats, they came down the Ohio River into the Licking River, landed and built a fort called the Higgins Blockhouse, about 1½ miles from Cynthiana. This fort consisted of seven or eight log houses built on precipitous rocks thirty feet high, with a strong picket fence on the exposed sides. In this fort the Higgins brothers lived until their preempted land was surveyed for them.

An Indian attack on Higgins Fort is described in Vol. II, page 328, Collins History of Kentucky.

II. Joel Higgins (1748-1807) was an ensign in the Revolutionary war in Virginia, and after the surrender of Cornwallis migrated with his brother to Kentucky and died in Lexington. His family consisted of his wife, Drucilla, two sons, Richard and William, a daughter Mildred, who married John Chinn, and a daughter Mary, who married a Mr. Richardson.

III. Richard Higgins (1770-1843) was born in Caroline County, Virginia, and migrated to Fayette County in 1788. He died in Lexington and was prominent in all the affairs of early Lexington, serving as a justice of the peace, county surveyor and sheriff of the county, in all of which offices he exercised a skill, fidelity and discretion which gave universal satisfaction, and he was personally esteemed by all with whom he came in contact. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, being one of those at the decisive battle of the Thames. His wife was Sally Allen, daughter of Richard and Ann (Wisdom) Allen, who migrated from Spottsylvania County, Virginia, in 1786, to Fayette County and settled in the South Elkhorn neighborhood.

IV. Joel Higgins, who was the grandfather of Mrs. William Rodes, was born in 1802 and died in 1859. He was a native of Fayette County, and was educated in Transylvania College. He was one of those benevolent, public spirited citizens who always had the good of the community at heart. His old home is still standing on High Street, where he and his wife dispensed true Southern hospitality and where their five boys grew to manhood. He sleeps in the beautiful Lexington Cemetery, of which he was one of the incorporators in 1849, and in the spot he selected for himself and family.

His wife was Ann Louisa Gibson (1804-1881), daughter of Rev. Randal Gibson (1766-1836), and his wife, Harriet McKinley (1771-1837), daughter of John McKinley and his wife, Mary Connelly, who were married, 1763, in Cork, Ireland, and immigrated to Mount Royal Forge, Maryland, where most of their children were born. The McKinley family can be traced to the original MacDuff of Shakespeare's Macbeth, and belonged to a clan to which James II and many of the kings of Scotland and the earls of Fife belonged. John McKinley was a captain in the Revolutionary war, and afterwards joined Colonel Crawford's ill-fated expedition against the Indians, was captured and killed.

Rev. Randal Gibson was the son of Gibeon Gibson, who married Mary O'Connell in Virginia, removed to South Carolina, but, not being pleased, remained there but a short time. He determined with others to join the rest of the family, who had already settled in Sumner County, Tennessee. They went to the Holstein country, built flatboats, and several hundred started up the Cumberland River, but they were pursued by such a murderous fire from the Indians that they were compelled to drift out into midstream and go down the river into the Ohio, finally getting into the Mississippi, and landed, quite unintentionally, at Natchez. The Gibsons were quite prominent in introducing Methodism into Mississippi, and Randal Gibson was the first man to endow a college in the vast Mississippi territory. He gave the land on which Jefferson College is built in Washington, Adams County.

V. In the fifth generation of this family is John Allen Higgins, father of Mrs. Rodes. He was born in Lexington in 1831 and died in 1880. He was educated in Transylvania College and divided his time between his southern plantation in Arkansas on the Mississippi River and his farm in Fayette County on the Paris Pike. He married at the age of twenty-one Bettie Chinn Webb, of Scott County, Kentucky, and they were the parents of eight children, five daughters and three sons.

Webb Family. The Webbs, Mrs. Rodes' maternal line, originated in England, were early settlers in Virginia, and owned land in Middlesex County. Her great-great-grandfather was

I. William Crittenden Webb (1732-1815), who lived and died in Orange County, Virginia. His wife was Jane Vivian (1740-1783), daughter of John Vivian (1714-), and his wife Jane Smith (1715-), daughter of John and Ann Smith and granddaughter of John and Jane Smith of Middlesex County, Virginia. John Vivian (1714-), was the son of John Vivian (1681-1721), and his wife, Elizabeth Thacker (1694-1732), and grandson of John Vivian who was a constable, 1681, and sheriff, 1719, of Middlesex County, Virginia.

Elizabeth Thacker was the daughter of Henry Thacker (1663-ab. 1714), who was high sheriff of Middlesex County, 1703, and granddaughter of Henry Thacker and his wife, Eltonhead Conway (1646-), daughter of Edwin Conway and his wife, Martha Eltonhead, of the prominent old English family of that name. Edwin Conway, born 1610 in England, died 1675 in Lancaster County, Virginia, was a very influential man in his day; his landed estate aggregated over 10,000 acres. He was a burgess for Lancaster County from 1712 to 1747.

II. John Vivian Webb (1765-1839) was born in Orange County, Virginia, married Lucy Woodward in 1790, and shortly afterward emigrated to Scott County, Kentucky, where they made their home. Their son, and the grandfather of Mrs. Rodes, was:

III. Mitchum B. Webb (1802-1855), who married Susan Holmes (1804-1871), daughter of Robert Holmes (1764-1833), who left his home in Londonderry, New Hampshire, when quite young, and settled on a lovely plantation called "Elmwood" in Scott County, which is still in possession of one of his great-great-great-grandsons. His father was Nathaniel Holmes, Jr., son of Nathaniel, Sr. (1719-1764), who emigrated from Colerraine, Ireland, to America, in 1740, and died in Londonderry, New Hampshire. Nathaniel Holmes, Jr., married Elizabeth Moore (1720-1795), daughter of John and Janet Moore, who came from County Antrim, Ireland, to Londonderry, New Hampshire.

The Moore-Holmes families were of the Scotch Covenanter Presbyterian persuasion, and descendants still own the old home in New Hampshire. Robert Holmes married Susan Chinn (1770-1817) daughter of Charles Chinn (1723-1788) of Fauquier County, Virginia, and his wife Sythe Davis; and granddaughter of John Chinn (167 -after 1736) and his wife, Mrs. Margaret Ball Downman (1691-1758, widow of Raleigh Downman and daughter of Capt. William Ball (1641-1694) and his wife, Margaret Williamson. Captain William Ball was the eldest son of Col. William Ball of "Millenbeck," Lancaster County, Virginia, who was born in England and came to America before 1661. Through his other son, Col. Joseph Ball, Col. William Ball became the great-grandfather of George Washington, the famous American general and the first president of the United States.

Mrs. Rodes was eminently fitted for a helpmate to her distinguished husband. She was educated and graduated from Sayre College, Lexington, a noted Presbyterian institution of learning at which the first women in the state received their education. A gentle, kindly disposition, a splendid mind and strength of character that enabled her to direct her large home duties as wife and mother, endeared her to a large family and circle of friends. After the death of Doctor Rodes, undaunted by the heavy and unusual responsibilities that devolved upon her, she assumed them with the grace, dignity and intelligence of the "gentlewoman" to the full satisfaction of all who knew her. Mrs. Rodes' religion, her church, has been her strong support, and in that as in every position she has been called upon to fill she has done well her part—indeed it can truthfully be said of her, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

The Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company and the Treaty Underwriters, whose home offices are at Lexington, comprise the strongest fire insurance organization south of the Ohio River, with total assets at the beginning of 1920 or more than $2,000,000. The Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company was organized in March, 1910, and was backed primarily by the business interests of Lexington, though almost immediately the organization was extended over the entire state. Prominent in the organization were James Stone Helm, J. L. Watkins, Matthew Walton, Claude F. Snyder, Lister Witherspoon, F. G. Stiltz, C. E. Hoge, John H. Leathers and others. This company now has over 3,000 stockholders, the majority of them in Kentucky and immediately adjoining states, and it has business in eighteen states from coast to coast.

In 1913 the Henry Clay Company bought the business of the United American Insurance Company of Frankfort. In 1914 the Treaty Underwriters was established at Lexington to preserve the plant of the great Southern Fire Insurance Company of Louisville, which was acquired by the Henry Clay Company in that year. The name Treaty Underwriters was selected to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Treaty of Ghent and Henry Clay's connection with that Treaty. The Treaty Underwriters is owned by the stockholders of the Henry Clay. Of the 150 domestic and foreign companies doing a fire insurance business in the United States, this Lexington Company has the fifth largest business in Kentucky and is the thirteenth in strength in the United States.

The officers of the company are H. M. Froman, formerly president of the United American Insurance Company of Frankfort; J. L. Watkins, vice president-treasurer, who was associated with the organization of the Henry Clay in 1910; F. G. Stiltz, secretary, who also has a decade of association with the business; C. F. Snyder, manager, and one of the organizers; E. C. O'Rear, general counsel.

Hiram McMackin Froman, president of the Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company of Lexington, is a Kentuckian who has made important contributions to the welfare and progress of his state through scientific and extensive agriculture and stock breeding, as a legislator and public leader, a financier and business man.

He represents one of the earliest families to settle in Kentucky. When Kentucky was part of Old Virginia, and all the American colonies still acknowledged allegiance to King George, Paul Froman received a grant from the Crown to extensive tracts of land in what is now Bullock and Nelson counties, Kentucky. This Paul Froman was a contemporary of Daniel Boone, and had the distinction of being a member of the first jury ever impaneled in Kentucky, held at Louisville. His son, Jacob Froman, great-grandfather of H. M. Froman, was a member of the first Kentucky Legislature and the first Constitutional Convention. Paul Froman, a son of Jacob, moved from Kentucky to Switzerland County in Southern Indiana, and lived out his life there. His son Hiram Froman married in Indiana Nancy McMackin, and in 1861 moved to Carroll County, Kentucky, where he engaged in farming and lived until advanced age. He was primarily an educator. He was educated at Hanover College in Indiana, where he was a classmate of Thomas J. Hendricks, the Indiana statesman who afterward was Vice President. Hiram Froman was for thirty years engaged in school work, and part of the time was principal of schools at Vevay, Indiana.

Hiram McMackin Froman was born at the home of his parents in Switzerland County, Indiana, October 27, 1855, being one of eight children, all of whom were college graduates. One brother was a graduate of Bellevue Hospital Medical College and died of yellow fever.

H. M. Froman attended Georgetown College in Kentucky and also Ghent College, where he graduated in 1876. While his training would have fitted him for entering several professions, Mr. Froman early decided that his vocation should be the oldest and noblest of careers, that of farming. He has always been a farmer, and his achievements and example have done much to improve the standards of agriculture and promote the welfare of people whose environment is in the country. On leaving college he took charge of the old farm in Carroll County, and his estate is known as "Froman Farm" at Ghent. This farm comprises 700 acres and extends for 2½ miles along the Ohio River, a mile above Ghent. Ninety acres of this land in 1920 grew tobacco, and Mr. Froman has long been prominent in organizations of tobacco producers, being a stockholder in the Loose Leaf Warehouse at Carrollton. He was a leading spirit in the movement to free the tobacco growers from the domination of the Tobacco Trust, and was vice president of the first state association and sold the first hogshead to that association's independent warehouse. In many ways he has introduced efficiency and system into farming operations and has been a student of farm problems, not only those involved in his own practical operations but those affecting the welfare of agriculture elsewhere.

Mr. Froman has served as a member of the State Board of Agriculture, as a member of the State Livestock Sanitary Board, as president of the American Society of Equity, for five years was president of the State Farmers Institute and has been a member of the State Tax Commission. In 1893 he was elected as a democrat to the State Senate to represent the Twenty-first District, comprising Carroll, Trimble, Oldham and Henry counties. He at once became a leader in the Senate, not merely as representative of the agricultural interests but as a man of judgment, whose counsel was needed for the varied program of legislation. He introduced and brought about the passage of the free turnpike law and was active in behalf of much other constructive legislation of that session. In 1896 he was chosen a national elector for the Bryan ticket. He served as president of the State Tax League, and was instrumental in securing the Constitutional amendment carrying out the program of the league. Mr. Froman is one of the trustees of Kentucky State University, his term expiring in 1925. He is the democratic member of the committee of three having charge of the extension department of the University. He was one of the five members of the Probe Committee which handled the reorganization of the university.

Mr. Froman was one of the early directors of the United American Insurance Company of Frankfort and in 1913 succeeded Governor Beckham as president. In 1914 he merged the business of this company with the Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company of Lexington, and since that date has been president of what is now the strongest fire insurance company south of the Ohio River. During 1920 the premium income of this organization was over $1,000,000. The total assets of the Henry Clay Company in 1914 were $325,000, while the net assets are now more than $1,000,000, while the combined assets of the Henry Clay and the Treaty Underwriters comprise over $2,000,000.

Mr. Froman has had his home in Lexington, at 212 East Maxwell Street, since 1914.

During several years he was president of the Ohio Valley Masonic Association. He is a past master of his lodge at Ghent, is past high priest of Ghent Chapter, R. A. M., a member of DeMolay Commandery, K. T. He organized and is past moderator of White's Run Baptist Association. He was the first president of the Carroll County Tobacco Association and has always kept in close touch with the interests of the tobacco growers. For thirty-five years since its organization he has been vice president of the Ghent Deposit Bank. At the age of twenty-eight Mr. Froman married Sarah Varina Howe, of Carroll County. They have three children: Robert H., who now has many of the responsibilities of management on the Froman farms; Caby V., wife of L. P. Gooding, of Lexington; and Elizabeth H., at home.

Capt. James Blythe Anderson, proprietor of "Glengarry," one of the historic country homes of Fayette County, three miles north of Lexington on Newtown Pike, is a member of one of the most distinguished of Southern families and has for years collected and preserved in his library at Glengarry many documents and papers bearing on Kentucky history in general. His ancestors came to Kentucky when it was a part of Virginia, and few names have been more conspicuously identified with the life and affairs of the state than that of Anderson.

In the paternal line his ancestry goes back to John Anderson, who immigrated from the north of Ireland to Augusta County, Virginia, in 1738 and who was one of the first magistrates of Augusta County; one of the first elders of the Stone Church and in 1742 was member of Augusta County Militia. This John Anderson had five sons in the Revolutionary war, named John, William, Robert, James and Andrew. He also had four daughters, Esther, Mary, Margaret, born in 1735, and Jean, born in 1744. Margaret and Jean married brothers, Margaret becoming the wife of Capt. James Allen, and Jean the wife of Lieut. Hugh Allen. Lieut. Hugh Allen fell as a soldier in the great battle of Point Pleasant in 1774. His widow subsequently became the wife of William Craig, who served as captain in the Virginia State Troops in the Revolution from 1778 to 1781. She died in 1811. Capt. James Allen, who was born in 1716 and died in 1810, also served in the battle of Point Pleasant and was captain of militia in 1756. He was an elder of the Stone Church in Virginia for many years, until his death. Jane Allen, daughter of Margaret Anderson and Capt. James Allen, was born in 1776, became the wife of Capt. James Trimble. Capt. Trimble, who was born in 1753 and died in Woodford County, Kentucky, in 1804, came to Kentucky in 1783, and he died after he had completed arrangements to remove to Hillsboro, Ohio, whither his widow took her children. Their son, Allen Trimble, was twice governor of Ohio. Capt. William Allen was born in 1758 and died in 1821. He was a son of Margaret Anderson and Capt. James Allen. He married Susan Bell, who was born in 1759 and died in 1837. Their daughter Betsy Allen was born in 1792 and died in 1840. She married on May 25, 1812, Dr. Alexander J. Mitchell, and Martha Bell Mitchell, their daughter, married Oliver Frazer, the artist. Margaret Allen, another daughter of Capt. William Allen and Susan (Bell) Allen, was born in 1795 and died in 1873. She married on May 25, 1812, Mathew Harris Jouett, the artist, and Sarah Bell Jouett, their daughter, married August 14, 1832, Richard H. Menifee, the celebrated orator. Another child of Capt. James Allen and wife was James Allen, who married Elizabeth Tate and in 1824 their son, John Allen, removed to Michigan, and Ann Arbor, the university center of that state, was named by him in honor of his wife, Ann (Barry) Allen.

Of the five Revolutionary soldiers, sons of John Anderson, Robert Anderson, born in 1741 and died in 1813, removed to South Carolina shortly before the Revolution, living on Long Cane Creek until the massacre there, then to Waxhamo, subsequently to the vicinity of Ninety-six, and after the war to Pendleton. He served as a member of the Lower House of the Jacksonborough Legislature, and was speaker of the South Carolina House of Representatives in 1800, in the same year presidential elector for Jefferson, and in 1812 was general of South Carolina troops. He served as captain and colonel under Gen. Andrew Pickens in the Revolution. Anderson County, South Carolina, was named in his honor. Gen. Robert Anderson's daughter Elizabeth married Samuel Maverick. Lydia Ann, their daughter married William Van Wyck and was the mother of Robert Anderson Van Wyck, first mayor of Greater New York.

James Anderson, born in 1746 and died in 1813, went to South Carolina in 1787 and located at Rock Mills, now in Anderson County. Subsequently he moved to the head of Rocky River on Beaver Dam Creek. He had served as a captain of Virginia State Troops in the Revolution.

Andrew Anderson, born in 1748 and died in 1823, represented Augusta County in the Virginia House of Delegates many consecutive years, and during the Revolution held the ranks of ensign, lieutenant and captain of Virginia State Troops. He was appointed a colonel of militia in 1794 and he was at Fort Pitt in 1781.

William Anderson, who was born in Virginia in 1750 and died in Jessamine County, Kentucky, in 1817, was appointed a captain of Virginia State Troops in 1776. In 1782, when Bryan Station in Kentucky was besieged by Simon Girty, Captain William Anderson and his company joined the command under Col. Benjamin Logan to go to the relief of these western settlers, but reached the scene too late. They followed on to Blue Licks and helped bury the dead of that massacre, and thence went to the mouth of Licking River, where the Kentucky troops under the command of George Rogers Clarke started a campaign that spread devastation throughout the Indian country. As early as 1783 Capt. William Anderson acquired a lot in Lexington. He made settlement in Jessamine County on Hickman's Creek, seven miles from Colonel John Todd's preemption in April, 1779, but lived in the fort at St. Asaphs in Lincoln County, Kentucky.

William Anderson married for his first wife Mary Craig, who died in Virginia, January 16, 1778. In 1779 Catharine Blair became his wife. She died in Jessamine County in 1843, at the age of eighty. Captain William Anderson had eleven children. The oldest was John. The only child by his first wife, Jane, who was born at St. Asaphs, Lincoln County, District of Kentucky, in 1780, became the wife of Gen. John Meaux and died in 1844. She educated and freed a slave, James Priest, who subsequently became vice president of the Republic of Liberia, Africa. She also established the Meaux Settlement in Anderson County. Hugh Allen Anderson, the third child, was born at St. Asaphs in 1782 and died in Arkansas in 1848. He was a captain of Kentucky Troops in the War of 1812, and after removing to Alabama served as a member of the Legislature and as judge of Lawrence County. His grandson, Hugh Anderson Dinsmore is an ex-congressman and ex-minister to Korea. William Anderson, the fourth child, was a captain in the regular United States forces during the War of 1812, practiced law for several years at Lexington, serving as commonwealth attorney, and then removed to Alabama, where he died in 1823, and at the time of his death was candidate before the Alabama Legislature for the United States Senate. Charles Anderson, born in 1786, in Jessamine County, Kentucky, was in the Creek Indian war of 1814, became a wealthy planter in Mississippi and died in Pontotoc County of that state in 1857. His grandson, William D. Anderson is now a supreme judge of Mississippi. Lieut. Robert Anderson, the sixth in this family, served in the navy during the War of 1812, remained a bachelor and died in Missouri in 1819. Sophia Anderson, who died in 1866, was the wife of Samuel Wilson, a noted educator of Jessamine and Fayette counties. Sarah Anderson became the wife of Richard Gatewood and removed to Howard County, Missouri. Mary, who died at Richmond, Kentucky, in 1844, was the wife of Capt. Thomas A. Clark, a former sheriff of Madison County, Kentucky. Oliver Anderson was the grandfather of Capt. James Blythe Anderson. The eleventh and youngest of the family was Susannah Anderson, who became the wife of Edward Bradshaw and removed to Missouri, and their daughter, Josephine, married a former Missouri congressman, James J. Lindley.

Oliver Anderson was born in 1794 and at the age of sixteen became identified with the river traffic from the Kentucky River to the Ohio River to New Orleans. In 1819 he was deputy sheriff of Madison County, and soon afterward became a pioneer hemp manufacturer in the state. In 1828 he moved to his farm in Jessamine County and subsequently to Fayette County, which he represented in the State Senate in 1849. In 1851 he removed to Missouri, where he continued the cultivation and manufacture of hemp. In Missouri Governor Claiborne F. Jackson appointed him sheriff of Lafayette County. In 1861, refusing to take the oath of allegiance, he was arrested by Federal troops and confined in Arcana Hall in Lexington and Gratiot Street Prison, St. Louis and subsequently banished from the state. During the battle of Lexington, Missouri, the fighting surged through and around his factory and residence, and large quantities of his hemp were confiscated. Though a youth at the time, Oliver Anderson was a member of Capt. Patrick Gray's Company of Kentucky Volunteers in the War of 1812 and helped build Fort Defiance in Ohio. He was also wounded and made a prisoner at Frenchtown on the River Raisin, but made his escape from the British forces. He subsequently became a lieutenant of the Ninth Kentucky Regiment, was promoted to captain, in 1819 became major and in 1820 lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. Colonel Anderson was the founder of Knight Templar Masonry in Lexington, Missouri, and was the first eminent commander of the Commandery of Lexington. Upon his banishment from that state he was paroled to Kentucky and subsequently banished from Kentucky to free soil states, and after the war returned to Kentucky and died in Lexington in 1873. His portrait by the famous portrait artist, George P. R. Healy, is preserved by his granddaughter, Mrs. Jeremiah Rogers Morton of Lexington.

Colonel Oliver Anderson married in 1819 Mary Campbell, who was born in 1797 and died in 1842. In 1847 he married Louisa Price, who died in 1867. Mary Campbell, his first wife, the mother of all his children was the daughter of Capt. Samuel and Mary (Anderson) Campbell. Capt. Samuel Campbell was a soldier of the Revolution. His wife, Mary Anderson, he married as the widow of John Kennedy, who was killed by Indians in 1781. Mary Anderson was the daughter of John Anderson, previously referred to as one of the sons of John Anderson, the original American ancestor. This John Anderson was a member of Gen. George Rogers Clarke's expedition to Kaskaskia and Vincennes in 1778, and in 1779 he settled on Gilbert's Creek in Garrard County, Kentucky. He was baptized by Rev. John Craig in 1740, died in Madison County in 1796. His wife was Ann (Irvine) Anderson. Their son, James, had served in the Revolution and in Madison County, Kentucky, was county surveyor, a member of the legislature and sheriff. He was a member of Capt. John Boyle's company and was a celebrated Indian fighter. Margaret Anderson, sister of James and Mary, married Bezaleel Maxwell. Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, "pure food man," is one of the lineal descendants.

The record of the children of Colonel Oliver Anderson is as follows: Mary Anne, born in 1821 and died in 1844, the wife of Daniel Breck; Catherine, who was born in 1823 and died in 1824; Minerva Campbell, born in 1825 and died in 1885, was the wife of Henry Howard Gratz, the distinguished editor of the Kentucky Gazette from 1866 for many years; William Anderson, born in 1827 and died in 1877, was a graduate of Princeton University, received his law degree from Transylvania College, was on the editorial staff and legislative correspondent of the Courier-Journal of Louisville, practiced law at Lexington, Missouri, until banished from that state, and was also editor of the Expositor, a secession paper at Lexington; Joseph Caldwell Anderson, whose career is noted in more detail in following paragraphs; Jane LeGrand, born in 1831 and died in 1901, was the wife of James Madison Taylor, who served in Oliver H. P. Beard's company in the Mexican war and under Gen. Sterling Price throughout the war between the states; Robert, also mentioned below; Katherine Blair, who was born in 1839 and died in 1916, became the wife of Rev. Thomas P. Akers, who served as president of the Female College at Greensburg, Kentucky, was a religious author, and later a member of Congress from Missouri, and Mrs. Akers after her husband's death was for years librarian of Lexington, Kentucky; John Campbell Anderson, born in 1836 and died in 1913 at St. Louis, Missouri, was a broker in New York during 1865-66, after the war was in business at Lexington, Kentucky, and in 1871 removed to Idaho, and, joining his brother, Robert, became a banker, and during the Civil war was a major of Missouri troops under General Price; and Leila, the tenth and youngest of the family, was born in 1842 and died in 1888, her first husband being Col. William M. Johns of the Federal army, and her second husband was Maurice M. Kaighn, an attorney, who also served in the Union army.

Of these children, Robert, born in 1833 and died in 1904, was a distinguished pioneer of Idaho Territory and State. From physical disabilities he had no military record. He went to Idaho in 1865 and in company with his brother-in-law, James Madison Taylor, built a toll bridge over a canyon in Snake River, at what is now Idaho Falls, started a small store there, and after his brother, John C. Anderson, came West they became associated with others in constructing the first irrigating canal in Southern Idaho, also established Anderson Brothers Bank at Eagle Rock, now Idaho Falls, and he was one of its directors. He also served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Idaho. He finally returned to Missouri and died in that state at the old home of Gen. Joe Shelby, of which he was then the owner.

Joseph Caldwell Anderson was born January 1, 1830, and was educated in private schools. He was brought to Lexington in 1844 and in 1846 joined the Kentucky Militia. He was a member of Maj. Thomas Lewinski's company and was a marker in this company. Major Lewinski was born in London, England, January 12, 1800, and died in Lexington, Kentucky, September 18, 1882. Joseph Caldwell Anderson was educated in Transylvania College and was also in Princeton University, but for a speech made on the campus was expelled, though later reinstated by the governor of that state, who refused to sanction the action of the college authorities. He declined to return, and in 1849 received his law degree from Transylvania College and was admitted to the Kentucky bar in that year. In 1851 he removed to Lexington, Missouri, engaged in law practice, and in 1854 went to Fort Scott, Kansas, and immediately took an active part in the struggle between the slavery and anti-slavery forces to control that territory. He was chosen a member of the Legislature in 1855 and was speaker pro tem of what was known as the "Bogus" Legislature. In 1856 he removed to Douglas County, Kansas, and was again elected to the Legislature. Anderson County, Kansas, bears the name of this distinguished pioneer of the state. In 1857 he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel in the First United States Volunteer Cavalry to act against John Brown and Jim Lane in Kansas. In 1859 he returned to Lexington, Missouri, resumed his law practice, and soon joined the Confederate army under Sterling Price. He was captured early in the war and after parole returned to Kentucky. In 1862 General Bragg assigned him duties in the Secret Service, and in 1863 he entered Knoxville, Tennessee, in the guise of a hog drover. He was held as a spy, but through a friend, Singleton P. Walters, made his escape. In 1864 he was banished to Canada, and while there joined the expedition for the purpose of liberating the prisoners on Johnson's Island. He was one of the men who stood by the officers of the Philo Parsons when seventeen members of the party mutinied. The captain of this boat and leader of the expedition was John Y. Beal, while his lieutenant was Bennett G. Burley. The mutiny of the seventeen caused the abandonment and failure of the expedition. Beal was later hanged as a spy in New York. Burley was living in Scotland in 1905.

Joseph C. Anderson returned to the United States in 1865, and in 1866 located at Lexington, Kentucky, where with his brother-in-law, H. H. Gratz, he helped re-establish the Kentucky Gazette, and took an active part in its editorial management. He retired from this paper in 1867 and took up the life of a farmer in Madison County at "Blythewood."

June 18, 1867, Joseph C. Anderson married Dovey Blythe, daughter of Maj. James Blythe, of Madison County. Major Blythe served as a sergeant in the company of John C. McWilliams at the battle of the Thames in the War of 1812. Major Blythe married Mrs. Jane Gentry White, widow, daughter of Richard Gentry, a soldier of the Revolution, and his wife, Jane Harris. Major Blythe spent his life in Madison County, at his home at Blythewood, an old property that has since been sold. It was at Blythewood, his mother's home in Madison County, that Capt. James Blythe Anderson was born December 25, 1868.

Joseph C. Anderson remained at Blythewood until 1880, when he returned to Lexington, and in 1881 bought "Glengarry," the beautiful country place of 270 acres now owned by his son, Captain Anderson. Glengarry, it is interesting to note, comprises land that was part of the possessions of William Anderson as early as 1785. William Anderson soon disposed of the property, and it was nearly a century later that descendants acquired it again. The residence at Glengarry is one of the few private homes in this section of Kentucky exemplifying the Tudor-Gothic style of architecture. The house was built by Alexander Brand about 1854. At this home Joseph Caldwell Anderson spent the last ten years of his life, and died May 2, 1891. He was for many years a faithful member of the First Presbyterian Church at Lexington.

Capt. James Blythe Anderson spent the first twelve years of his life at his mother's old home, Blythewood, but since the age of fourteen has lived at Glengarry. He was educated in the old brick school in Madison County, also, a school at Taylor's Cross Roads, Fayette County, the private school at Lexington kept by Mrs. Sally Short Higgins, and attended another school conducted by James Lane Allen on the site of the present Christian Church, corner of Walnut and Short streets, in Lexington. He was also a pupil under J. Lewis Logan. In 1886 Captain Anderson entered the State College and in 1892 began the study of law at the University of Virginia. He never carried his studies far enough to secure admission to the bar. Beginning in 1894, he was for four years engaged in the breeding and racing of thoroughbreds. Captain Anderson went out to Utah in 1904 and carried his prospecting over a wide extent of Western country, at first prospecting for oil and gas and in 1906 for gold. As a gold prospector he carried his work into Death Valley, and he discovered the first gold in the Jarbridge country of Nevada.

Captain Anderson was not willing to let his fifty years stand in the way of active military duty when America entered the war with Germany. He joined the Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis, and was commissioned a captain of cavalry in the National army in August, 1917. He was assigned to duty with the 51st Company, 13th Battalion, Depot Brigade, in the 84th Division, and subsequently became captain of the 106th Company, 27th Battalion, in the same brigade at Camp Zachary Taylor. He resigned, was rejected for service in the Canadian Army, underwent a surgical operation at St. Joseph's Hospital at Lexington, Kentucky, and then enlisted in the regular army at Fort Thomas in August, 1918, and remained there on duty until honorably discharged January 22, 1919.

Many of Captain Anderson's interests are literary, and he is author of one published book, "The Nameless Hero," and of a number of poems, stories, reviews and songs.

June 16, 1898, he married Miss Alice Simms. Mrs. Anderson was born at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, November 3, 1868, and is a graduate of the Kentucky Female Orphan School at Midway, Kentucky, also attended Peabody University at Nashville, and was a teacher prior to her marriage. She is a daughter of James Edward and Lucy (Grimes) Simms. Her parents were married in 1867. Her father was born in Bourbon County in 1844, served in the Confederate army as a private under Gen. John Morgan, and was a prisoner of war at Louisville at the close of the struggle. He died in Oklahoma in 1908. His half-brother was Col. William Elliott Simms, who was born in 1822 and died in 1898. Married in 1866 Lucy Blythe, daughter of Maj. James Blythe, referred to above. He served as a captain in the Mexican war, was a member of the Thirty-fourth Congress, became a lieutenant-colonel in the Confederate Army, and was elected to the Confederate Congress from Kentucky. Captain and Mrs. Anderson have two children, Joseph Caldwell and Elizabeth Blythe. The latter is a student in Sayre College at Lexington. The son, Joseph Caldwell, was graduated from high school in 1918, and after the war took a course in the Marconi Wireless Institute, receiving an operator's license. He had previously served in the National Guard with the Signal Corps until discharged. He is now chief wireless operator on the steamship Rapidan. At the outbreak of the World war when considerably under age he tried to enlist for active service, but at different times was rejected on account of under weight. In the last draft he waived every exemption and was finally put in class 1A shortly before the armistice was signed. Capt. James Blythe Anderson is a member of the Authors' League of America, and belongs to the Order of Cincinnati, the Society of the War of 1812 and the American Legion

HOGAN YANCEY. While he has gained marks of distinction as a successful lawyer, and is now serving in his second term as county attorney of Fayette County, Hogan Yancey is best known to a great many people in Kentucky and elsewhere as a former star athlete, baseball and football player and former coach of athletic teams.

He was born at Louisville, October 1, 1881, son of George W. and Sarah (Kendall) Yancey. His father who was born in Owen County, Kentucky, graduated from Kentucky University with the class of 1873 and was an active minister of the Christian Church until 1894 when ill health compelled his retirement. For several years he traveled extensively both in this country and abroad and died at Williamstown, Kentucky, in 1896 at the age of forty-nine. His wife was born at Williamstown in Grant County and died in December, 1912, at the age of sixty-one. Hogan was the third of their four children, and one other is still living.

Hogan Yancey as a boy attended public schools at Leesburg, Williamstown, spent two years in the F. M. S. School at Waynesboro, Virginia, was a student in South Carolina College at Columbia, South Carolina, during 1900-01, and completed his college work in Kentucky University from 1901 to 1903. While in school he attracted attention as a football and baseball player, and afterwards was an athletic coach, spending nearly every season coaching football teams for several years. He was coach of the Kentucky University team in 1908-09. During this time he was employing his leisure in the study of law and graduated with the class of 1909. He was also for about two years part owner and manager of the Lexington Baseball Club. Mr. Yancey opened his law office in Lexington in 1910, and in the fall of 1911 was elected city attorney, serving two years He was chosen county attorney in 1913, and by re-election in 1917 has filled that office two terms. He has made a capable record, has earned the appreciation of all good citizens by his work, and his friends unite in prophesying for him a broad career of usefulness in his chosen profession.

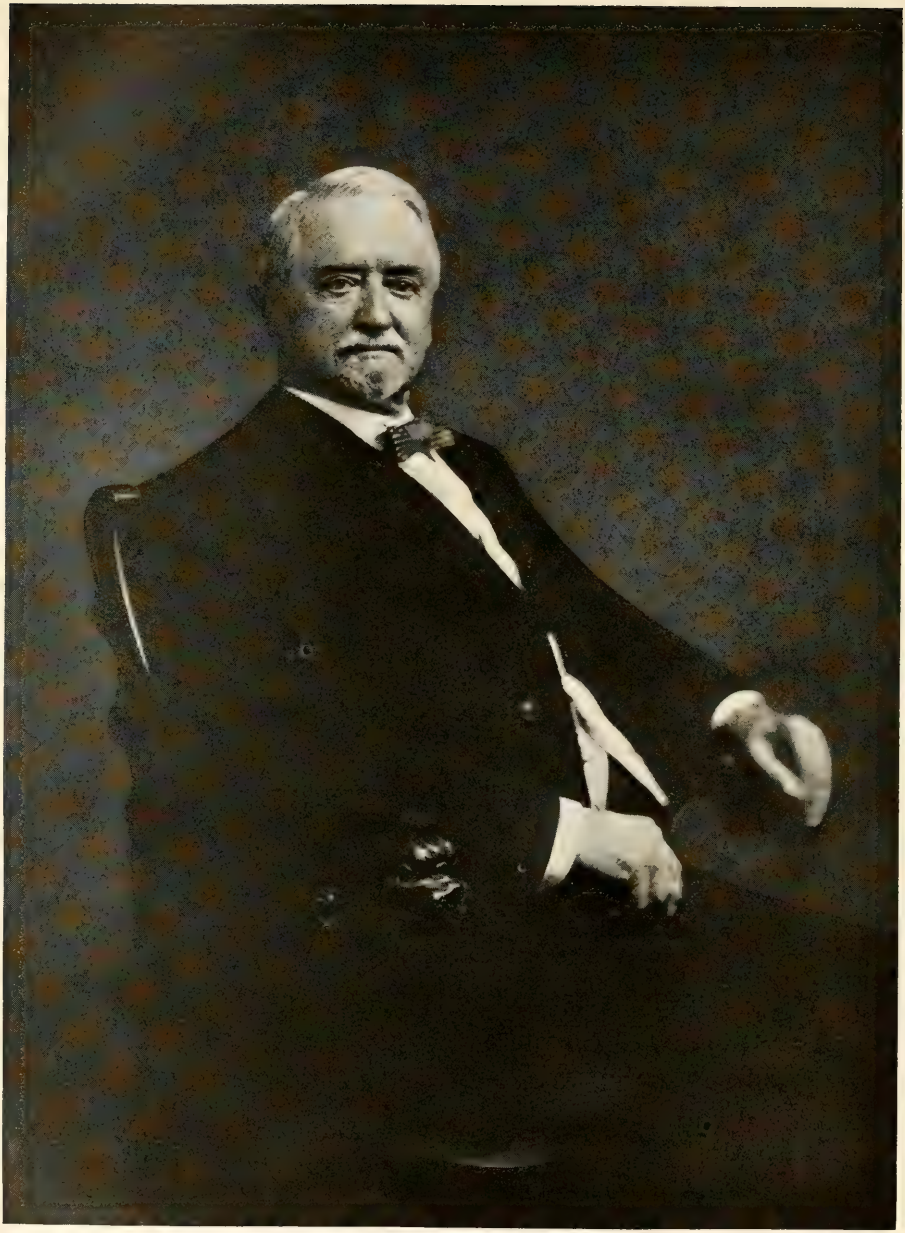
Mr. Yancey is a member of the Kappa Alpha college fraternity, Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a democrat. August 6, 1913, he married Estelle des Cognets, a native of Philadelphia and second of the three children of Louis and Estelle (McCarty) des Cognets. Her parents are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Yancey have one daughter, Sarah Kendall Yancey.

Boswell Gorham, M. D. A long and useful career, including service as a surgeon in the Confederate army, was that of the late Dr. Boswell Gorham, who practiced medicine for many years in the vicinity of Lexington and Georgetown.

He was the youngest of eleven children, eight sons and three daughters, of George and Nancy (Graves) Gorham. The old Gorham homestead is now included in the Coldstream Farm. Doctor Gorham was educated for medicine in Transylvania College, and early in the war between the states was appointed an assistant surgeon under Gen. John Morgan. He was wounded at Augusta, Kentucky, but subsequently resumed his duties. After the war he carried on an extensive practice near Newton and later at Georgetown, and finally devoted his years to farming a place of one hundred and thirty-nine acres known as Forest Home. He located there in 1876, and passed away at Forest Home, November 11, 1890.

Doctor Gorham married Sarah Betts, who is still living at Forest Home. She was born in Georgetown, February 28, 1842, daughter of Samson and Sarah (Dawson) Betts, both natives of Scott County. Her father was for many years a merchant at Georgetown. Mrs. Gorham was educated in the Georgetown Female College, and her first husband was Evan Cannon, who died two years after their marriage. Mrs. Gorham became the mother of eight children, two of whom died young, Basil Duke at the age of fifteen. Those still living are: Robert Lee, whose home is on Mount Horeb Pike in Fayette County, married Fanny Vance; Mattie Buford, wife of Christ Keiser; George Caswell, a farmer near the old home, married Sally Hawkins; Nellie Frances, Eugene Boswell and Henry Stillman, all of whom live with their mother at Forest Home.

W. R. Williams is a Lexington business man whose activities have reached a plane of success within the last half dozen years. He knows what it is to struggle in the sea of circumstance for a period of years, and there was a time when he had to content himself with the role of a small salaried worker until he could find the field where his talents and industry qualified him for success.



Mr. Williams was born at Lexington, May 28, 1881. For several generations this branch of the Williams family was continued through an only son. His great-grandfather, his grandfather and father were all only sons. His grandfather, William Williams, came to Kentucky from Amherst, Virginia, and his later years were spent on a farm in Fayette County, but he died in Lexington at the age of seventy-three. He married Mary Davenport, of Harrodsburg, Kentucky. E. N. Williams, father of W. R. Williams, was born in Mercer County, and was a well known breeder of saddle horses at Lexington, one of his horses being Trojan, Jr. He died in middle age at Terrell, Texas. E. N. Williams married Anna Hart, daughter of Nathaniel Hart, who lived on Tait's Creek Pike, seven miles south of Lexington. Nathaniel was a son of Jackson Hart, who lived on the same farm. Mrs. E. N. Williams inherited a portion of the old Hart homestead. She was the mother of six children, and saw all of them well settled in life. She is now living with her son, W. R., at Lexington. Her part of the old Hart homestead has been sold.

W. R. Williams after getting his education began his career as a farmer. In 1907 he returned to Lexington and took employment at a salary of nine dollars a week. For several years he was connected with the general roofing business. In 1912 he began selling automobiles, representing the International Truck, and in the fall of that year added the Ford agency as a side line. In 1912 was organized the Commercial Automobile Company, and it was Mr. Williams who gave that corporation its real foundation. The Company started with a capital of only fifteen hundred dollars. Mr. Williams was its president for seven years, and for part of that time carried the chief responsibilities of the sales force, and by 1913 saw the business well under way and a source of prosperity to himself and to others concerned. He continued as president of the company until it reached a capitalization of a hundred fifty thousand dollars. He sold out in October, 1919. The first year the business had sales aggregating twenty thousand dollars, and by 1919 the volume of sales totalled half a million, each year showing a substantial improvement and growth.

Mr. Williams started with the company when it had only one employe, and when he left there were forty-five on the pay roll. This business is still continued by the Forsyth Brothers and J. M. Vaughn.

On selling his interest in the Commercial Automobile Company Mr. Williams bought a portion of the company's real estate on East Third Street. He acquired about three quarters of an acre, at that time improved with a building used as an assembly plant. He has invested about eighteen thousand dollars in further buildings, and this is now a center of much of the automobile industry in Lexington. He erected a truck body factory, and several organizations are now accommodated on the property, which includes the repair garage, the C. F. Greis Automobile Trimming and Top Company, the Parker Service Company, the Plumber Supply Company, and the agencies for the Goodyear and Swinehart tires. Mr. Williams still continues his relations as a distributor of the Dearborn and the Federal trucks for Central Kentucky.

He is a member of the Board of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, and for a number of years had an active part in the local lodge of the United Commercial Travelers. At the age of twenty-four Mr. Williams married Miss Elizabeth Downing. Her father, Samuel

R. T. Cooper

Downing, now deceased, lived on the Richmond Pike. The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Willams are Wallace and Clay.

Richard Henderson Soaper. For nearly a century the name Soaper has been one of the most prominent in connection with the great tobacco industry of Western Kentucky. A large and important business of that kind was developed at Henderson by William Soaper, and his son Richard H. Soaper was long associated with his father as a partner and has continued the business with unvarying success and increase for upwards of sixty years.

The late William Soaper was born in Virginia April 28, 1795. He was left an orphan, grew up in Maryland and came to Kentucky when a young man, in 1820. His brother, Thomas Soaper, had settled at Danville, Kentucky. A saddler by trade, he engaged in that business at Henderson, but soon became interested in the buying and stemming of tobacco and from year to year found his affairs prosper. He developed a great plant at Henderson for the handling of tobacco, and also became an extensive planter and did a large tobacco export business. He died at Henderson in 1881, when not quite eighty-six years of age. He left one of the largest estates ever probated at Henderson, including industrial property, farms and plantations and other forms of property. On coming to Kentucky he met and married on November 2, 1830, Susie Fannie Henderson, who was born May 9, 1813, in North Carolina, and was a daughter of Richard and Annie (Alves) Henderson, who located at the Town of Henderson, Kentucky, in 1812. Her father was a nephew of Col. Richard Henderson, for whom the city and county were named.

Richard Henderson Soaper was liberally educated, attending private schools in his native city, Shelbyville College and Kenyon College in Ohio. By work in his father's warehouse he learned tobacco stemming, and in the course of years made himself master of all phases of the tobacco industry. He was associated with his father as a partner, and in 1867 went into business for himself. At his father's death in 1881 he was made executor of the estate, and the manner in which he handled the division of the large property was one evidence of his marked executive and administrative ability. After the death of his father the tobacco business was continued as R. H. Soaper & Company, and Mr. Soaper has been tobacco exporter from Kentucky for sixty years. At the same time he has carried on extensive planting interests, owning and operating hundreds of acres of rich river bottom land, producing tobacco and other staple crops. Practically since its establishment he has been president of the Henderson National Bank. He was one of the founders of the Henderson Cotton Mills, and for years its largest owner and vice president.

Mr. Soaper was one of a family of five sons and five daughters, all of whom reached mature years. His mother was a devout Episcopalian and a woman of the finest character and died in her eightieth year. Richard H. Soaper grew up in the atmosphere of whig politics, and while for many years he voted as a democrat he has been completely averse to political honors. He has never married and has given a whole-souled devotion to business and to the duties of good citizenship. He is a popular member of the Order of Elks. At the age of eighty-five he is hale and hearty, and is a splendid example of a long life well and usefully lived.

Henry Timberlake Duncan. Mr. Duncan is a member of the law firm of Allen & Duncan. He was born at Lexington, August 9, 1868, a son of Henry T. and Lily (Brand) Duncan. His father, born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, was trained by private tutors in his youth, pursued a course at Harvard College, and finally graduated from Transylvania College law department. For some years he was engaged successfully in the practice of his profession at Lexington, but finally turned his attention to journalism, and during his career in this field of effort was the editor of some of Lexington's leading newspapers, the last of these being the Lexington Press, which was merged in "The Press-Transcript" and was afterwards christened the Lexington Herald. He disposed of his interest in 1896 to Desha Breckenridge. The present editor and owner of the Herald. In 1893 Mr. Duncan had been elected mayor of Lexington, after having served for some years as a member of the board of aldermen, and was again elected to the mayoralty in 1900. He became widely known, not only locally, but throughout this and other states, because of his weekly letters, known as his "Sunday Sermons," which continued to be published until the time of his death, in 1913. These letters appeared principally in the Sunday Leader and Sunday Herald, and in them Mr. Duncan attacked fearlessly and with a trenchant pen the officeholders who operated their offices under the spoils system. A stanch supporter of public economy, he valiantly assaulted the illegal disbursement of public funds, and his services in this direction did much to purify politics in his community. A liberal democrat himself, he advocated the local fusion of the republican and democratic parties with the people in the election of 1909. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan were the parents of ten children: Maj. Gen. George B., one of the commanding officers of the American forces in France during the World war, now located at Spokane, Washington; Eliza, the wife of Col. John R. Allen, of the firm of Allen & Duncan, attorneys of Lexington; Maj. Edward M., formerly with the Engineering Corps during the World war, now stationed at San Diego, California, in the vocational service, Reserve Corps; Ellen, who died at the age of sixteen years; Nana B.; Henry Timberlake; Lily; Margaret, the wife of A. Daingerfield; Daniel, a second lieutenant in the United States Army, who lost his life by drowning at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, in August, 1898; and Fanny.

After graduating from Transylvania College, with the class of 1889 and the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Henry Timberlake Duncan became associated with his father in publishing the Lexington Press, a daily. When his father disposed of his property, the son entered the Harvard law department, being graduated therefrom in 1902, following which he became one of the founders of the firm of Allen & Duncan, his partner therein being Col. John R. Allen. This has become one of the leading legal concerns of Lexington and has been identified constantly with cases of the greatest importance. Mr. Duncan is possessed of the education, the energy, the self-reliance, the all-around ability and the adaptability to succeed in a city where these qualities are at a premium, and he therefore has made rapid and permanent progress. He is a member of the Kentucky Bar Association and the Harvard Law School Association, and in politics maintains an independent stand. His religious affiliation is with the Episcopal Church.

On March 12, 1914, Mr. Duncan was united in marriage with Miss Carolyn Goff, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Sudduth) Goff, natives of Kentucky and residents of Lexington. Mrs. Duncan is the second of three children, all of whom are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Duncan there has been born one son, John Allen, and one daughter, Nancy Griffith.

James H. Reed, a member of one of the old and well connected families of Lexington, has since June 1, 1900, served as steward of the Eastern State Hospital for the Insane. His work has been such as to win the commendation and the retention of his service through all political administrations, and he has given his best thought and energies to his duties for over twenty years.

For seven years of this time Mr. Reed was also purchasing agent for the hospital, until those duties were taken over by the Board of Control. His work is now largely that of farm superintendent, being in personal charge of the farm, garden, dairy and poultry establishments. The hospital has in connection a farm of two hundred acres, forty acres being devoted to truck gardens, largely to supply the needs of the institution. There is also a large herd of hogs, and other live stock for the meat supply. Mr. Reed has about five employes working under him.

He was born in the building at that time known as Hocker College, now Hamilton College, in Lexington, on February 18, 1871. He is a son of J. Henry and Amanda W. (Hocker) Reed. His grandfather was Doctor Reed, for many years an able physician in Clark County, Kentucky. J. Henry Reed was born in Clark County, and in the war between the states enlisted and served in General Morgan's command. He was captured at Georgetown, Kentucky, and while a prisoner at Rock Island, Illinois, he and several companions made their escape by crawling through a newly completed but unused sewer, which opened into the Mississippi River. He worked his way down the river and after several weeks arrived within the Confederate lines. He then re-enlisted and served until the end of hostilities. After the war he was a shoe merchant at Winchester, and then moved to Lexington, where he formed a partnership with Evan T. Warren, under the firm name of Warren & Reed. He was associated with the management of the old Union Mills Distillery near Nicholasville. The business at first prospered, but after about ten years the firm failed and the property was sold. J. Henry Reed after that was a traveling salesman for J. B. Thompson & Company, owner of the old Jordan distillery at Harrodsburg, and continued to be identified with that business until his death in 1918, at the age of seventy-five. His widow, Mrs. Amanda (Hocker) Reed, is living at Lexington. Her father was J. M. Hocker, a well known banker, who founded and built Hocker College and was its president and owner for several years. He owned the building and the grounds on Broadway between Fifth and Harrison streets, and the original building is now the principal building of Hamilton College. Later Mr. Hocker was a coal merchant and in the insurance business, and was active until his death, at the age of eighty odd years. J. Henry Reed and wife had the following children: James H.; Henry W., who was in the thoroughbred industry and died about ten years ago; and Catherine Jouett, wife of George B. Carey, a well known Lexington contractor.

James H. Reed was educated in Transylvania University and after graduating in pharmacy was for fifteen years connected with the drug business of Barnes & Hall at Lexington. He left that to enter upon his duties as steward of the Hospital for the Insane on June 1, 1900.

He is a Mason in fraternal affiliation. At the age of twenty-seven he married Miss Josephine Moberley, of Harrodsburg. They have two sons, John M., a tobacco buyer, and Edward Jouett, in the oil business, with headquarters at Dallas, Texas.

Leslie Nutter spent his active life identified with substantial farming interests in the Blue Grass section around Lexington, was successful in his business affairs, and maintained the traditions of the Kentucky families he represented and in which he married.

Mr. Nutter, whose home was eight miles north of Lexington on Newtown Pike, where Mrs. Nutter still lives, was born near Newtown in Scott County July 11, 1857, a son of James William and Mary (Houston) Nutter. His parents were natives of Kentucky, and his father died in advanced years, while the mother passed away at the age of forty-two. Leslie Miller was the only son. His three sisters were: Ella, who died young, the wife of James Gorham; Amelia, who died at Millersburg, wife of James Craig, by whom she had a daughter, Myrtle, now Mrs. Auxier, of Indiana; and Anna, who died in early married life, the wife of John Payne, who lived first in Scott County and later in Lexington, and two children survive, William and John F. Payne. The father of Leslie Nutter married for his second wife Julia Williams, who survives him and is the mother of two children, Canby and Lena.

Leslie Nutter married, February 28, 1883, Miss Sally Gorham, daughter of William and Margaret (Williams) Gorham. She was born on the farm where she now resides and was twenty-six at the time of her marriage. Her father was one of eight sons, and among his brothers were Andrew and Dr. Boswell Gorham. William Gorham died in 1890, and after his death Mrs. Nutter bought a portion of the interest of the other heirs in the old homestead. Her father had also acquired the old Breckenridge Farm, and Mr. and Mrs. Nutter owner and operated about two hundred acres. In the midst of his activities as a farmer Mr. Nutter passed away June 6, 1910.

Mrs. Nutter has two children, Clarence, who lives with his mother and operates the home farm; and Alma May, wife of Buford Thomas, who lives on a portion of the old Breckenridge Farm and has a son, Leo. Mrs. Nutter and family are members of the Cane Run Baptist Church.

H. Green Garrett. While his home for some years past has been at Winchester, H. Green Garrett, recently appointed a member and subsequently elected chairman of the State Highway Commission, is proud of the fact that he is derived from the typical Eastern Kentucky region, and in the mountains and hills and valleys of the eastern counties he still finds the greatest inspirations for his life. It is said that no one has given more generously of his private means and effort in behalf of educational development over that section of the state. He achieved success as a lumberman, is deeply interested in the conservation and proper development of the wonderful natural resources of eastern counties, and he is devoted to the entire program of physical improvement, good roads being one of his chief hobbies. Undoubtedly he is one of Kentucky's best known and most influential citizens today.

He was born in Powell County, January 26, 1865, a son of James H. and Sophia (Welch) Garrett. His grandfather, Wesley Garrett, was living on Muddy Creek Pike in Clark County when his son James H. was born, but subsequently took his family to Powell County. Wesley Garrett came to Eastern Kentucky from Culpeper County, Virginia, being a child when the famly made their migration to Kentucky about a century ago. James H. Garrett was a tanner and shoemaker, and lived in Powell County until his death in 1916, at the age of eighty-five. Sophia Welch, his wife, was a daughter of James Welch, who also came from Virginia. James Welch was one of the early graduates of Transylvania College, was a Universalist in religious belief and a prominent theologian, author of several religious books, and some of these products of his authorship are still preserved by the family.

H. Green Garrett derived all his early scholastic advantages in the log cabin schools of Powell County. As a boy he became deeply impressed with the handicaps imposed upon the youth of that section of the state because of inadequate school and other facilities, and while he succeeded in triumphing over such obstacles he has unselfishly labored all the active years of his life to remove these restrictions from the newer generations of children. Almost from boyhood he became skilled in woodcraft and lumbering and logging and for seventeen years has been president of the Broadhead-Garrett Company. For many years he was a worker in the lumber woods and mills, and gained a pronounced ability as an expert inspector of lumber. The Broadhead-Garrett Lumber Company is one of the largest manufacturing concerns in Kentucky, its operations covering eight or ten Kentucky counties on the Kentucky and Red rivers. The mills are at Clay City and Lombard, and have a combined capacity of 125,000 feet of lumber per day. The business represents an investment of $750,000, and furnishes employment to about 450 men. The product is sold at wholesale. The company also owns outright large tracts of stumpage and cutover lands, and under Mr. Garrett's direction has formulated a systematic method of disposing of the cutover lands to actual settlers and farmers, and afforded practical assistance to such farmers until the lands can become the basis of an independent and self-supporting agricultural population.

Mr. Garrett from boyhood has been interested in politics and is a stanch republican. In 1896-97 he represented Powell and Estill counties in the Lower House of the Legislature, and during that time was author of the law to make all state claims to bear five per cent interest and was also author of the bill to allow the state to borrow the constitutional limit of $500,000, a measure that greatly benefited state finances. Some years later he was elected one of the three State Railroad Commissioners, and while in that office had the general supervision of a district of forty-nine counties in the mountainous sections of Kentucky. His term expired in December, 1919. In the meantime during the World war he was chairman of the Liberty Bond drives in Clark County, also chairman of the County Draft Board, and chairman of the National Council of Defense. In the early summer of 1920 Governor Morrow announced the appointment of a new State Road Board or Highway Commission, and Mr. Garrett was one of the four members. Upon the organization of the Board he was chosen chairman.

In order to secure better school facilities for his family Mr. Garrett moved to Winchester in 1901, though his business activities still demand his active supervision in many quarters of the state. He served twelve years as a member of the Republican State Committee and has been a delegate to all the national conventions from 1900. His friends claim that Mr. Garrett has expended nearly half of all the fortune he has accumulated in behalf of education, assisting and endowing colleges and helping individual students who proved themselves worthy to acquire better educations. He has maintained as many as twenty scholarships, and has never lost a cent of money thus invested. He is still interested in four such scholarships. For many years he was an active member of the Missionary Baptist Church, but about four years ago left that organization on account of disagreement on some doctrinal points and has since been affiliated with the Primitive Baptist Church of Winchester, a church of 125 members. However, at a special request he continued to serve as trustee of two of the Missionary Baptist schools.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Garrett married Sarah Day, of Lee County, Kentucky. They have four daughters: Dailey, the oldest, is the wife of Fleming Quisenberry, a leading stock farmer of Hardin County, Kentucky; Winnie Davis is the wife of Charles E. Lyman, an automobile dealer at Minneapolis; Grace is now state librarian at Frankfort, Kentucky; and Martha was married to Don K. Grant, a powdered coal manufacturer at Minneapolis, Minnesota.

William H. Townsend, one of the younger leaders of Lexington in the promulgation and development of corporation and general law, is one of the members of the profession who has been engaged, during the comparatively short period of his practice, in large affairs and yet who persistently conveys the impression that his personality is larger than his performances. The present corporation counsel of Lexington was born at Glensboro, Anderson County, Kentucky, May 31, 1890, the only child of Oliver L. and Susan Mary (Brown) Townsend.

Dr. Oliver L. Townsend was born in McLean County, Kentucky, January 1, 1860, and was educated primarily at Cedar Hill Academy, near Louisville, following which he pursued a course at Kentucky Hospital College, Louisville, from which he was graduated with his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1881. In 1882 he established himself in practice at Glensboro, where he passed his life as a physician and surgeon, and died, greatly respected and esteemed, May 11, 1915. For several years he was president of the Anderson County Medical Society, a fact which would indicate the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow practitioners. Aside from his profession he had many interests. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers Bank of Glensboro and its president from its organization until his death, and was one of the leading tobacco growers of his locality, having approximately 600 acres of land in his farm located in the Salt River bottoms. He was a valued member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics was a democrat. In 1883 Doctor Townsend married Susan Mary Brown, who was born in Anderson County, Kentucky, December 4, 1856, and died July 15, 1915.

William H. Townsend first attended the public schools of Anderson County, Kentucky, following which he entered the University of Kentucky and was graduated with the law class of 1912. On June 15th of that year he became associated in practice with Richard C. Stoll. In the following year, Mr. Townsend became associate professor in partnership and agency law as a member of the faculty of the University of Kentucky, but continued the general practice of his profession. He remained on the faculty of the Law School during 1913, 1914 and a portion of 1915, at which time he resigned and thereafter devoted himself exclusively to the practice of law. In 1920 he was appointed city corporation counsel of Lexington, a position which he holds at this time. Mr. Townsend is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association and of the Board of Commerce. In politics he is a stanch democrat.

On June 16, 1915, Mr. Townsend was united in marriage with Miss Genevieve Johnson, of Linneus, Missouri, and to this union there has been born one daughter, Mary Genevieve. Mr. Townsend maintains a pleasant home at Lexington, while his offices are located at 605 First and City National Bank Building.

Col. William Emmett Simms, whose home for half a century was in Paris, achieved all the truest distinctions of a brave and gallant soldier, an able lawyer and a leader in the affairs of state and community.

He was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, January 2, 1822, and died June 23, 1898, being a son of William and Julia (Shropshire) Simms. He lost his mother when he was a small boy and his only brother, Edward, died at the age of twenty-one. The father married again, and three of the daughters of the second marriage are still living.

Col. W. E. Simms was a graduate of Transylvania College at Lexington, and studied law at Paris and was admitted to the bar in 1846. He had hardly begun practice when America began the war with Mexico, and he raised a company and went to the front as captain in the Third Kentucky Infantry. He served under General Scott until after the triumphant campaign at Mexico City, and soon after his return to Kentucky he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1849. After the close of the Mexican war he located at Paris, and the home in which his daughter, Miss Lucy Simms, is still living was his place of residence for fifty years.

Edwin May Drummond. For over half a century the name Drummond has been a conspicuous one in the industrial history of Louisville. Three generations of the family have been identified with the business now incorporated as the Drummond Manufacturing Company, whose output has been distributed in all parts of the world.

One of the founders of the industry was the late William Whyte Drummond. The facts of his life, stated without embellishment, speak eloquently of his rise from poverty of circumstances to a place of note in the affairs of men. He was born in the Town of Paisley (noted for its woolen manufacture), Scotland, August 8, 1840, fifth child of James Thompson and Janet (Whyte) Drummond. For one year he attended school at Glasgow. At the age of eight he was working as office boy in a lawyer's office at two shillings sixpence per week. A year later he accompanied the family to Troy, New York, arriving November 25, 1849. His parents having come without fortune to America, he secured work as soon as possible and for a year was employed in a carpet factory. In 1850 he returned with his parents to Scotland. January 7, 1851, his father having decided again to try America, they set out on a voyage which was one of distressing length and circumstances, lasting more than three months. They reached New York in a pitiable condition, April 28, 1851. Again the boy was earning a living at Troy, and eventually learned the steamfitter's trade. On July 4, 1858, with his parents, four brothers and two sisters, he arrived at Louisville, Kentucky. Two or three years later his father joined the Union army, and was killed while serving with the Federal forces at Clarksville, Tennessee, in 1861. His mother died at Louisville in 1870.

William W. Drummond was only eighteen when he reached Louisville. His first employment was with Ainslie, Cochran & Company, engine builders, founders and machinists, whose plant was at Tenth and Main. He went to work for them in August, 1858. Besides the desire to earn a living he was also impelled by an ambition to be a machinist, and with that object in view he accepted a salary of but 50 cents a day. Six years later he had been promoted to the position of superintendent, at $3,000 per annum. In August, 1866, he left this concern and bought a one-third interest in Pearson & Aikin, founders and machinists. The name of the firm was changed to Aikin & Drummond. Mr. Drummond and Mr. Aikin developed and patented and were the first successful manufacturers of sand molding machinery. They were awarded medals as a result of an exhibition of this machinery at the World's Fair in Paris, France, in 1878. In 1882 Mr. Drummond purchased all other interests in Aikin & Drummond, organized the Drummond Manufacturing Company and incorporated the business the same year. He was the first president of the company, William T. Drummond, vice president, and his brother, James T. Drummond, general manager. The business continued under the control of the Drummonds above named until 1888, when Edwin May Drummond was made general manager instead of James T. Drummond. He filled that office until March, 1918, when he was elected president. His sons constitute the third generation of the family in this industry. His son, James Ainslie, became vice president and manager in March, 1918, and at the same date his son, Robert Pearce, became secretary of the company.

This has been one of the important manufacturing concerns of Louisville for a long period. In recent years the principal product has been steel axles for animal drawn vehicles. The capacity now is 300 sets of wagon axles per day. The business was conducted as an essential industry during the period of the World war, and the company has the "award for distinguished service" issued by the War Department in appreciation of the corporation's contributory aid to the success of the Government during that period.

William Whyte Drummond died November 21, 1910. He married Alice Thompson, who was born at Louisville January 17, 1846, and died March 24, 1920. Her parents were Edwin V. and Jane (Thirlwell) Thompson. Edwin V. Thompson was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Louisville. The late W. W. Drummond was also one of the organizers of the Union National Bank at Louisville. The two children of W. W. Drummond and wife are Edwin May and Alice Mabel, the latter the widow of Charles W. Glover.

Edwin May Drummond was born at Louisville May 1, 1867, and his early training and education well fitted him for the highly technical and administrative responsibilities he has carried for many years. He was educated in the Rugby Private School at Louisville, and in 1888 graduated from the Stevens Institute of Technology at Hoboken, New Jersey. In the meantime he had worked in his father's plant during vacations and since graduating has had a large and important share of the management of the business.

He is a director of the Louisville Trust Company and has some important outside interests. For a number of years he has been interested in the mining of lead and fluorspar in Kentucky and Missouri. He is president of the D. C. and E. Mining Company, which has a capacity of 3,000 tons of ore daily. He is also president of the Western Casket Hardware Company of Elgin, Illinois, and is trustee for the stockholders of the King Mining Company of Murray, Idaho. He is past president of the Engineers Club of Louisville, and while in college served as first chairman of the Stevens Engineering Society. He has been a life long member of the Unitarian Church. His home is at Anchorage, and he was elected mayor of that Louisville suburb in 1920. In 1887 he was president of the Sigma Chapter of the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity at Stevens Institute.

On May 2, 1889, Edwin M. Drummond married Carrie Dent Moon, who was born at Memphis, Tennessee, April 15, 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Drummond have four children: William Russell, who married Lalla Evans and has a son, William Edwin; James Ainslie, who married Dorothy Weikel, of Elgin, Illinois, and has a son, James W.; Robert Pearce, who married Elizabeth Hancock, and they have a daughter, Elizabeth; and Alice May, wife of Thomas D. Lewis, of Wheaton, Illinois.

George R. Burberry. Twenty-nine years of continuous service in the capacity of railroad agent at Centreville, Kentucky, has made George R. Burberry one of the best known men of his locality, and the quality of this service has given him a reputation for industry, honorable dealing and capability that has established him in a substantial position in the confidence of the general and traveling public as one of his community's valuable and constructive citizens. Mr. Burberry was born at Chillicothe, Missouri, February 8, 1861, a son of David Burberry.

David Burberry was born in England, and was ten years of age when brought by his parents to the United States, the family locating in Ohio. There the lad grew to young manhood, learning the trade of carpenter and receiving a common school education, and as a journeyman went to Kentucky, where he became, subsequently, a merchant at Winchester. After about three years at Winchester he went to Missouri in 1858 and engaged in contracting, and his death occurred at Chillicothe.

George R. Burberry attended the public schools at Chillicothe, Missouri, and when twelve years of age entered a railroad office at Moberly, that state, where he learned telegraphy in the little village which, at the time of his arrival, had contained only one house. He continued as a telegrapher at various points in Missouri until 1883, when he went to New Mexico and spent four years in railroad work there. In 1882 he had visited Georgetown, Kentucky, where he met Miss Lillie McDaniel, of Harrison County, a daughter of Elisha and Keziah McDaniel, of near Leesburg, Harrison County. In 1887 Mr. Burberry came to Harrison County, where, at Leesburg, on November 1, he and Miss McDaniel were united in marriage, following which they returned to Missouri, Mr. Burberry becoming the first agent at Mendon, on the Santa Fe Railroad. Less than one year later Mr. and Mrs. Burberry came back to Harrison County and settled on Mrs. Burberry's father's farm, where they remained until July 16, 1892. At that time a station agent was needed at Centreville, and Mr. Burberry was asked to fill the position temporarily. He took the position, expecting to remain only thirty days, but at the end of that time was prevailed upon to remain, and for twenty-eight years has faithfully discharged the duties of this position. He is also a dealer in grain and coal and has large and important farming interests, being known as a thoroughly capable man of business. He is the owner of a handsome home, and was one of the organizers and is a director of the Farmers and Traders Bank of Paris.

Mr. Burberry has installed a wireless telephone and telegraph in his home which is the first to be installed in a home in Bourbon County and probably the first in any home in Kentucky. For several months the family have been enjoying concerts from Chicago, Cincinnati, Richmond, Indiana, Dayton, Ohio, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Newark, New Jersey, New York City, Detroit and other places. They have also heard telegraphic communications with North Dakota and numerous other points within a radius of 2,000 miles. A loud sounding device makes it possible to hear all over the house and by setting the horn in the window the neighbors of the Burberrys are also able to enjoy the concerts in their homes.

Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Burberry: Clifton Marverne, the wife of G. C. Wilson, a druggist of Lexington; Kittie Marene, assistant cashier of the Bank of Millersburg, who resides with her parents; George McDaniel, who is engaged in farming at Centreville; Helen Muriel, who died at the age of fourteen years; Clyde David, Lillie May, Mary O., and Eugenia, who reside with their parents. Mrs. Burberry and her children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Burberry is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has numerous friends, as he has in railroad, business and agriucultural circles.

George W. Dawson is a popular citizen who is giving effective administration of the office of cashier of the Farmers Bank at Clintonville, Bourbon County, an institution that was organized in 1903, in which year it was incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000. The bank has proved a valuable factor in connection with the general commercial and industrial activities of the community in which it is established, and the popular appreciation of its facilities is indicated in the fact that its deposits are now in excess of $100,000, the while its surplus fund aggregates $5,000. The organization of this bank was effected largely through the initiative and effective promotion of William T. S. Blackburn, of Grant County, who is still one of its substantial stockholders. William F. Heathman was elected the first president of the institution, Henry Thompson became the first vice president, offices of which they still remain the incumbents, and Isaac E. Yelton, of Butler, served as cashier of the bank until 1905, when he was succeeded by George W. Dawson, who has since continued in this position and whose policies have been potent in the development of the prosperous and representative business now controlled by the institution.

Mr. Dawson was born on a farm near Clintonville, and the date of his nativity was April 3, 1857. He is a son of Larkin B. and Hannah (Hildreth) Dawson, and is a grandson of Gabriel Dawson, who was a young man when he came as a pioneer to this section of Kentucky, and who was in middle life at the time of his death. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, fought under General Jackson in the battle of New Orleans, Louisiana, and from that city he made his way back to Kentucky on foot. Larkin B. Dawson was born on the pioneer farm of his father near Clintonville in the year 1818, and he was one of the patriarchal citizens of Bourbon County at the time of his death, in 1908, when ninety years of age. His mother, whose maiden name was Sally Crose, likewise attained to venerable age. Larkin B. Dawson passed his entire life in Bourbon County, where he rented land and was actively engaged in farm industry, besides which he served thirty years as official marshal of the old Bourbon County Fair. "Uncle Lark," as he was familiarly known, was a prominent and popular figure at the Bourbon County fairs for many years, and through this association he became widely known to stock growers and dealers throughout the state. He continued to give active attention to business affairs until of advanced age, and retained to the last his vital interest in public affairs and community life. He was actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity for more than sixty years. His wife, who died in 1902, at the age of seventy-five years, likewise was born and reared in Bourbon County and was a daughter of Hugh and Margaret (Dempster) Hildreth.

George W. Dawson gained his youthful education in the schools of his native county, and for a number of years he here continued his active alliance with farm industry. For three years he conducted a general store in the little rural village of Austerlitz, and he thus continued until 1905, when he assumed his present position, in which he has proved a careful and conservative bank executive. He is still identified with farm enterprise as the owner of a part of the old Crose homestead, which was originally owned by his maternal grandfather and which later passed into the possession of his father. This valuable farm property is situated one mile distant from Clintonville, and Mr. Dawson gives to the same a general supervision. The farm comprises 307 acres, and is situated in part in each of three counties—Bourbon, Clark and Fayette. The place is in charge of tenant farmers, and is given over largely to the feeding of heavy cattle for the export trade. Mr. Dawson is loyal and progressive as a citizen and is unfaltering in his allegiance to the democratic party.

When he was thirty-two years of age Mr. Dawson wedded Miss Eva Estes, who was born in Clark County, a daughter of John Estes. Mr. and Mrs. Dawson have no children.

William F. Heathman, one of the venerable and highly esteemed citizens of Bourbon County, has been long and prominently identified with industrial and business affairs in this section of his native state and is now president of the Farmers Bank of Clintonville, a village situated ten miles north of Paris and near the line between Bourbon and Clark counties.

Mr. Heathman was born on the ancestral farmstead in Clark County, not far distant from his present place of residence, and the date of his nativity was February 3, 1839. He is a son of Martin and Nancy (Stipp) Heathman, both likewise natives of Clark County, where the respective families were founded in the pioneer days. Mrs. Heathman was a daughter of Frederick Stipp, who came from Virginia and who passed the remainder of his life on his pioneer farm in Clark County, the remains of both him and his wife resting in the little family burial ground on the old home farm. William F. Heathman was a child at the time of his parents' removal to Monroe County, Missouri, where his father became a prosperous farmer, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period, and where he and his wife continued to reside until their deaths, when well advanced in years. The old home farm in Missouri is still in the possession of the family, is situated near Granville and not far distant from the Village of Florida, the birthplace of the distinguished American author, Mark Twain.

William F. Heathman was reared to manhood in Monroe County, Missouri, in which state he was afforded good educational advantages, including those of the old-time academy at Paris, that state. Prior to the outbreak of the Civil war he had taught in the schools of Missouri, and after the close of the war he was a teacher in the schools of Kentucky for three terms. When fratricidal conflict came upon a divided nation Mr. Heathman manifested his youthful loyalty to the cause of the Confederacy by enlisting in the command of General Price, in whose command he continued to serve until the close of the war, his ability and gallantry having won him promotion to the office of lieutenant.

After the close of the war Mr. Heathman joined kinsfolk in his native State of Kentucky, and here he has maintained his home during the long intervening years, which have recorded worthy and successful achievement on his part. Soon after his marriage he engaged in the general merchandise business at Clintonville, and this enterprise he continued, with marked success, for fully a quarter of a century, within which he built up a large and substantial business. In addition to his association with merchandising he purchased his present fine farm, which comprises 150 acres, and here he became the leading cattle-feeder of this vicinity, besides giving attention to the raising of Hampshire swine. The farm still maintains its prestige in these departments of progressive industry.

In 1903 Mr. Heathman effected the organization of the Farmers Bank of Clintonville, and he has served as its president from the time of its incorporation, with a capital stock of $15,000. Under his careful and conservative executive supervision this institution has been distinctively successful and has proved of great value in connection with business and industrial activities in the progressive community which it serves. Mr. Heathman is a staunch democrat, but has had no desire for political preferment, and his religious faith is that of the Christian Church, in which he has served forty years as an elder. Through his affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans he vitalizes the more gracious associations of his career as a soldier in the Civil war.

Mr. Heathman was twenty-five years of age at the time of his marriage to Miss Bettie Stipp, a daughter of Isaac Stipp, of Clintonville, who was a brother of Mr. Heathman's mother. The wedded companionship of Mr. and Mrs. Heathman continued twelve years, and the gracious ties were then severed by the death of Mrs. Heathman, who is survived by one child, Anna Dell, whose husband, George V. Shipp, now has active management of the farm of her father, who there resides with them. They have no children. For his second wife Mr. Heathman wedded Miss Sarah Smith, daughter of the late Daniel Smith, of Clark County, and she died thirty years later, leaving no children.

William W. Haley is president of the First National Bank of Paris, Bourbon County, and resides on his fine farm estate nine miles north of that city and about seven miles distant from the old homestead farm on which he was born and reared. Interest attaches to his career not only by reason of his being one of the substantial and influential citizens of his native state, but also because of his inviolable place in popular confidence and regard, the estimate placed upon him in the community in which he is best known giving evidence alike of his sterling character and his genial and kindly nature.

Mr. Haley was born on his father's farm in Fayette County, on the Lexington and Winchester Turnpike, nine miles distant from Lexington and about fourteen miles from Paris. The date of his nativity was February 21, 1851, and he is a son of William D. and Susan D. (Mitchell) Haley. William D. Haley was likewise born in Fayette County, where he passed his entire life and where he owned an excellent farm of 600 acres, the most of this property being still in possession of the family—owned by five sons of his son Ambrose, who had remained on the old home place until his death. William D. Haley ordered his life upon a high plane of integrity and honor, achieved success through his activities in connection with farm industry, commanded the respect and esteem of his fellow men and was past eighty years of age at the time of his death. His parents, William and Polly (Darnaby) Haley, were numbered among the pioneers of Fayette County. Of the other sons of William D. Haley, Claiborn M. and Thomas F. are residents of Lexington, where they are living virtually retired.

William W. Haley remained at the parental home until his marriage, which occurred when he was thirty years of age, and in the meanwhile he had received good educational advantages. He married Miss Amelia Cunningham, who was born and reared on the old homestead which is their present place of residence, and who is a daughter of Thomas L. and Belle (Henderson) Cunningham, who here remained until their deaths, the mother having attained to venerable age and having been cared for with deep filial solicitude by Mr. and Mrs. Haley after their marriage. The farm became the pioneer home of the father of Thomas L. Cunningham, the house erected by the latter in 1845 having later been destroyed by fire, and the present spacious and attractive house on the place having been erected by the present owner in 1886. Of the original Cunningham farm of 700 acres Mr. Haley purchased 538 acres, nearly all in one body. For this valuable land he paid an average of $80 an acre. In his farm enterprise he has given his attention mainly to the live-stock business, and for the past forty years he has successfully fed cattle for the export trade. He buys cattle each autumn and places them on the market in the following July and August, after they have been brought up to weights averaging from 1,400 to 1,600 pounds. Mr. Haley has shown marked enterprise and discrimination in this important domain of industry, and his operations have been of extensive order.

In 1902 Mr. Haley became one of the organizers and incorporators of the First National Bank of Paris, and of its original directorate only one other is still living, M. R. Jacoby, of Hutchinson. Mr. Haley is one of the largest stockholders in this representative financial institution, regularly attends the meetings of its directorate, and since his election to its presidency in 1912 he passes two days each week at the bank in the discharge of his executive duties. He is also vice president of the Farmers Bank at Clintonville, which village lies adjacent to his farm, and is a stockholder in the Bourbon Tobacco Warehouse. On his farm he raises a considerable quantity of tobacco each year, and his valuable landed estate comprises 538 acres.

Mr. Haley has been essentially a business man and has had no ambition for political activity or official preferment, though he is a loyal supporter of the cause of the Democratic party and is liberal and progressive in his civic attitude. He is the owner of an attractive residence property in the City of Paris, and it is his intention to retire from the farm and occupy this house within the near future. During his entire mature life Mr. Haley has held membership in the Missionary Baptist Church at David's Fork, Fayette County, and his wife is a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church.

Of the six children, all sons, of Mr. and Mrs. Haley only two are living, four of the number having attained to maturity. William K., who resides upon his farm, near that of his parents, married Miss Ada Estes. They have no children. Brent died at the age of thirty years and is survived by his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Weathers, and by their only child, William W. Mrs. Brent Haley now resides in the home of her father in Bourbon County. Thomas L. died at the age of eighteen years, and was at the time a student in the Kentucky State University at Lexington. James died in childhood. Isaac, who is successfully engaged in farm industry near the old home of his parents, married Miss Blanche Thompson, and they have three children, Albert Thompson, Kelly and Clara Belle.

Silas E. Bedford. The Bedfords comprise one of the old and prominent families of Bourbon County, where they established their home at an early date in the history of this locality. They have always kept in close touch with the land, and at one time they owned some of the finest country homes in the county. The family has also furnished some prominent representatives to business and finance, and it is as a banker that Silas E. Bedford is best known.

Mr. Bedford is now president of the Peoples Deposit Bank & Trust Company of Paris. This is one of the oldest banking institutions, with a continuous and consecutive history in the state. The old Deposit Bank was organized in 1851, and continued its existence and service even through the critical days of the Civil war. There was practically no change in the organization of the Deposit Bank until 1914, when it merged with the Peoples Bank under the new name. The Peoples Bank was organized in 1912. The old Deposit Bank started with an original capital of $100,000 in 1851, and that capitalization was never changed. At the time of the consolidation its deposits aggregated $500,000. The capital of the Peoples Bank was $50,000 and its deposits $187,000 at the merger. Since the merger the capitalization has been $150,000 and a recent statement shows aggregate deposits of $1,890,000.

The old bank was started by Henry Rucker and Volney Higgins, well known in the financial affairs of Bourbon County seventy years ago. Later J. W. Ferguson became president, and he was succeeded by Berry Bedford, then came J. M. Hall, and in 1914 S. E. Bedford assumed the executive direction of the bank. Mr. Bedford helped organize the Peoples Bank, and was its cashier, with W. P. Ardery, its president. The Peoples Deposit Bank & Trust Company is housed in a building constructed for the Deposit Bank, and is one of the older bank homes in Bourbon County. Two years ago the bank broadened its facilities by adding the trust feature, and now furnishes all the service rendered by trust companies.

Silas E. Bedford was born in Bourbon County, January 2, 1863, son of Benjamin F. and Betty (Evans) Bedford. The old Bedford home was on Clintonville Pike. The grandfather, Benjamin C. Bedford, was also born in Bourbon County. Benjamin F. Bedford was widely known as a successful farmer and a breeder and exhibitor of Shorthorn cattle. The Bedfords did a great deal for the cause of improved livestock in this section of Kentucky, and their name is especially identified with the history of the Shorthorn strain in the state.

Silas E. Bedford has lived in Paris since he was twenty-two years of age. In 1887 he became a clerk in the Bourbon Bank, later was promoted to cashier, and left that institution in 1912 to help organize the Peoples Bank. He served for twelve years as county treasurer and is an influential democrat, a deacon in the Baptist Church and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At the age of thirty-four Mr. Bedford married Margaret Gaitskill, daughter of Henry and Margaret Gaitskill, of the Stony Point community, where Mrs. Bedford was born. They have two children: Sarah Louise, who graduated at the age of twenty from Georgetown College; and Silas E., Jr., who is still a student in Georgetown College.

George William Davis was accounted the oldest resident of Bourbon County when he died at his home in Paris December 18, 1920. He was then nearly ninety-four, and he had continued active in his business affairs until nearly ninety, when the infirmities of age compelled him to retire.

He was born at Paris, Kentucky, February 6, 1827, a son of William and Margaret (McClintock) Davis, the former of whom died of cholera in 1832, aged thirty-six years, while the latter survived until the age of eighty-nine. The family came originally from Virginia, and one branch settled at Ruddles Mills, when there was a fort at that point. The other children in the family of William and Margaret Davis were: Mary, who married James Ingles, of Paris, after whose death she removed with her daughter to Danville, Kentucky, where she died in 1916; James T., for sixty years an active member of the Paris grocery firm of Davis & McClintock, his first partner being his uncle, James McClintock, who died at the age of eighty-eight years, after which the latter's son was admitted, the business being continued until the death of Mr. Davis in 1910, at the age of seventy-eight years; and Margaret, who became Mrs. Mitchell, and whose son, Wallace Mitchell, is now a banker at Paris.

George William Davis, because of the early death of his father, secured a somewhat limited public school education and was forced to make an early start in fighting his battles with life. In 1844, when seventeen years of age, he entered upon an apprenticeship at the undertakers' vocation with Jesse P. Kerns, and for four years received only his board and clothes in return for his work. Until 1848 he was thus employed, and in that year with a cousin, William Davis, he succeeded to the Kerns business, and his cousin died one year later. Joseph Neely became a partner in 1869, and the partnership continued two years, when Mr. Neely sold out to Mr. Davis. With the exception of the two years that Mr. Neely was associated in the business Mr. Davis conducted it alone, retiring in 1916, after sixty-eight years of active participation in its growth and development, and with a record for honorable and straightforward dealings that would be hard to equal. Since his retirement his three sons, George R., Owen L. and Rudolph, have carried on the business, but it is still conducted under the old firm style of George William Davis, under which name it became one of the most reliable and highly honored establishments of the city.

Originally this business handled furniture, carpets and wall paper in addition to an undertaking service, but for more than half a century it has been exclusively an undertaking and funeral directing establishment. Mr. Davis owned the first hearse at Paris, which was supplied with curtains instead of glass. During the early days he made all the coffins used in the community and finished them by hand, and one of his apprentices was the late John T. Hinton, who recently died. Next to his family the Southern Presbyterian Church had its place in Mr. Davis' esteem, he having been a member of the church from his sixteenth year and serving it faithfully as deacon, elder and superintendent of the Sunday School. Born a democrat, he was a Southern sympathizer and held steadfastly to his belief during the period of the war between the states, but the honorable and dignified manner in which he conducted himself and the esteem in which he was held generally made it possible for him to continue his business and to handle his furniture trade satisfactorily. He never cared for public office, but was content with being known as a good citizen. He and his cousin, James T. Davis, were charter members of the Odd Fellows Lodge and assisted in the building of the Odd Fellows structure at Paris. At the time of his death he was the oldest member of Bourbon Lodge of Odd Fellows. Mr. Davis was a splendid example of right living, retained most of his faculties to the last, and had many interesting memories of old time citizens and events of early Paris. Those associated with him during these years vouch unhesitatingly to his absolute integrity, fairness and high conception of business principles, and all felt that he carried his high ideals of Christian manhood into his everyday life.

Mr. Davis married in 1851 Miss Helen Miller, of Cynthiana, Kentucky, daughter of Jacob and Julia Miller. Her father was a hardware merchant of Cynthiana, and she was a niece of a wealthy hardware merchant of Lexington. Mrs. Davis died in 1888, having been the mother of the following children: Thomas Davis, who was associated in business with his father until his death in 1881, at the age of thirty-eight years; James K., a merchant tailor in Paris, who died aged thirty-eight years, leaving one daughter, Louise and one son, Ireland; Nellie, who died aged fifty-two years, as the wife of James Weeks, leaving one son, Davis, now a resident of Arizona; and George R., Rudolph and Owen L., who continued the business founded by their father.

Owen L. Davis was associated for twenty-five years with the old Northern State Bank with Charlton Alexander, and later joined the George Alexander Banking Company, which dissolved because of financial difficulties, and Mr. Davis is now devoting his attention to the undertaking business and to the management of his extensive farm interests. He married Miss Patty Alexander, daughter of Charlton Alexander.

Rudolph Davis in addition to his connection with the undertaking business conducts a general insurance agency at Paris, and has been county coroner of Bourbon County for ten years. He married Miss Ella Howse, of Nicholas County, Kentucky, and they have no children.

George R. Davis, who is a practical undertaker, gives his chief attention to the business, and is accounted one of the substantial men and public spirited citizens of Paris. He married Nannie Hook, daughter of the late A. J. Hook, a well known trainer, breeder and driver of thoroughbred horses. After twelve years of happy married life Mrs. Davis died, leaving one daughter, Helen. She married W. R. Swearingen, of Chicago, who died in Paris, Kentucky, and Mrs. Swearingen, with her two children, Eleanor and George, now makes her home with her father at Paris.

Donald McDonald, Jr., is secretary of B. F. Avery & Sons, one of the largest industrial institutions of Louisville, and ranking among the first in importance of American manufacture of tillage implements and harvesting machinery. Mr. McDonald became identified with this company prior to the World war, during which he was an officer of the field artillery.

He represents a family of great military and civic distinction, and the story of his father, Donald McDonald, Sr., and other members of the family is given with some detail on other pages. Donald McDonald, Jr., was born at Louisville, January 12, 1891.

He had a liberal education, attending the Male High School at Louisville and Cornell University, and following his college career was employed for a time as a reporter with the Louisville Herald, for about a year was secretary of the Hydraulic Brick Company, and for another year was engaged in the building material business. Following that he was sales manager for the R. B. Tyler Company, and in 1914 joined B. F. Avery & Sons as assistant superintendent.

On August 24, 1917, Mr. McDonald volunteered for the Second Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis. He was commissioned a captain November 27, 1917, and was assigned to duty with the Three Hundred and Twenty-seventh Field Artillery Regiment. April 5, 1918, he was appointed regimental adjutant of this regiment, and accompanied the command to Camp Mills, New York, preparatory to sailing. Before he embarked for overseas Captain McDonald was transferred by order of the Secretary of War to the post of executive officer of the Motor School of Field Artillery, Replacement Depot, at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky. To those duties he gave his earnest attention until the close of the war.

Mr. McDonald was elected secretary of B. F. Avery & Sons in July, 1919. January 7, 1914, Mr. McDonald married Juliette B. Avery, only child of George C. and Katherine (Shindler) Avery. Her father was a native Kentuckian, who died in 1911, and for a number of years was president of B. F. Avery & Sons. This as an industry for the manufacture of agricultural implements was founded in 1825, nearly a century ago. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have one daughter, Juliette Avery McDonald.

Fred Craycraft. The farming and stock raising industries of Clark County have an able, worthy and energetic representative in Fred Craycraft, whose well-cultivated property is situated six miles northeast of Winchester on the Mount Sterling pike. He has also during his career been interested in educational matters, and at the present time is a member of the Clark County Board of Education, where he is rendering valuable service. Mr. Craycraft was born at Wade's Mill, Clark County, October 19, 1886, a son of John D. and Nannie (Cash) Craycraft.

The Craycraft family originated in Virginia, and was established in Clark County by the grandfather of Fred Craycraft, Enoch Craycraft, who for the greater part of his life was engaged in farming in Mason County, but who in the evening of his career came to Clark County, where he died at the home of his son, John D., at the age of seventy-six years. His wife was Julia Ball, who died when seventy-eight years of age. The maternal grandfather of Fred Craycraft was Dr. Mason Cash, who passed the greater part of his life as a practicing physician and surgeon in Menifee and Breathitt counties, but whose death occurred at Winchester when he was seventy-six years of age.

John D. Craycraft was born in Mason County, and as a young married man came to Clark County, where he engaged in farming. His first wife, Nannie (Cash) Craycraft, died in 1888, leaving two sons: William Edward and Fred. Subsequently he married Martha Mullikin, who survives as a resident of Winchester. A capable farmer, John D. Craycraft also had something of a local reputation as a hunter of small game, and at one time went on a hunting trip to Oklahoma. His elder son, William Edward, had gone to Montana in 1911, and there had spent three years on the detective force of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. In the fall of 1914 John D. Craycraft went to visit his son, and they started on a hunting expedition in the mountains. Mr. Craycraft came upon a band of elk, and, feeling sure that he had wounded one sufficiently to cripple it, decided to follow it, the son also going out but returning to camp at night. The father, however failed to return, and his trail was soon lost, as a heavy snow fell. The other son, Fred, was wired for and went to Montana to join in the search, which continued until the severe winter weather caused its abandonment. Nothing has been heard of the elder Craycraft since his disappearance on his fifty-fourth birthday, October 4, 1914. Two months after the disappearance of his father William Edward Craycraft was returning from a business trip, and while stooping his revolver fell from its holster and was discharged, killing him instantly. He left a widow, formerly Callie Cook, who died two years later, they having had no children.

Fred Craycraft was reared on the home place by his father and stepmother and received good educational advantages, attending the local schools and the Kentucky Wesleyan College of Winchester for one year. He was married at the age of twenty-one years to Miss Edith Booth, daughter of John and Winnie (Terry) Booth, of Clark County, the latter of whom died when Edith was a child, she being reared by a stepmother. Mr. Booth, whose old home was near Wade's Mill, is now a retired agriculturist of Winchester. Fred Craycraft, following his marriage, engaged in farming, and has been an agriculturist all of his life. He came to his present property, the Judy farm, six miles from Winchester on the Mount Sterling Pike, and here has 121 acres. In another farm he has 120 acres, near his home place, and he likewise operates two other properties, of 240 acres and ninety-two acres, respectively, making 573 acres in all that are operated under his management. Of this acreage forty acres are in tobacco and from fifty to sixty in corn. He raises mules and horses, feeds about seventy-five head of cattle, the larger part in Blue Grass, and raises about 150 head of sheep, of which a goodly number are thoroughbred.

D. M. Dreadon

A democrat in politics, Mr. Craycraft has been active in party work, and at present is chairman of his precinct. In March, 1920, he was elected a member of the County Board of Education, a post in which he has done effective work. All rural schools in Kentucky are under the county boards, acting with the county superintendent of schools, but each school has one trustee more particularly to care for the property and keep in touch with the teacher and the school. Fraternally Mr. Craycraft is affiliated with the Winchester Lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America. His religious affiliation and that of his wife is with the Christian Church at Mount Carmel. Mr. and Mrs. Craycraft are the parents of two bright and interesting children: David Booth and Minnie Rebecca.

John T. Brown, M. D., who maintains his home and professional headquarters in the City of Paris, judicial center of Bourbon County, has been established in successful general practice in this county for fully fifteen years, and in his achievement as an able physician and surgeon he has added professional laurels to the family name, his father having been one of the representative physicians of the north central part of Kentucky for many years.

Dr. John T. Brown was born at New Liberty, Owen County, Kentucky, on the 6th of May, 1865, and it is interesting to record that on the day of his birth a band of Union soldiers stopped at the home of his parents and camped in the yard about the house. They made requisition for dinner, and the gold which they paid for the meal was the first "real money" the Brown family had seen for many months, as the ravages of the Civil war had affected that, as well as many other communities, in the Blue Grass State.

Doctor Brown is a son of Dr. John S. and Rebecca (Farra) Brown. Dr. John S. Brown likewise was born in Owen County, his father, Thomas Brown, having come to this state from Virginia about the opening of the eighteenth century and having become an early settler and pioneer farmer in Owen County. He became one of the extensive landholders and most prominent and influential citizens and business men of Owen County, and he was venerable in years at the time of his death. Of the same Virginia stock is the well known Brown family of Rockcastle County, Kentucky. In coming to this state Thomas Brown passed through the country in the vicinity of Lexington, but decided that that section was too low and swampy and passed on to Owen County, where he finally established his home, as noted.

Dr. John S. Brown received good educational advantages, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period, and in preparing himself for his chosen profession he entered and completed the curriculum of the Ohio Medical College, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1841. He engaged in the practice of his profession in his native county and thus applied himself faithfully during the climateric period of the Civil war. On one occasion he was compelled to exchange his fine saddle horse for the lame gray mare which a Federal soldier found not to his liking. Doctor Brown took this dejected animal in exchange, perforce, and though "she was not what she used to be," as he expressed it, he kept the mare several years, as she was the only horse left to him, several other good animals having been requisitioned also for military use. In the autumn of 1865, within a few months after the close of the war, Doctor Brown came with his family to South Elkhorn, Fayette County, where he obtained land and turned his attention vigorously to farm enterprise, the while he continued in the active practice of his profession as one of the leading physicians of the county for nearly half a century. His death occurred in 1889, and his wife was sixty years of age at the time of her death. Of their two sons the elder is Dr. Oliver F., who has long been engaged in the successful practice of his profession in Fayette County, where he is the virtual successor of his father in this field of endeavor.

After due preliminary education along academic lines Dr. John T. Brown was matriculated in the celebrated Rush Medical College in the City of Chicago, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1889, the only other Kentuckian who was a member of this class having been Doctor Boyd, who is now engaged in practice at Henderson, this state. Since receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine Doctor Brown has been engaged in the general practice of his profession, mainly in Bourbon County, and for the past fifteen years has maintained his residence and professional headquarters at Paris. He has a substantial and representative practice, and has subordinated all else to the work of his exacting profession, in which his success has been on a parity with his zealous and earnest service. During the nation's participation in the great World war Doctor Brown gave six months of effective service in the medical corps of the United States Army. Under permanent orders he was a member of the hospital staff at Camp Greene, North Carolina, with the rank of captain. His service terminated when he received his honorable discharge, after the signing of the historic armistice brought the war to a close. Doctor Brown is actively affiliated with the Bourbon County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

At the age of twenty-seven years Doctor Brown wedded Miss Adele Price, of Marshall, Missouri, a daughter of Capt. William Price, who served as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, in which he was a member of the staff of General Marmaduke. Mrs Brown's death occurred eighteen years after her marriage, and she was survived by two children. William Marmaduke Brown, M. D., the elder of these children, was graduated in the University of West Virginia, including the medical department, and he is now a specialist in orthopaedic surgery in the City of New York. Elizabeth, the second child, is the wife of Rev. J. J. Rice, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church and now (1920) pastor of a church at Jonesboro, Arkansas. For his second wife Doctor Brown married Mrs. Ammie F. (Fretwell) Prichard, widow of Doctor Prichard, who was engaged in practice in West Virginia at the time of his death. Mrs. Prichard was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and was here maintaining her home at the time of her marriage to Doctor Brown. She has two sons by the first marriage, Edward F. and Thomas T. Prichard, both of whom are actively identified with progressive farm enterprise in Bourbon County.

William Holman Jones widely known along the Ohio Valley as a painting contractor, is president of the W. H. Jones Paint Company, Incorporated, at Newport, one of the largest supply houses in Northern Kentucky for handling painters' and decorators' materials.

Mr. Jones was born at Cold Spring, Kentucky, October 22, 1855, and represents a pioneer family of that section of Kentucky. His grandfather, Morgan Jones, was of Welsh ancestry, and spent most of his life at Newport, where he died. Harvey Jones, father of William H. Jones, was born in 1837, was reared and married in Campbell County, Kentucky, and up to 1858 lived on a farm at Cold Spring. He then moved to Newport, and during the rest of his active career followed the trade of house painter. He died at Hamilton, Ohio, in 1909. He was a democrat in politics. Harvey Jones married Mary Bartle, who was born at Cold Spring, Kentucky, in 1835 and died at Newport in 1886. Her grandfather, John Flenoy Bartle, was a native of Holland and established the family in America. His son, John Flenoy Bartle, Jr., was born in 1801 and after his marriage lived on a farm at Cold Spring, Kentucky, where he died in 1875. His wife was Vina Moran, who was born in Campbell County in 1805 and died at Cold Spring in 1878. William H. Jones is the oldest of three children and the only survivor. His sister, Susan, died at the age of nineteen and his brother, John, who was a house painter, died at Newport at the age of forty-nine.

William H. Jones attended the public schools at Cold Spring until he was eighteen years of age. He grew up in the home of his grandparents and remained at his grandfather's farm until he was twenty-two. Then coming to Newport he served an apprenticeship as a house painter, and after four years he and his brother John became partners in business as contractors. They conducted a paint shop together for eight years, after which W. H. Jones took over the business and continued it alone until August, 1913, when he organized the W. H. Jones Paint Company, Incorporated, to do a retail and wholesale business in paints and supplies. This store, at 622 Monmouth Street, is the chief establishment of its kind in Campbell County. Mr. Jones is president and treasurer of the company, and Harry A. Braun is secretary.

Mr. Jones still continues contract painting, and in point of years of continuous service is now the oldest man in that line at Newport. Nearly all the high class work at Newport and in surrounding towns has been handled by him. He had the painting and decorating contract during the remodeling of the American National Bank Building at Newport, the Newport National Bank Building, the residences of Judge John T. Hodge, Judge Charles T. Helm and many other private and business buildings.

Mr. Jones is a director in the Phoenix Building and Loan Association at Newport. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and was a contributor of his personal means and influence to the program of war activities in Campbell County. He was a past chancellor commander of Eureka Lodge No. 7, Knights of Pythias, is a past master of Newport Lodge No. 358, F. and A. M., a member of Olive Branch Chapter No. 76, R. A. M., and of Newport Commandery No. 13, K. T. In politics he is a republican.

Mr. Jones resides at 554 Lexington Avenue. He married at Newport in 1893 Miss Emma Braun, a native of Cincinnati, and a sister of his business partner.

HARRY A. BRAUN, well known in paint trade circles both in Cincinnati and on the south side of the river, is one of the executive officers of the W. H. Jones Paint Company at Newport.

He was born at Newport June 14, 1887. His father, Christopher Braun, was born in Germany in 1844 and died at Newport in 1889, having come to the United States when a young man. He was an expert in several branches of the iron industry, and for a number of years was superintendent of a stove works in Cincinnati. He was a republican and was affiliated with the Lutheran Church. In Cincinnati he married Philipina Teisinger, who was born in Germany in 1847 and died at Newport in 1900. She was twelve years of age when her father came to the United States, settling in Cincinnati, where she was reared and educated, and later her father lived in Newport. Christopher Braun and wife were the parents of nine children, Harry being the youngest. A brief record of the others is as follows: Emma, wife of William H. Jones, of Newport; Carrie, who after the death of her husband, Edward Yelton, a plumber at Butler, Kentucky, went West and acquired an expert knowledge of the fur business and is now connected with the Cincinnati department store of H. & S. Pogue Company; Miss Millie, who lives at Newport and did almost the part of a mother in assisting her mother in rearing the younger children; William, a clothing cutter at Newport, prominent in the republican party and for six years councilman from the Fifth Ward; Catherine, wife of Clarence Barclay, auditor for a stove company at Denver, Colorado; Clara, wife of Edward Ellerhorst, residents of Newport, Mr. Ellerhorst being superintendent of the American Brass & Copper Works of Cincinnati; Ida, wife of M. J. Tudor, superintendent of the Tudor Boiler Works at Cincinnati; and Stella, who died at the age of six years.

Harry A. Braun had the advantages of the public schools of Newport until he was fourteen, then served an apprenticeship at the printing trade and was a printing pressman at the Donaldson Lithographing Company until 1910. Since then his time and talents have been directed to the paint business. He was a salesman for the Ira D. Washburn Paint Company of Cincinnati until 1919, when that business was acquired by the Ohio Varnish Company, and he still acts as salesman over a territory in and around Newport for the new company.

In the meantime Mr. Braun became associated with William H. Jones in the W. H. Jones Paint Company, and since its incorporation has been vice president and secretary of this leading paint store of Newport.

Mr. Braun volunteered his service at the time of the World war and assisted in giving military training at the local gymnasium and was otherwise active in securing the success of the Governmental local drives. He is a member of the Newport Gymnasium, the United Commercial Travelers of America, the Newport City Club, is a republican, and is affiliated with Newport Lodge No. 358, F. and A. M., Olive Branch Chapter No. 76, R. A. M., and Jeffries Council No. 33, R. and S. M.

His home is at 314 East Eighth Street in Newport, and in that city he married on June 17, 1908, Miss Emma Leiner, daughter of Henry and Emma (Bruck) Leiner, residents of Newport. Her father is a last maker. Mrs. Braun, who is a graduate of the Newport High School, has one daughter, Ruth Mae, born March 5, 1913.

D. COLLINS LEE is a Covington attorney, and has been engaged in a broad and successful general practice in that city for the past nine years.

He was born at Covington October 11, 1888, and represents one of the families that established homes in the western wilderness before Kentucky was admitted to the Union. He is descended from Ambrose and Frances (Penn) Lee, Virginia planters. Their son, George Lee, came from Virginia and opened up one of the pioneer farms in Lincoln County, Kentucky, where he lived out his life. His son, George Lee, Jr., was born in Scott County, Kentucky, in 1783, and for many years lived on a plantation in Boyle County. He died at Danville in 1878. His wife was Mary Shelton. Their son, J. E. Lee, was born in Lincoln County in 1825, and died at Danville in 1909, having spent his active life as a planter in Boyle County. He married Elizabeth Miller, a native of Lincoln County. The youngest of their five children is E. S. Lee, president of the First National Bank of Covington and one of the oldest and most prominent bankers in the state.

E. E. Parson

An account of his life and career is published on other pages of this publication. E. S. Lee, who has been a resident of Covington since 1884, married Miss Stella Collins in 1887, and their second son is D. Collins Lee.

The latter was reared in Covington, attended the Rugby Military Academy in that city, and completed his liberal education in Center College at Danville. He graduated A. B. in 1908, gained his Master of Arts degree in 1909, then studied law in the Y. M. C. A. night law school at Cincinnati, and finished his senior year in Center College, graduating LL. B. in 1912. He was admitted to the bar in July, 1911, and has given almost undivided attention to a growing and profitable business as an attorney. His offices are in the First National Bank Building at Covington. For one year, in 1914-15, he was county judge of Kenton County. He is a democrat, a deacon in the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Colonel Clay Lodge No. 159, F. and A. M., Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite, and El Hasa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland. He is a member of the Beta Theta Pi Greek letter fraternity and has served two terms as vice president and is now treasurer of the Kentucky State Bar Association and is a member of the American Bar Association.

Mr. Lee and family reside at 727 Scott Street. He married at Princeton, Kentucky, in June, 1915, Miss Grace B. Dyer, daughter of Darius and Betty (Barbee) Dyer, residents of Princeton, where her father is an insurance man. Mrs. Lee is a graduate of the Kentucky College for Women at Danville. To their marriage have been born two sons: John Collins, in August, 1916, and Robert Dyer, born December 9, 1919.

Carl Ermert is a graduate pharmacist, and is proprietor of a thriving drug business at Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

He is a native of Campbell County, born on Grand Avenue in Fort Thomas, July 24, 1898. His grandfather, Theodore Ermert, spent all his life at Coblenz, Germany, where he was born in 1821 and died in 1902. He was a German farmer, served in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, and twice visited the United States, where some of his children lived His son, Albert Ermert, was born at Coblenz in 1860, was reared and educated in his native land and learned the carpenter's trade, and on coming to this country in 1882 located at Newport, Kentucky. In 1896 he moved to Cincinnati, where he died in 1916. He was a contractor and builder who had an extensive business on both sides of the river. Politically he voted as a republican, was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belonged to St. John's Protestant Evangelical Church at Cincinnati. Before coming to this country he had served in the regular German army. Albert Ermert married Marie Wittenberg, who was born at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, in 1864 and is now living at Cincinnati. Her father, Henry Wittenberg, was a native of the Kingdom of Hanover, came to this country when a young man and spent the rest of his life at Osgood, Indiana, where he had extensive interests as a farmer. He married, at Osgood, Anna Grau, who was born in Hanover in 1824 and died at Osgood in 1908. There were six children in the Wittenberg family: Henry, a farmer in Texas; Dorothy, a resident of Topeka, Kansas; Richard, a farmer who died at Osgood at the age of forty-two; John, a farmer who died at Osgood, aged fifty-eight; Sophia, wife of John Lohmeyer, a farmer at Franklin Grove, Illinois, and Mrs. Albert Ermert. The latter is the mother of four children: Frederick, a druggist at Fort Thomas; Miss Marie and Miss Lillian at home; and Carl.

Carl Ermert was educated in the Cincinnati public schools, finishing the sophomore year in high school, and in 1916 graduated Ph. D. from the School of Pharmacy of the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. He had a thorough practical training in the drug business before he entered college, having spent three years, beginning in 1912, in Groenland's Pharmacy at Cincinnati. After graduating he was pharmacist in Dow's drug store at Cincinnati two years and two years with Blumenthal's pharmacy. In August, 1919, he bought his present business at River Road and Thomas Avenue. This is the oldest drug store and the leading establishment of its kind in Fort Thomas, where it was established in 1907. Mr. Ermert leases the building as well as the business, and lives there. He is unmarried, is a republican in politics, a member of St. John's Evangelical Church at Cincinnati and one of the very popular and public-spirited citizens of his Kentucky community.

E. Clarence Pearson is associated with his brother William in maintaining the old established service of undertakers and funeral directors at Louisville carried on by three generations of the Pearson family for over seventy years. This is one of the oldest undertaking firms continued under one name in the State of Kentucky.

His grandfather was Lorenzo Dow Pearson, a native of Shelby County, Kentucky, who came to Louisville in 1831 and afterward established an undertaking business in the city and maintained an active connection therewith until his death in 1903. Lorenzo Pearson married Mary A. Duhurst, a native of Philadelphia. She died in 1905.

Lorenzo Dow Pearson subsequently took in as a partner his son Edward Clarence Pearson, Sr., who was born at Louisville, March 13, 1848. The business name since then has been L. D. Pearson & Son and is still preserved by the grandsons of the original founder.

E. Clarence Pearson, Jr., was born at Louisville, October 7, 1884, a son of Edward Clarence and Ella (Smith) Pearson. His mother is still living. E. Clarence is the older of two sons. His brother, William E., married Ada Belle Wiggington and has three children, Clyde, Paul and Ella C.

E. Clarence Pearson was educated in the grammar and high schools of Louisville, and in 1904 became associated with his father's business. On the death of Edward Clarence Pearson, Sr., August 11, 1917, the two brothers took over the active management, and have maintained the fine traditions associated with the business through such a long period of years, and at the same time have added to their extensive equipment and facilities.

Mr. Pearson is a past master of Preston Lodge No. 281, F. and A. M., a member of Eureka Chapter No. 101, R. A. M., DeMolay Commandery No. 12, K. T., is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Grand Consistory of Kentucky and of Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He and his family are members of the Episcopal Church.

On June 18, 1908, he married Mary L. Murray, who was born in Daviess County Kentucky, second of the six children, all still living, of Eugene S. and Lida (Parkhurst) Murray. Her father was a native of Nelson County, Kentucky, and died in 1911, and her mother was born in Louisville, and is still living. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson have three children, named Edward C., Scott E. and Robert A.

Charles Rufus Rounds, superintendent of the city schools of Fort Thomas, has given all the active years of his life to the educational profession, is a graduate of several colleges and universities, and has made a splendid record during his administration of the school system at Fort Thomas.

He was born at Eastwood, Ohio, February 18, 1886. His grandfather, Stewart Rounds, spent nearly all his life as a farmer in that section of Brown County, Ohio. He married Minerva Terhune, who was born near Maysville, Kentucky, and also died in Brown County, Ohio. Samuel Rounds, father of Professor Rounds, has lived all his life at Eastwood, where he was born in 1857, and is still active in his work as a farmer there. He has been a trustee of Sterling Township, is an active democrat, a Mason, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was Alice Long, who was born at Eastwood in 1862. They have two children: Charles R. and Joseph, the latter engaged in the insurance business at Owensville, Ohio.

Charles R. Rounds graduated from high school in Williamsburg, Ohio, in 1903. Even now with several college degrees to his name he hardly regards his education as complete. He has been attending school alternately with his teaching duties, and in 1908 received the Ph. B. degree from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, graduated Bachelor of Science from Ohio University at Athens in 1913, took post-graduate work at the University of Cincinnati during 1912-13-14, and in 1916 received the Master of Arts degree from Columbia University of New York. Much of his post-graduate work has been specializing in educational administration.

Mr. Rounds taught in rural schools in Clermont County, Ohio, from 1903 until 1906. For two years he was school principal at Mount Carmel, Ohio, spent three years as high school principal at Ripley, and another three years was assistant principal of the Whittier School of Cincinnati.

He took up his duties as superintendent of city schools at Fort Thomas in 1915 and has since been an active member of that community. Under his supervision are two schools, a staff of twenty-eight teachers, and a scholarship enrollment of 700. Mr. Rounds was appointed for a three-year term as teachers' examiner in Brown County, Ohio, but served only one year. He is a member of the Kentucky Educational Association, the Southeastern Ohio Teachers' Association, and the National Education Association. He was one of the very earnest and active workers on the staff of the war program at Fort Thomas.

Mr. Rounds, whose home is at 15 Highland Avenue in Fort Thomas, is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Union Lodge No. 7, F. and A. M., at Ripley, Ohio, Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, Syrian Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Cincinnati, and Ripley Chapter No. 82, R. A. M. He is a member of the Fort Thomas Men's Club.

On November 25, 1909, at Eastwood he married Miss Mabel Holman, who is also a graduate of the Williamsburg High School. Her father, Frank Holman, now deceased, was a farmer in the Eastwood community and her mother is Mrs. Lucinda (Simpkins) Holman, still living at Eastwood. Mr. and Mrs. Rounds have one son, Charles, Jr., born April 8, 1918.

Anton Walter has been in business at Dayton, Kentucky, nearly thirty years, as a dealer in builders' supplies and as a contractor in road, street and bridge work. His name is known and valued throughout that section of Kentucky as a business man of good judgment and thorough integrity.

Mr. Walter has lived at Dayton all his life. He was born there June 20, 1864, a son of Anton Walter, Sr., who was born in Alsace, France, in 1809. He was reared and married in his native land, and while there served as a soldier in the regular French army. Not long after his marriage he came to the United States and settled at Cincinnati, where he was employed four years in a candle factory, and then moved to Dayton, Kentucky, and in subsequent years did an extensive business as a general contractor both in the building of houses and streets. During the American Civil war he was a member of a home guard company. He was a member of the Workingmen's Association, voted as a republican, and was a Catholic in religion. Anton Walter, Sr., who died at Dayton in 1892, married Mary Gross, who was born in Alsace in 1812 and died at Dayton in 1893. They were the parents of five children: Ed, a coal and feed merchant at Dayton; Mary, of Dayton, widow of Fred Gerrein, who was a stone contractor; Carrie, wife of Joseph Bohn, a Dayton merchant; Anton; and Frank, a building contractor at Dayton.

Anton Walter secured his education in the public schools of Dayton until he was sixteen, and after that for several years worked on farms and at other occupations. It was in 1893 that he established his present business as a dealer in building supplies and coal, and has made that in subsequent years the principal enterprise of the kind at Dayton. He has a large amount of capital invested in his office building at 429 Sixth Avenue, with yards, warehouse and stables at Berry Street and the Chesapeake & Ohio tracks. Besides his modern home at Fourth Avenue and Terrace Street he owns another dwelling at Sixth Avenue and Boone Street.

As a contractor Mr. Walter built a portion of the Licking Pike in 1918, the O'Fallon Avenue Bridge over the Chesapeake & Ohio tracks at Dayton, and has filled a number of other large public construction contracts in Dayton and neighboring cities. His equipment and force of men are now constructing a store half a mile in length at Latonia.

Mr. Walter was vigorously identified with local organizations to prosecute the various war drives and the raising of funds. He is independent in politics, and a member of the Catholic Church. In October, 1905, at Hardin, Kentucky, he married Miss Nettie Pritchard, daughter of Gaston and Sarah Pritchard, now deceased. Her father was a ship carpenter and a builder of marine railways in Cincinnati.

Lucian Dudley Shouse, a doctor of dental surgery, has been successfully engaged in his professional activities at Newport for a number of years. He is one of the very popular citizens of Campbell County, and a part that will long be remembered to his credit was his splendid patriotic work as a member of the draft board during the World war.

Doctor Shouse was born in Boone County, Kentucky, July 31, 1879. His ancestors came to Kentucky when this part of the western wilderness still belonged to Old Virginia. The family for a number of generations lived in Henry County. His grandfather, Dudley J. Shouse, was born near Versailles, Kentucky, in 1819, and spent most of his life in Henry County. He was a Union soldier during the Civil war, and it is said that he was the only man in Henry County to cast a vote for Abraham Lincoln for president. He owned a farm in that county and held a number of Government positions. He died in Henry County in 1903. His wife was Adelaide Combs, a life-long resident of Henry County. J. D. Shouse, father of Doctor Shouse, was born in Henry County in 1851, was reared there and for a number of years conducted an extensive business as a tobacco dealer. In 1894 he removed to Louisville, where he continued dealing in tobacco. Since 1917 he has lived retired at Eustis, Florida. He is a republican, in religion is an old Southern Hardshell Baptist, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married in Boone County, Kentucky, Lucy Stephens, who was born in that county in 1854. They are the parents of five children: Harriet, wife of H. B. Kendall, superintendent of the Louisville agency of the Prudential Life Insurance Company; Lucian Dudley; W. N. Shouse, a tobacco broker at Louisville; Glenna R., wife of Arch Herron, a Louisville insurance man; and J. Ernest, assistant superintendent of the City Hospital of Louisville.

Doctor Shouse spent his early life in his father's home in Henry County, and in 1894, at the age of fifteen, received the A. B. degree from Fairmount College in that county. Subsequently he completed the junior year in the Louisville High School and during 1898-99 took the pre-medical course in Transylvania University at Lexington. He then entered the Louisville College of Dentistry, graduating D. D. S. in 1904. Doctor Shouse practiced at Louisville for five years, and in 1909 removed to Newport, where he enjoys a very extensive professional business. His offices are in the colonial apartment.

Doctor Shouse was chairman of the local draft board for Campbell County during the World war, and for twenty-one months practically neglected his professional business and made the interests of the Government paramount to every other engagement. He was for seven years a member of the Board of Education at Bellevue, but is now a resident at Woodland Place, Fort Thomas. He is a member of the Kappa Sigma college fraternity, a republican, member of the Christian Church, is affiliated with Henry Barnes Lodge No. 607, F. and A. M., at Dayton, and Olive Branch Chapter No. 76, R. A. M., at Newport. In 1902, at New Castle, Kentucky, he married Miss Mary Gilmore Morris, daughter of John and Sophia (Ditto) Morris, the former deceased and the latter still living at New Castle. Mrs. Shouse, whose father was a farmer, is a graduate with the A. B. degree from Hamilton College at Lexington. Doctor and Mrs. Shouse have two children: James D., born July 28, 1903; and Mary Garnett, born August 4, 1908.

Harry J. Willenborg, whose home has been in Newport most of his life, was formerly a dry goods merchant in Cincinnati, but is now manager of the Newport branch of the John J. Radel Company, funeral directors.

Mr. Willenborg was born in Cincinnati May 9, 1887, son of Henry Willenborg, a native of Germany, where he was born in 1850, and was reared and educated in his native land, coming to the United States in 1871. At Cincinnati he engaged in the dry goods business, and built up one of the large and successful establishments of its kind in that city, continuing active until his death on June 12, 1909. He had made his home in Newport from 1889. He was a democrat and a Catholic, was liberal and kind hearted and had a large following of friends in Newport and Cincinnati. Before coming to this country he had served as a soldier in the Franco-Prussian war. Henry Willenborg married Mary Callahan, who was born in Cincinnati in 1860, and since the death of her husband has gone back to their former home in Cincinnati.

Harry J. Willenborg, only child of his parents, was educated in the parochial and public schools of Newport, spending a year in St. Xavier's College in Cincinnati and in 1904 graduated from Nelson's Business College. For two years he assisted his father in the dry goods business. The firm name was Willenborg & Heilgg, and in March, 1906, Henry Willenborg acquired his partner's share in the business and then took in his son as an active partner. They continued the business together, and after the death of his father Harry Willenborg had all the responsibilities alone until 1913.

He then entered the undertaking business as an employe of his father-in-law, Edward J. Schmolt, who managed the Newport branch of John J. Radel Company, Incorporated. Mr. Willenborg gave close study to every branch of the business during his apprenticeship, and by his abilities has earned his present position as manager and director of the company. The Newport office of this old Cincinnati concern was opened in 1904 at Sixth and Brighton streets. In 1906 the company erected a modern brick two-story structure at the southwest corner of Ninth and Patterson streets, the building being 100 by 40 feet, and is the best equipped funeral parlors in Newport. The executive officers of the John J. Radel Company at Cincinnati are John F. Ruehlmann, president; Henry J. Radel, vice president; Louis Guenther, treasurer; and Joseph Schoenberg, secretary, while Mr. Willenborg has the sole management of the Newport branch and is also a director of the company.

He is president of the Newport Benevolent Association, the largest burial insurance company operating under the laws of Kentucky. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, and is affiliated with Newport Council No. 1301, Knights of Columbus, Newport Lodge No. 273, B. P. O. E., and the Sons of Pioneers of Newport. He had an active part in war work in Newport.

Mr. Willenborg and family reside in a modern home at the northeast corner of Tenth and Patterson streets. On September 6, 1911, at Newport Mr. Willenborg married Miss Luella Schmolt, daughter of Edward J. and Louise (Degenhart) Schmolt. Her father, now deceased, was founder of the Newport branch of the John J. Radel Company. Mrs. Schmolt lives with Mr. and Mrs. Willenborg, who are the parents of two children: Mary Louise, born January 12, 1914; and Edward H., born January 24, 1918.

Robert William Nelson, who has practiced law at Newport for more than half a century, is vice president of the Broadway and Newport Bridge Company, and through his extensive business relations and while in public office has been prominently identified with many forward movements in the development of his home city.

Mr. Nelson was born in Campbell County, April 3, 1845. His father was John H. Nelson, who was born in Campbell County in 1801, and represents one of the pioneer families in that section of the state. He spent all his life in Campbell County, dying at Newport in 1890. As a young man he was a steamboat owner on the Ohio River, but also studied law, was admitted to the bar, and during a long period of practice achieved a high place in his profession. He served as county judge of Campbell County four years, was an active democrat and one of the liberal supporters of the Christian Church at Newport. He was also a Mason. Judge Nelson married Miss Maria Sallee in Bracken County, where she was born. She died at Newport. Of the children, Thomas, the oldest, died in Campbell County; John H. was a leading farmer of the county and died at the age of seventy-two; Miss Lucy died at Newport; Mrs. Ella Brasier is deceased; and Robert William is the fifth and youngest of the family.

Educated in the common schools of Campbell County, Mr. Nelson read law in the office of the Hon. John G. Carlisle at Covington. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, when twenty-one years of age, and after three years of practice at Alexandria opened his office at Newport, where he has sustained a creditable position in his profession through more than fifty years. His offices are in the Woolsack Building, at 10 West Fourth Street. His law partner is William E. Galagher.

Mr. Nelson represented Campbell County in the State Legislature in 1877-78, and while in the House was instrumental in securing the passage of the act for the building of the new courthouse at Newport. He served as county attorney from 1869 to 1873. He gave a notable administration as mayor of Newport from 1900 to 1904. During that time the new jail at Newport was built and the water debt of the city, amounting to $591,000, was refunded, with a reduction of the interest rates from 7 3/10 per cent to 3 65/100 per cent.

The Broadway and Newport bridge connecting Newport and Cincinnati was constructed in 1895 by Mr. Nelson and Capt. John A. Williamson, and the structure cost at that time $1,000,000. Mr. Nelson for a number of years has been vice president of the bridge company. He is also president and owner of the Georgetown Water, Gas, Electric and Power Company. He built at his own expense the first brick pavement in Newport, on Nelson Place, one of the improvements to a handsome subdivision which he laid out there. His own home is at the corner of Park Avenue and Nelson Place, and is considered in many respects the finest residence in the city. It is located on large and well-kept grounds 150 by 250 feet. Mr. Nelson is one of the prosperous citizens of Newport who liberally contributed his aid and influence to all the war quotas of Campbell County.

He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church. In 1893, at Newport, he married Miss Mary Winston Berry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Berry, now deceased. Three children were born to their marriage: Miss Mary Winston, at home; Robert William, in the brokerage business at Cincinnati and living with his parents; and Judith Ellen, a high school student at Newport.

Edward A. North, M. D., whose capable services as a physician and surgeon have been rendered in the Newport community for twelve years, is a member of one of the old families of Campbell County, and the name has many honorable associations in this section of Kentucky.

Doctor North was born at Cold Spring in Campbell County, August 15, 1881. His grandfather, David North, was born in North Carolina in 1797, and when a young man came west and first settled at Fort Thomas and shortly afterward at Cold Spring, where he conducted a farm and also was a broommaker. He married after he came to Campbell County. He died at Cold Spring in 1885. His son, David F. North, was born in Campbell County in 1835, and has spent practically all his life there. For the past fifty years his home has been in the Cold Spring community, where until 1911 he was identified with the operation of a large farm. He is now living retired. He is one of the earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his locality and a republican voter. David F. North married Mary E. Winters, who was born at Cincinnati in 1838. Of their family William died at the age of six years; Harry is a farmer at Cold Spring; Miss Anna died aged twenty-seven; Vinnie is a teacher in the public schools at Fort Thomas; John, twin brother of Vinnie, was a baker at Winchester, Kentucky, and died at the age of forty-five; Nannie is the widow of Harry Marshall, who was connected with the Adams Express Company; Martha is the wife of Leonard Eckert, a presser in the paper mills and a resident of Hamilton, Ohio; Fannie, who died in Indiana at the age of thirty-five, was the wife of Frank Fogel, also deceased; Thomas owns and conducts a large baking establishment at Winchester, Kentucky.

The tenth and youngest of the family is Dr. Edward A. North, whose early life was spent at his father's home at Cold Spring, where he graduated from high school in 1897. After a year of employment in the machinist's trade in Cincinnati he entered the Eclectic Medical Institute, from which he received the M. D. degree in 1906. Doctor North had a varied professional experience before locating at Newport. He practiced five months at Sinking Fork, Kentucky, spent a year at Village in Arkansas, and another year in Northwestern Texas at Childress. He opened his office at Newport in May, 1909, and has done a large general medical and surgical practice. He owns his modern home and offices at the corner of Tenth and Isabella streets. He is medical inspector of the Newport public schools, is a member of the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society, the Kentucky and American Medical associations and the Association of Military Surgeons. June 1, 1918, he enlisted and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the medical corps. He was first sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, then transferred to Camp Meade, Maryland, October 3, 1918, and subsequently was medical officer of the Two Hundred and Twenty-fourth Field Signal Corps at Franklin Cantonment, Maryland, and was recommended while there for promotion to the rank of captain. In January, 1919, he was returned to Camp Taylor and was mustered out January 21st. He now holds the rank of captain in the Medical Reserve Corps.

Doctor North is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Robert Burns Lodge No. 163, F. and A. M., Newport Lodge No. 273, B. P. O. E., Newport Aerie No. 280, Fraternal Order of Eagles, Newport Lodge No. 510 of the Moose and the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

In June, 1917, at Covington, he married Miss Pauline Masterson, daughter of Edward and Nettie (Hunt) Masterson, residents of Carrollton, Kentucky. Mrs. North is a graduate of the Carrollton High School. They have one son, Edward Masterson North, born September 26, 1919.

Remus Griffith Cary. The Cary family has been prominent in the official life of McLean County for forty years. Remus G. Cary filled nearly every important office in the gift of his fellow citizens in the county, and his son, G. H. Cary, the past county attorney, has had some place of trust and responsibility since he began practice as a lawyer at Calhoun.

Remus Griffith Cary was born on a farm near Calhoun, February 5, 1847, son of John E. and Mary (Griffith) Cary. John E. Cary and his brothers James and Alfred Cary were born in Clark County, Kentucky, and settled in Daviess County, Kentucky. John Cary after his marriage moved to McLean County, and devoted his life to agriculture. Remus G. Cary was one of nine children, grew up on a farm and had practically no schooling until after the war. He was only fourteen when the Civil war broke out, and a year or so later he enlisted in the Union army as a volunteer and saw eighteen months of service during the closing part of the war. After being released from the army he made good use of his time in school, acquired a very good education, and for seven years was a teacher. After moving to Calhoun he entered merchandising in 1877 and continued in business until 1880, the year that marked his appearance in public affairs. He was elected on the democratic ticket in that year to the office of Circuit Court clerk of McLean County. He mastered the duties of his position, was twice re-elected, his third term ending in January, 1898. While in that office he studied law and was admitted to the bar. His term as Circuit Court clerk was followed by appointment as master commissioner of McLean County Circuit Court, an office he filled until January, 1902, when he became county clerk, serving in that capacity until 1910. After an interval of three years he was appointed, in 1913, a member of the State Board of Tax Equalization by Governor McCreary, and was one of the influential members of the board until it was abolished by the Legislature in June, 1917. Thus his public record covers the unusual period of thirty-five years. He is an active member of the Methodist Church.

In 1870 Remus G. Cary married Miss Henrietta Allen. They became the parents of six children and four are still living.

Glover H. Cary, whose public service in a measure supplements that of his honored father, was born in Calhoun, May 1, 1885. He attended the local public schools, also attended school at Owensboro, and finished his literary education in Centre College at Danville. For a year he was principal of the public schools of Calhoun. He studied law in his father's office, was admitted to the bar June 22, 1909, but in the meantime assisted in the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Livermore and was cashier of that institution until he took up the regular practice of law in Calhoun. Mr. Cary has served as deputy County Court clerk, as county treasurer of McLean County, as master commissioner of the McLean Circuit Court, and was a member of the Legislature representing McLean County during the sessions of 1914, 1916 and the special session of 1917. He was a member of the committee on Taxation when the present tax law of Kentucky was enacted. Mr. Cary in 1917 was elected county attorney, and was in that office during a portion of the World war. In November, 1921, he was elected Commonwealth Attorney of the Sixth Judicial District for a term of six years. This district comprises the counties of Daviess, McLean, Hancock and Ohio.

He is a democrat, a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and a member of the Elks. He is a Methodist. On April 4, 1906, he married Miss Bessie Whayne Miller, of Calhoun, daughter of the late Dr. William P. Miller, who for many years was one of the ablest and most highly respected members of his profession in McLean County. Mr. and Mrs. Cary have four children, including twin daughters.

William F. Clark. While his offices as an attorney have always been at Newport, William F. Clark has been connected with litigation that has required his presence in many of the courts of the state, and his reputation as a lawyer may correctly be said to be state wide.

Mr. Clark was born at Newport, February 18, 1881. His family is one of the oldest in Central Kentucky. It was founded by his great-great-grandfather, Joel J. Clark, who came from Virginia in very early times and settled in Fayette County, where he was identified with farming. The grandfather of William F. Clark was Frank Ashbury Clark, a native of Fayette County, who became widely known up and down the Ohio River as a steamboat owner, owning boats that plied over the navigable ways of both the Ohio and Mississippi. He spent most of his life in Newport, Covington and Cincinnati. While he owned steamboats, his particular trade was that of a cabin decorator. He was an artist of more than ordinary ability. He is also remembered by his old time friends as a man of exemplary habits, and was exceedingly liberal in his relations with his employes. During the war between the states he was a Confederate soldier. His wife was a Miss Tucker, a native of Kentucky, who died in North Dakota.

Dr. Frank A. Clark, father of the Newport attorney, was born at Covington in 1853, but was reared in Newport, was educated in public and private schools, and was a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati. He practiced medicine at Newport for thirty-five years, and held an enviable place in the ranks of his profession and as a popular citizen. For fifteen years he was jail physician at Newport, and at one time there came under his care in this office the parties Jackson and Walling, who were implicated in the murder case of Pearl Bryan. While Doctor Clark was a republican, he had strong support from the democrats in any political contest. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and a member of the Essenics. Doctor Clark, who died at Newport in the fall of 1914, married Mary McGuire, who was born at Lexington in 1855 and died at Newport in 1913. They were the parents of a large family of eleven children: Charles A., a sign painter at Newport; Elizabeth, wife of John Wesley Bowen of Newport, superintendent for the Rauh & Mack Shirt Company of Cincinnati; Florence, wife of Fred Crawford, an iron moulder living at Newport; Matilda, wife of Joseph Oberly, who is connected with the Gibson Hotel at Cincinnati; Albert Thomas, of Newport, who is proprietor of one of the five concerns in the United States for the manufacture of colored cards; William F., the sixth in the family; Pearl Lillian, who died in her twelfth year; George, an iron moulder at Newport; Caroline, wife of George Snyder, a traveling salesman with home at Bellevue, Kentucky, Margaret, wife of Clifford Nepper, a resident of Boston and a traveling salesman; and Evelyn, wife of a well-known Cincinnati physician, Dr. Neal Taylor.

William F. Clark, was educated in the public schools of Newport, attending high school one year, and received a thorough college preparatory education in a private school for four years. For two years he attended the MacDonald Institute of Law at Cincinnati, and then read law under Judge John T. Hodge of Newport and Frank Gusweilder of Cincinnati. Mr. Clark was admitted to the bar July 19, 1912, and since that date has been active in a general civil and criminal practice, his offices being in the American National Bank Building. He is a member of the bar associations of Campbell, Jefferson and Gallatin counties. During the World war he was one of the first Four Minute speakers sent out from Newport to deliver the messages of the Government to the people, was a member of committees doing work for the sale of Liberty Bonds and the raising of Red Cross funds, and was a member of the County Advisory Board. Mr. Clark is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, past keeper of records and seals of Eureka Lodge No. 7, Knights of Pythias, and a member of Newport Lodge No. 510, Loyal Order of Moose.

He has one of the attractive bungalow homes at Southgate, at Linden Avenue and Dexter Road. Mr. Clark married at Newport in 1914 Miss Emily McCracken, daughter of James and Mary (Freeman) McCracken. Her father was a railroad engineer and was killed in a wreck at Lexington, while her mother died at Covington. Mrs. Clark was given a college education.

Louis Reuscher has been one of Newport's able attorneys since 1902, and is a son of A. L. Reuscher, long prominent in Campbell County politics. The father and son live together at Newport.

Louis Reuscher was born in that city, May 31, 1879. A. L. Reuscher was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1855. The grandfather brought his family to Newport in 1857, and as a carpenter and builder followed his trade for many years there. Before coming to America he had served in the regular German army. A. L. Reuscher was reared and educated in Newport, was married at Cincinnati, and early took an active part and interest in politics. For eighteen years he was deputy Circuit Court clerk of Campbell County under John C. Schroll, and in November, 1892, was elected chief of that office, beginning his first term of five years, January 1, 1893. He was re-elected in November, 1897, and after filling out a second term of six years retired. He is a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. A. L. Reuscher married Bertha Wenz, who was born in Cincinnati in 1859. Louis is the oldest of their children. Bertha is the wife of Joseph Hehman, a printer living at Cincinnati. Leo graduated from the Cincinnati University and the Miami Medical College and is a practicing physician and surgeon at Cincinnati. Randolph was accidentally killed by a street car at Newport at the age of twenty years, the accident taking place the night before he was to graduate from the medical school of the University of Cincinnati.

Louis Reuscher was educated in the parochial and public schools of Newport, finishing his junior year in the Newport High School. From January 1, 1893, until January 1, 1904, he was deputy Circuit Court clerk under his father. In the meantime he spent two years attending night classes in law at McDonald Educational Institute, Y. M. C. A., in Cincinnati, and on March 1, 1902, was admitted to the bar. He began practice while still performing his duties as deputy Circuit Court clerk, in the office of Matt Herold at Newport, and in 1904 opened his own offices and has since been busied with an extensive general civil and criminal practice. His offices are in the American National Bank Building.

Mr. Reuscher was city attorney of Dayton, Kentucky, in 1912-13, and assistant city solicitor for Newport from January, 1915, to January, 1919. During the World war he was a "Four-Minute" speaker, and seeking to give the utmost service in accordance with his ability he put his proficiency as a rapid writer at the disposal of the draft board in filling out questionnaires for recruits, and probably gave more of his time to this work than any other citizen of the county. Mr. Reuscher is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, the Campbell County Bar Association, and Newport Lodge No. 273 of the Elks. His home is at 627 Linden Avenue in Newport.

On September 3, 1901, at Covington, Mr. Reuscher married Miss Florence M. Hanes, daughter of William and Kate (Kiley) Hanes, the latter a resident of Covington, where the father, who was a lieutenant of police, died. Mr. and Mrs. Reuscher have one son, Vincent, born February 17, 1903, now in the senior class of the Newport High School.

J. Robert Geisen is one of the very enterprising young business men of Newport, was trained in commercial lines and accounting during a service of several years with banking and business firms on both sides of the river, and is now secretary, treasurer and manager of the Atlas Laundry Company, Incorporated, at Newport.

He was born at Covington, June 7, 1889. His grandfather was a native of Alsace-Lorraine and established the family in Kenton County many years ago. G. H. Geisen, father of J. Robert, was born at Crescent Springs, Kenton County, in 1856, and now resides at 1229 Holman Avenue in Covington. As a young man he removed to Covington, where he married, and in 1879 engaged in the meat business, developing in time a retail and wholesale pork house that was one of the leading industries of its kind in Northern Kentucky. After a long and successful business career he retired in 1919. He is a stanch democrat and a member of St. Joseph's Catholic Church at Covington and is also affiliated with Covington Lodge No. 314, B. P. O. E. G. H. Geisen married Margaret Pistner, who was born at Covington in 1863. Mamie, their oldest child, is the wife of Harry Hueninghake, a tinner living at Covington; Charlotte is at home; J. Robert is the third in age; Elsie is the wife of E. L. Purcell, a bond salesman with home at Covington; Gerhard is a student for the Catholic priesthood in the American College at Rome; Wilfred is successor to his father's meat business at Covington; Miss Alberta is at home; and Camilus has also chosen the priesthood and is a student at St. Vincent's College, Beatty, Pennsylvania.

J. Robert Geisen was educated in St. Joseph's parochial schools at Covington, graduating from high school in 1907. On leaving school he spent a year as a messenger in the Farmers and Traders National Bank at Covington, and then moved up a step and became bookkeeper in the old Merchants National Bank, and when that institution was merged with the First National Bank of Covington he remained a short time, until 1909, as bookkeeper. He then went across the river and for a year was a bookkeeper for the musical instrument house of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company at Cincinnati. An expert accountant, Mr. Geisen for a short time looked after the interests of an important clientage as a commercial auditor, with offices in the Cohen Building at Covington.

In 1911 he bought the controlling stock in the Sanitary Laundry Company of Newport, and in 1912 reorganized the business, changing it to the Atlas Laundry Company, Incorporated. His father, G. H. Geisen, is president of the company, while Robert Geisen is secretary and treasurer and is the manager whose abilities both in the business and in the technical side have been responsible for the great growth and development of the business. The plant and offices are at 504-08 Monmouth Street in Newport.

Mr. Geisen as a practical laundryman was able to render service of value to the Government at the time of the World war. June 22, 1918, he enlisted, spent four weeks in Camp Taylor at Louisville, and was then transferred to Camp Meigs at Washington, where he was assigned to duty at training young men for laundry work with the armies overseas. After four months there he was put in charge of the Camp Lee laundry in Virginia, and continued on duty until February, 1919, and was mustered out in April of that year with the rank of first sergeant. Mr. Geisen is a democrat, is a member of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Newport, Bishop Carroll Council No. 702, Knights of Columbus, at Covington, and is active in the Newport Chamber of Commerce.

He resides at 414 East Fourth Street in Newport. On October 24, 1919, at Petersburg, Virginia, he married Miss Inez Sheffield, a native of that old Virginia city. She is a graduate of a young ladies' seminary.

A. W. Craig, cashier of the Union Light & Power Company of Newport, has had a long and varied experience in municipal and public utility work, and is one of the best known citizens of Campbell County.

He was born at Covington, Kentucky, October 20, 1873, a son of William D. Craig and grandson of William Craig. William Craig, who was born at Edinburg, Scotland, in 1788, was a baker by trade, and in 1854 brought his family to the United States and settled at Cincinnati, where he developed a very successful baking business and continued it until he retired. He died at Cincinnati in 1879, when past ninety years of age. During his youth he had served a period in the English army. William D. Craig was born at Edinburg in 1847, and was brought to the United States at the age of seven years, being reared and educated in Cincinnati. He volunteered as a mere youth to serve in the Union army, in the Sixty-first Ohio Infantry, and was in the battle of Chickamauga, where he was wounded, and also participated in the engagement of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge and other campaigns. For many years he was a steamboat steward on the Ohio River and subsequently was connected with the old Cincinnati Ice Company, being manager of its Eastern Division. He is now retired and resides in the family home at 604 East Tenth Street in Newport. He is a stanch republican in politics, and a member of the Episcopal Church. William D. Craig married at Cincinnati Miss Emma Miller, who was born at Troy, Ohio, in 1847. There were five children: William D., Jr., connected with the Ault-Wiborg Company of Cincinnati and a resident of Norwood, Ohio; Charles H., who was a representative of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and died at Newport at the age of thirty-six; A. W. Craig; Miss Antoinette and Miss Hazel, both at home with their parents.

A. W. Craig acquired his early education in the public schools of Newport, but at the age of fourteen left school to go to work for the Jones Brothers Electric Company of Cincinnati, a firm with which he remained six years, and during that time acquired a thorough technical knowledge of electrical work of all kinds. While his days were thus spent in productive labor he finished his high school course by attending the Woodward Night School at Cincinnati. The next stage of his business experience was as a general office clerk for the Addison Pipe & Steel Company of Newport, following which he was deputy jailor of Campbell County and for several years was traveling cashier, with headquarters at Detroit, for the Warren Brothers Paving Company of New York City.

Mr. Craig was outside superintendent for the John B. McLane Company, general contractors of Newport, until he resigned to become cashier for the Union Light, Heat & Power Company of Newport, with offices at 638 Monmouth Street. He is also cashier for the Union Gas Appliance Company of Newport.

During the World war he was active as a member of committees for various drives in Newport and Campbell County, and gave much of his time to the cause. Mr. Craig is a trustee of the Newport Public Library, is a member of the Episcopal Church, affiliated with Old Kentucky Home Camp No. 11515, Modern Woodmen of America, at Covington, and is a republican in politics. He and his family reside at the same address as his father. In 1908, at Newport, he married Miss Leonie Petty, daughter of George W. and Sarah (Liebelsparger) Petty, now deceased. Her father for some years was superintendent of the Kleine Stove Company of Cincinnati. Mrs. Craig, who is a graduate of the Covington High School, is the mother of one daughter, Sarah E., born September 26, 1911.

William Henry Dill Wheat. While in his native City of Dallas, Texas, William Henry Dill Wheat became identified with the manufacture of iron culverts, and that is the special branch of the iron and steel business with which long experience has made him familiar to the degree of being an expert. Mr. Wheat for several years has been in that business at Newport, and is general manager and a director of the Newport Culvert Company, one of the leading concerns of its kind south of the Ohio River.

He was born in Dallas, Texas, June 8, 1879, but represents an old Kentucky family. The Wheats were established in Colonial times in Virginia. His grandfather, Clayton Miller Wheat, was a native of that state, and for many years farmed in Adair County, Kentucky, and later was a merchant at Louisville. When in advanced years he moved to Dallas, Texas, where he died in 1910. He married Ermine Wheat, of another Wheat family of Virginia. She died in Dallas in 1917.

Cornette Van Leigh Wheat, father of the Newport business man, was born in Adair County, near Columbia, Kentucky, February 7, 1854, and was reared and educated there and in Jefferson County, Kentucky. In 1875 he removed to Texas, and was one of the pioneers of Dallas, then a small city only recently connected with the outside world by the first railroad. He was one of the representatives of the old McCormick Harvester Company in the Southwest, and supervised the business of the sale of the McCormick binders and reapers throughout the Texas district for six years. Following that for ten years he was a Texas farmer, and since then has been engaged in the raising of harness and race horses. Since 1908 he has had practically no active business connections and is still living at Dallas. He is a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. In the State of Minnesota Cornette Wheat married Reese Dill, who was born at Greensboro, Maryland, November 1, 1859. William Henry Dill is the oldest of their five children. Clayton Earl is now chaplain of the United States Military Academy at West Point. Hermia Rebecca is the wife of Thomas C. Harry, Jr., of Camp Dix, New Jersey, Mr. Harry being a captain in the regular army, Sixth Field Artillery, First Division, and saw active service for fourteen months in France during the World war; Reese Dill Wheat is the wife of LeRoy Borden, a confectioner at Dallas; and Marie Davis, is the wife of H. J. Strickler, with a manufacturing concern at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, their home being at Wilkinsburg, Pittsburgh.

William H. D. Wheat was educated at Dallas, graduating from high school in 1897. During the following three years he was an employe of that great southwestern newspaper, the Dallas News. He took up his present line of business as an employe of the Harry Brothers Company, culvert manufacturers, and traveled all over Texas out of Dallas as a salesman for that product. In the fall of 1904 he was sent to the branch plant at New Orleans, and remained there 4½ years. In 1909 he came to Newport to manage the Newport branch of the business, and continued in active charge until 1914, when he sold the industry to the Newport Culvert Company, which had been organized about two years previously. Mr. Wheat has remained in charge as general manager of the business and a director in the company, the plant and offices being at Tenth Street, near the Licking River. J. B. Andrews is president of the company, Joseph Gaff Andrews, vice president, Frank A. Moeschl, secretary and treasurer, while the practical and technical end of the business devolves upon Mr. Wheat. The exclusive product manufactured is corrugated metal culvert pipe, and in this product the company is a competitor in all markets both in the United States and foreign countries. The plant employs fifty hands.

Mr. Wheat resides at Fort Thomas, Kentucky, and has been very prominent in the affairs of that town. While it was a sixth class city he served two years as chairman of the board of trustees, and in November, 1920, was elected mayor when Fort Thomas was raised to a fourth class city. He was prominently identified with war activities in Campbell County, serving as a member of the local draft board of the county and as a member of the Council of Defense, and was on every team for the sale of Liberty Bond issues. Mr. Wheat is a democrat, has served as a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, is a member of Paris Lodge No. 2, F. and A. M., at Paris, Kentucky, Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, El Hasa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, is a member of the board of governors of the Highland Country Club and a director of the Newport Chamber of Commerce.

He owns one of the attractive homes of Fort Thomas, at Briar Cliff. On January 25, 1905, in Bourbon County, he married Miss Minnie Louise Marsh, daughter of B. B. and Lula (Ament) Marsh, residents of Bourbon County, where her father for many years has been a well-known and prominent farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Wheat have three children: Dick Marsh, born December 31, 1907; William H. D., Jr., born February 7, 1911; and Clayton E., born February 15, 1915.

Capt. Malcolm W. McIntyre, a resident of Newport, in former years well known in Ohio River transportation circles, and member of a family that has been identified with steamboating on the Ohio and Mississippi for practically a century, is an active business man with interests on both sides of the river, and at Cincinnati is manager of the great skyscraper office building at Fourth and Vine streets of the Union Central Life Insurance Company.

Captain McIntyre was born at Cincinnati, January 28, 1868. His grandfather, William C. McIntyre, was born in Scotland in 1806, and came to America in the year 1826, when he was twenty years of age. He was a mason by trade and afterward became a steamboat painter and later bought a steamboat and was engaged in the river traffic as owner and operator until his death. He was a resident of Pittsburgh but died of yellow fever at New Orleans in 1853. He married Charlotta Temple Jones, who was born in 1804 and died July 17, 1883. They had four children: Sterling C., William F., James M. and Virginia C. McIntyre. Their son, Sterling Campbell McIntyre, was born at Steubenville, Ohio, September 9, 1841, and in 1849 his parents moved to Allegheny City, now a part of greater Pittsburgh, and soon afterward became residents of Pittsburgh. He grew up there and practically his entire active career was devoted to the Ohio River transportation interests. During the Civil war he was in the Government secret service. He made his home at Cincinnati for several years, but in 1877 moved his residence to Newport, and continued active as a river man until his death. He died in Cincinnati, April 9, 1916. He was a republican and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Sterling C. McIntyre married Mary Ann Winter, who was born at Cincinnati, June 27, 1842, and died in that city, January 2, 1909. Her father, Thomas Winter, was born in England in 1794, and on coming to America as a young man settled at Cincinnati in the year of 1818, where for many years he was active as a merchant. His wife was Mary Ann Wingert, a native of Pennsylvania, born November 30, 1806, and died October 8, 1857. He died in that city February 9, 1866. Malcolm W. McIntyre is the oldest of his parents' three children. Mary Charlotta, who was born December 4, 1872, is a very exceptional business woman and is in charge of a department in the old and widely known Chicago jewelry house, the C. D. Peacock Company. Sterling Castle, the youngest child, was born October 8, 1882, and died November 23, 1902.

Capt. Malcolm W. McIntyre was nine years of age when his parents moved to Newport, and he finished his education in the public schools there and also took several business college courses at Cincinnati. At the age of fifteen he began running on the river on his father's boats, and some phase of steamboating occupied his energies and attention until February 17, 1891. He began as a clerk and eventually was captain of steamboats, with several runs from Cincinnati to New Orleans, Cincinnati to Memphis and Cincinnati to Louisville. In 1891 for a year he was a bookkeeper at Yellow Springs, Ohio, and from March 1, 1892, to March 15, 1899, was bookkeeper for the Edgewood Distilling Company at Cincinnati. For a long period of years Captain McIntyre was connected with the Coney Island Company of Cincinnati, successively as cashier, bookkeeper, assistant superintendent and eventually as general manager. He left that company in 1911 and since 1912 has been manager for the Union Central Life Insurance Company's Building. This building is one of the tallest structures in the country, located at the southwest corner of Fourth and Vine streets, Cincinnati; the building has offices that employ every day during working hours about 2,000 business people as occupants.

Captain McIntyre has other business interests, being president of the Building Owners and Managers Association of Cincinnati, is secretary of the Dubois Soap Company of Cincinnati, and has many other interests in Cincinnati. He is a member of the Chambers of Commerce of Newport and Cincinnati, and during the World war was chairman of the Four-Minute Men and Speakers Bureau of Campbell County, a member and officer of the County Council of Defense, was county chief for the American Protective League, was chairman for some of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. drives and was active in all war interests.

Captain McIntyre is a republican, is a past master of Masonic Lodge No. 94 at Montgomery, Ohio, and now a member of Yateman Lodge No. 162, F. and A. M.; is a member of Cincinnati Chapter No. 2, R. A. M.; Cincinnati Council No. 1; Cincinnati Commandery No. 3, K. T.; Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington; Syrian Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Cincinnati; is a member of Opportunity Lodge, Knights of Pythias at Cincinnati; Amrita Temple No. 122, D. O. K. K., and a member of the board for the new Masonic Temple Company of Cincinnati.

Captain McIntyre's home is a modern brick residence at 801 Overton Street in Newport. He married at Cincinnati, in 1900, Miss Clara M. Corbly, daughter of John H. and Gertrude L. Corbly, the latter living at Captain McIntyre's home. The father, who died at Newport, owned a feed store and ice business at Cincinnati and was in the ice business at Newport. Captain and Mrs. McIntyre have two sons: Howard Sterling, born March 19, 1902, a student in the Cincinnati College, and Malcolm Thomas, born October 1, 1915.

Clarence C. Hieatt began the practice of law at Louisville twenty years ago, has achieved success and prestige in his profession in the largest city in the state, and has also acquired other interests to distinguish him among Louisville's business men and citizens.

He was born on his father's farm in Jefferson County, Kentucky, March 24, 1877, a son of Meredith Paxton and Sarah (Mitchell) Hieatt. He was the fourth of their six children, five of whom are still living. His father was born in Anderson County, Kentucky, in 1819, and his mother in Shelby County in 1836. She died in 1904. Meredith P. Hieatt was reared and educated in Anderson County, spent a few years as a farmer, later became a livestock dealer and finally developed an extensive business as a pork packer at Louisville, which continued until his death in 1886. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and a democrat.

Clarence C. Hieatt was reared and educated in Louisville, attending the Male High School and the University of Louisville, where he took the law course and graduated in 1899. He was admitted to the state bar that year and has since been admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court. His attainments have gained him recognition as one of the very able lawyers of Louisville, where he is practicing as a member of the firm Johnson, Hieatt & Scheirich. Mr. Hieatt in 1912 organized the Consolidated Realty Company of Louisville, and is president of what is now one of the largest real estate organizations in Kentucky.

He is a member of the Louisville, Kentucky State and American Bar associations, and casts his vote as a democrat. In 1902 Mr. Hieatt married Miss Martha Thomas, a native of Shelby County, Kentucky, and daughter of Oswald and Annie (Long) Thomas. Her parents were both born in Kentucky and are now deceased. She is the youngest of three children.

Newton G. Zinn, M. D., physician and surgeon, banker and business man, has been one of the chief sources of business enterprise and civic activity in the Town of Alexandria during the quarter of a century or more of his residence there.

He represents an old family of Grant County, Kentucky, and was born at Williamstown, September 18, 1868. His grandfather, John Zinn, was an early settler in Grant County and lived out his life there. Newton Zinn, father of Doctor Zinn, was born in Grant County and spent the greater part of his life following his trade as a cabinet maker in Williamstown, where he died in 1875. His wife was Elizabeth Dunlap, a native of Fayette County, who died at Williamstown in 1868. Her father, Alexander Dunlap was also a native Kentuckian, and lived on a farm in Grant County, where he died in 1875. Doctor Zinn was the youngest of five children. The oldest, Brutus, died in Grant County when young. Julian W. is a graduate of the Cincinnati College of Medicine and a practicing physician and surgeon at Flanagan, Illinois. The third child, a son, died in infancy, and Carrie died at the age of sixteen.

Newton G. Zinn when a boy in Grant County attended rural schools and the public schools of Williamstown, graduating from high school in 1887. The following three years he was clerk in a drug store at Williamstown, and was then granted a diploma by the State Board of Pharmacy. Soon afterward he entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, graduating after the three years' course in 1894 with the M. D. degree. In the same year he began the practice of medicine at Alexandria, and has given the greater part of his time for the past quarter of a century to a general medical and surgical practice and has to his credit the longest professional service of any physician or surgeon in the town today.

Doctor Zinn would easily qualify as a man of varied and successful activities and affairs. In 1890 he established and for twenty years has owned and operated a drug store, the only business of its kind in Alexandria. In 1903 he organized the Alexandria Bank, and filled the office of president for seven years, until he resigned. In March, 1920, he assisted in organizing the Farmers State Bank of Alexandria, and has been its president since it was opened for business March 1, 1920. At the close of this first year of business the bank reports showed capital stock of $20,000, surplus and undivided profits of over $25,000, and deposits aggregating $150,000. The officers of the bank are: N. G. Zinn, president; Frank Bezold, vice president; J. H. Blackburn, cashier; Joseph Trapp, assistant cashier; and W. H. Racke, secretary.

Doctor Zinn is a director of the Hiland Auto and Garage Company of Fort Thomas, Kentucky. The most complete and modern home in Alexandria, a brick residence surrounded with large and well-kept grounds, has been the comfortable abode of Doctor Zinn and family for a number of years. He also owns a brick dwelling on Main Street, one on Jefferson Street, and has a seventy-acre farm just west of the corporate limits. Doctor Zinn was for seven years a member of the Campbell County Board of Health, is a member of the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society, State Medical Society and American Medical Association. From his local prominence he was able to do an important and constructive part in forwarding patriotic drives during the World war, and used his means to the limit for that worthy object. Doctor Zinn is an independent democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1890, at Alexandria, he married Miss Maggie B. Baker, daughter of Col. R. T. and Jane (Orr) Baker, both now deceased. Her father was an Alexandria attorney. Mrs. Zinn died in 1908. In 1914, at Alexandria, Doctor Zinn married Ethel Wright, daughter of J. F. and Emma (Ripley) Wright, the latter living at Alexandria, where her father died. Her father had some very extensive farming interests in that part of Kentucky, and at one time was one of the chief growers of peaches in Campbell County. Mrs. Zinn is a graduate of the high school of Oxford, Ohio. They have one son, Joseph Wright Zinn, born November 4, 1915.

Rev. Joseph Wetzels is the founder and pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church at Newport. He was selected to take charge of the parish when it was created about five years ago, and has had the satisfaction of seeing his labors prospered and the church grow into an instrument of great good for the Catholic population of a large and important section of Newport.

Father Wetzels was born in Rhineland, Germany, March 3, 1885. He acquired his elementary education in the schools of his home town of M. Gladbach in Rhineland, and finished his literary and philosophical studies at St. Trond, Belgium, where he was graduated in philosophy in 1906. The following four years he spent in Louvain University in Belgium, graduating Baccalaureate in Theology in 1910. After his ordination as a priest he came to the United States and during 1910-12 was assistant pastor of St. Aloysius Church at Covington and then assistant pastor of St. Stephen's Church at Newport.

In 1916 he organized the St. Vincent de Paul parish and built the church, a large brick building, with facilities for both church and school purposes. The church is on the south side of Main between Eighteenth Street and Home Avenue. His parish has doubled in Catholic population during the past five years, and now contains 150 families, communicants of St. Vincent de Paul, while 150 pupils are enrolled in the parochial school, under four teachers. The north limits of the parish are the L. & N. and C. & O. Railroad tracks, and the parish extends south to the Evergreen Cemetery in Southgate, on the east to Alexandria Pike and on the west to Licking Pike.

Father Wetzels both in his own parish and outside was able to do much valuable and constructive work in promoting war activities, and delivered a number of lectures in the county under the auspices of the Council of Defense. He also took the lead in his home parish in raising funds and otherwise helping the patriotic program. Father Wetzels is a member of Newport Council No. 1301, Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Knights of St. John.

His father, Francis Xavier Wetzels, was born in Holland in 1846, and from the age of twenty-five lived at M. Gladbach in Rhineland, where he was engaged in the building supply business. He died in 1913. He married Matilda Hinssen, who was born at Waldfeucht, Rhineland, in 1856 and died at M. Gladbach in 1891. Father Wetzels is the oldest of three sons. His brother John was an officer in the German army and was killed during the war and buried in France. Gerhard, the youngest, is a manufacturer of electrical motors at M. Gladbach, Germany.

William Owen Lindsay, who for a number of years was identified with the sales departments of some of Cincinnati's leading carriage manufacturing establishments, is a popular citizen and business man of Fort Thomas, where he has lived a number of years and where he is a merchant and real estate dealer.

Mr. Lindsay was born at Cincinnati, July 20, 1872. His family has been in Kentucky for more than a century. His grandfather, Robert Lindsay, was born in Scotland in 1789 and was left an orphan when a boy. He ran away from his home and relatives to enlist in the British Navy. At that time Great Britain was engaged in its second war with America, and at the earliest opportunity Robert Lindsay deserted and joined the American forces, serving until the end of the war. For four years he lived in Pennsylvania, then came to Kentucky and was one of the pioneers at Independence, where he owned a farm, did blacksmithing and was also a Baptist minister. He died at Independence in 1878. His son, John Lindsay, was born at Independence in 1820, was reared and married there, and for a number of years applied his efforts to farming in that locality. For ten years he farmed in Indiana and then removed to Cincinnati, where as a member of the firm Gay & Lindsay he developed an important industry as an oil distiller, manufacturing pitch for brewers' kegs and barrels and lampblack. His firm was the chief source of supply for these materials in Cincinnati. He was a republican in politics, a member of the Christian Church, and died at Cincinnati in 1883. John Lindsay married Elizabeth Parker, who was born at Independence, Kentucky, in 1829 and died at Cincinnati in 1880. They were the parents of nine children: John, who died at Independence at the age of two years; Albert, a railway passenger conductor who died at Cincinnati when forty-four years of age; George, a locomotive engineer who died in Cincinnati at the age of forty; John, who met his death at the age of nineteen while railroading in Cincinnati; Eunice, who died at Cincinnati at the age of twenty-two, the wife of John Kling; Elizabeth, who died when three years old, and Anna, who died at the age of six; and Grant at the age of nine; while the youngest and ninth child is William Owen Lindsay.

Mr. Lindsay graduated from the Cincinnati High School in 1888, and soon afterward entered the service of the Hiram W. Davis Carriage Company at Cincinnati. After a year in their office he was put on the road as a traveling salesman and for four years covered the southern states in their interests. For another period of nine years he was southern traveling representative for the Continental Carriage Company of Cincinnati. For several years prior to 1913 Mr. Lindsay had the responsibilities of sales manager for the Haydock Carriage Company of Cincinnati.

On March 29, 1913, he engaged in business at Fort Thomas, opening a stock of merchandise and also a real estate office, and is the leading local business man of the town. His store is at Miller's Lane and Mount Pleasant Avenue, and he owns the store building.

Mr. Lindsay for the past eight years has been election clerk at Fort Thomas. He is a republican, a member of Fort Thomas Lodge No. 808, F. and A. M., which he has served as treasurer, Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, El Hasa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, and is a member of the Masonic Men's Club at Fort Thomas. During the World war his place of business was headquarters for the various committees handling the drives in this locality, and Mr. Lindsay was deeply interested in the success of all these patriotic movements.

His home is on Woodland Place in Fort Thomas. He married at Cincinnati in 1893 Miss Laura Stanfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Stanfield, deceased, her father having been a civil engineer at Cincinnati. Mrs. Lindsay died in 1898 and is survived by one daughter, Florence Margaret, wife of Charles Menager. Mr. Menager is an expert accountant and resides at Charleston, West Virginia. Mrs. Menager is a graduate of the Millersburg Female College in Kentucky. In 1903, at Cincinnati, Mr. Lindsay married Miss Carrie Haufler, a native of Falsmouth, Kentucky. They have one son, William Barnett, born April 28, 1906.

JOHN FREIS. The sands in the glass of time have run for John Freis seventy-five years. It has been a long life, well and profitably and pleasantly spent. He is one of the veteran florists of Northern Kentucky, and for over half a century has been identified with the operation of an extensive greenhouse plant at Fort Thomas, one that has supplied the choicest quality of flowers to an extensive trade.

Mr. Freis was born at Price's Hill in Hamilton County, Ohio, June 27, 1846. His father, Amon Freis, was a native of Alsace, France, born in 1816, and as a young man he came to the United States and settled in Cincinnati. For many years he was engaged in the furniture business in Cincinati, was married in that city, and about 1836 moved his home to Price's Hill, where he followed truck gardening. He died at Price's Hill in 1880. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. He was for seven years a soldier in the French army under King Louis Philip, and participated in a campaign in Belgium. His wife was Mary Steiert, who was born in Baden, Germany, in 1818 and died at Cincinnati in 1901, at the age of eighty-three. Their oldest child, Mary, became the wife of Joseph Menninger, and both died in Kansas City, Kansas. Mr. Menninger was a truck gardener there, and later sold his land and retired well to do, the land being now built up as a part of Kansas City. Frances, the second daughter, became the wife of Henry Menninger, who during his lifetime was a truck gardener and commission merchant at Cincinnati, and she is still living at Price's Hill. Lena Freis, now of Cincinnati, is the widow of Charles Cook, who was a soldier in the Civil war and afterward for many years a member of the Cincinnati police force and still later in the railroad transfer business. The fourth child and oldest son is John Freis. The youngest, Michael, was a cafe owner and died at Indianapolis at the age of forty-five.

John Freis was educated in the public schools of Price's Hill and received a high school training at Storrs Township Hall, now in Cincinnati. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he served a four years' apprenticeship with Mr. Pfeiffer, a florist at Avondale in Cincinnati. During these four years he performed all the work that would give him a complete knowledge of the floral and nursery industry. After his apprenticeship he was for a year foreman of a nursery on the Hayfield farm in Campbell County, Kentucky, for one year was in partnership with his brother-in-law, Henry Menninger, in the ownership and operation of a meat and vegetable market on Pearl Street in Cincinnati, and Mr. Freis then removed to Louisville, where from 1863 to 1866 he was an employe of Henry Nance and for two years conducted a grocery business on Green Street, between Winchell and Campbell streets, in Louisville.

Mr. Freis came to Fort Thomas in 1868. He built a small greenhouse on Highland Avenue and operated his plant at his first location for seven years, after which he bought five acres across the road from his first plant, and there built the greenhouses which have produced the high quality of flowers marketed under the Freis name for forty years. While it started in a small way, as his capital justified, his business has had a steady growth based on the dependable quality of his production. There are now 45,000 square feet under glass. Mr. Freis still owns the five acres and his modern home on Highland Avenue, owns another dwelling on the same thoroughfare and sixteen additional acres with frontage on Highland Avenue.

A number of years ago Mr. Freis retired from the active business management and presented the greenhouse plant to his son, Edward H. Since the death of his son the greenhouses have been operated by Mrs. Edward H. Freis, though John Freis still has the business under his supervision and is the final authority on all technical matters involved in their operation.

Mr. Freis is a democrat. For eighteen consecutive years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Highland District and for twelve years treasurer of the district. He was a director in the old German National Bank of Newport, now the American National Bank, is a stockholder and bond holder in the Covington and Cincinnati Street Railway Company, a stockholder in the Columbia Gas and Electric Company of Kentucky, a stockholder in the Broadway and Newport Bridge Company, owning the Ohio bridge connecting Newport and Cincinnati, and altogether his many years of industry have brought him a substantial and comfortable fortune. He was formerly a member of the Commercial Club of Newport. Mr. Freis was a contributor to all local drives for funds during the World war.

In 1869, at Cincinnati, he married Miss Fannie Pfeiffer, daughter of Anthony and Anna (Lintner) Pfeiffer, now deceased. It was from her father at Avondale, Cincinnati, that Mr. Freis learned the greenhouse and nursery business. To their marriage were born three children: Edward H., the oldest, who succeeded his father as active head of the florist business, died at Fort Thomas in April, 1919. He married Miss Hattie Hagadorn, who has capably continued the business management since her husband's death. The second child of Mr. Freis, Caroline, died at the age of six months. The only living child is Anna, wife of Richard N. Bird, and they live with Mr. Freis. Mr. Bird was a chief clerk in the railway mail service at Cincinnati, and on July 1, 1921, was made superintendent of Railway Mail Service of the Fifth Division.

COL. WILLIAM STANTON STEVENSON, a veteran of two wars, well known in republican politics in Kentucky, has for over twenty years been the chief technical expert and is now chief engineer and master mechanic of the Covington City Pumping Station. His is an interesting record of service well performed and influential connections with his community.

Colonel Stevenson comes of a military family. He was born at Cincinnati December 7, 1877. His grandfather was John Stevenson, who was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and who spent his last years at Dillsboro, Indiana. Joseph M. Stevenson, father of Colonel Stevenson, was born at Philadelphia in 1837, but was reared and married in Cincinnati and gave four years of service as a Union soldier in the Fourth Ohio Cavalry. He participated in such great battles as Shiloh, the siege of Vicksburg, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and was captured at Lovejoy Station, Alabama, and for nine months endured the privations of Andersonville prison. His brother, William Stevenson, was killed during the Civil war, while still another brother, John Stevenson, lost his life while a soldier in an Indian campaign. Joseph M. Stevenson after the war was for sixteen years a member of the Cincinnati police force, and during that time helped quell the Cincinnati riot. On leaving the police department he was for several years superintendent of Crane & Breed's coffin factory, then bought a farm near Tullahoma, Tennessee, but after a year sold it and engaged in the grocery business at Cincinnati. Later he bought a large flour mill at Baldwin, near Batavia, Ohio, and operated it for several years, until he retired from business. For twelve years he was postmaster at Baldwin, during the administrations of McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. He is now living retired at Milford, Ohio. In politics he is a staunch Republican, is a dutiful church member as a Presbyterian, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic. Joseph M. Stevenson married Mildred Bruehl, who was born at Hamilton, Ohio, in 1850, and died at Cincinnati in 1920. Of six children the oldest, Joseph, died when two years old. May is the wife of William Carter, city marshal at Milford, Ohio. William Stanton is third in age. Sarah, who died at Pensacola, Florida, in 1914, at the age of thirty-four, was the wife of J. N. Hutchins, now practicing law at Pensacola and formerly for a number of years a member of the bar of Covington, Kentucky. Joseph C. and his brother, Arthur, are partners in the ownership and operation of a large machine shop at Rochester, New York.

William Stanton Stevenson was reared at Cincinnati and attended public schools there, graduating from high school in 1897. On April 20, 1898, a few days after the United States declared war against Spain, he enlisted in the Fifth Field Artillery and after a period of training at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, was sent to Cuba, where he was with his command in several skirmishes. After his return he was discharged February 20, 1899, with the rank of corporal. The following year he was a representative for the Lindie Ice Machine Company of Chicago, engaged in erecting ice plants, with Cleveland, Ohio, as his headquarters.

From Cleveland Colonel Stevenson came to Covington as assistant engineer of the Covington City Pumping Station. He was assistant for seven years, and since then has been chief engineer and master mechanic. His home has been at Fort Thomas since 1900, and he owns one of the attractive and comfortable homes, a modern brick residence, at 103 Fort Thomas Avenue, and is also owner of considerable other real estate.

Though not subject to draft until the second draft law was passed, Colonel Stevenson enlisted for service in the World war in May, 1918. He spent two months in training at Camp Laurel, Maryland, was made first sergeant of Company D, 57th Regiment, in the National Army, three weeks later was commissioned first lieutenant, and August 17, 1918, sailed for France, where he was detailed to operate boats on inland waterways, and remained on duty abroad for eleven months. In the meantime he was promoted to captain, and was mustered out with that rank August 12, 1919. He at once resumed his work with the Covington City Pumping Station. The pumping plant is along the Chesapeake & Ohio tracks, on the bank of the Ohio River at Fort Thomas, and its twenty-four-hour capacity is 10,000,000 gallons.

On March 17, 1920, he was appointed colonel on the staff of Governor Morrow. Colonel Stevenson is also commander of Robert D. Johnson Post No. 131, American Legion, at Fort Thomas. This post was named in honor of Robert D. Johnson, the first soldier from the Fort Thomas community killed on a battlefield in France.

Colonel Stevenson for the past five years has been precinct committeeman, and has had an influential part in strengthening the republican party. He was active in the campaign of 1918, when Governor Morrow was elected, and also in the national campaign of 1920. Colonel Stevenson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Fort Thomas Lodge No. 808, F. and A. M., Indra Consistory No. 2 of the Scottish Rite, Al Hassa Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Ashland, Kentucky, and is a member of Washington Lodge No. 3, I. O. O. F., Homer Lodge No. 40, Knights of Pythias, at Covington, and Fort Thomas Council No. 263, Junior Order United American Mechanics. He is a past president of the National Association of Stationary Engineers at Cincinnati. Colonel Stevenson is a director of the Fort Thomas Building and Loan Association, which is capitalized at $1,000,000. He assisted in organizing this association and has been on its Board of Directors for ten years.

At Covington he married Miss Leona L. Stevenson, of the same family name but not related. Her parents, Robert and Nancy Stevenson, are now deceased. Her father was a veteran of the Civil war. Colonel and Mrs. Stevenson have three children: William Allen, born October 22, 1903, is a senior in the Fort Thomas High School. Norma Katherine, born December 17, 1906, is a junior in the Fort Thomas High School. Marjorie Lee, the youngest, was born August 27, 1915.

Charles Grant Fisher, of Bellevue, Kentucky, is a member of Fisher Brothers, a firm that has developed and owns and controls one of the most complete and adequate organizations of the kind in Northern Kentucky for the moving and handling and storage of household and other goods. Mr. Fisher represents an old family of Kentucky, and before entering his present business was a railroad man for a number of years.

He was born in Kenton County November 17, 1864. His great-grandfather was a native of Pennsylvania, where his ancestors settled on coming from Germany in Colonial times. From Pennsylvania he moved to Powell County, Kentucky, and was one of the early workers in the old iron rolling mill of that county, where he lived out his life. The grandfather of Fisher Brothers was William Fisher, who was born in Powell County in 1816, and lived most of his life there, being a farmer and carpenter. Late in life he moved to Kenton County and died in 1870. He married Lovina Curry, who was born in Clark County, Kentucky, in 1817 and died in Kenton County in 1882. They reared three children: Elizabeth, who lives at Pratt in Pratt County, Kansas, the widow of William Rich and is a farmer there; Joseph Fisher; and Charles, who was a Union soldier during the Civil war and is now a farmer at Jasper, Alabama.

Joseph Fisher was born in Powell County in 1842, but was reared and married in Kenton County. For many years he did an extensive business as a farmer, stock dealer and handler of leaf tobacco. He was a republican voter and a member of the Masonic fraternity. His death occurred in Kenton County in 1887. His wife was Sarah Elizabeth Rust, who was born in Kenton County in 1846 and died at Dayton, Kentucky, in 1903. Charles G. is the oldest of a family of nine children. Lulu, the second in age, is the wife of Samuel Mileham, of Bellevue, an employe of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Emma is the wife of R. A. Powers, of Detroit, Michigan, connected with the Studebaker Automobile Company. Mary Virginia was married to Frederick Joering, and they live on the Lower River Road at Dayton, Mr. Joering being a truck farmer. The fifth child, William, died at the age of eight years. Fannie is the wife of John Collins, a refrigerating engineer employed by the City Ice Company of Cincinnati and a resident of Bellevue. Alfred B. is the other member of Fisher Brothers at Bellevue. Benjamin died at the age of eighteen months, and Joseph, the youngest of the family, died at the age of twenty years.

Charles Grant Fisher acquired a public school education in Kenton County, attended the high school at Walton conducted by Professor Henry Newton, and also the Fiskburg High School under Prof. N. C. Pettit. Leaving school at the age of nineteen, he was associated with his father until the latter's death. From the age of twenty-three he has been in business for himself, and after two years he entered the service of the South Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company, and was with that transportation concern for eight consecutive years, most of the time as a conductor. With his brother, Alfred B., he established the firm of Fisher Brothers January 6, 1906, with headquarters at Bellevue. During the past fifteen years they have greatly extended and enlarged their facilities for moving and storage, and their equipment now comprises a fleet of eleven motor trucks, enabling them to handle the largest contracts for moving, packing and shipping of heavy furniture and other goods. On the River Road at Newport they maintain a four-story strictly fireproof storage warehouse with 200 separate compartments. The general offices are at 710 Fairfield Avenue in Bellevue.

Mr. Fisher is a republican, and was a liberal contributor of both his means and personal influence to all war activities in his locality. He is a member of Wilmington Lodge No. 362, F. and A. M., is affiliated with Newport Lodge No. 273, B. P. O. E. and Colonel Aerie No. 1285, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at Dayton. Mr. Fisher owns a modern home at 710 Fairfield Avenue and a garage at 214 O'Fallon Avenue. On March 13, 1909, at Newport, he married Miss Ina Winona Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Clark, her mother now deceased. Her father was a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war and is a farmer at Cedar Grove, Indiana.

Walter Fisk Boggess, M. D. Graduated in medicine in 1886, Doctor Boggess has been a tireless worker in his profession for thirty-five years and is one of the physicians of real eminence in Kentucky. He has been in private practice at Louisville for thirty years, and his attainments have brought him such a reputation that his work is now largely confined to consultation.

Doctor Boggess was born on his grandfather's plantation in Jefferson County, Kentucky, January 19, 1863. His grandfather was Robert Boggess, a native of North Carolina, a Kentucky pioneer who settled in Muhlenberg County in 1801. The father of Doctor Boggess was Rev. Charles Young Boggess, who was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, in 1827, finished his college education at Greenville, Kentucky, and for sixty years pursued with little rest or interruption the career of a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the prominent members of the Louisville Conference, and his last charge was at Bardstown, Kentucky. He joined the Louisville Conference in 1854, and spent his last years in Jefferson County, where he died in 1913, at the age of eighty-seven. Rev. Mr. Boggess married Rose M. Moorman, who was born in 1836 and died in 1905. Her father, Alanson Moorman, was a native of Lynchburg, Virginia, was an early settler in Meade County, Kentucky, and in 1858 moved to Jefferson County, where he died in 1895, at the age of eighty-eight.

Doctor Boggess is the younger of two sons, his brother being Olin Boggess. His youth was spent in the several communities where his father was minister, and in those places he attended public school. He prepared for college in Forrest Academy, and then entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, where he pursued the classical course and graduated with the A. B. degree in 1882. While he had planned a medical career, he remained at Vanderbilt two years as assistant instructor in Greek. He studied medicine at Louisville and New York, received his degree in 1886, and for four years was assistant physician to the State Institution for the Insane at Lakeland. Doctor Boggess began active practice at Louisville in 1890, and his practice is now limited to internal medicine and diagnosis. He held the chair of professor of practice and diagnosis of medicine in the Louisville Medical College. He has been consulitng physician at the Louisville City Hospital and the Deaconess Hospital. He is a member of the Jefferson County, Kentucky State and American Medical associations, also of the Mississippi Valley Medical and Southern Medical and Surgical societies. He is a member of the Pendennis Club, and has always given much time to the Methodist Church. He is a member of the executive committee of the board of church extension of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church. On April 20, 1896, he married Miss Liebie Jones, daughter of Col. Stephen Jones, of Abingdon, Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Boggess have two daughters, Elizabeth Fisk and Katherine Larned.

Hal Pettit Headley. There could be no more comprehensive history written of a community or even of a state and its people than that which deals with the life work of those who by their own endeavor and indomitable energy have placed themselves where they well deserve the title of "progressive," and in this sketch will be found the record of one who has outstripped many less active plodders on the highway of life, one who has not been subdued by the obstacles which confront everyone, but who has made them stepping stones to success. At the same time that Mr. Headley was winning his way to the front in his particular line of effort he also gained a reputation for uprightness and honor. He is one of the worthy native sons of the Blue Grass State who had the sagacity to foresee the great future of this section of the country, and he has thus been actively identified with the growth and development of the state along very practical lines.

Hal Pettit Headley was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, on April 19, 1856, and is the second in order of birth of the five children who were born to his parents, George W. and Nancy (Pettit) Headley. After completing his studies in the public schools he became a student in Transylvania University. At an early age he engaged in farming, in which he was successful, and in connection therewith he began to give attention to the breeding and raising of thoroughbred horses. In this latter line he met with such distinctive success that he finally devoted his entire time and attention to it, with the result that he has become one of the leading thoroughbred stock breeders in the United States, the product of his stables standing well up among the winning list on the American turf every year from 1902 to the present time. He is the owner of two farms, known as Beaumont Farm and LaBelle Farm. The former is located two miles from Lexington, on the Harrodsburg Pike, and is one of the most modern stock farms in the country, comprising in all about 900 acres and 200 boxes. The stallions and yearlings are quartered on the Harrodsburg Pike end of the farm, and the mares are kept on the rear end, which may be reached also by the Parker's Mill Pike. LaBelle is situated on the Frankfort Pike, six miles from Lexington, and contains about 440 acres and 140 boxes. Thus the two farms together comprise nearly 1,400 acres of excellent land, practically all of which is in grass, and 340 boxes, which are specially equipped for boarding stock.

Mr. Headley has been the owner of many fine horses during the years in which he has been engaged as a breeder, and many of which have brought fancy prices and have to their credit racing records and purse winnings aggregating nearly $500,000. The great number of these animals forbids specific mention of them all, but one of them is well deserving of specific mention, namely, "Ornament," one of the grandest horses ever bred on Kentucky soil. He was bred by Mr. Headley, foaled in 1894, and was a chestnut color, standing 15½ hands high. "Ornament" began his racing career at Memphis in the spring of 1896, as a two-year-old, and ran his last race as a four-year-old, when it was decided to retire him to the stud, an absolutely sound horse. He was the winner of four Derbies, Clark Stakes, Himyar Stakes, Twin City Handicap, both ends of the Double Event, Flatbush Stakes, Brooklyn Handicap (where he carried the top weight, 127 pounds), the Brighton Handicap, and eight other races, an aggregate of twenty winnings and purses amounting to $89,906. That he was easily the best two-year-old of his year no one questioned, while as a three-year-old he was beaten only twice at even weights or weights for age. In his four-year-old form the place of honor was given "Ornament" in all the big handicaps and he was easily the best horse of the all-age division at the time he was retired. Beautifully bred, his perfection was amply demonstrated by his winning the grand champion prize at the Universal Exposition at St. Louis in 1904. Some idea of his value as a sire may be gathered from the statement that up to 1917 his get had run in 1,369 races and won $547,356 in first money alone except in stakes.

Besides his horse farms Mr. Headley is also interested in other enterprises, chief of which is the banking business. He was vice president of the Old Third National Bank, and in 1911, when that bank was consolidated with the Phoenix National Bank, under the name of the Phoenix and Third National Bank, he became vice president of that institution and still retains that office. He is deeply interested in everything pertaining to the development of his community along all legitimate lines, giving his support to every movement for the advancement of the general welfare. Politically Mr. Headley was formerly a democrat, but of late years he has given his support to the republican party. His religious faith is that of the Christian Science Church.

Mr. Headley has been twice married, first, on November 8, 1882, to Alice Price, who died, leaving three children, namely: George, who lives in Mobile, Alabama, was married to Louise Adams and they have two sons, George W. and Duval; Anna; and Hal Price, who was married to Martha Withers and they have a daughter, Martha Pettit. Hal Price Headley is extensively engaged in farming and the breeding of thoroughbred horses on Beaumont Farm. He is president of the Kentucky Thoroughbred Horse Association. For his second wife, the subject of this review was married to Mattiler Tyrnes.

Although modest and unassuming and always easily approached, Mr. Headley possesses a strong and vigorous personality, and in the best sense of the term is a leader of men and well fitted to manage an important enterprise such as the one referred to in this review. He has achieved much in an individual way not dependent upon hereditary prestige and has proved himself a citizen and business man of the utmost loyalty and progressiveness, enjoying to a marked degree the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

Fred H. Reekers has for many years been a resident of Dayton, has a successful business in real estate and insurance in that city, is city treasurer, an office he has filled for over twelve years, and his influence has been identified for good with the community in many other ways.

Mr. Reekers was born at Covington, Kentucky, May 3, 1868. His grandparents, Henry and Mary Reekers, were born in Hanover, Germany, both in the year 1801, and came to the United States and located at Dayton, Kentucky, in 1847, where the grandfather died in 1874 and the grandmother in 1871. Henry Reekers was a tailor by trade, and followed that occupation all his active life. He had a son, Herman, and a daughter, Lucy, who died at Dayton at the age of forty-two, wife of Henry Vasche, who was in the grocery business at Dayton and also served a term as city treasurer.

Herman Reekers was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1836 and was about ten years of age when the family came to America. He was reared at Dayton, but finished his education in Cincinnati. He married at Newport, Kentucky, and then established his home at Covington, where he was in business as a merchant tailor until 1878. In that year he returned to Dayton and engaged in the wholesale clothing business, but at the same time continued to follow his trade as a skilled cutter of men's clothes. He died at Dayton in 1884. He was a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church and the Catholic Benevolent Society. The wife of Herman Reekers was Theresia Brink, who was born in Germany in 1846 and died at Dayton in 1911. They were the parents of eight children: Frank, a clothing cutter who served as a soldier in the Spanish-American war, died at Dayton at the age of forty-two years; Joseph died when two years old; Fred H. is the third in age; Rose is the wife of Philip Schneider, a lithographer living at Dayton; Edward is a painter and decorator living in Chicago; Henry is in the insurance business at Dayton; Hugo is a shoe cutter with home at Dayton; and Josephine is the wife of Edward Wessel, an insurance agent at Dayton.

Fred H. Reekers at the age of thirteen left the parochial schools of Dayton and for two years was employed as an errand boy in the Donaldson Lithographing Company at Cincinnati, for another two years worked in a rope factory at Dayton, and during the next four years put in his summers as a lather and in winter seasons worked in tailor shops and learned the tailoring trade. For a number of years he was employed as a clothing cutter for L. R. Marx & Company, 117 East Third Street, in Cincinnati.

Mr. Reekers was engaged in a business in real estate and insurance until 1911, and has one of the leading offices in those lines in this section of Kentucky. His offices are at 602 Sixth Avenue. He owns a modern home at 819 Seventh Avenue, and other residence property on Fourth Avenue. He is a member of the Finance Committee of the Ideal Savings, Loan and Building Association of Newport and a director of the Citizens Loan & Savings Association of Dayton.

For many years he has had some responsibilities in the municipal government of Dayton. For four years he was a member of the City Council and in 1908 was elected city treasurer to fill out an unexpired term of one year. He began his duties as city treasurer in the City Building at 514 Berry Street on January 1, 1909, and has served uninterruptedly in that office, having been elected for regular four-year terms in 1909, 1913 and 1917. Mr. Reekers is a member of the St. Bernard Catholic Church at Dayton, being treasurer and trustee of the church, is a charter member of Colonel Aerie No. 1285, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and a member of Newport Council No. 1301, Knights of Columbus, and the Jackson Club of Dayton. His time and means were liberally bestowed in behalf of all financial and other patriotic campaigns in Dayton during the World war.

On January 25, 1893, at Dayton, he married Miss Caroline Gramer, daughter of Sebastian and Sophia Gramer, both deceased. Her father was a Kentucky farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Reekers have four children: Esther, at home, is a graduate of the Dayton High School and Miller's Business College at Cincinnati. Leon P., born in April, 1898, owns and operates a public garage at Newport. In August, 1918, he enlisted, was trained in the Polytechnic Institute of Alabama, then at Camp Joseph Johnston at Jacksonville, Florida, and at Camp Mills, Long Island, being in the electrical engineering corps. He was mustered out as a sergeant in May, 1919. The third child is Alfred, born in 1901, a graduate of the Dayton High School and an employe in the office of the Wadsworth Watch Case Company. Anselm, born in 1907, is a student in the parochial schools.

FRANK SCHREIBER. The Schreiber family have had their home at Dayton, Kentucky, over half a century. For over thirty years they have conducted an extensive real estate and insurance business, and the active head of that business today is Frank Schreiber, a son of the founder.

His father is the venerable Dayton business man, David E. Schreiber, who was born at the City of Wurms on the Rhine, Germany, in 1838. His father, Henry Schreiber, who was born in Germany in 1819, brought his family to the United States about 1846 and settled on a farm at Waverly, Ohio, where he lived until his death in 1911, when ninety-two years of age. David E. Schreiber was reared and educated at Waverly and as a young man went to Cincinnati, where he married and where for many years he was a merchant. For several years he was located at Marion, Ohio, as manager of the old Keystone Sewing Machine Company's office. He was a hardware merchant at Cincinnati and later in the clothing business in that city until 1888. He had established his permanent residence at Dayton in 1868, and on selling his clothing business in Cincinnati he opened an office for real estate and insurance at Dayton, and made his agency one of the most adequate and succesful in this field of business. He continued active until he retired in February, 1921. David E. Schreiber is a republican and for four years was a member of the City Council. He is an honored veteran of the Union army, having fought for the Union three years and four months in the Sixth Ohio Infantry. He was under Gen. Joe Hooker and was in the battles of Stone River, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga, being severely wounded in the last engagement and for four months was confined to the hospital. He is an active memebr of the Evangelical Church.

David E. Schreiber married Mary Stemmler, who was born on a farm near Lawrenceburg, Indiana, in 1851, and died at Dayton in 1891. The second wife of David E. Schreiber was Mary Woehner, who was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1843. All his children were by the first marriage: Matilda, who died at the age of two years; Mattie, who died at sixteen; Amelia, wife of Theodore Breitenstein, a carpenter at Newport, Kentucky; William, a paper hanger at Dayton; Edward, a shoe cutter at St. Louis; Frank; and Lillian, wife of George Weinholt, a machinist living at Dayton.

Frank Schreiber was born at Dayton, Kentucky, May 19, 1879, and was educated in the public schools, completing his junior year in the Dayton High School. At the age of eighteen he went to work, and for the next three years was employed at civil engineering. For five years he was associated with his father's business, and then removed to New Castle, Indiana, where he was a fine regulator in a piano factory 2½ years. On April 14, 1907, he returned to Dayton and held a similar position with the Harvard Piano Factory for twelve years. Leaving this, he was shipping clerk in the Pathe Film Exchange of Cincinnati until he succeeded to his father's real estate and insurance business February 1, 1921. He does a large business in real estate and his office is the principal headquarters for all lines of insurance at Dayton. He owns the office building at 636 Sixth Avenue, and his own home is at 903 Sixth Avenue.

Mr. Schreiber assisted in all the Liberty Loan drives and in two of the Red Cross drives, and gave much of his time to patriotic work during the war. He is secretary of Colonel Aerie No. 1285, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and is a republican in politics.

At Bellevue, Kentucky, October 4, 1904, Mr. Schreiber married Miss Anna Sturm, daughter of Joseph and Anna (Rieger) Sturm, residents of Bellevue. Her father is a shoe cutter by trade. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Schreiber: Franklin, born July 27, 1905; Lewis, who died when fifteen months old; Melvin, born July 5, 1909; Thelma, born March 18, 1912, and David, twin brother of Thelma.

WALTER M. JONES is superintendent of the Evergreen Cemetery at Newport, having succeeded his father, the late Matthew M. Jones, in that office. Between them the supervision and the landscape work of this beautiful city of the dead have been under their direction for over thirty-five years.

The late Matthew M. Jones was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1857. His father, Charles B. Jones, was born in Canada in 1832 and in 1858 moved to Newport, Kentucky, where he did an extensive business as a florist. He also enlisted and served in the Union army during the Civil war. He died at Newport in 1895. His wife, Mary A. Jones, was a native of Canada and died at Newport. Besides Matthew their children were C. E., a retired florist living at Walnut Hill, Cincinnati; William, of Lynn, Massachusetts; Susan, wife of Newett May, of New York City; Margaret, of Newport, widow of George H. Bishop; Frank, who died at Newport at the age of twenty-one; and Gregory, who died at Newport.

Matthew M. Jones was about a yea. old when the family moved to Campbell County, Kentucky, and for several years he was in business as a florist at Cold Springs and then at Newport. In 1885 he was chosen superintendent of the Evergreen Cemetery at Newport, and held that office until his death in October, 1920. He was a democrat in politics and a member of Newport Lodge No. 273, B. P. O. E. His first wife was Rose Neyman, who was born at Cold Spring in Campbell County. She was the mother of two children: Neyman, who was assistant superintendent of Evergreen Cemetery and died in 1915, and Ada, who died in childhood. The second wife of Matthew Jones was Anna E. Thuhues, who was born in Campbell County in 1867 and died in 1913. Walter M. is the oldest of her children. Clifford G., assistant to his brother at the Evergreen Cemetery, enlisted in 1918 and was in the National army for a year and a half and spent one year of that time with the Expeditionary Forces in France. Stella Anna is the wife of Charles F. Droege, a plasterer living at Southgate, Kentucky. Stuart W., the youngest, is a florist with home at Walnut Hill, Cincinnati.

Walter M. Jones was born in the superintendent's home at Evergreen Cemetery April 7, 1892, was educated in the public schools of Newport and had a business education in the Newport Business College. Since leaving school he has been identified with the Evergreen Cemetery, and was well qualified to succeed his father as superintendent.

Evergreen Cemetery is at the southern edge of Newport, and is one of the largest and best kept burying grounds in Kentucky, with 400 acres. At present there are 23,275 graves. Many noted men and women are buried here, among them Gen. James Taylor. The cemetery has a state reputation for its neatness and care and particularly beautiful effects in landscape gardening, and both the present and the former superintendent deserve the credit for the landscape work exhibited here.

Mr. Jones' home is the superintendent's residence at the main entrance of the cemetery. He is a democrat in politics and was actively identified with community organizations in war work. In April, 1917, he married Miss Nina McKibben, daughter of Charles and Lillian (Fossett) McKibben. The latter died September 1, 1921. Her father was a bookkeeper and died at New Richmond, Clermont County, Ohio. Ethel McKibben, who is a sister of and resides with Mrs. Jones, is a graduate nurse, and during the World war did Red Cross work, and is now visiting nurse at Cincinnati. Mrs. Jones is a woman of liberal education and active socially. She is a graduate of the Woodward High School of Cincinnati and received the A. B. degree from the University of Cincinnati. They have had two children, Anna Lillian, who died at the age of fourteen months; and Mat M., born in April, 1920.

George Stetter, funeral director, is a member of the firm Vonderhaar & Stetter, one of the largest and most complete organizations of its kind in Northern Kentucky, with parlors and branch houses at Newport, Dayton and Alexandria.

Mr. Stetter was born at Bellevue in Campbell County, April 7, 1878. His father, George Setter, Sr., now living at 440 Berry Avenue in Bellevue, was born in Cincinnati in 1849, was reared in that city, was there married October 10, 1869, and fifty-four years ago began working for the American Express Company in the capacity of a driver. He became one of the oldest employes in the service of that corporation. Eventually he was promoted to superintendent of terminals, but subsequently had nominal duties in the cashier's department and was pensioned June 1, 1921, for his long and valuable service with the company. He resided in Cincinnati for a number of years, but in 1876 removed to Bellevue. He is a republican and a member of St. John's Evangelical Church. George Stetter, Sr., married Margaret Phoener, who was born in Cincinnati in 1849. They became the parents of eight children: Catherine, wife of J. B. Ellington, a merchant and banker at Waggoner, Oklahoma; Dora, wife of Clifford McClane, an electrician at Bellevue; Harry, who died of typhoid fever at the age of nineteen years; Mamie, who was killed by a falling sand bank at the age of ten years; George, Jr.; Alma, wife of David Minten, connected with the Cincinnati Fuel Supply & Coal Company and a resident of Norwood, Ohio; Frank, who died of typhoid fever in his twenty-first year; and Margaret, a teacher in the Cincinnati schools.

George Stetter was reared and educated at Bellevue, but on account of his health had to leave school when fourteen years of age, and for some time lived as far as practical out of doors. At the age of sixteen he entered Nelson's Business College at Cincinnati, and remained a student there for one year. In 1898 Mr. Stetter joined the Second Kentucky Volunteers for service in the Spanish-American war, and was with the colors six months, being stationed at Chickamauga. He was a corporal and company clerk. Following this military experience he spent a year with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Cincinnati, and for seven years was depot cashier at Cincinnati for the American Express Company.

Mr. Stetter has been active in his present line of business since 1910, at which time he formed a partnership with Bernard Vonderhaar at Dayton, Kentucky. In 1919 Mr. Stetter bought the present location of the firm at Newport, acquiring the building and grounds from the Taylor heirs at Third and Overton streets, the site of one of the finest, oldest and best situated buildings in Newport. The Colonial home was erected in 1837. Gen. James Taylor was granted this property by the United States Government after the War of 1812 as a partial reward for his services. The distinguished Taylor family and their descendants entertained at Newport such notables as Lafayette, the Prince of Wales, Roosevelt and others. Mr. Stetter has given his undeviating devotion to the welfare and prosperity of his business, and has made it one of the most adequate in point of service in Campbell County.

His home is the old Taylor residence at Third and Overton streets. He is a republican, a member of St. John's Evangelical Church at Bellevue, is affiliated with Henry Barnes Lodge No. 607, F. and A. M., at Dayton, Olive Branch Chapter No. 76 at Newport and Newport Commandery No. 13, K. T., Indra Consistory No. 32 of the Scottish Rite at Covington, and Rizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Madisonville.

In 1901, at Dayton, he married Miss Stella Smith, daughter of George and Belle (Niles) Smith, the latter a resident of Dayton. Her father, deceased, was connected with the Ault Woodenware Company at Cincinnati. Mr. and Mrs. Stetter have one daughter, Thelma, born September 15, 1907.

Robert R. Hutcheson. Mr. Hutcheson and wife are the proprietors of the Newport Business College. He is a veteran educator with an honorable record of more than half a century of service. He taught his first school while the Civil war was still in progress, and with the exception of a few years his work has been in Kentucky.

He was born near Frankfort in Franklin County, May 30, 1846. His grandfather, Peter Hutcheson, was a native of Edinburg, Scotland, but came to this country early in life and joined the Colonists in their struggle for independence during the Revolutionary war. A few years after the war he came west and settled in Kentucky and Bourbon County. He owned a farm in that county, and at one time owned land on which the City of Louisville is now built. He died at Centerville in Bourbon County when nearly 100 years old.

His son, Dr. John D. Hutcheson, was born in Bourbon County in 1810, was reared in that and in Woodford County, was married at Millville in Woodford County and for several years taught school and practiced medicine in Franklin County. In 1848 he removed to Owen County, where he did the heavy work of a physician and surgeon with a large country practice until he retired to Anderson County, where he lived until his death in 1902. Doctor Hutcheson was a republican and a very devoted member of the Christian Church. He married Elizabeth Gaines, who was born in Woodford County in 1820 and died in 1890, at the age of seventy, near Stamping Ground in Scott County. Robert R. is the oldest of a large family of children; James P. is a retired merchant at Owenton, Kentucky, where for nineteen years he has filled the office of postmaster; Miss Cordelia died at the age of twenty-five; John E. is a farmer and rural mail carrier at Stamping Ground; Lenora, who lives near Stamping Ground, is the widow of J. N. Johnson, a Scott County farmer; George W., who was in the internal revenue service many years, died at Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, in 1914; and Sallie died at the age of seventeen.

Robert R. Hutcheson has all his life been a student. He first attended rural school in Owen County, later the Bridgeport High School, spent two years in Eminence College at Eminence, Kentucky, and subsequently received a diploma and teacher's certificate from the Gregg Shorthand School of Chicago. Mr. Hutcheson taught his first six months' term of school at Harmony in Owen County in 1864. He was identified with teaching work in that county until 1884. Following that for twelve years he was principal of the Corinth Academy in Grant County. In 1896 he became principal of the Plattsburg High School in Mississippi, but remained only a year, when he resumed his work with the Corinth Academy. Mr. Hutcheson in 1901 began teaching a commercial school at Covington, where he remained eight years, and from 1909 to 1912 was principal of schools at Bromley, Kentucky. Returning to Covington in 1912, he conducted the Hutcheson Normal and Business Institute Incorporated, for a year or two. In 1914 he established a commercial school at Augusta, but after a year sold it and took over his old school at Covington, and continued its management until 1919. In that year he leased the Newport Business College, and he and Mrs. Hutcheson have been owners of the property since 1921. This is one of the strong and ably staffed institutions of its kind in the Ohio Valley, its home being in the Newport National Bank Building.

Mr. Hutcheson was for four years vice president of the Kentucky State Teachers Association, and is widely known among the educators of the state. He is a democrat, is a past chancellor commander of Corinth Lodge No. 30, Knight of Pythias, and has been a delegate to the State Grand Lodge and is a past grand of Monterey Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

His home is at 624 Garrard Street in Covington. On August 25, 1864, at Harmony in Owen County he married Miss Lucinda F. Matthews, daughter of Franklin and Elizabeth (Costigan) Matthews, now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Owen County. Mrs. Hutcheson died July 11, 1911, when they had been married nearly forty-seven years. She was the mother of six children. J. Frank, the oldest, is editor of the Spokesman, a trade journal at Covington. Emma, who died at the age of twenty-five, was the wife of E. E. Vallandingham, an insurance man with home at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati. Minnie, the third in age, is the present wife of Mr. Vallandingham. William, advertising writer for the Stewart Iron Works at Covington, was in the Government service at Washington during the World war. R. Gayle, a resident of Covington and a salesman for the Mabley & Carew Company department store in Cincinnati, is the fifth in age. Raymond R., manager of the advertising department of a firm at Brooklyn, New York, was in training as a soldier at Camp Meade when the armistice was signed.

July 14, 1913, Mr. Hutcheson married at Newport Miss Emma May Hinton. Mrs. Hutcheson, one of the very talented and efficient women of her generation, was born near Williamstown, Kentucky, April 2, 1885, was educated in the public schools at Sherman, near Williamstown, attended high school at Covington, and in 1912 graduated from the Hutcheson Normal and Business Institute. She passed the teacher's examination with highest honors under Mr. Robert R. Gregg, of the Gregg Shorthand School of Chicago in 1920. Since her marriage she has proved invaluable to Mr. Hutcheson in business college work, teaching shorthand, typewriting, English, spelling, and for the past seven years has also taught music. She had two years of practical business experience as a stenographer at Cincinnati. Mrs. Hutcheson from the age of seventeen until twenty-one was organist for the Christian, Methodist and Baptist churches at Florence, Kentucky. She is now an active member of the Madison Avenue Christian Church at Covington.

Her father, J. T. Hinton, was born in Harrison County, Kentucky, October 24, 1860, at one time owned a large farm near Cartersville, and subsequently transferred his farming operations to Florence, Kentucky, and also did a business as a contractor in fence building. From 1907 to 1911 he had charge of a dairy farm at Mount Healthy, Ohio, and then returned to Kentucky and is now living at Dry Ridge, where he is engaged in the garage business. He is a democrat and an elder in the Christian Church and a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. J. T. Hinton married Ella B. Jeffers, who was born at Cartersville in Grant County August 24, 1860. She died August 30, 1921, and was buried in Highland Cemetery. Their two daughters are Lutie Pearl and Mrs. Hutcheson. The former is the wife of Dan Points, Jr., owner and operator of a garage at Dry Ridge. Mrs. Hutcheson is also part owner of the business college with her husband.

Harry Adolph Davidson, B. S., M. D. The career of Doctor Davidson of Louisville has been notable both for his attainments in private practice and for the work he has done in medical education and in promoting the success of several organizations for the general welfare.

He was born at Louisville, December 23, 1875. His grandfather was Capt. Joseph Davidson, an officer in the United States army. The father of Doctor Davidson was the late Joseph Thormeyer Davidson, whose memory is deeply cherished in Kentucky Masonic circles. He was born at Fort Hamilton, New York, and at the age of twelve years was brought to Louisville and remained a resident of that city until his death, June 21, 1906. For many years he was engaged in business. He was a member of the old volunteer fire department of Louisville, was active in the Broadway Christian Church, and for many years was superintendent of the old Masonic Temple at Fourth and Jefferson streets. He was made a Mason in Clark Lodge No. 51 in 1864, and subsequently affiliated with Abraham Lodge No. 8. In 1880 he became a member of Louisville Chapter, R. A. M., was a member of DeMolay Commandery, Knights Templar, and was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He served as grand tyler of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky for over thirty years, being elected in 1876. From 1876 to 1905 he was grand sentinel of the Grand Chapter, and was a member of the Grand Council in 1882-84. Joseph T. Davidson married Mary A. Davis, who was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, daughter of John W. Davis, also a native of this state and of Virginia parentage. She died in 1894, at the age of forty-eight.

Reared and educated in his native city, Doctor Davidson was first honor man of the first graduating class of the Louisville Manual Training School in 1894. He received the degree Civil Engineer at Kentucky State University in 1896, and in 1899 was graduated from the Louisville Hospital College of Medicine, subsequently taking post-graduate work in New York City in 1902 and 1907. For eight years Doctor Davidson was teacher of physiology and mathematics at the Manual Training High School in Louisville. After engaging in private practice he also managed to give some of his time to teaching, at first in the old Hospital Medical College, and for a number of years was professor of obstetrics and diseases of women in the Louisville Hospital Medical College and later professor of physiology in the University of Louisville. He also served on the staff of the Kentucky Children's Home. During the World war he volunteered for service, was commissioned a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, and for six months was in active duty at Camp Taylor, the last two months of that time being commanding officer F. A. C. O. T. S. Doctor Davidson is a member of the Phi Chi medical society, Phi Kappa Alpha college fraternity, the Jefferson County, Kentucky State, American Medical and Southern Medical associations.

Harry A. Davidson M.D.

For three years he was president of the Churchmen's Federation of Louisville. He is a deacon and active member of the Broadway Christian Church and a member of the board of directors of the Louisville Y. M. C. A. In the fall of 1920 he was one of the organizers and a charter member of the Lions Club of Louisville, and is serving as a member of the board of governors.

On June 25, 1902, Doctor Davidson married Virginia Cood Gaggs, a native of Louisville and daughter of William Carter and Alice Gertrude (Wells) Gaggs. Her parents were born in Yorkshire England, where her father was reared and educated. On coming to America he lived for several years in Chicago and later moved to Louisville, where he was associated with the old Bank of Kentucky and later with the Louisville & Nashville Railway. He was a Mason and was a past master of his home lodge in England. Mrs Davidson's mother is still living, at the age of seventy-six. Mrs. Davidson is the youngest of eight children. The three children of Doctor and Mrs. Davidson are named Harry Carter, Lloyd Johnson and Mary Virginia.

Junry Douglas Mullen. An interesting example of the success that is achieved by long continued application to one industry and one line of work is furnished in the case of Junry Douglas Mullen, who as a youth of about seventeen entered the service of the U. S. Overall Manufacturing Company at Cincinnati and has risen to important executive responsibilities in that corporation, being now factory manager of the company's plant at Newport.

Mr. Mullen was born at Goochland, Rockcastle County, Kentucky, May 11, 1884. His grandfather was a native of Ireland and an early settler in Eastern Kentucky. The father, Thomas James Mullen, was born at Maretburg, Kentucky, in 1832, was reared in the vicinity of Goochland, and spent all his life as a farmer. He served throughout the war between the states as a Confederate soldier, was a stanch democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist Church. He died at Goochland in 1898. His wife was Mary Elizabeth Marrett, who was born at Maretburg, Kentucky, in 1854, and is now living at Hamilton, Ohio, Junry Douglas being the older of her two sons. The younger, Walter C., is a grocery merchant at Louisville. Her only daughter, Bertha, is the wife of Arthur Richardson, connected with the Mosler Safe Company and a resident of Hamilton, Ohio.

Junry Douglas Mullen attended public schools near Orlando in Rockcastle County, and has been dependent upon his own labors and initiative since he was about fifteen years of age. For about six months he was employed by the J. A. Summers Manufacturing Company at Hamilton, Ohio, and from there went to work for the United States Overall Manufacturing Company in the plant at Canal and Walnut streets in Cincinnati, his first service for the company being in the humble capacity of belt boy. He learned all the technical details of the manufacturing plant, was made factory manager while in Cincinnati and opened two branch plants in that city for the corporation. In 1913 he was transferred to Newport as factory manager, when the plant was at Eighth and Monmouth streets, and under his supervision the factory was removed to the Broering Building at 513 Monmouth Street, where the business occupies the second and third floors, each 48x162 feet. Two hundred and twenty-five hands are employed at Newport, turning out men's overalls exclusively, an output that is sold throughout the nation.

Mr. Mullen now resides at Fort Thomas, owning a modern home at 254 Fort Thomas Avenue. While at Clifton he served three terms as town treasurer and as councilman two terms. He is affiliated with St. Mark's Lutheran Church at Newport. He is a member of Fort Thomas Lodge No. 808, F. and A. M., and Olive Branch Chapter of Newport, is a member of Newport Lodge No. 273, B. P. O. E., and is a democratic voter, a member of the Newport Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, of which he is treasurer, the Automobile clubs of Cincinnati and Newport, and the Kentucky Motor Club, the Men's Club of Fort Thomas, and to the Campbell County Community Service Club, which was organized during the war for the benefit of returned soldiers. He was active in committees for the sale of Liberty Bonds and raising of funds for Red Cross and other purposes.

In 1907, at Newport, Mr. Mullen married Miss Matilda Young. Her mother is Mrs. Kate Young, who lives at 8 Grant Street in Fort Thomas. Mr. and Mrs. Mullen have had three children: Douglas James, who was born September 6, 1908, and died August 6, 1921; Garnett Catherine, born January 2, 1916; and Bettie Lee, born March 3, 1917.

Douglas S. Bonar, M. D. In the City of Newport, since 1903 Doctor Bonar has found a large and profitable field for his work as a physician and surgeon. He began practice more than thirty-five years ago, and nearly all his professional career has been spent in Campbell County.

He represents one of the very first established families in Pendleton County. His great-grandfather, Charles Bonar, had an interesting experience typical of frontier days. He was born in Virginia and when a baby two years old was captured by Indians, who took him to Kentucky and held him in captivity, treating him as an Indian boy until he was sixteen years of age. He then returned to Virginia, acquired some education in that state, and later returned to Kentucky and was one of the pioneer settlers of Pendleton County, where he lived out his life. He was a civil engineer and a farmer. Near Lexington, Kentucky, he married Miss Steele.

Their son, Samuel Bonar, was born in Pendleton County in 1813, and spent nearly all his life in that county, as a teacher, farmer and road contractor. He died at his home near Butler, Kentucky, in 1881. His wife was Polly Hart, a life-long resident of Pendleton County.

William L. Bonar, father of Doctor Bonar, was born in Pendleton County in 1837, and lived there until he was seventeen years of age. He then went to the new State of Iowa, and at Stiles, in Davis County, was employed as a teacher of penmanship in a private school. It was while living in Davis County, Iowa, that his son, Douglas S. Bonar, was born January 15, 1859. In 1861 the family returned to Kentucky, where William L. Bonar resumed teaching in the public schools near Butler, and in 1868 bought a farm in that vicinity and thereafter was identified with farming interests until his death in 1897. He filled the office of local magistrate for twenty years, was an influential democrat, member of the Christian Church and the Masonic fraternity. William L. Bonar married Mary E. Penny, who was born in Indiana in 1840 and died at California in Campbell County, Kentucky, in 1917. Doctor Bonar is the oldest of three children, and the second son, Clarence, died when two years of age. Maude, the only daughter, is the wife of James Rader, a railroad man living at California, Kentucky.

Doctor Bonar was reared in Pendleton County, attended rural schools and completed the equivalent of a high school course in select schools. Subsequently he entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, graduating M. D. in 1886. He also took general post graduate courses with the classes of the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society. Beginning in 1886, he practiced one year at Butler and then came to Campbell County and for fifteen years was a resident and a busy country practitioner at California. He was the only physician in that town and also was called upon to do the work of a health officer and served as town treasurer. Since 1903 Doctor Bonar has found his talents largely engaged in a general city practice at Newport, his offices being in the Colonial Building at Third and Monmouth streets.

He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Christian Church, is a past master of Mayo Lodge No. 198, F. and A. M., at California, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and belongs to the Campbell-Kenton Medical Society, and the State and American Medical associations. He owns a modern home at 330 Linden Avenue in Southgate.

In 1884, in Pendleton County, Doctor Bonar married Miss Mary Glenn. Her parents were William and Zerilda (Boggs) Glenn, farmers of Gallatin County, Kentucky, now deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Bonar have two children, Veva C., at home, and Claude G., a resident of Southgate and a foreman in a manufacturing plant at Cincinnati

George T. Corum, M. D. The best of professional ability and stewardship is represented in the representative firm of physicians and surgeons of which Doctor Corum is a member in the City of Corbin, Whitley County, where his coadjutors in control of a specially large and important practice are Dr. L. Steely Siler and Dr. F. S. Smith.

Dr. George Tye Corum was born at Artemus, Knox County, Kentucky, March 25, 1882, his paternal grandfather, James Corum, who was born in Tennessee in 1822, having been a young man when he came to Knox County, Kentucky, and initiated his activities as a pioneer farmer in the Flat Lick district, where he passed the remainder of his life and where he was one of the substantial and honored citizens of Knox County at the time of his death, in 1897. His wife, whose family name was Fortney, passed her entire life in Knox County, and he survived her by a number of years. The father of James Corum was born in Ireland, of Scotch lineage, and became the founder of the American branch of the family, he having settled in Tennessee, which state continued to be his place of residence until his death.

George T. Corum, Sr., father of him whose name introduces this article, was born on the Flat Lick homestead farm in Knox County in the year 1846, and his death occurred at Artemus in that county in 1888, when his son, Dr. George T., was but six years of age. He became one of the substantial and prosperous farmers and influential citizens of his native county, and was also one of the most extensive and successful buyers and shippers of livestock in this section of Kentucky. He was a staunch Republican, and though he had no special ambition for public office he gave four years of effective service as sheriff of Knox County. His religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, and his widow is a devoted member of the Christian Church, she being now a loved member of the family circle of her son, Dr. George T. Her maiden name was Mary Herndon and she was born at Artemus, Knox County, in 1852. Of the children the eldest is Miss Lucy, who likewise resides in the home of her brother, Dr. George T.; Dr. John Lewis is a prosperous farmer in the vicinity of the City of Lexington, in which city he has until recently been actively engaged in the practice of his profession as a leading physician and surgeon in Fayette County; Ninian Chamberlain is engaged in mercantile business at Terrill, Madison County; Ada is the wife of Benjamin F. Huls, a farmer near Westchester, Ohio; Dr. George T., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Henry Franklin is successfully identified with farm industry near the City of Chattanooga, Tennessee; Katherine is the wife of John Clay Williams, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession at Slick, Oklahoma; and Thomas J. is a progressive farmer in the old home district near Flat Lick, Knox County.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county, Dr. George T. Corum pursued a course of higher study in Union College at Barbourville and after thus fortifying himself in an academic way he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1909 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Thereafter he served three months as an interne in the Kentucky Insane Asylum at Lexington, and during the ensuing period of three and one-half years he was engaged in the general practice of his profession at Belljellico, Bell County. Next he gave a similar period of effective professional service at Wilton, Knox County, and in 1916 went to Oklahoma and established himself in practice at Stroud, where he remained until 1919, in September of which year he engaged in practice at Corbin, one of the progressive little cities of Kentucky, where he has since continued his effective service in his exacting profession, he and his professional associates in the representative firm of physicians and surgeons maintaining well appointed offices in rooms above the Sutherland drug store, on Center Street. The doctor owns his attractive home property, on Master Street, where he has a modern house of ten rooms, and aside from his professional interests he is president of the Corbin Brick Company and a stockholder the Bell National Bank at Pineville, Bell County, and the State Security Bank at Corbin. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and he holds membership in the Christian Church in his home city. At Artemus, Knox County, he is affiliated with Mountain Lodge No. 187, Free and Accepted Masons; his capitular affiliation is with Kenten Chapter No. 148, Royal Arch Masons, at Williamsburg, Whitley County, in which place he holds membership, also in Cumberland Commandery No. 40, Knights Templars; besides which he is a member of Kosair Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Louisville. Doctor Corum is actively identified with the Whitley County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He was a loyal worker in the furtherance of local war activities and service during the period of American association with the World war, and his financial contributions to the various mediums of war support were of consistent liberality.

On February 12, 1911, at Cumberland Gap, Tennessee, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Corum to Miss Cora Campbell, daughter of Henry and Mollie (Taylor) Campbell, her father being a representative farmer near Barbourville, Knox County, Kentucky. Mrs. Corum received excellent educational advantages, including those of Smith's Business College in the City of Lexington, in which she was graduated. Doctor and Mrs. Corum have three children—Dabney Ray, born February 14, 1912; Ruth, born April 6, 1913; and Lewis Townsley, born March 30, 1915.

William F. Carter, M. D. It has been a privilege of utmost consistency to accord in this publication recognition to a large percentage of the representative physicians and surgeons of the various Kentucky counties, and in Rockcastle County such consideration is due Dr. William Farmer Carter, who is engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Brodhead. He maintains his well appointed offices in the building of the Citizens Bank of Brodhead, in which institution he is a stockholder and director.

Doctor Carter claims the fine old Blue Grass state as the place of his nativity and is a scion of an old and honored pioneer family of this commonwealth. His paternal grandfather, Jordan W. Carter, was born in Owen County, Kentucky, and there passed his entire life, save for the period of his service as a loyal soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, the exposures and other hardships of which undoubtedly shortened his life. He was born in Owen County in the year 1823 and there his death occurred in 1883, he having been one of the substantial farmers and influential citizens of his native county. His father, Thomas Carter, was born in Lee County, Virginia, was reared and educated in the Old Dominion state and was a young man when he established himself as a pioneer in Owen County, Kentucky, where he became the owner of a large landed estate and through his farm enterprise became a man of wealth and influence. In that county his marriage occurred, and there he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. Jordan W. Carter married Miss Amanda Thomas, who was born in Owen County, in 1834, and she survived him by more than fifteen years, her death having occurred in Shelby County in 1899.

Henry Giles, the maternal grandfather of Doctor Carter, was born in New York City and passed the closing years of his life in Owen County, Kentucky. His father, Aquilla Giles, was a general in the war during George Washington's administration. Henry Giles was graduated in the United States Military Academy at West Point when twenty-one years of age, and soon afterward he ran away from home and became a pioneer farmer in Owen County, Kentucky. Splendid success attended his vigorous activities in the state of his adoption, and he became one of the influential and prominent citizens of Owen County, of which he was a representative for one term in the State Legislature. His wife, whose maiden name was Maria Smither, was born in Owen County, and there both maintained their home until the close of their lives. The original progenitors of the American branch of the Giles family came from England and settled in New York City prior to the War of the Revolution.

Dr. William F. Carter was born in Owen County, Kentucky, on the 26th of January, 1880, and in the same county were born his parents, Joseph F. and Alva Maria (Giles) Carter, who now reside in Shelby County, this state. Joseph F. Carter was born in the year 1848, was reared and educated in Owen County, and there he continued for many years as a successful exponent of farm industry, as the owner of a large and valuable landed estate. He retired from the active management of his farm in 1911, and, as before stated, he and his wife now reside in Shelby County, both being zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his political allegiance being given to the democratic party. Mrs. Carter was born in Owen County in the year 1852, there received her early education and there her marriage was solemnized. Of the children the first born was Henry, who died at the age of twenty years, while visiting in Carter County, this state; Charles is a prosperous farmer in Shelby County; Rev. Jordan W. is a clergyman and traveling evangelist of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and maintains his home at Harriman, Tennessee; Mary Robert is the wife of O. D. Rowlett, a leading farmer in Shelby County; Dr. William F., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; N. Giles is president of the Manufacturers National Bank at Harriman, Tennessee; Elizabeth is the wife of Henry Taylor, a representative farmer in Shelby County, Kentucky; Margaret is the wife of J. Hiner Thomas, cashier of the First National Bank of Forest City, North Carolina; and Joseph is successfully engaged in farm enterprise in Shelby County.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county Doctor Carter in 1902 attended the Wesleyan College at Winchester, Kentucky, and in 1904 entered the Hospital College of Medicine in the City of Louisville. In this institution he completed the prescribed four years' course and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine on the 31st of July, 1907. In the same year he established his residence at Brodhead, where he has built up a substantial and representative general practice, in connection with which he exemplified modern ideas and service in medical and surgical science. By frequently attending leading clinics in the City of Louisville he keeps in close touch with advances made in his profession, even as he does through recourse to the best standard and periodical literature of his profession. Adjoining the village limits of Brodhead is the fine farm of seventy acres owned by Doctor Carter, and one mile north of the village he owns another well improved farm of 118 acres, besides which he is the owner of valuable realty at Brodhead and a farm of 142 acres in the state of Florida. He has shown much discrimination in his real-estate investments and has recently sold a tract of 230 acres of farm land which he had acquired in Rockcastle County.

Doctor Carter by political heritage and conviction is a staunch democrat, and he and his wife are zealous members of the local Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he holds the office of steward. The doctor is an active member of the Rockcastle County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is affiliated with Brodhead Lodge No. 566, Free and Accepted Masons; Brodhead Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America; and holds membership also in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He took active part in the various war activities in Rockcastle County, and made liberal investment in the various Government bonds, savings stamps, etc., besides giving loyal financial and personal support to other agencies contributing to the nation's effective service in the World war.

On the 24th of June, 1909, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Carter to Miss Elizabeth Hicks, who was born and reared in Rockcastle County, and whose parents, Larkin and Mary (Newcomb) Hicks, reside at Brodhead, where the father was formerly engaged in the lumber business. Mr. Hicks, who is now living retired, was a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. Doctor and Mrs. Carter have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Charles Hicks, April 13, 1911; Mary Elizabeth, September 27, 1912; and Marguerite Maria, September 27, 1912, the two winsome daughters being twins whose general resemblance is so close that even close friends of the family are unable to distinguish them apart.

Claude W. Spears is proving a worthy successor of his father as a representative of industrial enterprise in Fayette County, where he has continued his father's activities in the raising of standard-bred horses of the best Kentucky type and where he is also engaged in raising other live stock and in agricultural enterprise, with special attention given to the raising of tobacco. His fine homestead farm is situated near Bryan Station and the Briar Hill Turnpike, 7½ miles northeast of the City of Lexington. He is a member of a well-known family concerning which further record is given on other pages of this publication.

Claude Wilmore Spears was born in Jessamine County, Kentucky, on the 2d of October, 1877, and in the following spring his parents returned to their old homestead farm in Fayette County, on the Maysville Turnpike, nine miles east of Lexington, and on that farm the father, William L. Spears, remained until his death, on the 2d of August, 1915, his widow, whose maiden name was Lida Phelps, still maintaining her home in this county. It was on this homestead that Claude W. Spears was reared to manhood, and in the meanwhile he was afforded excellent educational advantages. As a boy and youth he was closely associated with his father's activities in the raising of fine trotting horses, the father having been prominently identified with this interesting field of enterprise for twenty years, within which he bred and sold as colts many fine horses which gained high honors on the American turf, he having maintained on his farm a well-equipped training track. Among the famous horses bred and trained on this farm may be mentioned the following: "Trampfast," which became the world's champion as a two-year-old; "Colorado E.," with a record of 2:04¼ as a three-year-old; "Susie," with a record of 2:06½, and with fine standing as a road mare; "J. McGregor," 2:07¼, this animal having been owned and maintained on the racing circuit during one season by William L. Spears, and having won in turn prizes amounting to $32,000, after which he was sold by Mr. Spears for $20,000. Mr. Spears was a director of the Union Bank & Trust Company of Lexington and his son Claude W. is his successor in this position.

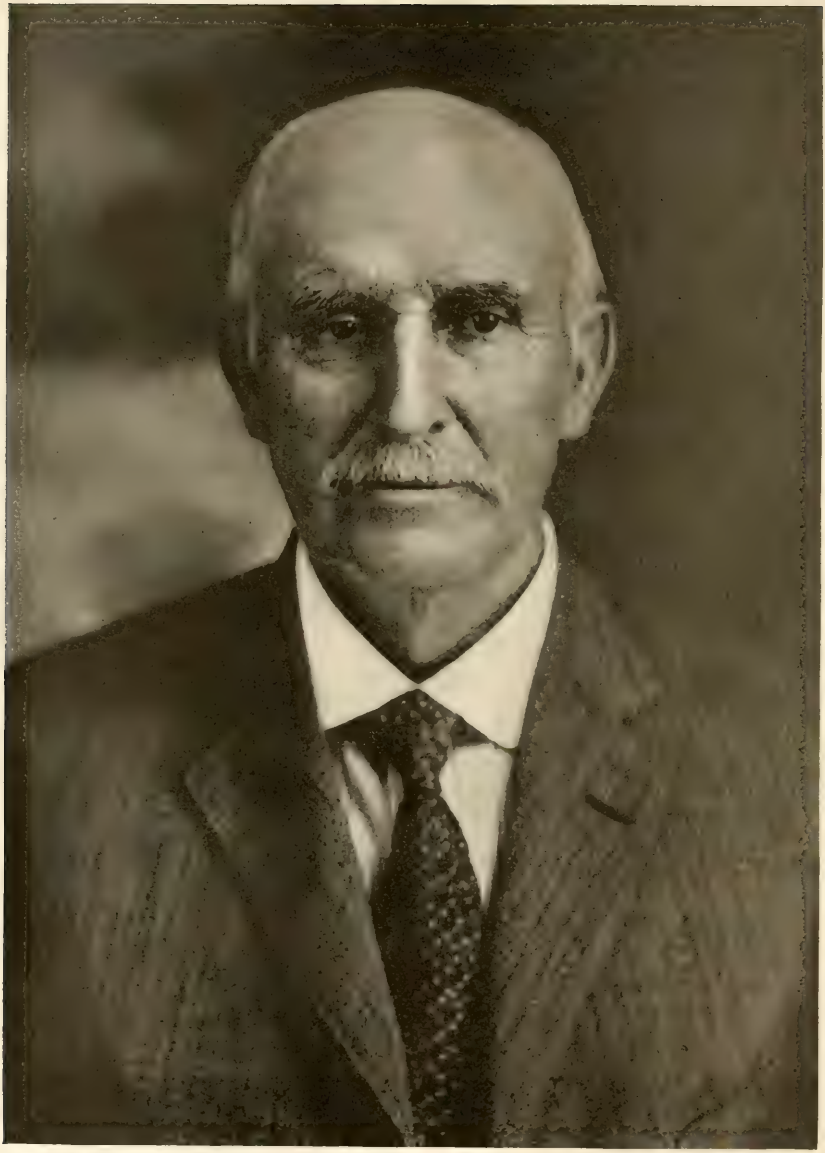
Claude W. Spears purchased his present home farm in 1913, this being the old Shropshire place of 66 2/3 acres. Here he erected a modern brick house of attractive architectural design and best equipment, one of the model rural homes of this section of the county. Mr. Spears is associated with Charles M. Marshall in the ownership of the old Van Meter farm of 181 acres, and on this place they are specializing in the raising of tobacco, with an average annual production of about 100,000 pounds of burley leaf of the best quality. In his farm enterprise Mr. Spears raises from 150 to 200 hogs annually, and in the field of turf events and the raising of standardbred horses he is still deeply interested, especially in matinee events, in which racing is held for sport or records.

Mr. Spears is found loyally arrayed in the ranks of the democratic party. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club in the City of Lexington, and is there a director of the Tattersall Tobacco Warehouse Company, for which he is superintendent of sales. He is secretary and treasurer of the Coleman Mining Company at Foxridge, Bell County, this company having been engaged in the mining of coal for the past fourteen years, and its average production at the present time being about seven carloads daily. The father of Mr. Spears was one of the organizers of this corporation.



In the year 1901 Mr. Spears wedded Miss Bessie Ashhurst, daughter of Lloyd Ashhurst, of Bourbon County, and she passed to the life eternal on the 2d of April, 1912. The two children of this union are Raymond L. and Robert. On the 19th of November, 1914, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Spears to Miss Katherine Dudley, daughter of Ambrose Dudley, of Bourbon County, and she is the gracious and popular chatelaine of the attractive family home, which is known for its generous hospitality and good cheer.

W. B. Freeman, of Richmond, who has during seventy-three odd years had an intensive and extensive experience, is an ex-Confederate veteran, has been a successful farmer both in Missouri and in Kentucky, and is one of the large land owners in Madison County and still does an extensive business in the buying and selling of farms.

Mr. Freeman was born in Madison County, Kentucky, August 25, 1848. His paternal ancestors came to Virginia from England in Colonial times. His grandfather, Moab Freeman, was born in Culpeper County, Virginia, and as a young man moved to Madison County, Kentucky, where he acquired a farm and also subsequently owned thousands of acres in the mountainous district of Eastern Kentucky. He died in Estill County in 1851. He married in Madison County Cheney Bentley who died in 1826, on the farm subsequently owned by her son, E. B. Freeman, near Richmond. E. B. Freeman was born September 20, 1826, the year his mother died, his birthplace being six miles northeast of Richmond. He grew up on that farm, married in Madison County, and had extensive interests as a farmer and dealer in livestock. During the '50s he removed to Randolph County, Missouri, and while there he enlisted in the Confederate army and went to Texas with Col. Caleb Perkins' regiment of mounted cavalry. There he was transferred to Colonel Lane's First Texas Cavalry in the fall of 1862, and was with that command until the close of the war. From the ranks he rose to a second lieutenancy, and his service was largely that of a courier. He was in the battles of Shreveport, Louisiana, Cane Hill, Arkansas, Little Rock and others, and was severely wounded in the head at Shreveport, being unconscious for six months. In 1896 he returned to Kentucky and located in Estill County, where he lived until his death in 1901. He was a democrat and a very stanch Baptist. E. B. Freeman married Susan Eades, who was born at the mouth of Mud Creek in Madison County June 16, 1828. Her father, Lewis Eades, was born in Muhlenberg County, Kentucky, became a planter and slaveholder, and was killed in Madison County by his slaves during the Civil war. He had served as a soldier in the War of 1812. Lewis Eades married Dorcas Ann Duley, who was born on Duley Bottoms in Madison County, and as a small child was a refugee with other members of the family in Boone's Fort at Boonesboro. She died in Madison County. E. B. Freeman and wife had three children: Dorcas Ann, W. B. and Cynthia. Cynthia died in childhood. Dorcas Ann, who died in Randolph County, Missouri, in 1874, was first married to James H. Oliver, who was a farmer and a Confederate soldier and died in Red River County, Texas. Her second husband was Frank Parker, also a Confederate soldier, who is still living on his farm in Randolph County, Missouri. The mother of these children died in Dade County, Missouri, in 1883.

W. B. Freeman was reared on his father's farm in Randolph County, Missouri. He attended rural schools there and in the spring of 1864, before he was sixteen, enlisted for service in the Confederate army of General Sterling Price. He joined Frank Davis' Company in Monroe County, Missouri, and after six weeks was with Tuck Powell's Company under Col. Caleb Perkins. He was detailed for General Marmaduke's staff, and was on the way to General Marmaduke's headquarters when that Confederate leader was captured. In the fall of 1864 Perkins' regiment started south from Missouri and reached the Missouri River at Roachport, where they made boats out of planks, on which they crossed the stream, swimming their horses alongside. The regiment comprised 1,165. On the Booneville and Springfield road they met Price's army, then on its way for its great invasion of Missouri. With the main command they proceeded to Booneville, where they captured 800 Federal troops, were then at Marshall in Saline County, proceeded to Independence, near what is now Kansas City, and spent two days in the constant fighting in that section, that campaign taking them to the very edge of Kansas. The Yankees followed them to Lutonia, Missouri, where Mr. Freeman and his comrades left all their arms, and their ammunition train was burned. In the retreat they went through Arkansas and Indian Territory to within ten miles of the Red River, where they met trains loaded with provisions. Frequently for three days at a time they were without food, and out of 1,265 cavalry horses all but sixty-five died of starvation on the road before reaching Red River. The command then recuperated at Clarksville in Red River County, and while there Mr. Freeman's father came and secured his transfer in General Lane's command, with which detail he continued until the end of the war. When his command disbanded he went to Waxahachie, Ellis County, Texas, and for a number of weeks remained there prostrated by weakness due to long exposure. He contracted pneumonia, but got well without the aid of a physician. With other refugees Mr. Freeman returned to Missouri and surrendered in Saline County July 2, 1865.

Soon after getting back to the old home in Randolph County he took the first train to Winchester,

J. Hood Smith

Kentucky, and lived there with relatives. After his marriage he went back to Randolph County, and was successfully engaged in farming there until 1904.

On returning to Kentucky Mr. Freeman conducted a bakery at Richmond, bought a farm in 1906, operated it three years and since then has owned, operated and sold many farms in this section. He still owns much real estate and farm lands, including a 300 acre farm at Cane Spring in Madison County, a place of 113 acres seven miles east of Richmond and one of the very attractive modern homes of Richmond, on West Main Street.

Mr. Freeman is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has been affiliated with the Lodge of Masons at Huntsville, Missouri, for thirty-five years. Having been through one war he did not welcome America's participation in the world struggle, though when this country was finally embarked in the war he aided the cause with all his means and influence.

At Cincinnati November 19, 1866, Mr. Freeman married Miss Sallie Ann Hisle, daughter of Lewis and Clarissa (Combs) Hisle. Her father was a Madison County farmer. Mr. Freeman lost his first wife in 1889, after they had been married twenty-three years. Of their children Lewis went out to Montana and became a very successful man in that state, owning thousands of acres of wheat land, and also three moving picture theaters at Great Falls, where he died in 1919. The daughter Ellen died at Huntsville, Missouri, at the age of twenty-three, wife of Ben Davis, who died at Moberly, Missouri. Another child, Susie, died at the age of six months, and there were two others who died in infancy. The only surviving child of Mr. Freeman is his daughter Clara, living at Richmond, wife of George Dunbar. Her son, Lewis William Dunbar, is a veteran of the World war and is a real estate broker at Richmond, and also secretary and treasurer of the Madison County Farm Loan Bureau. In 1901, in Dallas County, Missouri, Mr. Freeman married Mrs. Jennie (Reed) Caldwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Reed, now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Polk County, Missouri.

John Hood Smith. For many years a resident of Winchester, a successful business man, popular citizen and extensively interested in banking, agricultural and other affairs in this section of Kentucky, John Hood Smith comes of an old Montgomery County family and was born at Mount Sterling November 15, 1846.

He is the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Hayden) Smith, the former a native of Montgomery and the latter of Clark County. The paternal grandfather, William Smith, came from Virginia and was a pioneer in the vicinity of the present Mount Sterling. He died when past middle life. One of his sons, Berry, went to Missouri, but later returned and died at Cynthiana, Kentucky. His daughter Lydia married Samuel Ramsey and also moved out to Missouri. Another son, Joseph, spent his life in Missouri.

Henry Smith was born in 1809, and lived out his life in Montgomery County between Sharksburg and Mount Sterling on the Maysville Pike. He died in 1889. He was a plain and unpretentious but very successful farmer and stockman. For many years he was a drover of cattle and mules, and carried on his buying and selling operations on a large scale. He made many trips with hogs on foot to South Carolina. While he paid only a dollar and a quarter or two dollars a hundred, he had to sell at figures so low as to leave him on the loss side of the account. He frequently took large droves of mules to the South, especially to Alabama. John Hood Smith accompanied him on one of his trips to Alabama. It was during reconstruction times, and while they visited the capital at Montgomery Mr. Smith saw with his own eyes the evidences of carpet bag government, negroes sitting in the Legislature. Elizabeth Hayden, wife of Henry Smith, was born six miles northeast of Winchester, on Stoner Creek, at the farm of her father, Jere Hayden. Her brother Samuel never married and spent his life as a farmer and mule dealer at Pilot View, where he died. Andrew Hayden lived in the same community, and his descendants are now living at Louisville. Nine children were born to Henry and Elizabeth Smith, and the six to reach mature years were: Jane, who married R. G. McDaniel and moved out to Clinton County, Missouri, and is now living at King City, Missouri; James H. who died a bachelor at the old homestead at the age of eighty-three; John Hood; Richard M., who owns the old homestead and lives at Mount Sterling; Betty, widow of James Monroe Armstrong, living at Knoxville, Tennessee; and Darwin L., a retired farmer at Carlisle, Kentucky.

John Hood Smith was named by his parents in honor of a noted country physician, Dr. John Hood. After coming to manhood he lived for about twenty-six years on and operated the Doc Lewis farm on the Louisville and Nashville Railway, two and a quarter miles from Winchester. There he operated as a hemp, tobacco, corn, wheat and hay farmer, and also did an extensive business with hogs and sheep. He had about two thousand dollars working capital. After twenty-five years he bought the farm of his wife's father at Judy, five miles northeast of Mount Sterling, comprising a hundred eighty-three acres, and also a hundred acres nearby. However, he never occupied this farm as his home. When he sold the land it commanded a hundred twenty-five dollars an acre, a price that was talked of for days, yet at the present time it is worth four hundred dollars an acre.

April 28, 1870, Mr. Smith married Carrie F. Thompson, whose father, Van Thompson, was the only child of this prominent old family that came from Virginia. Van Thompson married Mary Wood, and both died at the old homestead. Of their ten children those besides Mrs. Smith still living are: George, of Paris, Kentucky; Frank, a bachelor; Lou, wife of J. W. Graves, of Mount Sterling; and Anna, of Louisville.

For the past twenty-three years Mr. Smith has lived at his present home in Winchester. He is president of the Winchester Granite Brick Company of Dudley in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, on the Louisville & Nashville Railway. This is a corporation operating on fifty thousand dollar capital, and does a large business in sand and brick. As president, director and treasurer Mr. Smith gives a general oversight to the industry. He was one of the original directors of the Peoples State Bank, and is still on the board and is a stockholder in the Clark County National Bank. He laid out the small residence section of Manchester. Mr. Smith is a democrat, but has no taste for official affairs, and is a member of the Christian Church.

He and his wife became the parents of six sons: Charles R., who lives in Clark County; Lawrence, a government employe at Boston, Massachusetts; Henry, formerly a jeweler at Greenfield, Indiana, but who died of tuberculosis at Tucson, Arizona, at the age of thirty; William Garner, unmarried, and who is general agent of the Travelers Life Insurance Company at San Francisco; Edwin Taylor, a shoedealer at Winchester; and Walter Hood, who was a clerk in the Peoples Bank and died of tuberculosis at the age of thirty-one.

Rev. Jesse J. Haley. The long and full life of Rev. Jesse J. Haley, now a resident of the pretty little City of Cynthiana, has been crowded with useful labors and notable accomplishments on several continents and in various parts of his own country. A minister of the Christian Church, he is now, in the evening of his life, somewhat retired from active endeavor, but is at present acting as substitute in the church at Cynthiana, a community in which he is greatly revered and venerated.

Reverend Haley was born in Rockcastle County, Kentucky, March 18, 1851, a son of John and Julia Anderson (Fish) Haley, natives of Kentucky, and a grandson on the paternal side of natives of Virginia and on the maternal side of North Carolina. His maternal grandfather, Jesse Fish, was one of the prominent men of his part of Kentucky, and at various times in his career held practically every office in the county within the gift of his fellow-citizens. Walker Haley, an uncle of Reverend Haley, was a member of the Kentucky Senate. John Haley, father of Reverend Haley, represented three counties in the Lower House of the State Legislature, and at the time of his death, when twenty-nine years old, was the youngest member of that body. John and Julia Haley were the parents of three children: One who died in infancy; Martha E. is the wife of J. M. Aldridge, of Clarke County, Kentucky; and Jesse J.

Jesse J. Haley was reared on a farm in the vicinity of Winchester, Kentucky, where he secured his primary education in the public schools, and in 1869 entered the Kentucky University at Lexington, from which he was graduated after a full course, with the degree of Master of Arts. Following this he spent one year at Butler College, Indianapolis, Indiana, and in 1873 was ordained a minister of the Christian Church. For one year thereafter he had a charge at Columbus, Mississippi. On April 13, 1874, Reverend Haley married Miss Elizabeth Clark, a sister of the late Champ Clark and a graduate of the Female Orphans' School of Midway, Kentucky, and on the following day the young couple left for Australia to engage in the work of the ministry. Arriving at Sydney, New South Wales, Reverend Haley preached in that city for two years, following which he spent a like period at Dunedin, New Zealand, and then went to Melbourne. During the six years that he spent in this city he accomplished what he has always felt was the best work of his entire career. In addition to his regular labors as an occupant of the pulpit and a spiritual guide and affectionate friend to his parishioners, he served as editor of a religious paper and did much to aid the cause of Christianity. Returning to the United States in 1885, he preached for one year at San Francisco, and upon coming back to Kentucky, spent two years at Midway. He then became office editor of the Christian Evangelist, for which paper he wrote editorially for a period of twenty-five years. In 1890 he again left the United States, going to Liverpool, England, where he spent five years. On his return he took charge of the Christian Church at Cynthiana, where he remained nine years, and during this time the fine stone house of worship was erected. He was next called to the Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Virginia, whre he remained as pastor four years and two months, but in 1908 resigned and went to California, and has since been out of the regular active ministry, although he is now supplying the pulpit of Rev. Joseph Armistead at Cynthiana. While he makes his home here, Reverend Haley has large interests in California, being a large rancher and fruit grower near Lodi, in the San Joaquin Valley. Throughout his career he has written for the religious press, and has found time in the midst of his engrossing and multitudinous labors to produce two books, which have met with much favor, "Makers and Moulders of the Reformation Movement," and "Debates That Made History." He has contributed to a number of the leading books of the disciples, such as "The Old Faith Restated," "The New Living Pulpit of the Christian Church," "Missouri Lectureship," "Our First Congress" and "Doctrinal Helps" in the "Front Rank Bible" issued by the Christian Board of Publication, St. Louis, Missouri. Sketches of Doctor Haley are to be found in "Who's Who in America," in "The International Who's Who," published in London and in a History of Australia, published in Melbourne. He goes shortly to California to terminate his business there, whence he expects to retire to Florida, where he will make his future home at Eustis in Lake County.

Five children have been born to Reverend and Mrs. Haley: Sydney C., a poet and writer of distinction, who died at the age of thirty-five years; Jessie H., the wife of John K. Kerksis, of Atlanta, Georgia; Ann B., the wife of R. G. Williamson, of Macon, Georgia; Frances E., the wife of Olin I. Chiles, of Lakeland, Florida; and Helen, the wife of R. E. Keagle, formerly of Stockton, California, but now a resident of Hanes City, Florida.

Damon McCloskey Cooper. While sedulously cultivating varied and prosperous interests as an able lawyer and member of the Elizabethtown bar for the past seventeen years, Mr. Cooper is also well known outside his profession, particularly in the Knights of Columbus organization, with which he has long been identified and in which he has enjoyed many prominent honors and was one of the Kentucky leaders in the organization in raising funds and otherwise promoting its objects for war relief.

Mr. Cooper was born on a farm near Vine Grove in Hardin County September 10, 1876, a son of Edward S. and Georgia A. (Norris) Cooper, being of Scotch Irish in the paternal line and Irish through his Norris ancestry. His grandfather, Henry Cooper, was a native of Maryland and was four years of age when his parents came to Kentucky in 1808 and settled in Washington County. Grandfather James Norris was a native of either Nelson County, Kentucky, or of Maryland, the family having been established in Kentucky at a very early day. Hardin County has been the home of branches of the Norris and Cooper families for a great many years.

Edward S. and Georgia A. (Norris) Cooper were born in Hardin County, were married at Elizabethtown and they then lived on a farm. Edward S. Cooper died in 1877, at the age of forty, and when his son Damon was a year old. He was survived by three sons and one daughter. The mother of these children is now seventy-three and resides at Vine Grove. Her second husband was James L. Peak.

Damon McCloskey Cooper spent his boyhood on a farm and had to work for his advantages and his opportunities. He was educated in the rural schools and for eight years was a teacher in Kentucky, Indiana and Iowa. In Iowa he taught in the McGregor town school. He was graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree from Valparaiso University in Indiana in 1902. He studied law in Center College at Danville, Kentucky, graduating in 1905, and was admitted to the bar at Lexington the same year. In July, 1905, he opened his office at Elizabethtown, and has since been one of the leading members of the bar of that city.

Mr. Cooper is a past state deputy of the Knights of Columbus. He was state deputy of the organization during the World war period. The twenty Kentucky councils of the Knights of Columbus raised nearly $100,000 for welfare work, and Mr. Cooper was one of the most prominent leaders in that enterprise. He served as representative of the Supreme Board of the Knights of Columbus, and supervised the construction and equipment of the Knights of Columbus headquarters at Camp Knox. During the "seven in one" drive Mr. Cooper was district secretary in charge of six counties. He also served as food administrator for Hardin County, was a member of the County Council of Defense and on the executive committee of the Red Cross. He is at this time state lecturer of the order in Kentucky and is a representative of the Knights of Columbus in the Kentucky council of Americanism and a member of its executive committee. Mr. Cooper is a Catholic and a democrat.

In 1913 he married Miss Ada McDermott, of Elizabethtown. They are the parents of three children.

JOHN WADE WALKER during his youth satisfied his taste for adventure by serving four years and five months in the United States Navy. After his discharge he taught and attended school, studied law, and for a number of years has been one of the leading members of the Estill County bar and is the present county attorney.

He was born at Driprock in Jackson County, Kentucky, April 28, 1887. His grandfather, Stephen D. Walker, was a Kentuckian and was born in Madison County, where he owned a farm and resided all his life. He died at White's Station in that county in 1892. His wife was Miss Paulina Jane Cornelison, also a Kentuckian, who died at White's Station in 1902. Their son, the late Dr. John Wade Walker, was one of twelve children. He was born at White's Station and during his active career earned high rank as a physician and surgeon, practicing in Madison, Estill and Jackson counties. He was a graduate of the Louisville Medical College. He died at White's Station in 1889, when his son and namesake was two years old. He had served as coroner of Estill County, was a democrat in politics, a regular member of the Presbyterian Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His first wife was Miss Gum, a native of Estill County, where she died, and her only son, Stephen, died in infancy. The second wife of Doctor Walker was Mary Frances Williams, who was born in Jackson County in 1864. Her father, Rev. Absalom B. Williams, was born in Ashe County, North Carolina, and early removed to Clay County, Kentucky, later removing to Driprock in Jackson County, where he died. His wife was Terrissee H. Edwards, who was born in Lee County, Virginia, in 1834. She died at Driprock several years ago. By the second marriage of Doctor Walker there are two sons, John Wade being the older, while William is a pilot on the Great Lakes and makes his winter home at Irvine. The mother of these sons is now Mrs. Abijah Wilson, of Irvine. By this marriage there are two children, Mattie and Elmer.

John Wade Walker attended rural schools in Jackson County, the town schools at Irvine, and in 1903, at the age of sixteen, enlisted in the United States Navy as an ordinary seaman. He was in the service four years and five months, and when discharged in 1908 had the rating of quartermaster. He soon afterward entered and took a business course in the Ferris Institute at Big Rapids, Michigan, and in 1910 taught in the public schools of Irvine. He returned to the Ferris Institute for a summer term in 1911, and during 1912 was a student in the Eastern Kentucky State Normal at Richmond. In the meantime he studied law, was admitted to the bar at Winchester in 1911, and from 1913 to 1916 was editor and publisher of the Irvine Sun.

Since retiring from newspaper work he has devoted his time to the general practice of law at Irvine. He performed the duties of city attorney for a time, and in November, 1917, was elected on the republican ticket as county attorney of Estill County, beginning his four years' term in January, 1918. He was reelected in November, 1921, for a second term.

Mr. Walker is a member of the Baptist Church and has been superintendent of its Sunday School for several years. He is affiliated with Irvine Lodge No. 137, F. and A. M., Irvine Lodge No. 173, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Mountain Home Council No. 159, Junior Order United American Mechanics at Pitts, Improved Order of Red Men, and is a member of the Kentucky State Bar Association. During the World war he was chairman of the Home Service Section of the American Red Cross, and made many speeches over the county and otherwise gave the full strength of his personal influence and means to the prosecution of the war.

He married Miss Anna Mae Mather at Irvine June 20, 1918. She was born in Larue County, Kentucky, was educated in the rural schools in the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond, and the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green, and taught in the Larue County schools and in the schools of Irvine. Her parents were William Mather, of Larue County, and Mary Stella Cates, who was born in Hart County, Kentucky. They both died in Larue County, near Hodgenville, several years ago. Mrs. Walker is one of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Mather. One sister, Mrs. Thomas D. Vittitow, resides at Ravenna, Kentucky, and her brother, Robert Mather, resides at Irvine. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have one son, John Wade, Jr., born March 4, 1920.

J. B. LINNEMANN, one of the county commissioners of Kenton County, is a veteran business man, for many years actively identified with merchandising at Covington and still carrying on an extensive insurance business in that city. His business career has been one to beget confidence in his judgment and integrity, and his official connections have had an important bearing on the progressive era of the city.

Mr. Linnemann was born in Oldenburg, Germany, October 6, 1857. His father, J. B. Linnemann, was born in the same city in 1824, was reared and married and pursued the occupation of farmer in Germany, and about 1878 came to the United States and located at Cincinnati, where he was employed as a shop worker. He died at Cincinnati in 1906. He became a democrat after acquiring American citizenship, and was a member of the Catholic Church. J. B. Linnemann married Annie Polschnider, who was born in Oldenburg in 1828 and died at Cincinnati in 1908. They were the parents of seven children: Elizabeth, who died at Ludlow, Kentucky, at the age of sixty-eight, was the wife of the late B. Burnholt, an employe of the Cincinnati Coffin Company; Henry, a Cincinnati merchant who died at Redbank, that city, in 1915; Agnes, wife of Henry Sanders, of Cincinnati; J. B. Linnemann; Frank, who was born in 1860 and is night watchman for the Union Savings Bank & Trust Company of Covington; Bernadine, wife of Henry Korst, a shoe manufacturer living at Bellevue, Kentucky, and Annie, wife of Joseph Siefke, a merchant living at Norwood, Cincinnati.

J. B. Linnemann acquired a public school education in Oldenburg, but as a boy came to the United States and located at Cincinnati, where in the interval of self-supporting employment he attended night school to further his education. He was fifteen years of age when he went to work in a baker's shop at Cincinnati, and remained there two years. For a period of ten years he was proprietor of a cafe, and then engaged in business at Covington as a general merchant. For thirty years he conducted a store and had intimate business relations with the merchants of the city. Since retiring in 1918 he has been in the insurance business, connected with the firm of J. H. Dressman & Company in the Cohen Building.

Throughout his business career he has exerted a stimulating influence in local affairs. His first important public office was his election in 1893 as a member of the Covington School Board. He served one year. In 1894 he was chosen to represent the Fifth Ward in the City Council, and in 1897 was elected for a four year term on the Board of Aldermen. During this time he was instrumental as an adviser and planner in the movement to secure the erection of the City Building at the corner of Court Avenue and Third Street. Mr. Linnemann was chosen a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Kenton County in 1913, and in 1917 was reelected for another four year term, which expired December 3, 1921. During these eight years he faithfully looked after the interests entrusted to his charge. He is an enthusiast on the subject of good roads and has been directly instrumental in securing some of the modern highway construction in Kenton County, notably the portion of the Dixie Highway between Covington and the Boone County line and the section of the Madison Pike between Covington and Independence.

Mr. Linnemann is a democrat, is a member of the Catholic Church, Bishop Carroll Council Lodge No. 702, Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Knights of America, and was one of the men of influence who insured the success of various patriotic drives in this county during the World war. He went out as a salesman of Liberty Bonds, and gave much time to the Red Cross campaigns, besides contributing of his own means to the utmost of his ability.

Mr. Linnemann is a stockholder in the Security Savings Bank of Covington, the First National Bank of Covington and the Hatfield Coal Company. He believes in Covington's future, and has wisely invested in local real estate, owning several dwellings and two business buildings, besides his own modern home at 247 West Eighth Street.

In 1880, at Covington, Mr. Linnemann married Miss Elizabeth Meyerhoff, daughter of H. and Annie Meyerhoff, now deceased. Her father was a well known railroad man and for thirty-four years was in the service of one railroad company. Mr. and Mrs. Linnemann have five children: Edward, the oldest, is a broker at Covington; Annie, who died at Covington in 1917, was the wife of William B. Huesing, who lives with Mr. Linnemann and is assistant cashier in the Fifth-Third Bank of Cincinnati; Julia is the wife of Frank Middendorf, connected with the Fleischman Company and a resident of Chicago; Dora, the wife of Roy Flannikan, living at the Linnemann home, Mr. Flannikan being agent for the American Railway Express; and Heinette, a nun and a member of the Order of St. Frances at Oldenburg, Indiana.

James Kirtley Ammerman represents a family that for a century or more has been successfully identified with the rural life of Harrison and adjoining counties in Kentucky. Mr. Ammerman is living today on the farm where he was born, 3¼ miles southwest of Cynthiana. As a youth he chose the vocation of farming, and has enjoyed a satisfaction and material reward from that industry that has well justified his choice.

Mr. Ammerman was born July 25, 1881, son of Richard H. and Luella (Jameson) Ammerman, also natives of Harrison County, and for many years they had their home on the Ammerman homestead. In 1916 they removed to Cynthiana, where the father died in 1919 and where the mother is still living. Both were active members of the Christian Church, and the father was a prohibitionist. There were three children: William S., a resident of Cynthiana; James K.; and Richard G., who was a farmer and died at Cynthiana.

James Kirtley Ammerman grew up on the old homestead, attended public schools in the country and at Cynthiana, and his time and energies have been completely bestowed upon his business as a farmer for twenty years. After his marriage he lived for two years at Connersville, for five years at Lee's Lick, and then rented the old homestead for two years. He bought his brother's interest in this farm and now has 210 acres devoted to general farming and livestock. He also owns an interest in two other farms on the White Oak Pike.

On January 23, 1908, Mr. Ammerman married Miss Bird Lemmon. She was born near Breckinridge, Kentucky, July 24, 1887, daughter of Thomas and Kate (Levi) Lemmon, both natives of Harrison County. Her mother is still living. There were four children in the Lemmon family. Lillie, wife of John Day; Stella, wife of Will Renaker; George, who died at the age of twenty-one and Bird.

Mrs. Ammerman was liberally educated, attending public school at Cynthiana, and the Millersburg Female College. Mr. and Mrs. Ammerman have three children: George Givens, Billie Boyd, and Helen Levi. Mr. and Mrs. Ammerman are members of the Christian Church, and in politics his affiliations are with the democratic party.

Horton D. Florence is an esteemed citizen of Harrison County, a man who has made his own way in the world since he was fourteen years of age, and he and his family are now performing an important service through their management of the Blue Grass Dairy Farm, a mile and a quarter east of Cynthiana. The farm comprises ninety-three acres, and has convenient access to Cynthiana over the Cynthiana and Millersburg Pike.

Mr. Florence was born in Harrison County, June 20, 1861, a son of James and Fannie (Hunt) Florence, also natives of Harrison County. His grandparents were Jonathan and Peggie (Caldwell) Florence. Jonathan Florence brought his wife to Kentucky from Culpeper County, Virginia, and they lived the rest of their years on a farm on Mud Lick, rearing a large family. James Florence grew up on the old homestead in Harrison County, and after his marriage settled on a farm near Mud Lick, where he lived the rest of his life. His wife, who was a member of the Christian Church, was a daughter of Nathan Hunt, who married Percilla Miller. James Florence and wife had three sons and seven daughters, four of whom are living: Lucius, of Fayette County; Belle, widow of James Burden; Horton D.; and Fannie, wife of A. N. Davis.

Horton D. Florence grew up on the old farm near Mud Lick and had a common school education before he left home at the age of fourteen to make his own living. On January 27, 1887, he married Nannie Van Hook. She was born near Oddville in Harrison County in May, 1858. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Florence rented a farm, then bought a place on the Oddville Pike and in 1919 acquired his present property, the Blue Grass Dairy Farm, formerly known as the Henry Cox Farm. As a dairyman Mr. Florence has a herd of thirty cows. He is active in local affairs, being democratic county committeeman and is a deacon of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with St. Andrews Lodge No. 18, F. and A. M., at Cynthiana, and Lodge No. 127, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Florence and daughters are members of the Eastern Star, and the son Cecil has attained the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite.

The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Florence are: Cecil, a farmer who completed his education in the high school; Jessie, who is a graduate of the State University at Lexington, and is a teacher of domestic science in the Morganfield, Kentucky, High School; Hazel, also a teacher, a graduate of the Eastern Kentucky Normal School at Richmond; Hersel, wife of James H. McCoy, of Lexington; and Justice, at home.

Ralph Louis Schroeder, M. D. The physician who would succeed in his profession must possess many qualities of head and heart not included in the curriculum of the schools and colleges he may have attended. In analyzing the career of the successful practitioner of the healing art it will invariably be found to be true that a broad-minded sympathy with the sick and suffering and an honest, earnest desire to aid his afflicted fellowmen have gone hand in hand with skill and able judgment. The gentleman to whom this brief tribute is given fortunately embodies these necessary qualifications in a marked degree, and by energy and application to his professional duties has built up an enviable reputation and drawn to himself a large and remunerative patronage.

Ralph Louis Schroeder, a leading physician and surgeon and representative citizen of Owensboro, was born in Saint Louis, Missouri, on January 29, 1885, and is the son of Charles H. and Delphine Schroeder. On the paternal side Doctor Schroeder is of German descent, though his father and grandfather were natives of the state of Missouri. Charles H. Schroeder in early life was a teacher and professor of languages, and now resides at Lagrange, Texas, where he is manager of a teachers' exchange. When a mere boy, Doctor Shroeder accompanied his parents on their removal to Lagrange, Texas, where he was reared to manhood and where he received his educational training in the public schools, graduating from the high school and later, completing his literary education in the Sam Houston Institute at Huntsville, Texas. He then went to Galveston and matriculated in the medical department of the University of Texas, but did not complete the prescribed course there, going to Chicago, where he spent six years in hospital service and school work and in the actual practice of his profession. In 1909 he received from the celebrated Byron Robinson Gynecological Association a certificate in gynecology and abdominal surgery and in May, 1910, he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery. For nearly three years thereafter Doctor Schroeder practiced his profession in Chicago, but in December 1912, he located in the city of Owenboro, where he has since practiced his profession and where he has won high renown as a specialist in gynecology and abdominal surgery, taking eminent rank as a skillful surgeon and as a very successful practitioner in the treatment of diseases of women.

Doctor Schroeder is a member of the Owensboro City Medical Society, the Daviess County Medical Society, the Kentucky State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is also a member of the staff of surgeons of the Owensboro Hospital. Fraternally the Doctor is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and in religion he holds membership in the Fourth Street Presbyterian Church of Owensboro.

In 1910 Doctor Schroeder was married to Sophie Hermon, of Owensboro, and they have a daughter, Delphine, named in honor of her paternal grandmother, whose maiden name was Delphine Koish. Standing as he does at the head of one of the most exacting of professions, Doctor Schroeder's labors have been directed for the amelioration of physical ills with gratifying results. Personally he is affable and popular with all classes and stands ready at all times to aid and encourage all laudable measures for the general good. By a life consistent in motive and because of his many fine qualities he has earned the sincere regard of a vast acquaintance throughout this section of the country.

Mrs. Emma L. Rankin, president of the War Mothers Association of Harrison County, owns and personally directs the operations of a large farm 2½ miles east of Cynthiana.

She represents one of the old and prominent families of Kentucky and was born in Nicholas County, January 30, 1859, a daughter of J. S. and B. S. (Summitt) Lawson. Her maternal grandfather was Jacob Summitt, whose father, George Summitt, came from Pennsylvania and was one of the first settlers in Nicholas County, locating four miles north of Millersburg. There he acquired and developed an extensive tract of land. George Summitt married Rosanna Graham, and they had children named Elijah, Jacob, James, John, Charlotte and Malinda. Jacob Summitt, Mrs. Rankin's grandfather, was born and reared at the old homestead in Nicholas County and married Minerva Storey. Their three children were Solomon, Berthena and Elizabeth.

Mrs. Rankin's paternal grandfather, Rev. Jeremiah S. Lawson, was born in North Carolina, in 1773. He early began to preach as a Methodist minister. In 1796 he came to Kentucky, being an appointee of Bishop Asbury to the Shelby circuit, which he filled for some fifteen years. He then removed to Missouri, continuing as a minister until old age. He died aged eighty-nine at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Miss Berthena Summitt became the wife of J. S. Lawson, and their family consisted of six: James, a farmer in Hardin County, Kentucky; Anna E., deceased; Emma L.; Jerome, a farmer at Hillsboro, Ohio; Eugene, deceased; and Elizabeth, deceased wife of John DeWitte.

Emma L. Lawson grew up on the home farm in Nicholas County and acquired a good education there. On November 20, 1877, she became the wife of J. M. Rankin, who was born in Nicholas County, December 6, 1847.

Mrs. Rankin has ten living children: Maude E., wife of Leon La Force; Blanche, wife of Logan Maffett, of Cynthiana; Florence, widow of Harry Sanford; Irene, wife of D. K. Fisher; Russell; Ada, wife of S. J. McClintock; Nell, wife of Taylor Cason; Edith, Norma and Glenn. The son Russell enlisted in the Marines in 1917 and was exposed to some of the hardest fighting in France. He was five times wounded, and is still one of the disabled veterans, recuperating in St. John's Hosiptal at St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Rankin is an active member of the Baptist Church at Cynthiana.

Miles S. McKee during his active lifetime was one of the very progressive farmers and citizens of Harrison County, provided generously for his family and left a name that will always be honored in that community.

He was born in Harrison County, June 6, 1851, and died January 8, 1916. His parents were John and Caroline (Sweney) McKee. John McKee was born February 6, 1804, and on September 13, 1849, married Caroline Sweney, a native of Sharpsburg, Bath County. John McKee lived all his married life on the farm now occupied by Mrs. Nannie McKee. He was a devout Presbyterian. All his three sons, Alexander, James and Miles S., are now deceased.

Miles S. McKee grew up on the home farm, had a grammar and high school education at Cynthiana, and subsequently graduated from Kentucky University at Lexington. While liberally educated, he chose the vocation of farming, and made a commendable success of agriculture and performed all the duties of citizenship with a strict regard for the standards of honor. He was affiliated with St. Andrews Lodge No. 18, F. and A. M., of which he was a past master, and was a past eminent commander of Cynthiana Commandery, Knights Templar. In politics he was a democrat.

The first wife of Mr. McKee was Hattie Secrest, of Nicholas County. She died April 4, 1875, leaving one child, Hattie, who is a graduate of Professor Brown's School at Cynthiana and is the wife of Durbin Wilson.

On October 24, 1883, Mr. McKee and Miss Nannie Lee Jones, of Sharpsburg, Kentucky, were married. Mrs. McKee was born in Bath County, December 17, 1862. She was liberally educated, attending the private school of Professor Young at Paris and Professor Rucker's School at Georgetown. For two years she was a teacher of music. Mrs. McKee has three sons: Cleveland, Miles, Jr., and George W. All are unmarried and Miles and George served in the navy during the World war. Mrs. McKee is an active member of the Cynthiana Baptist Church.

Darwin E. Fisher is proprietor of the Clover Valley Stock Farm, five miles southeast of Cynthiana. During his early married life he was a farm renter, and the prosperity represented in the ownership of the Clover Valley Farm has come to him by gradual process involving years of earnest application and thrifty management of all his resources and opportunities.

Mr. Fisher was born only a quarter of a mile from his present home, but over the line in Bourbon County, on March 8, 1860, a son of John W. and Louisa (Jett) Fisher. His father was born in Bourbon County, May 16, 1830, and his mother in Bracken County, August 6, 1836. They were reared in their respective counties, had common school educations, and December 11, 1855, were married. John W. Fisher for several years was a teacher. He likewise began his agricultural career as a renter, and finally acquired the old homestead in Bourbon County of a 150 acres, where he lived out his life. He died in the same house where he was born. John W. Fisher was an honest, upright man, progressive, and stood for everything that was good in his community. He was a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Ruddells Mills and was a democrat in politics. Of his eight children seven are still living: Cora, now deceased, was a graduate of the Bourbon Female College, wife of Nelson Martin; Anna is the wife of R. N. King; Darwin E. is the third in age; Mary L. is the wife of Daniel Durbin, of Cynthiana; John R. is a farmer in Bourbon County; Claude E. likewise has farming interests in that county; Fred H. is a telegraph operator and farmer; and Stella P. is the wife of Luther Moreland.

Darwin E. Fisher spent his early life in the environment where he was born, and obtained a good education in the public schools and in Smith's Classical School at Cynthiana. After leaving school he worked in a store at Berry for about a year.

On June 12, 1884, Mr. Fisher married Mary Durbin, who was born at Beaver Creek in Harrison County, July 13, 1866, and was likewise educated in Smith's Classical School at Cynthiana. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Fisher rented a farm for two years, and then bought the 206 acres included in the Clover Valley Stock Farm. Mr. Fisher has carried on an enterprise that justifies the choice of the name for the farm, and has kept all departments of the Clover Valley Farm at a high state of efficiency. He is also a stockholder in the Burley Tobacco Warehouse Company at Cynthiana and the Paris Warehouse Company. He is a democrat and with his family is a member of the Christian Church at Cynthiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have had four children: Charme L., born June 14, 1885, is a graduate of the Richmond Female College and the wife of John Fennell; Durbin, born January 5, 1887, married Irene Rankin and lives at Wilmington, Ohio; Nida E. is the wife of Sam R. Ewalt, of Bourbon County, Kentucky; and Anna Lou died aged seven.

Charles Rieckel is the oldest citizen of Cynthiana. Mrs. Rieckel shares with him in that honor. They have been married sixty-seven years, and continuously since several years before the beginning of the Civil war have had one home in Cynthiana, a home regarded as a landmark of domestic happiness, and they are the objects of widespread esteem and affection in the city. Mr. Rieckel was born in Germany, and in 1854, on the 19th of December, married Miss Mary A. Hite. Mrs. Rieckel was born in Scott County, Kentucky, May 3, 1838, and was reared at Paris.

After his marriage Mr. Rieckel continued work at his trade until he located at Cynthiana in January, 1857, and at that time moved into the house where he and his good wife still reside. He began business on Pike Street, and as a jeweler he supplied a service to satisfy the tastes of many of the old time southern belles and gentlemen as well as catering to modern fancy in adornment. He was prospered in his business affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Rieckel had a family of seven daughters: Louise, Mary E. and Harriet, all deceased; Mattie R., widow of George Foster; Carrie, widow of David L. Evans; Christina, wife of Samuel Hedges; and Lillie L., wife of Owen Felix, of Cincinnati. Mr. Rieckel is an honored member of St. Andrews Lodge No. 18, F. and A. M., Cynthiana Chapter No. 17, R. A. M., and Cynthiana Commandery No. 16, K. T., of which he is past eminent commander. His daughter, Mrs. Foster, is a past worthy matron of the Eastern Star and Mrs. Evans was likewise affiliated with that order. Mr. Rieckel is a member of the Episcopal Church while Mrs. Rieckel belongs to the Christian denomination. He has always been a democrat, and has a record of service on the city council and the board of education. Mr. and Mrs. Rieckel have three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

James N. Ashbrook is county tax commissioner of Harrison County, a very popular and genial citizen, one admired for the integrity of his official character and also the industry that has kept him working in the face of physical ill health.

Mr. Ashbrook was born in Harrison County, January 4, 1874, a son of Newton and Nannie K. (Terry) Ashbrook, also natives of the same county, where his father was born in 1845 and his mother April 4, 1853. They attended the common schools during their youth, and the father served as a private soldier in the Civil war. After his marriage he rented land and continued farming the rest of his life. He was a deacon in the Christian Church, a member of the Masonic Lodge, and a stanch democrat. Of four children two died in infancy. Those now living are James N. and Minnie, wife of W. S. Lemmons, living at Belmont, Kentucky.

James N. Ashbrook had a farm training during his youth, was educated in the common schools, and lived at home until he was twenty-one. On February 20, 1895, he married Louisa D. Whitaker, who was born in Harrison County, December 7, 1873.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Ashbrook located on a farm, and to farming he gave the utmost vigor of his years until he suffered a complete impairment of his health and strength, and since then has contributed to the family fortunes by making brooms. As a candidate on the democratic ticket for county tax commissioner he swept the county by a handsome majority and entered upon his official duties July 1, 1918. He and Mrs. Ashbrook are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

They were the parents of six children: Frank, now deceased; Ethel, wife of G. K. Tightmaster; Sarah, wife of William R. Tightmaster; William A., James D. and Mattie May, all unmarried and at home.

William Preston. It is a significant tribute to the substantial qualities of the Preston family that with all their varied participation in the broader and larger affairs of community, state and nation they have maintained a deep and abiding connection with the land, and William Preston of Lexington, descended from brilliant military heroes and statesmen, has devoted his energies primarily to farming in the famous Blue Grass section.

His ancestry runs back to John Preston, who came from Ireland to America in Colonial times. He had a son William who served in the Revolutionary war, later was a member of Congress, and at an early period in the history of the United States he came west to take up a grant of land in Jefferson County, Kentucky, and developed a plantation there.

His son was the distinguished Gen. William Preston, one of the finest soldiers produced by Kentucky. He was born in Jefferson County of this state, finished his literary education in Yale College and graduated from the Harvard Law School and early began practice at Louisville. At the beginning of the Mexican war he served as lieutenant colonel of the Fourth Kentucky Infantry under General Scott. He was elected in 1849 a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, and from that time for ten years was almost constantly a member of the Legislature, served three terms in Congress, and in 1858 was appointed United States minister to Spain. He returned to this country in August, 1861, and joined the Confederate army on the staff of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, and held that great Confederate leader, mortally wounded, in his arms at the battle of Shiloh. He served with increasing distinction in subsequent campaigns, and achieved a lasting place in history by leading the charge in command of a division which drove all the opposing forces from Missionary Ridge. It was his conduct in that battle that secured him promotion to the rank of major general. Subsequently he served as Confederate States minister to Mexico, and at the close of the war returned to Fayette County and from the City of Lexington supervised his extensive planting interests, involving about 1,700 acres of land in that county. He died in September, 1887.

C. A. Baker

In 1840 Gen. William Preston married Margaret Preston Wickliffe, a native of Lexington and daughter of Robert Wickliffe. The Wickliffes were identified with the very earliest settlement of Kentucky, and one of the family served as governor of the state.

Robert Wickliffe Preston, son of Gen. William Preston, was born at Lexington and inherited a love for horses and other fine stock. He was liberally educated, attending Washington and Lee College in Virginia, the Virginia State University and was a student of law at Harvard University. He lived at his beautiful home and estate in Lexington, but gave much of his time to the supervision of his large estate. Robert Wickliffe Preston was born in 1850 and died June 9, 1913. He married in 1883 Sarah McDowell, who was born at Abbingdon, Virginia, a daughter of James and Elizabeth Brant McDowell. She is still living in Lexington, and of her three children the two survivors are Margaret W., wife of Philip Preston Johnston; and William.

William Preston was born at Washington, District of Columbia, August 28, 1887, and was educated in the University of Kentucky and the University of Virginia. As a young man he had much to do with looking after the family's interests in Fayette County, but in 1908 went to Western Canada and for about three years engaged in the Bonanza grain farming of the Dominion. He then returned to Scott County, Kentucky, and engaged in farming in Fayette County, specializing in tobacco raising and the breeding of livestock.

Mr. Preston is a member of the Lexington Rotary Club, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity, and belongs to the Episcopal Church. On February 28, 1911, he married Gretchen Miller, who was born at Canton, Ohio, a daughter of Edward O. and Jean (Trout) Miller. Her parents are natives of Canton, Ohio, and are still living, and Mrs. Preston is the older of two children, her younger sister being Jean. Mr. and Mrs. Preston have three children, named Jean McDowell, William Wickliffe and Anna Howard.

Charles A. Baker. Thirty odd years of continuous experience as an undertaker makes Charles A. Baker the dean among the active men of that profession at Lexington. As a youth he learned carriage making, and comes of a family of expert mechanics, his father and grandfather having been carriage makers before him.

His great-grandfather, John Baker, was a native of Germany, and on coming to America located at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and at one time owned land on which much of the modern city has been built. He operated a wagon and carriage factory at Lancaster. He spent several years in Iowa, but finding the climate too cold moved to Louisville, Kentucky. He had three sons associated with him in business. John Baker lost his life by accident. His son Samuel was a well known carriage maker at Lexington, being a member of the firm, Baker & Ruble until his death. The other two sons were John R. and Charles A. Baker, who were partners in business all their active lives. Charles Baker was born at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, November 9, 1827, and died in 1895. John R. Baker, father of Charles A. Baker, died November 30, 1916, at the age of eighty-seven, and was active in business until the last. Charles Baker's wife was Miss Kate Troutman. These brothers were high grade citizens and thorough christian gentlemen and earned a high place in the citizenship of Lexington. At one time they were in business on an extensive scale at Clarksville, Tennessee, but finally yielded to their preference for Central Kentucky, and after several years at Eminence they established their business at Lexington about 1883 and had the largest carriage works in that city. John R. Baker married Louisa J. Snyder in Trimble County, Kentucky, where they lived a few years, and where Charles A . Baker was born in 1862. Her father, Mr. Snyder, was proprietor of a large distillery opposite Madison, Indiana, now called the Teakettle Distillery. His sons followed him in that business. Mrs. Louisa Baker died December 7, 1920, leaving two children, Charles A. and Sallie Belle Baker.

Charles A. Baker after completing his early education learned carriage making and worked at the trade for about fifteen years. On leaving that occupation he entered the service of J. H. Wiehl & Son, undertakers, and was one of the responsible men in that organization for twenty-six years. In June, 1915, he established his present business and this had the distinction of being the first residential undertaking establishment in Central Kentucky. Mr. Baker also owned the first automobile hearse in Lexington. He is a member of the State Funeral Directors Association, and has given the best energies of his life to the profession. His son Fred R. is now his active business associate. Mr. Baker has had no desire for public office, and his life has been chiefly expressed through his business.

At the age of twenty-five he married Eliza M. Reed, of Clark County. Their one son is Fred R. and their two daughters are Lulu May, Mrs. James R. Elkin, of Lexington, and Emma Lail, wife of Charles M. Roswell, of Philadelphia.

Richard Felix Peters is a coal mine operator at Uniontown, is one of the most thoroughly experienced men in the business of coal production in the state, has worked at or around mines since early boyhood, and knows coal mining from the standpoint of a practical miner gained in every technical position of the trade, and also as a manager and independent operator.

Mr. Peters was born in Ray County, Tennessee, February 19, 1877, a son of Rev. James Fletcher and Sarah J. (Turpin) Peters. His parents were natives of Tennessee, and when Richard was nine years of age they moved to Kentucky and settled in Pulaski County. His father was a Baptist minister, and devoted fifty-three years of his life to the church and the extension of Christianity. He died at the age of seventy-seven, and his widow is still living, at seventy-nine. Of their six children five grew to mature years.

Richard F. Peters acquired his education in the grade schools of Pulaski County, taught one year, and also attended the Baptist College, now Cumberland College, at Williamsburg, Kentucky. He began working in coal mines when only nine years of age, and he has done everything connected with the mining industry from the bottom to the top of the shaft. At twenty-one he became an independent operator on a small scale at Flat Rock, Kentucky. He was there ten or twelve years and has since operated various mines both in Eastern and Western Kentucky.

In 1918 the Union County Mining Company acquired about 5,000 acres of land and mineral rights at and near Uniontown, and with Mr. Peters as general manager of the company a thoroughly modern and first-class mine equipment has been installed, making possible the production of from one to 5,000 tons of coal daily.

Mr. Peters is a popular citizen as well as a leading coal operator. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and Elks, is a republican in politics and a member of the Baptist Church. On February 12, 1898, he married Miss Mary McPheron, of Pulaski County, Kentucky. They have a family of three sons and three daughters. The son Ralph Frederick Peters graduated with first honors of his class from the University of Kentucky in 1920 and is now superintendent of the Cloverport schools and the county schools of Breckinridge County.

Lewis Leavell Walker, former judge of the Thirteenth Judicial District, has been one of the prominent members of the Garrard County bar for over a quarter of a century, and while his ambition and energies have been chiefly devoted to his profession, he has been a leading figure in the republican party in Central Kentucky.

Judge Walker was born at Lancaster, Garrard County, February 15, 1873. He represents a family that was established in Kentucky in pioneer times, during the closing years of the eighteenth century. His grandfather, who was a distinguished physician of Richmond in the early days, was Dr. Charles Jones Walker, who was born in Madison County in 1799 and died at Richmond in June, 1878. He practiced his profession in Richmond upwards of half a century. His wife, Nancy Embry, was born in Madison County in 1810 and died at Richmond in 1893. William E. Walker, father of Judge Walker, was a leader in public affairs, though his life was chiefly devoted to his farm. He was born at Richmond in March, 1842, received part of his education in Transylvania College, then located at Harrodsburg, and shortly after his marriage moved to Garrard County and conducted a farm near Lancaster. He served eight years, 1882 to 1890, as county judge of Garrard County, and was a representative in the Legislature in 1896. He was a democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred at Lancaster, August 31, 1900. William E. Walker married Dorcas Leavell, who was born in Garrard County in January, 1853, and died at Lancaster in October, 1909. Of their children Lewis Leavell is the oldest; Charles Jones, while an employe of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, was killed in an accident in Rockcastle County at the age of twenty-nine; Martha, is the wife of George D. Robinson, a farmer in Garrard County; the fourth, a son, died in infancy; William E., who served with the Expeditionary Forces in the Army of Occupation eighteen months, is still in the army service, stationed near San Antonio, Texas; Green Clay is the present county attorney of Garrard County; Horace Lackey is an attorney for the Southern Railroad Company and lives at Washington, District of Columbia; Nancy, the youngest, is the wife of William B. Burton, a farmer at Lancaster.

Judge Walker attended the public schools of Lancaster, graduated from old Central University at Richmond in 1893, and among other items of his early experience taught one term of school in Lancaster. His preceptor in the study of law was the distinguished William O. Bradley, former United States senator and governor of Kentucky. Judge Walker was admitted to the bar in August, 1894, at the age of twenty-one, and has been steadily accumulating honors in his profession ever since. His practice extends over Garrard and all the adjoining counties. He was candidate for lieutenant governor of Kentucky on the republican ticket in 1915, but has seldom sought a political office not in the line of his profession. He was county attorney in 1901 to fill out an unexpired term, was city attorney of Lancaster from January 1, 1908, to August, 1910, and at the latter date was appointed circuit judge of the Thirteenth Judicial District, comprising Boyle, Mercer, Lincoln and Garrard counties. He was on the bench until January, 1912, and was not a candidate for re-election. Judge Walker is a director and attorney for the Citizens National Bank of Lancaster. He owns the Walker Building on the Public Square, in which his offices are located, and his home is a modern residence on Maple Avenue. He owns other real estate in Lancaster. Judge Walker was a trustee of the Kentucky State University from 1908 to 1915. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Lancaster Lodge No. 104, F. and A. M., Lancaster Chapter No. 56, R. A. M., Ryan Commandery No. 17, K. T., at Danville, is a past chancellor of Garrard Lodge No. 29, Knights of Pythias, a past commander of Lancaster Tent, Knights of the Maccabees, a member of Lancaster Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and the Kentucky State Bar Association. During the war he was one of the most influential leaders in Garrard County, serving as chairman of the Speakers Bureau and campaigning in behalf of the various drives over this and surrounding counties.

Judge Walker married in Garrard County in 1902 Miss Eliza Jennings Lusk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Lusk, now deceased. Her father was a farmer and lawyer of Garrard County. Mrs. Walker died in February, 1907. In April, 1909, at Lancaster, he married Miss Grace Kinnaird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kinnaird. Her father was a banker and insurance broker and at one time mayor of Lancaster. Judge Walker lost his second wife by death in 1910. On December 3, 1911, at Covington, he married Miss Flora Zeigler, a native of Cincinnati, who died April 19, 1915. The only child of Judge Walker is by his last marriage and is Charles Jones Walker, born July 23, 1913.

Harry B. Wilson, of Irvine, is a young business man who has established and developed the leading insurance and real estate organization of Estill County. During a part of the World war he was on duty with the colors at Camp Taylor.

He was born at Shelbyville, Kentucky, May 5, 1888. The founder of his branch of the family in Kentucky was his great-grandfather, who came from Virginia and had a large farm and many slaves in Shelby County. The grandfather was born and spent all his life in Shelby County, and likewise followed agricultural pursuits. The father of Harry B. Wilson was the late Dr. Leonard H. Wilson, a man of exceptional standing both as a physician and citizen. He was born in Shelby County in 1850, was reared there, graduated in medicine from the Louisville Medical School, practiced in Shelby County, and in 1897 moved to Estill County, but in 1898 transferred his residence to Morganfield, Union County, where he died four years later, in 1902. He was an independent democrat and a very attentive member of the Christian Church. Doctor Wilson married Miss Lula Lane, who was born in Clark County in 1856 and died in Estill County in 1898. She was the mother of two children, the older, named Bee, dying in childhood.

Harry B. Wilson was ten years of age when his mother died and fourteen when his father passed away.

His boyhood and youth were spent in Estill County, where he attended rural schools, graduated from the County High School at Irvine in 1906, attended the Western State Normal School at Bowling Green during 1907-08, and in 1909 graduated from the Bowling Green Business University. From school he returned to Irvine, and from 1909 to 1916 performed the duties of deputy county clerk. Since then he has been conducting his business in real estate and insurance with rapid developments that have made it an important agency for the transaction of such business all over Eastern Kentucky. He enlisted in August, 1918, and was on duty at Camp Zachary Taylor at Louisville until mustered out December 28th of that year.

Mr. Wilson is a republican, a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is affiliated with Irvine Lodge No. 137, F. and A. M., Richmond Chapter No. 16, R. A. M., Richmond Commandery No. 19, K. T., Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington, and is also a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics. His home is on Park Avenue and his offices in the Williams Bank Building.

In 1917, at Lexington, Mr. Wilson married Miss Julia White, daughter of Roy C. and Carrie (Moran) White. Her mother lives at Richmond, where her father died, being a well known citizen of Madison County and former Circuit Court clerk. Mrs. Wilson is a graduate of the Richmond High School, Hamilton College at Lexington, and the Boston Conservatory of Music. Her natural talents were thoroughly cultivated by this educational career, and she was a very successful piano teacher before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have three children: Harry B., Jr., born June 9, 1918; Drucilla and Catherine, twins, born June 20, 1920.

Elbridge L. Busby, M. D. A native of Henderson County and now one of the leading physicians of the City of Henderson, Doctor Busby was graduated in medicine seventeen years ago, has made his mark in private practice, and in public service, and after leaving the medical corps of the army located at Henderson.

Doctor Busby was born on a farm in Henderson County, September 15, 1878, a son of George F. and Martha Louise (Otey) Busby. His grandfather, Harold Busby, who married a Miss Smith, was a native of Virginia and was brought west by his parents to Tennessee and thence to Kentucky. The name Busby is of Irish origin. George F. Busby is now seventy-two years of age and has spent an active life in Henderson County as a farmer. His wife, Martha Louise Otey, was born in Henderson County, daughter of James W. and Susan Ann (Curry) Otey. Curry is an old Kentucky family. James W. Otey lived past eighty and his wife to seventy. He was born in Shelby County and was a pioneer of Henderson County.

The oldest of nine children, Doctor Busby grew up on a farm, lived there to the age of twenty-one, acquired a public school education, and on leaving home gave his complete energies to the study of medicine in the Kentucky School of Medicine until graduating July 8, 1903. He began practice and made a name for himself in his profession at Zion, Kentucky, where he remained until January, 1917, when he accepted the post of second assistant physician at the Eastern State Hospital for the Insane. He resigned to go into the United States Army September 15, 1918, and as an officer in the Medical Corps was stationed at McPherson, Georgia, and at Greenville, South Carolina, and served until December, 1918. He left the army with the rank of captain, and in March, 1919, began his general practice at Henderson and is looked upon as one of the ablest men in the profession in the county. He is a member of the County and State Medical societies, and at different times has given his influence to the success of the democratic party.

Doctor Busby married in 1914 Miss Maude Eades, of Robard, Kentucky.

W. E. Begley reverts to the Old Dominion state as the place of his nativity, but on the paternal side is a representative of a family that was founded in Kentucky in the early pioneer period of its history by his great-great-grandfather, who came from Ireland and settled in Kentucky at a time when this commonwealth was still a part of Virginia. Henry Begley, grandfather of the subject of this review, passed his entire life in Perry County, Kentucky, and was a farmer by vocation. He whose name initiates this sketch thus has close ancestral alliance with Kentucky, and has resided in this state since his youth. Here he has gained place as one of the representative members of the bar of Laurel County, where he maintains his professional headquarters and his residence at London, the county seat, and where he is serving in 1921 as city attorney.

Mr. Begley was born in Wise County, Virginia, November 15, 1873, and is a son of E. R. Begley, who was born in Breathitt County, Kentucky, in 1828, and who died in Jackson County, this state, in 1900. E. R. Begley was reared in his native county and was a young man at the time of his removal to Owsley County, where he engaged in farm enterprise and also followed the trade of carpenter. He was a loyal soldier of the Confederacy during the entire period of the Civil War, after the close of which he and his wife maintained their residence in Wise County, Virginia, for some time. Upon his return to Kentucky he resumed his residence in Owsley County and remained there until 1892, when he removed to Jackson County, which continued to be his place of residence during the remainder of his life. He was a democrat in politics and was affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans. His first wife, whose maiden name was Mary Combs, was born in Owsley County, Kentucky, in 1831, and her death occurred in Washington County, Virginia, in 1885. Orlena, eldest of their children, became the wife of Rev. R. E. Smith, who was a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and who held various pastoral charges in Virginia and Tennessee, his death having occurred in the latter state and his widow being now a resident of Hamilton, Ohio; A. C. Begley resides in the City of Tacoma, Washington, and is identified with important lumbering operations in that state; P. H. Begley, a carpenter by vocation, died at Dryad, Washington, when fifty years of age; S. C. Begley is a farmer in the western part of Tennessee; Malvry, who died in Johnson County, Kentucky, in 1883, was the wife of John Duncan, who still resides in that county and who is a steamboat captain on the Big Sandy and Ohio rivers; Mrs. Emma Ricketts and her husband reside at Huntington, West Virginia, and Mr. Ricketts is a successful railroad contractor; Nannie is the wife of Shakespeare Ross, a ranch owner near Dryad, Washington; Lizzie is the wife of Embrey Newton, a farmer five miles east of Bristol, Tennessee; and W. E., of this sketch, is the youngest of the children. For his second wife E. R. Begley married a widow, Mrs. Oldham, and she now maintains her home in Owsley County, two children having been born of this union; Lillie, who is the wife of W. A. Pennington, postmaster at London, Laurel County; and Lloyd, a traveling salesman who resides at Kingston, in Madison County.

W. E. Begley was a child at the time of his parents' removal from Wise County, Virginia, to Washington County, that state, and in the latter county he gained his preliminary education in the public schools. Later he attended the high school at Berea, Kentucky, and he continued his school work until he was eighteen years of age. Thereafter he studied law under effective preceptorship, and in 1901 was admitted to the Kentucky bar and began the practice of his profession at McKee, judicial center of Jackson County. Two years later he transferred his residence to London, Laurel County, where he has since built up a substantial general law business, which is extended into Jackson County also. He is official court reporter of the Twenty-seventh Judicial District of the state, a position of which he has been the efficient incumbent since 1915, and he has served continuously as city attorney of London since 1913. His law offices are established in the Catching Building, on the opposite side of the street from the Court House Square of London, and he is the owner of his attractive home property on Railroad Street. In politics Mr. Begley maintains an independent attitude and gives his support to men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment, irrespective of strict partisan lines. In connection with his law business in Jackson County he maintains an office also at McKee, and there his professional coadjutor and partner is C. P. Moore, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work. Mr. Begley maintains affiliation with the Holiness Church, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At London he owns a one-fourth interest in the prosperous business conducted under the title of the Dyche & Begley Drug Company. Within the period of the World war he took a loyal and constructive part in local war activities, aided in all of the local drives in support of the Government war-loans, made liberal purchases of bonds and War Savings Stamps and served as president of the Laurel County Advisory Board.

In Jackson County the year 1900 recorded the marriage of Mr. Begley to Miss Telitha Dyche, daughter of Judge R. A. and Sarah (Stansberry) Dyche, who reside at London, Laurel County, where the father is serving as judge of the Police Court. Mr. and Mrs. Begley have seven children: Mamie is the wife of R. C. Robinson, a dry-goods merchant at London; Byron B., who was graduated in the Louisville College of Pharmacy, is general manager of the Dyche & Begley Drug Company at London; Lena, who remains at the parental home, is a member of the class of 1921 in the high school department of the Sue Bennett Memorial Institute; Robert Bruce is a student in the public schools of London; and the younger members of the parental home circle are Sherley, Ernest Ray and Paul Combs.

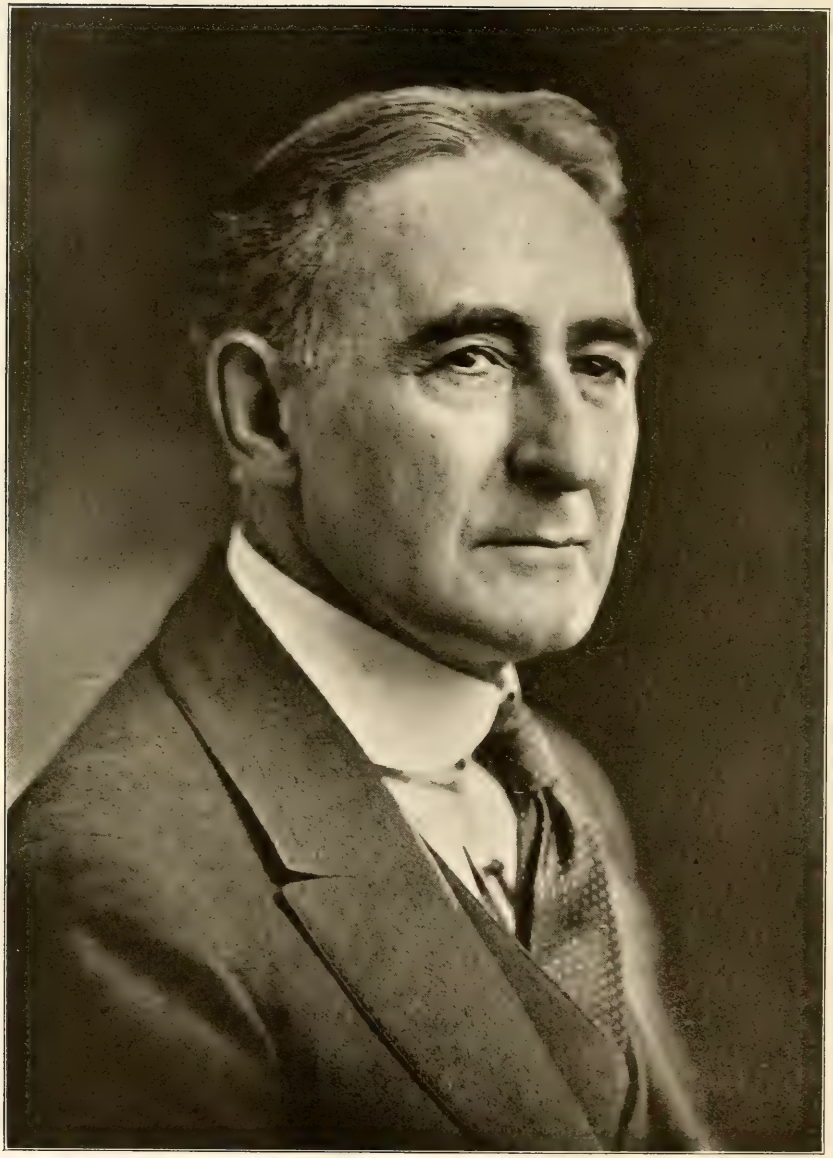
LaVega Clements. Admitted to practice at the age of nineteen, LaVega Clements for over thirty years has been one of the hard working and successful members of the Owensboro bar. He has filled with credit several public offices, is widely known as an orator and speaker and a man whose personal charms and varied accomplishments have won him a high place in his native state.

He was born on a farm near Philpot in Daviess County, Kentucky, December 25, 1868. His paternal ancestors came from England with the original colony planted by Lord Baltimore in Maryland. Several generations of the family lived in Maryland, including the great-grandfather of the Owensboro lawyer, William Clements. He and his brother Charles became soldiers in the Revolution, leaving home on two successive days, and after the war returning likewise on successive days. William Clements was a soldier under General Marion, while his brother Charles was with Washington's army, and neither saw the other while in service. William Clements married Winfred Hardy, a daughter of Frederick Hardy of Baltimore.

The grandfather of LaVega Clements was Charles O. Clements, who was born near Baltimore January 29, 1808, and in that state married Susan Philpot, the town of Philpot in Daviess County, Kentucky, being named in honor of her brother A. J. Philpot. She was born in Maryland January 12, 1811, a daughter of John S. Philpot, and died January 11, 1872. Soon after their marriage Charles O. Clements and wife came to Kentucky and settled near Bardstown in Nelson County, and from there removed to Daviess County, where Charles O. Clements died December 29, 1879. He was a soldier in the war with Mexico under Gen. Winfield Scott at the siege of Vera Cruz.

Samuel A. Clements, father of LaVega Clements, was one of a large family of children and was born in Nelson County, Kentucky. He died in 1911, at the age of seventy-one. His active years were devoted to merchandising, a career attended by many adversities, though he was able to provide fairly well for his family, rearing them on a farm near Philpot. He married Laura B. Wagoner, who was born in Spencer County, Indiana, and was related to former United States Senator James A. Hemenway of Indiana. She died in 1917, at the age of sixty-four, the mother of three children, LaVega being the only survivor.

LaVega Clements as soon as his strength permitted was assigned regular duties on the farm and in his father's store. He attended only the common schools near his home and his parents were unable to provide him with a collegiate education. At the age of eighteen he began the study of law under Judge Wilfred Carico, then an able member of the Owensboro bar, and made such rapid progress that on July 11, 1888, he was licensed to practice. Since then he has built up a large practice and reputation as an Owensboro lawyer. In 1893 he became city prosecutor, performing the duties of that office four years, and in 1897 was elected county attorney, an office he held two terms. He has always been a sterling democrat and a man of much influence in his party in the western counties of the state, giving much of his time during campaigns to speaking tours. In 1908 he was a presidential elector from Kentucky and in 1912 was a district delegate to the National Convention at Baltimore. Mr. Clements is a member of St. Paul's Catholic Church of Owensboro, and for a number of years has been actively and officially identified with Owensboro Council of the Knights of Columbus.



At the State Council of the Knights of Columbus held in Frankfort in May, 1921, Mr. Clements was elected state deputy for Kentucky, the highest office of the order in the state. He is also a prominent member of the Owensboro Lodge of Elks. November 17, 1890, he married Miss Maggie Brown, of Daviess County. Nine children were born to this marriage, five of whom survive. Three died in infancy, and the oldest, Gerald S. Clements, reached mature years and made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of liberty during the World war. To this brilliant young soldier a special memoir is dedicated.

Gerald Samuel Clements. A brilliant and resourceful young lawyer, Gerald Samuel Clements left his home and his profession at Owensboro to enter the army, and his death added one of the golden stars to the crown of sacrifice which is America's greatest pride in the World war.

A son of the well known Owensboro lawyer LaVega Clements, he was born in that city October 16, 1894, acquired his preliminary education in St. Francis' Academy of Columbia College at Owensboro, and pursued both the literary and law courses at Notre Dame University at South Bend, Indiana, where he graduated in 1915. Admitted to the bar at Owensboro before he was twenty-one, he at once became associated with his father in the firm of Clements & Clements.

He quickly justified the anticipations entertained for him and with his university training and the possession of unusual talents he at once achieved marked distinction as a lawyer and had every prospect and assurance of continued advancement and notable achievement.

When America entered the war with Germany he was ready not only with the conventional patriotism of America, but was stirred to his very depths by the causes and ideals involved. He was one of the first to volunteer from Owensboro, and entered the First Officers Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis. Upon examination he was rejected as being of too light weight. He registered at the draft, with hopes of being accepted by the Draft Board, but was again disappointed for similar reasons. The board placed him in the limited service class, but upon his vigorous objection he was placed in the continuous service class. While waiting his call he was named as one of the twenty-four appointed by Notre Dame for training in camp, and as such entered Camp Custer, but finished his training at Camp Lee. At the final examination he was rejected on account of light weight for field service, but was sent to Camp Sherman, Ohio, as a sergeant in the Ninety-fifth Division, and later was made regimental sergeant major of the Three Hundred and Twentieth Regiment of the Division.

It was while at Camp Sherman that he was stricken with the influenza, and died October 9, 1918, as truly a sacrifice to the cause of libery as those who fell on battlefields in France. His remains were brought home and he was given a military funeral, his pastor, Rev. Edward S. Fitzgerald of St. Paul's Catholic Church, saying mass at the cemetery.

It is appropriate to quote the essence of a letter written his father by Colonel T. S. Moorman, his regimental commander at Camp Sherman: "I desire to furnish you my official and personal opinion of your son Sergeant Gerald S. Clements, late of the Headquarters Detachment, Three Hundred and Twentieth Train Headquaters and Military Police, Ninety-fifth Division. As a soldier his character was excellent and services honest and faithful. At the time of his death he was Acting Regimental Sergeant Major, performing such duties well. He no doubt would have been a commissioned officer had he lived and the war continued much longer. He was dignified, quiet, gentlemanly and attentive to duty. He showed grit in the last sickness, never losing hope, brave and cheerful to the last. "A fine man and soldier, who won the respect of officers and men with whom he was associated."

The following very unusual tribute, prepared in memoria by Rev. John Cavanaugh, president of Notre Dame University, and first published in a University bulletin, is the sort of tribute that many men would be proud to earn and deserve:

"Whenever I think of Sergeant Gerald S. Clements and the untimely death he met, I have a fresh realization of the terrible price men pay for war.

"Patriotism, like religion, it would seem, demands for its sacrifice the unblemished lamb. Among all the men who have gone out from Notre Dame holding aloft the banner of freedom there have been some who have made the supreme sacrifice. Among our thousands of Notre Dame boys in the war there were, of course, some more select and distinguished than others; but I marvel when I remember that among those who were called in the morning of their promise to give up their lives for human liberty and civilization, there was not one called who was not of the first quality. As I pass the list of names through the fingers of memory, it seems like a rosary of brilliants.

"Gerald Clements was one of the noblest, strongest, purest, truest of them all. A face as shining as a child's; a manner as gentle as a convent girl's; a breeding as delicate as that of a refined woman; and, yet, an eager, quick, challenging and tenacious mind; a vigor of thought, a subtlety of analysis, a balance of judgment, a manly vigor in all that he said or did or looked or desired, a scholarly taste, a deep Christian spirit—this was Gerald Clements.

"Let no one wonder that the president of his old University writes so warmly of him. At universities one sees the best men and sees them at their best. It is, of course, the place of study and of labor, but it is also the place of growth and wonder and joy. There young men dream dreams and see visions and plan miraculous achievements for the future—many of which, of course, never mature. It is the home of idealism, and in its genial atmosphere the young idealist thrives amazingly.

"Gerald Clements was a rare blend of the idealist and the practical man-of-the-world. After he had come into his full power through years and experience he would have adorned the lecture platform in any university. Equally, he would have been a shining light and a glorious leader in civil or professional life. Always he would be the lovable and faithful home man, the loyal friend, the ideal citizen, the consistent Christian.

"He has gone, but he has not died. Men like him never die. As long as there are those who love him and remember him he is still at work in the world through his spirit, his virtue, his example. God rest his gentle soul."

Still another distinction awarded this young soldier and lawyer should be noted. His portrait hangs in the Court House at Owensboro. His is the only portrait besides that of judges who have presided over the courts placed there. An invariable rule was broken in compliance with a resolution passed by the Owensboro Bar Association.

The monument that marks his last resting place in the soil of his native county bears the inscription, "As a man, citizen, lawyer and soldier he measured to the highest standard."

Benjamin G. Reams has been engaged in the practice of law at London, judicial center of Laurel County, since 1902, is now serving as county attorney, and in addition to being one of the leading members of the bar of his native county he had previously given twenty years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools of this section of the Blue Grass State. His grandfather, Bartlett Reams, was born in Tennessee, in 1817, and was a young man when he came to Kentucky and became a pioneer exponent of farm industry in Laurel County, where was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mahala Catching, who was born and reared in this county, a member of a well-known pioneer family. Bartlett Reams became the owner of an excellent farm four miles east of London, and was one of the venerable and honored pioneer citizens of Laurel County at the time of his death, in 1901, his wife also having died on the old homestead place, a farm on which the present county attorney was born, on the 16th of November, 1861.

W. F. Reams, father of him whose name initiates this sketch, was born in the district of Laurel County through which Raccoon Creek wends its way, and the date of his nativity was April 6, 1839. He has continued his residence in his native county during the long intervening years, was long numbered among the representative farmers of the county, and since the spring of 1921 has lived retired in the home of his son, Benjamin G., of this review. He has contributed his quota to the civic and industrial advancement of Laurel County, and has so ordered his course as to retain inviolable place in popular confidence and esteem. He remained on the ancestral farmstead until 1872, when he purchased and removed to a farm in the southwest part of the county, six miles distant from London, where he remained until his retirement from the active labors and responsibilities that had so long been his portion, and found welcome as an honored member of the family circle of his son, the subject of this sketch. He is a stalwart supporter of the cause of the Republican party and has been for many years a zealous member of the United Baptist Church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted adherent. During the period of the Civil war Mr. Reams gave effective service in behalf of the Union, his assignment being that of a teamster in connection with military operations. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha A. Johnson, was born in 1842 and passed her entire life in Laurel County, where her death occurred in 1898. Of their children, the first-born, Bartlett, died at the age of two years; Benjamin G., to whom this review is dedicated, was the second in order of birth; Grant died at the age of sixteen years; Caleb is one of the substantial farmers of Laurel County; Eliza, who died in this county at the age of forty years, was the wife of William Day, who is now a farmer in Bell County; Susan, who died in Laurel County aged thirty-eight years, was the wife of Jesse McHargue, a railroad man now residing at Carbin, Whitley County; Aaron is a coal-mine worker in Harlan County; Mahala died at the age of sixteen years; and Elmira died at the age of four years.

To the rural schools near the home farm Benjamin G. Reams is indebted for the preliminary education that fortified him for entrance as a student in Laurel Seminary at London, an excellent institution in which he continued his studies until he was nineteen years of age, though a year prior to this he had initiated his service as a teacher in a rural school in his home county. As previously noted, his service in the pedagogic profession covered a period of twenty years, and in the same he made a record of loyal and successful work. In the meanwhile he had applied himself with characteristic vigor and receptivity to the study of law, and in 1902 he passed with excellent standing the examination, before Judges O'Rear and Durell, of the Court of Appeals at Louisville, the examination that gave him admission to the bar of his native state. Since that year he has been engaged in the active and successful general practice of law at London, and he has appeared in connection with many important causes tried in the various courts of this section of the state, besides which his special eligibility for offices of public trust has been definitely recognized by the voters of his native county. Thus in November, 1901, the year which marked his admission to the bar, he had the unusual distinction of being elected county judge of Laurel County, so that his initial professional work was in a judicial capacity. He assumed his position on the bench in January, 1902, and gave an able and acceptable administration during the prescribed term of four years. Thereafter he devoted himself to his large and representative private law business until November, 1917, when he was elected county attorney for the term of four years from January, 1918. His experiences on the bench and in the general work of his profession specially fortify him for his present office, in which he is effectively protecting the interests of his constituent county.

Judge Reams is a deacon in the Baptist Church at London, in which his wife likewise is a zealous member; he is a past grand of London Lodge No. 249, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; past counsellor of Guy Jahan Council No. 279, Junior Order United American Mechanics; and a member of London Lodge No. 102, Knights of Pythias. Judge Reams is the owner of one of the valuable farms of his native county, the same being situated five miles west of London and comprising 210 acres. The farm is equipped with modern buildings and other permanent improvements, including a large and substantial house.

In the period of the World war Judge Reams found time and means to yield his full quota of patriotic service, as he assisted vigorously in all of the local drives in support of the Government loans, made his personal subscriptions as large as his means justified, and made many speeches in behalf of these important war causes.

As a young man Judge Reams wedded Miss Mary E. Sparks, who likewise was born and reared in Laurel County, where her father was a prosperous farmer, she being a daughter of the late Calvin and Esther (Green) Sparks, who were highly honored citizens of the county at the time of their deaths.

In this concluding paragraph is entered brief record concerning the children of Judge and Mrs. Reams: Charles F., who was born October 30, 1885, owns and gives his active management to his farm six miles west of London. Caleb, who is a prosperous farmer five miles west of the county seat, was born in November, 1887. Calvin, who was born in December, 1889, resides with his parents on the home farm and is actively associated with its work and management. He was in the nation's military service for nine months at the time of the World war. He was stationed five months at Camp Mills, New York; at Camp Sevier, South Carolina, for eight weeks; at Chester, Pennsylvania, one month; and was at Camp Dix, New Jersey, when he was mustered out, in February, 1919. Belle, who was born in 1892, is the wife of Prince Warren, a successful young farmer six miles west of London. Hattie, who was born in 1895, is the wife of James Tompkins, who is engaged in successful farm enterprise three miles west of the county seat of Laurel County. Flora, born in 1897, Mahala, born in 1900, and Nannie, born in 1905, all remain at the parental home, and the last named is a student in the public schools of London.

Charles R. Luker. With the maximum of civic loyalty and judicial efficiency is this native son of Laurel County here discharging the manifold and important functions of the office of county judge, besides which he is numbered among the representative younger members of the bar of this section of the Blue Grass State. He maintains his residence and official headquarters at London, the county seat.

Judge Charles Robert Luker was born at Altamont, Laurel County, December 18, 1886, and is a scion, in the third generation, of one of the honored pioneer families of this county, within whose borders his grandfather, Lewis Luker, a native of Virginia, established his residence in an early day. He purchased a tract of land near the present Village of Weaver and there developed the fine old homestead farm which is still known by the family name. In Virginia was solemnized his marriage to Miss Sallie Lee, likewise a native of that historic old commonwealth, and she shared with him in the activities and responsibilities of pioneer life in Laurel County, Kentucky, where they lived and wrought to worthy ends and where both remained on the old homestead until the close of their lives. The Luker genealogy traces to staunch English origin, and the American progenitors settled in Virginia in the early Colonial period representatives of the name having been patriot soldiers in the Continental Line in the war of the Revolution.

Jackson Luker, who has resided near Weaver, Laurel County, from the time of his birth, in 1866, has been long numbered among the progressive and prosperous representatives of farm industry in his native county, where he has also been actively identified with coal mining enterprise, and his activities still touch both of these important lines of industry. He is a staunch Republican, and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Luker, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Horn, was born near Weaver, this county, in 1869, and she also is a representative of a sterling pioneer family of the county. Judge Luker, of this review, is the eldest of the children; Harry resides upon a part of the old home farm, and is independently engaged in agricultural and mining enterprise, as is also Joseph, who likewise utilizes a part of the ancestral farmstead; Lula is the wife of Clarence Parker, who is an electrician by vocation, and they reside in the City of Hamilton, Ohio; and Jackson, Jr., remains at the parental home, where he is associated with the work and management of the farm.

After having profited by the advantages of the rural schools near the old homestead, Judge Luker completed two years of high school study in the Sue Bennett Memorial Institute at London, and he next attended for one term, in 1912, the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School at Richmond. Prior to this, when twenty years of age, he became a successful teacher in the district schools of his home county, and his service in the pedagogic profession covered a period of nine years, within which he completed an effective correspondence course in the American Correspondence Law School in the City of Chicago. He was admitted to the bar in August, 1914, just prior to which, in 1912-13, he had been principal of the public schools at East Bernstadt, Laurel County. His work as a teacher included also two winter terms of service as principal of the Bay Branch High School at Woodcliff, Georgia. In 1917 Judge Luker established himself in the practice of law at London, judicial center of Laurel County, and prior to his election to his present office he had developed a substantial and representative law business that marked him as one of the able and successful members of the bar of his native county. That he has not been denied the fullest measure of popular confidence and esteem in the community in which he is best known has been shown in divers ways, including his election as representative of the Seventieth District, comprising Laurel and Rockcastle counties, in the 1914 session of the State Legislature. He proved an active working member of the House of Representatives, was assigned to various committees of importance, and was specially influential in the furtherance of legislation in support of the good roads movements, the bettering of labor conditions, and the advancing of educational standards. He drafted and presented what is known as the Mine-Guard Bill, but this valuable measure failed of enactment, as the legislative session closed before the Senate had opportunity to pass on the bill, which was specially devised for the protection of union labor in the coal mines of the state. Judge Luker assumed in January, 1918, for a term of four years, the office of county judge of Laurel County, an office to which he had been elected in November of the preceding year, and one in which he has found excellent opportunity for much effective service in behalf of his native county and its people. He was recently nominated commonwealth attorney of the Twenty-seventh Judicial District, comprising Laurel, Jackson and Clay counties, and had no opposition in the final election. He is a leader in the local councils of the republican party, and he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church of London, in which he is serving as teacher of the young men's Bible Class in the Sunday School. He owns his attractive residence property at London, on College Street, the house being situated in the midst of fine lawns and trees, with 2½ acres of ground, and the beauty of the home is on a parity with its generous hospitality. Judge Luker also owns one-half interest in seventy acres of the old homestead farm near Weaver. He is affiliated with John Pitman Lodge No. 590, Free and Accepted Masons, at East Bernstadt; London Chapter No. 103, Royal Arch Masons; London Commandery No. 33, Knights Templars; Oleika Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Lexington; East Bernstadt Lodge No. 163, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor; Livingston Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Livingston; and the London Bar Association.

The war activities in his native county received the earnest and loyal support of Judge Luker through the period of American participation in the World war, and in furthering the cause he made spirited patriotic addresses throughout the Twenty-seventh Judicial District, besides having been a member of committees in charge of the local Government bond drives, Red Cross work, etc. His financial contributions to these various objects were in consonance with his means, and he spared himself neither time nor effort in advancing such patriotic service.

At Oakley, Laurel County, in November, 1911, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Luker to Miss Ethel Crawford, whose parents, M. B. and Amanda (Jones) Crawford, reside on their fine farm estate near London. Judge and Mrs. Luker have three children: Milton, born in 1913; Mildred, born in 1915; and Crawford, born in 1917.

W. H. Steele was born in Laurel County, Kentucky, January 29, 1872, and that his is a stanch vantage-place in the confidence and good will of the people of his native county needs no further evidence than the statement that he is serving as sheriff of the county, an office which he assumed in January, 1918, for the regulation term of four years. Specially onerous service has been his as sheriff in this Kentucky hill district, where great discrimination and finesse has been demanded in ferreting out and destroying illicit stills utilized in the manufacture of moonshine liquor, the number of such clandestine distilleries having increased under the national prohibition law. Sheriff Steele has destroyed ninety-nine such stills in the county and made over 200 arrests for moonshining operations, while equally effective and punctilious service has marked his other activities of official order.

The Steele family in America was founded by three brothers who came from England in the Colonial period of our national history and settled in Virginia. At the time of the Revolutionary war they became separated, one settling in North Carolina, one remaining in Virginia, and the third establishing his residence in Connecticut. The brother who remained in Virginia figures as the ancestor of Sheriff Steele of this review. Hezekiah Steele, grandfather of the sheriff of Laurel County, was born in Virginia in 1804, and died in Laurel County, Kentucky, in 1882, as one of the sterling and venerable pioneer citizens of this section of the state. He was a young man when he came to Laurel County and began the development of a farm which eventually grew to be one of large area and extensive operations. The family name of his wife was Gillis, she having been born in Whitley County, this state, in 1805, and her death having occurred in Laurel County in 1878. Their son, S. G., was born in that part of Laurel County that was then a part of Whitley County, in 1842, and his entire life has been passed in the district in which he still resides. He long remained on his excellent farm, which was the birthplace of his son, W. H., and in addition to being one of the substantial representatives of farm industry in Laurel County he has been a mail contractor in the service of the United States Government, in which connection he has had occasion to visit every state in the Union. He sold the old home farm in 1913 to the Castle Craig Coal Company, and is now living retired as one of the well-known and highly honored citizens of his native county. He cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln and has ever since continued a strong advocate of the principles of the republican party. Both he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, North. His is the distinction of having been a gallant young soldier of the Union during virtually the entire period of the Civil war. He enlisted in the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, with which he took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Shiloh, Chickamauga, Stone River, the siege of Vicksburg, the various combats of the Atlanta campaign, besides which he was with his regiment in the command of General Sherman on the historic march from Atlanta to the sea and thence through the Carolinas and on to Washington, where he took part in the Grand Review of the victorious Union forces after the close of the war. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Poynter, has been a resident of Laurel County from the time of her birth, which here occurred in the year 1845. Of their four children, Sheriff Steele is the youngest, the eldest of the number being C. G., who is engaged in the lumber business at Vicksburg, Mississippi; Christine, who died at London, Laurel County, in 1912, was the wife of Silas Prewitt, who is now a merchant in the State of California; and Miss Margaret remains at the parental home.

After having attended the rural schools of his native county, Sheriff Steele continued his studies in the Southern Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green. He was twenty-two years old when he left this institution and became concerned with the same line of Government contracting as was his father. For ten years he continued to give his attention to entering bids for contracts on star mail routes and the subletting of such contracts, and in this connection he successfully handled contracts in every state of the Union, besides incidentally gaining broad and valuable experience and a knowledge of conditions in the various sections of the country. His loyalty to his native state and county was not impaired by his experience, and upon retiring from Government contract service he was for eight years actively engaged in the timber industry in Laurel County. Thereafter he made a successful record as a traveling salesman for a wholesale shoe house in the City of Louisville, besides selling men's hats as a side line. He was thus engaged until he assumed his present office, that of sheriff of Laurel County, in January, 1918, his election having occurred in the preceding November. He maintains his residence, as a matter of course, at London, the county seat, with official headquarters in the Court House. He is a stalwart in the local ranks of the republican party, both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at London, in which he is serving as a deacon, and he is affiliated with London Lodge No. 102, Knights of Pythias; London Council No. 181, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of which he is past counsellor; and with the United Commercial Travelers Association. In a most desirable location on Main Street in London he owns and occupies a modern brick bungalow, which is conceded to be one of the most attractive homes in the county seat. He is the owner also of about 2,500 acres of valuable coal land in Laurel County. Sheriff Steele was influential in the various war-bond drives and other activities in his county, was vigorous and successful in the rounding up of slackers who failed to make proper registration in connection with the selective draft and others who were failing to do their part in connection with farm production and other essential industrial service, and he served as president of the local Ku Klux Klan, an old order revived in the South for patriotic purposes. He gave the major part of his time to various phases of patriotic service during the period of the nation's participation in the World war, and his loyalty was further shown in his liberal subscriptions to Liberty and Victory bonds and his contributions to Red Cross and Salvation Army service.

At London, Kentucky, in 1901, occurred the marriage of Sheriff Steele to Miss Mary Green, whose father, Dr. E. H. Green, was a leading physician and surgeon in this place at the time of his death. Doctor Green's widow, whose maiden name was Anna Willson, is a cousin of Kentucky's former governor of that name, and she now resides at Little Rock, Arkansas. Mrs. Steele was graduated in the high school in the City of Louisville, and was also graduated in music, she being a talented pianist and vocalist. Mr. and Mrs. Steele have one son, Edward, who was born January 14, 1903, and who is serving as deputy sheriff under the administration of his father, besides which he is a member of the class of 1923 in the collegiate department of the Sue Bennett Memorial School in his home city of London.

John Lewis Harrison is marking with special efficiency his official record as clerk of the County Court of Laurel County, and his selection for this position indicates the appreciative estimate placed upon him in his native county. He was born September 10, 1884, on the home farm of his parents, five miles southeast of London, the judicial center of Laurel County, and in the rural schools of that locality he acquired his early education, which was amplified by his attending Berea College one term and the Sue Bennett Memorial School three terms, ending in 1909. He was twenty-one years old when he began teaching in the rural schools of his native county, and his effective service as a teacher continued for eight years. In November, 1913, he was elected clerk of the County Court, and by re-election in 1917, and again in 1921, and he has since continued his service in this important office, the records of which he has maintained at high standard. During his tenure of office Mr. Harrison has, as a matter of course, maintained his residence at London. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, has been an active worker in its local ranks, and he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. He is affiliated with London Lodge No. 249, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and London Council No. 181, Junior Order of United American Mechanics. He owns his home property on Fall Street, London, as well as other real estate in his native county. Mr. Harrison was a vigorous and loyal supporter of the various local war activities during the period of American participation in the World war, and in addition to subscribing as liberally as possible to the Liberty and Victory Loans, Savings Stamps, Red Cross work, etc., he took active part in furthering the drives for these patriotic objects in his home county.

In 1914, at Pittsburg, Laurel County, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Harrison to Miss Vessie Acton, a daughter of Dr. J. A. and Elizabeth (Graybeal) Acton, who now reside at East Bernstadt, Doctor Acton being one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Laurel County. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have one child, J. L., Jr., who was born April 13, 1921.

Oliver Harrison, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in Virginia, where the family was founded in the Colonial period of American history, and he was a young man when he came to Kentucky and became a pioneer settler in Laurel County, where he reclaimed a farm five miles southeast of London, and where he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Bettie Duncan. Their son, John O., was born on the old home farm in this county, October 10, 1848, and here he well upheld the honors of the family name both as a citizen and as a productive farmer. Shortly after his marriage he established himself on the farm which was to continue as the stage of his activities during the remainder of his long and useful life, and there his death occurred October 2, 1910, this home farm having been a part of the landed estate here accumulated by his father. He took local part in community affairs of a public order, was a republican in politics, but had no desire for political office of any kind. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Spivy, was born in Laurel County in 1854, and she survived him by about five years, her death having occurred in 1915 and both having been consistent members of the Baptist Church. Of their children the eldest is Elizabeth, wife of Rev. J. R. Baker, a farmer near McWhorter, Laurel County, and also a clergyman of the Baptist Church; Henry is a harnessmaker by trade and vocation and resides at London, the county seat; W. D. resides at Bernstadt, this county, where he is serving as magistrate; James, who resides at McWhorter, this county, has been for twenty years a successful teacher in the public schools of this section of the state; G. W. is a farmer near London; and the subject of this sketch is the youngest of the children.

J. Edward Bassett, Jr., a son of J. Edward Bassett, Sr., president of the Fayette National Bank of Lexington, was a pilot and instructor in the air service during the World war, and is now associated with Brownell Berryman as proprietors of the Union Motor Company of 253 East Main Street, Lexington.

Mr. Bassett was born at Lexington, July 10, 1896, spent his early life in the home of his parents at Lexington, attending local schools, and prepared for college in Philip Exeter Academy at Exeter, New Hampshire. While a student in Princeton University he volunteered in April, 1917, for the aviation service, and after training was commissioned a pilot and subsequently assigned duty as instructor at Caruthers Field at Benbrook, Texas, was also on duty at Post Field at Fort Sill, where he was stationed when the armistice was signed. He was granted his discharge in December, 1918. Mr. Bassett after the war became identified with the bond department of the National City Bank of New York at Chicago.

On March 20, 1920, having returned to Lexington, he became associated with Brownell Berryman in the Union Motor Company. This is one of the largest and most successful sales agencies in the state, handling the Packard, Hudson and Essex cars and the Packard trucks. The company has about thirty employes.

Mr. Bassett is a member of the Lexington Club, Country Club and the Board of Commerce. In 1919 he married Miss Jane Brooker, a native of Florida and daughter of H. S. Brooker, a retired resident of Lexington.

Jonas Samuel Gilbert, M. D. A highly successful physician and surgeon of Garrard County, Doctor Gilbert has practiced at Lancaster for eighteen years, the only noteworthy absence from his duties being while he was in the Medical Corps during the World war.

Doctor Gilbert was born at Mount Eden, Spencer County, Kentucky, December 2, 1874. His grandfather, Samuel Gilbert, was a native of Virginia and as a young man moved to Spencer County, Kentucky, where he was a flour miller. He died at Taylorsville. His second wife and the grandmother of Doctor Gilbert was Nancy Gill. Her son, Francis W. Gilbert, spent his entire active life as a farmer. He was born in Spencer County in 1847, became a farmer there, and in 1881 removed to Texas and subsequently acquired extensive landed interests in the territory and state of Oklahoma and lived at Kelley until his death in 1905. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The first wife of Francis W. Gilbert was Emma Stodghill, who was born in Spencer County in 1850 and died at Mount Eden in 1874, soon after the birth of her son Jonas Samuel. Her other child, Cordie, is the wife of John Harp, living at Shelbyville, Kentucky. The second wife of Francis W. Gilbert was Sallie Parkhurst, and she is still living at Kelley, Oklahoma. Of her six children five are living.

Jonas Samuel Gilbert has spent practically all his life in Kentucky, attended the rural schools of Spencer County, was a student for two years in the State College, now the Kentucky State University, at Lexington, and in 1898 received his M. D. degree from the University of Louisville. He is a member of the Phi Chi college fraternity. For five years, beginning in 1898, he practiced at Van Buren in Anderson County, and in 1903 removed to Lancaster. His offices are in the Citizens National Bank Building on the Public Square. Doctor Gilbert is former health officer of Garrard County and a member of the County, State and American Medical associations. He was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, September 14, 1918, and was on duty at Camp Sheridan, Alabama, until honorably discharged April 15, 1919.

He is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and is affiliated with Lancaster Lodge No. 104, F. and A. M., and Franklin Lodge No. 7, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His home is one of the most desirable residences at Lancaster, located on Lexington Pike. On May 24, 1911, at Lexington, he married Miss Mary Broadus, daughter of Newton and Jennie (Kersey) Broadus, now deceased. Her father was a merchant and at one time in the livery business at Lancaster. Mrs. Gilbert is a graduate of Midway Seminary at Midway, Kentucky. To their marriage was born one son, James Burnett Gilbert, on May 23, 1915.

Noah Marsee, merchant and banker at Bryantsville, has lived since early childhood in this section of Garrard County, and was a practical farmer until he turned his energies and talents into commercial channels at Bryantsville.

The Marsees are an old family of Eastern Kentucky, and they originated at Marseilles, France, and were Colonial settlers in Virginia. The great-grandfather of the Bryantsville merchant was Jackson Marsee, who was born in Virginia in 1801. As a young man he moved to Bell County, Kentucky, and spent his active life there as a farmer. He died in 1889. His son, Speedwell Marsee, was born in Bell County in 1825, and lived there the greater part of his life as a farmer and merchant, but died in Garrard County in 1896. His wife was Nancy Snuffer, who was born in Bell County in 1826 and died in Garrard County in 1911.

Joel Marsee, also an honored resident of Bryantsville, was born in Bell County in 1864, was reared and married there and owned and operated a farm until 1890, when he moved to Garrard County, and is still active in the ranks of the live and enterprising agriculturists of this section, though since 1918 his home has been in Bryantsville. He votes as a republican and is one of the very active members of the Baptist Church. He married Patty Marsee, who was born in Bell County in 1868. They have two children, Noah and Lucy, the latter the wife of James Durham, a farmer near Camp Nelson, Garrard County.

Noah Marsee, was born at Middlesboro in Bell County, October 14, 1884, and was six years of age when brought to Garrard County. He attended the rural schools and until he was thirty he found his duties and opportunities on his father's farm. In 1915 he embarked his capital in a general store at Bryantsville, and made that store the trading place for a large part of the population in and around this enterprising village. He is also a director and second vice president of the Bank of Bryantsville and a director in the Bryantsville Telephone Company. He has prospered in his affairs, and besides being head of a successful business owns his store building and home on Main Street. He was financially and personally interested in all the patriotic drives made in his locality during the war.

Mr. Marsee is a republican, is a past master of Bryantsville Lodge No. 764, F. and A. M., a member of Lancaster Chapter No. 56, R. A. M., Ryan Commandery No. 17, K. T., at Danville, and is also affiliated with the Franklin Lodge No. 7, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World.

On August 14, 1918, at Nicholasville, Kentucky, Mr. Marsee married Miss Virginia Watts Carter, daughter of the late W. N. and Polina (Barlow) Carter. Her father was a Garrard County farmer, and Mrs. Marsee finished her education in the Eastern Kentucky

State Normal School at Richmond, graduating both in the normal and domestic science departments. For five years before her marriage she was a teacher in Garrard County. Mr. and Mrs. Marsee have two children: Patsey Carroll, born May 24, 1919, and Anna Mildred, born January 14, 1921.

Hon. Henry Hughs Farmer. Among the officials of Henderson County whose high conception of public service is an important factor in the maintenance of law and the upholding of elevated standards is Hon. Henry Hughs Farmer, county judge. Prior to his election to his present office Judge Farmer's activities had been devoted chiefly to business and agricultural matters, but the capable manner in which he has discharged his judicial duties and the favorable impression that he has made upon the people of his locality would seem to indicate that he possesses the attributes for useful public service.

Judge Farmer was born on his father's farm in Henderson County, September 19, 1876, a son of James and Mary (Craig) Farmer. His father was also born in this county, a son of Dr. Henry Hughs Farmer, a native of Virginia. Doctor Farmer was a man of strong intellectuality and broad learning, and his life was indelibly identified with the history of early Henderson County, where he was for many years a leading and greatly-esteemed member of the medical profession. Mary (Craig) Farmer, the mother of Judge Farmer, was born in Virginia, a daughter of Major Edward Chambers Craig, a pioneer settler of Henderson County, which community he represented with distinction as a member of the State Legislature. The father of Judge Farmer was killed by a horse when the son was but eighteen months old. The mother is still living, as are her two sons, Henry Hughs and Edward Chambers, who were reared on the farm of their maternal grandfather, with whom their mother went to live after the death of her husband.

Judge Farmer was a lad of thirteen years of age when his maternal grandfather located at Henderson. The lad had received a public school education in the country districts of Henderson County, and when fourteen years of age went to work in a tobacco business. Gradually the young factory hand improved his condition until he finally engaged in the business on his own account as a buyer and exporter, following this line for some fifteen years. At this time he is one-half owner of the Eckert Packing Company, holds an interest in a loose tobacco leaf house at Henderson, and for several years has had large and valuable farm holdings, although always residing at Henderson. In business circles he is known as a man of the soundest integrity, shrewd and unerring in his judgments and straightforward in all his transactions.

Judge Farmer had always been primarily a business man, although a citizen who took an interest in public affairs. In 1917 he yielded to the urgent importunities of his numerous friends and became a candidate for county judge of Henderson County. He was successful in the election of that year and in January, 1918, assumed his official duties for a term of four years. His record thus far has been that of a wise and impartial judge who has impressed the community with his possession of qualities which fit him eminently for the important post which he graces. Judge Farmer is a democrat in his political allegiance. As a fraternalist he is prominent in Masonry, in which he has attained to the Knight Templar degree, and is also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs likewise to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Judge Farmer is senior warden of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church. He is unmarried.

Albert F. Scruggs was first known to and identified with the community of Berea as a railroad man with the Louisville and Nashville Company, and since leaving the railroad service he has been in the general insurance business, a profession for which he is admirably qualified and in which he has developed a service that represents a profitable business.

Mr. Scruggs was born at Johnson Junction, five miles west of Flemingsburg in Fleming County, December 27, 1887. His grandfather, Charles Finch Scruggs, was a native of Virginia, moved when a young man to Bourbon County, Kentucky, and was one of the early merchants at Clintonville, where he lived out his life. He married Ann Bedford, who was born near Paris in Bourbon County and died at Clintonville. Samuel P. Scruggs, father of Albert F., was born at Clintonville in 1855, spent his early life in Bourbon and Bath counties, and in 1871 moved to Fleming County, where he married and where for many years he lived at Johnson Junction and performed his duties as station agent and telegraph operator for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. He died at Johnson Junction, December 20, 1919. He was a democrat in politics, a member of the Christian Church, was a Knight Templar Mason and belonged to Oleika Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Lexington. His wife was Emma Johnson, who was born in 1855 at Johnson Junction, where she died in 1901. She was the mother of five children: Lida, who died at the age of thirty-three at Flemingsburg, wife of Thomas H. Dudley, a merchant; Sallie, second wife of Thomas H. Dudley; John W., station agent for the Louisville & Nashville Company at Johnson Junction; Albert F.; and Samuel P., a Louisville & Nashville Railway clerk at Johnson Junction.

Albert F. Scruggs attended rural schools in Fleming County and the Flemingsburg High School until 1907. In that year he was regularly enrolled in the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company, and in 1908 was assigned to duty as operator at Berea, where he has had his home ever since. While in railroad work he utilized his opportunities to extend his acquaintance among the people of Berea and the surrounding country and when he retired from the railroad service May 1, 1914, he opened his offices for a general insurance business and has since handled much of the insurance written in this locality. He has acquired real estate interests in Berea, including a modern home on Pearl Street.

Mr. Scruggs is a democrat, a member of the Christian Church, and in 1917 was worshipful master of Berea Lodge No. 617, F. and A. M. During the World war he did what he could to further the cause and the interests of the Government, and aside from giving according to his limit in a financial way he acted as deputy fuel administrator and deputy food administrator for Madison County.

On September 14, 1910, at Berea, Mr. Scruggs married Miss Ted Cook, daughter of R. D. and Alice (Graves) Cook, now deceased. Her father was a first lieutenant in the Union army during the Civil war, spent his active life as a farmer in Rockcastle County, and Mrs. Scruggs grew up on the farm in that county and finished her education in Berea College. Mr. and Mrs. Scruggs have one son, Albert F., Jr., born December 1, 1919.

Catesby Woodford is probably the dean of Kentucky's greatest sportsmen today. He has been in the business of breeding fine running stock for over forty years, and his interest and enthusiasm are still engrossed in the management of his farm, "Raceland," two miles north of Paris, on the Georgetown Pike.

For nearly a century this branch of the Woodfords has been prominent in the Blue Grass District of Kentucky. The family came to this state from Virginia. William Woodford entered the Revolutionary army as a captain, later rose to the rank of colonel and general, and as a reward for his services was given 10,000 acres of land near Frederick, Virginia.

Henry Haughs. Farmer.

John T. Woodford, father of Catesby Woodford, was born in Caroline County, Virginia, August 26, 1812. He was a son of William and Maria (Archer) Woodford. At the age of fifteen, in 1826, he came with his parents to Kentucky, and the family settled south of Winchester in Clark County. John T. Woodford had four brothers: Samuel Archer, who died in Clark County at the age of ninety; William T., who died at Bourbon County at the age of seventy-two, and his son Halleck lives on the Winchester Pike, six miles from Paris; Thomas Woodford, a farmer, who lived in Bourbon County, northeast of Paris, and was very successful; and Dr. James Madison, who practiced for many years in Harrison County and died at the age of seventy-two.

John T. Woodford married in 1840 Elizabeth Hawes Buckner, who was born in Bourbon County, September 2, 1821, a daughter of William T. and Sally (Clay) Buckner. She was born on the present noted "Xalapa" farm of Ed Simms, two miles from North Middletown. Her mother was a daughter of Henry Clay and a sister of "Graybeard" Sam Clay. John T. Woodford became a prominent farmer and stockman, and eventually had 1,000 acres, known as "Arcadia Farm," still owned by his youngest son, Benjamin Woodford, in Bourbon County. John T. Woodford retired in 1884, and from 1889 lived in Paris, where he died March 19, 1892. His widow survived him and passed away September 3, 1904.

In their family were nine children: Sally, whose husband was the late Capt. E. F. Spears, who served in the Second Kentucky Regiment; Mary, who became the wife of Col. E. F. Clay, who died in August, 1920; Buckner, who died at Paris in 1916, was for a number of years associated with his brother Catesby as a farmer and stockman, and was also cashier of the Bourbon Bank at Paris, established by Buckner Woodford, and that office is now filled by his son Buckner Woodford; John T., Jr., who for many years has been a well-known breeder of cattle and horses at Mount Sterling; Catesby; Elizabeth, who married Henry Spears and died in early life; Henry Madison, who graduated from Kentucky University and the University of Michigan, was a successful lawyer at Mount Sterling, but finally on account of ill health moved to Florida, where he still resides; Benjamin, who occupies the old home of his father; and Maria, who lives at Los Angeles, widow of William L. Yerkes, one of the greatest teachers of Bourbon County and under whose direction many of the prominent men of the county received their preparatory education.

Catesby Woodford was born August 12, 1849, spent his boyhood on the old farm, attended Transylvania College one year and at the age of seventeen took up the practical work of his life at the old farm. It was in 1876 that he engaged in the horse business as a partner with Col. E. F. Clay. They took over the management of the 6,000-acre farm of their great-uncle, and for a number of years as partners they managed one of the largest stock propositions in the state, running as high as 600 head of cattle, 3,000 sheep, and growing extensive fields of tobacco. In 1885, in company with Colonel Clay, Mr. Woodford bought his present home of 350 acres, known as Raceland. This farm now contains 870 acres.

Many of Kentucky's most famous racehorses were bred at Raceland. Mr. Woodford continued to be associated with Colonel Clay in the business until about 1914. Some of the famous horses at different time owned at Raceland included Miss Woodford, Runnymede, Hanover, Sir Dixon, Belvedere, Sally McClellan, Ben Brush, Butterfly, all of these having made records well established in the annals of the track. Many authorities have claimed that Miss Woodford was the greatest mare ever produced in America. Mr. Woodford for many years made a practice of sending a string of horses to New Orleans, Jacksonville, New York, Saratoga and other great meets. He served six years as president of the Lexington Racing Association, and is a member of the Jockey Club. He has enjoyed the personal acquaintance of all the noted horsemen of his generation. He is still active in the business, and since the death of Colonel Clay ranks as the oldest American breeder. Raceland was the scene of annual sales of horses, and the value of these sales aggregated large amounts.

Mr. Woodford's attractive home is a house that was built by John L. Hickman in 1849. It has been remodeled and modernized, and contains many fine specimens of imported art and all the good things that wealth and taste can supply. The Woodfords were stanch democrats until 1896, when some of them left the party on account of Bryan, and have since been republicans in national politics. Mr. Woodford has never been an aspirant for any political offices. At the age of forty he married Amelia Davenport, of Charlestown, West Virginia. Her mother was Martha Clay, only daughter of Brutus J. Clay.

William Brown lives 2½ miles east of Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike, where he has one of the most profitable and best managed farms in Mercer County. He has had to work for all he has gained in the way of material prosperity. He made his first real money by working land owned by others, and in addition to rearing and providing for a family and performing the duties of good citizenship has acquired and paid for a good home and a farm property productive of large and steady returns.

Mr. Brown was born at the waters of Shawnee Run in Mercer County, June 11, 1858. His parents were J. W. and Mary J. Brown, natives of Mercer County, whose five children were named Anna Bell, William, Samuel G., Edna and Ella. William Brown had a very limited common school education, and started life with very little financial aid from anyone. At the age of twenty, in 1878, he married Miss Lulie T. True, who was born in Mercer County.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Brown bought a very small farm five miles from Harrodsburg. He made it his home and farmed a considerable area of rented land. He did general farming, made some money, saved and used it thriftily, and in 1883, having sold his little property, he continued renting for three years more and in 1886 he and his brother-in-law, J. E. True, in partnership bought 325 acres a mile from Burgin. They conducted this together, and later divided the property, Mr. Brown moving to a fine home on the 175 acres which was his portion. He sold this farm in 1910, and subsequently bought his present place of 127½ acres of number one Blue Grass farm land, with improvements of the very best. He has occupied this farm since 1912. He does general farming, has had some tobacco yields producing $650 an acre and raises all kinds of stock except sheep. Mr. Brown has found both pleasure and profit in pure bred stock, his specialty being registered saddle horses. He is owner of a splendid brood mare by Montgomery Chief and dam, Black Squirrel. She and her colts have won some valuable premiums wherever exhibited, and he has sold eleven of her colts, one a yearling bringing $400. Mr. Brown at the end of some forty years of a hard-working career finds himself in the possession of a valuable farm, all paid for, and located in one of the finest sections of the Blue Grass region.

He had the misfortune to lose his good wife, December 23, 1913, after they had been married thirty-five years. He has two sons: John Eli, the older, born August 21, 1880, was educated in Harrodsburg, graduated with the Master of Arts degree from Center College at Danville, and at once entered banking and is now assistant cashier of the State Bank & Trust Company of Harrodsburg. He married Gertrude Menish, of Owens County, and three children were born to their marriage: Francis True, Gertrude Dalton and Sarah Menish. The younger son, James Dalton Brown, was born September 4, 1891, graduated from the Harrodsburg High School, was in the draft during the World war but not called to the colors, and is actively associated with his father in farming as a member of the firm William Brown & Son. Mr. Brown and his family are all members of the Methodist Church.

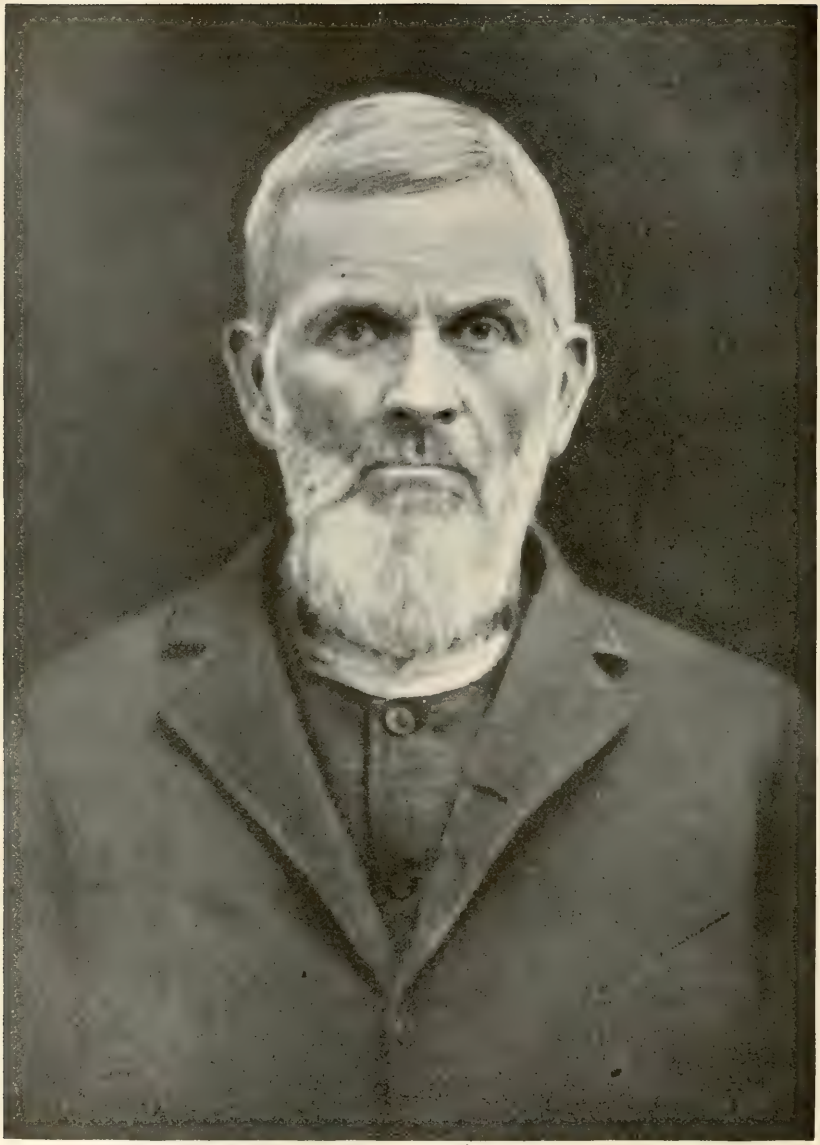
Herman Watts, who is one of the extensive and prosperous farmers of Mercer County, is not of that type who has had fortune and property thrust upon him by inheritance and, perhaps, increased it by careful management. His large competency, his valuable property on the Lexington Pike, five miles east of Harrodsburg, and his high and substantial standing as a citizen, have been acquired by individual force of character, by industry, perseverance and intelligent effort, founded upon the strictest honor. Notwithstanding his noteworthy success, Mr. Watts has the modesty and the fairness, prompted by gratitude and affection, to attribute much of his good fortune to the wise and invaluable training received from his parents during his developing period.

Mr. Watts was born on a farm in Mercer County, Kentucky, August 17, 1880, a son of John Wayne and Fannie (Matherly) Watts, the former born in 1856 and the latter in 1853, and both still living. Of the thirteen children all but two survive, and seven sons have grown to sterling manhood. John W. Watts was an industrious farmer but was in moderate circumstances, and the many children in the family made it necessary that the elder ones be contented with only fairly good educational advantages, the younger members being given a better training as a result of the support given the family by the elders' efforts. The parents were on the Baptist faith and strict disciplinarians, and as a result of their training none of the seven sons have ever used tobacco or liquor in any form.



The twelfth of his parents' children, Herman Watts received a fairly good business education. His early training, like that of his brothers and sisters, was of the strictest character. He had few holidays, was taught full and immediate obedience to his parents and was expected to work hard and to place a full valuation upon toil. This early experience he now views as being responsible in large part for his subsequent success. He feels that it kept him out of idleness and away from vicious associates during the formative period of his life, until such time as mature years were able to substantiate his character. He remained at home and assisted his parents until his twenty-seventh year, and was married August 27, 1907, to Miss Eryc Emma Divine, of Mercer County. Mr. Watts' first venture was the purchase of forty-five acres of land near Harrodsburg in 1909, for which he paid $2,350. In order to make this purchase he was forced to borrow $500, and was greatly alarmed at the size of his indebtedness. By energetic application to his work, however, he had paid this off in less than a year's time, and after farming the property for eight years sold it for $5,250. In the meantime, three years after buying his first land, he purchased thirty-eight acres for $4,200, and again went into debt, this time to the extent of $1,200. This property he sold a few months later at a profit of $700. He also rented 275 acres and farmed this continuously for ten years, and then bought 137 acres at $77.50 per acre. This he sold four years later for $160 per acre. A house which he had purchased at Harrodsburg for $6,500 sold in two years for $10,000. Eventually Mr. Watts bought the well-known Fairview Farm, containing 160 acres, an exceedingly valuable tract of land five miles east of Harrodsburg on the Lexington Pike, with a modern home and other buildings, beautiful surroundings and every up-to-date improvement. For this typical Blue Grass homestead he paid $50,000, and has frequently refused a price well over that figure. Mr. Watts is a progressive farmer of modern tendencies and grows Burley tobacco, in addition to raising and shipping hogs, mules and cattle. A self-made man, he has none of the conceit or arrogance which sometimes comes with self-acquired means, but is neighborly and genial, and has numerous friends in his community, where he is held in the highest esteem as a business man of integrity, an agriculturist of sound ability and a citizen of enlightened views and public spirit.

Four children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Watts: Herman Maurice, born July 26, 1908; Mary Frances, born June 20, 1910; Varner Wayne, born February 4, 1914; and Emma Mildred, born January 25, 1916.

J. C. B. Bonta. A unique business partnership is that of Bonta Brothers in Mercer County. Probably there is not another like it in Kentucky or in any other state. It is a partnership originally constituted by four brothers, one of whom died a year or so ago, and is still carried on by the other three. What gives the partnership its distinguishing characteristics is not the relationship of the principals, but the fundamental community of interests involved in all their business relationships and transactions. Advocates of modern business systems and accounting would get no encouragement from Bonta Brothers. They keep no books, have their bank account together, and each one checks against it either for personal or business uses, and the three brothers comprise a practical unit. All their holdings of whatever nature are in common. The remarkable fact is that this relationship has been standing for many years, the brothers have always worked together, and there has never been the slightest disagreement among them. This relationship also presents one of the chief advantages of a business corporation, since the business goes on and the holdings continue undivided to the survivors in the partnership. It is a highly successful arrangement, though not so much through the operation of economic laws, as by the laws of human nature the plan is not likely to be widely copied, for all its advantages as shown by the record of Bonta Brothers.

The four brothers who constituted the partnership are J. C. B. Bonta, born May 3, 1854; William H. Bonta, born October 8, 1858; and H. Lewis and Thomas Gore Bonta, twins, born November 25, 1866. The deceased brother is Lewis, who died July 3, 1919.

The brothers began business twenty-five years ago, having less than $1,000 in common capital between them. They rented lands and everyone of them proved a hard and industrious worker, and their work was supplemented by extremely good management. At times they paid out between $8,000 and $9,000 annually as renters for farm lands. They carried on their agriculture both extensively and intensively. About twenty years ago Bonta Brothers acquired by purchase $1,001 acres of land known as the old Shawnee Springs Farm, named for the famous adjoining springs, a historic spot once the stronghold of the Shawnee tribe of Indians. These lands had been originally patented from the Government by a man named Thompson. There is no better soil anywhere, it being in one of the choicest Blue Grass sections of Kentucky and the springs mentioned furnish an abundant supply of clear water. These lands under the ownership of Bonta Brothers have been rendered highly productive, and have produced many splendid crops of wheat, corn, oats and flax. The Shawnee Springs Farm is also noted for its live-stock, the brothers shipping many carloads of cattle and hogs to market. Their specialty is the raising of fine mules, and Tennessee mule buyers usually purchase all they can produce. Bonta Brothers agreed to pay $105,000 for this farm. They went heavily in debt, and it is a tribute to the quality of their management and their united efforts that the purchase was long ago completed. This farm today is worth at least $400 an acre, and the brothers have also accumulated many thousands of dollars in stock, bonds and other investments. They stand at the very top among Mercer County's land owners and capitalists, and their wealth has been honestly earned. By way of improvements Shawnee Springs Farm will bear favorable comparison with any other farm in the state. The buildings are all modern, and the equipment is such as to give the greatest efficiency to every branch of the enterprise.

Bonta Brothers' tobacco crop of 1919 brought a gross return of $810 an acre, and they had many acres in that Kentucky staple.

The parents of Bonta Brothers were Harvey G. and Elizabeth Bonta, who were farmers in the Salt River community of Mercer County. Their father was a soldier of the Mexican war in 1847, serving under Capt. Philip B. Thompson. He was with the troops under General Scott when the City of Mexico was captured. Both he and his wife were natives of Mercer County. They had eight children, and those besides the four brothers were: James B., born July 8, 1856, was for many years a blacksmith at Lexington and is now living retired in that city. He married Parlee Tewney and has two children, Cloteele and May Willie. Alice Cordelia, born March 4, 1852, married Byron Eastland. George Ann, born October 23, 1847, married C. T. Penny, and she died August 29, 1911; and Mary Ellen Bonta, born December 9, 1849, was married to R. C. Gentry, and she died February 22, 1920.

The only one of Bonta Brothers to marry was Thomas Gore Bonta, whose wife was Miss Carrie Gillam, of a prominent Mercer County family. They have two sons, Breckinridge and Louis Gore Bonta.

J. C. B. Bonta, the senior member of the partnership, is a director in the Mercer Bank of Harrodsburg. He and his brothers are of the Presbyterian faith. They have been not only capable farmers and business men themselves, but have taken an interest in the welfare of their many tenants, and through aid and personal direction have assisted a number of poor but industrious men to get a financial start and achieve farms and homes of their own.

Fred Dexter Haston, M. D. A large and appreciative community around McAfee postoffice in Mercer County now avails itself of the skill and ability of Dr. Fred Haston, who has a happy home and a congenial relationship with his neighborhood on the State Pike six miles north of Harrodsburg. While Doctor Haston is a busy worker his career for several years past has been on a comparatively even road of prosperity after the strenuous exertions of youth while preparing himself for his profession and his early practice as a physician and surgeon among the mining camps of Eastern Kentucky.

Dr. Haston was born at Cummingsville, Tennessee, November 15, 1881, a son of Erastus S. and Maggie A. Haston. His father spent his active life as a farmer and stockman. Fred Dexter Haston was fourteen years of age when his father died. The widowed mother had two sons, and found herself in straightened circumstances, the little homestead being heavily encumbered. In the meantime Fred Dexter Haston had only the advantages of the common schools of his neighborhood. The next five years he gave practically all his time to assisting his mother pay off the debt on the home farm. He worked in the fields, and also earned outside money hauling timber and in other employment. In the meantime he supplemented his common school advantages at Burritt College in Spencer, Tennessee, an old and very prominent educational institution in that section.

Then, in 1902, Doctor Haston entered the medical department of the University of Tennessee. He had only sixty dollars when he enrolled as a student. The expenses of his college and the university career was defrayed out of his own earnings, and in spite of the necessities of work during vacation and between terms he completed the full four years' course of medical college in five years. One year he remained out of college altogether, employed in a saw mill and doing some undergraduate practice. At other times he kept up some of the work of the home farm, raising corn, buying hogs and fattening them for market, and many a day for meager pay he hauled lumber over mountain roads. Some of his earnings went to his mother, and all that he could have was reserved for his special education. It was therefore a distinction not mentioned in his diploma when he received his full merited M. D. degree in May, 1907. Only a man of ambition and tireless energy could continue undeterred by obstacles and difficulties in the course he had taken.

Since graduating Doctor Haston has made use of every available opportunity to increase his skill. In 1910 he did post-graduate work in the Chicago Eye, Ear and Throat College, and during 1919 attended the Chicago Polyclinic, where 30,000 cases are treated annually. Following his graduation in 1907 he began an industrial practice among the Eastern Kentucky coal fields. This was an exceedingly strenuous and trying work. Many of his patients were transient laborers, and he was likely to be summoned at any hour of the day to emergencies due to accidents in and out of the mines. Many of the people whom he attended were disease carriers, and he also had to fight against the danger of epidemic. A large part of the time he did a work that might more properly have been distributed among several physicians. After eight years of this nerve-racking labor, involving duties such as seldom come to the ordinary medical practitioner, he left this field in March, 1916, and came to McAfee, purchasing the property of J. P. Lapsley, who had retired from practice, which Doctor Haston assumed. Since then he has had the satisfaction of seeing his abilities and merits recognized and his professional business extend all over that community.

In 1906 Doctor Haston married Miss Netta Pearl Brown, of Franklin County, Tennessee. They have three children: Nina, born October 3, 1907; Marthana L., born April 3, 1911; and Fred Marion, born November 14, 1915.

Samuel A. B. Woodford was one of the most venerable and most highly honored citizens of Clark County, Kentucky, at the time of his death, which occurred at his fine farm home, nine miles southwest of Winchester, on the 6th of February, 1906, after he had attained to the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. He was about three years old at the time the family home was established in Clark County, and he witnessed and aided in the development and splendid advancement of this favored section of the Blue Grass state, where he passed the remainder of his long, useful and noble life, secure in the high regard of all who knew him.

Samuel Archer Bedford Woodford was born at Fredericksburg, Virginia, on the 14th of February, 1815, and was a son of William J. and Maria (Archer) Woodford, who in 1818 became pioneer settlers in Clark County, Kentucky, where they established their home three miles southwest of Winchester, in what is now the Colby Turnpike road. The father here developed a productive farm and here he and his wife passed the residue of their lives. William J. Woodford was a son of John Woodford, who likewise came to Clark County and who continued his residence here until his death, at a venerable age. He had served as a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution and was familiarly known as Colonel Woodford. William J. Woodford received excellent educational advantages in his youth and after coming to Kentucky was for a number of years a successful and popular teacher in the pioneer schools of Clark County. A man of fine character and attainments, he was a leader in community affairs, and his death occurred about the year 1846. His eldest son, John, married Miss Elizabeth Buckner, and they were residents of Bourbon County at the time of their deaths; Samuel A. B., subject of this memoir, was the second son; Lucy became the wife of William T. Buckner, of Bourbon County; William married Miss Mary Halleck, and they were residents of Bourbon County at the time of their deaths; Sally became the wife of Capt. William Buckner, of Bourbon County; Matthew became a representative physician and surgeon in Clark and Bourbon counties and was residing near Paris, in the latter county, at the time of his death.

Samuel A. B. Woodford was reared in a home of distinctive culture and was given good educational advantages. He early began to assist in the work and management of the home farm, and at the age of twenty-four years he was united in marriage to Miss Martha Holliday, who was born in Clark County and who was a child at the time of her parents' removal to Missouri. She was thirteen years old when her parents died, and she returned to Clark County, where she remained in the home of her uncle, John Houston, until her marriage, when eighteen years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Woodford settled on the fine old homestead now jointly owned by their daughters Maria and Nannie, and from a comparatively small area he gradually increased the acreage of his landed estate until it comprised 1,600 acres, all in one body. Mr. Woodford showed marked energy and discrimination in his activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower and became one of the prominent exponents of these basic industries in Clark County. He was a man of gracious attributes of character, was influential in community affairs, and he so ordered his life as to merit and retain the unqualified confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact. He maintained a personal supervision of his landed estate and business interests until after he was eighty years of age, and continued to ride horses with ease and pleasure until about three years prior to his death, at a patriarchal age. At the time of his marriage his wife owned some land and also a number of slaves. Their companionship continued its ideal course until the glorious bonds were severed by the death of Mrs. Woodford, who passed to eternal rest in 1880, at the age of fifty-five years. Both were earnest members of Mount Zion Christian Church. Mr. Woodford was a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and in earlier years he served in various local offices of public trust. He and his wife made their pleasant home a center of gracious and generous hospitality, and their memories are revered by all who came within the sphere of their kindly and considerate influence. To each of his children Mr. Woodford gave a farm, besides tendering other fortuitous aid when required. He thus made just disposition of much of his landed estate before his death and was not required to leave a will or other testamentary document at the close of his long and worthy life.

In conclusion of this memoir is entered brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Woodford: Mildred, who was born August 9, 1841, was married on the 14th of February, 1864, to John Prusley, who was born near Cadiz, Trigg County, Kentucky, on the 31st of March, 1840, and whose death occurred December 30, 1887. Mr. Prusley was a young man when he came to Clark County, and after his marriage he remained on the home farm given to his wife by her father until his death. He was prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity as a member of the various York Rite bodies at Winchester, and he organized the first lodge of Good Templars in Clark County, besides which he was active and influential in public affairs of a local order. His widow still remains on the old home place, and she recalls that as a girl she assisted her father in setting out the many pine trees that, with native trees, now form a most attractive grove about the old home of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Prusley became the parents of five children, of whom the eldest, Samuel, died on the old home place when fifty-three years of age, his one surviving child being a son, John McCormick Prusley; William died, a bachelor at the age of thirty-six years; John lives near the old home place; Millie is the wife of James L. Powell, and they have one daughter; and Mary is the wife of Hugh Campbell, of Irvine, Estill County, their one child being a daughter, Mildred Ann. Bettie, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Woodford, is the wife of Rhodes Quinsinberry, and they reside on their farm in Clark County. Mary became the wife of Webb Taylor and died in middle life. Lewis is one of the representative farmers of his native county. Lucy became the wife of H. Blades Browning and was sixty years of age at the time of her death. Dixie is the wife of Perry Browning, of Clark County. Maria owns the portion of the old estate that has the fine house which was the home of her parents at the time of their deaths and which is endeared to her by many gracious memories and associations. She remained with her parents until their death, and with loving solicitude she and her sister Nannie cared for their venerable father during the closing years of his life. She has never married and still occupies the attractive old home, in which she dispenses a generous and unostentatious hospitality, her sister Nannie, wife of John J. Fishback, remaining with her in the ancestral home, where they delight to welcome their host of friends in the community.

Andrew Glover Kyle has been a prosperous farmer and business man, was one of the organizers of the Burley Tobacco Company, and has played a leading part in the agricultural and public affairs of Mercer County for a number of years.

Mr. Kyle, whose home is the noted Kyle homestead known as Kylewood, but who recently has been relieving himself of strenuous farm duties and recuperating at Harrodsburg, was born on what was known as the Thompson place, an old Colonial home at the head of Main Street in Harrodsburg, March 6, 1875. He is a son of John Glover and Marian (Smedley) Kyle, also natives of Kentucky. His father was a farmer, also studied law and practiced his profession in Harrodsburg, participated in a number of hotly contested cases at the bar, and was conceded to be the most popular republican in his day in the county. Mercer County seldom went republican in the twenty or thirty years following the Civil war. When he became a republican candidate for circuit judge of the district he overcame the normal majority of 400 by which Mercer County usually went democratic, had 500 votes to spare in this county, and all but overcame the democratic vote in other portions of the district. John G. Kyle, who died in 1887, was the father of six children, three dying in infancy and the other three being Jane Fay Kyle, born in November, 1871, and died in June, 1910; Andrew Glover; and William Riker Kyle, born December 6, 1877, a farmer by occupation, who married Nina McHaley, of Spencer, Indiana.

Andrew Glover Kyle was about twelve years old when his father died, but was given the advantages of a liberal education, attending Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and also Center College at Danville, Kentucky. From school he entered the retail drug business, but abandoned that to go to farming on the old Kyle homestead on Dry Branch Pike. His experience as a farmer was strenuous in early years. It was particularly so during that historic period of industrial war between the tobacco trust and the tobacco growers of Kentucky marked by the visitations of the night riders and many losses to individual tobacco growers. Mr. Kyle, as noted above, was one of the organizers of the Burley Tobacco Company, a direct outgrowth of this period of economic disturbance, and served as a director until 1919, when the affairs of the company were closed out, the stockholders receiving a dollar and a half for every dollar invested.

On September 30, 1897, Mr. Kyle married Mary Dexter Lilly, daughter of James E. and Mary Matilda (Dexter) Lilly of Indianapolis. The Lilly family of Indianapolis has long been one of great distinction in business and social affairs, and one of the largest wholesale and manufacturing drug firms of the country is the Lilly Company of Indianapolis. Mrs. Kyle was born January 23, 1872. For many years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kyle occupied the old Kyle home near Harrodsburg. Until his health failed he was also engaged in the coal business.

Mr. and Mrs. Kyle have four children: Edward Lilly and Andrew Glover Kyle, twins, were born August 20, 1898, both of whom are now employed in the Eastern Division of Eli Lilly & Company, manufacturing druggists of New York City. John Glover Kyle, named for his grandfather Kyle, born January 18, 1900, who volunteered in the navy, July 5, 1918, saw active service on the battleship Wyoming, was present at the surrender of the German fleet at the close of the war, and was subsequently discharged. He has since signed as a naval reserve and will complete the full term of enlistment. Both the older sons tried repeatedly to get into either the army or navy but were refused admission because of light weight. The only daughter of the family is Mary Dexter Kyle, born February 23, 1902, and living at home with her parents. These children were all born on the old Kyle homestead, Kylewood, and they represent the fifth generation to live on that homesite. Their ancestors were pioneers who took the land direct from the Government.

Mr. Kyle's grandmother was Miss Patsy Letcher, a native of Kentucky and of a distinguished family of the state. Her mother was Sallie Davis, who came from Virginia. Mr. Kyle's grandfather, Andrew Kyle, was born in 1798 and died June 29, 1863. He was a son of Rev. Thomas Kyle, born in 1757 and died June 22, 1846, at the age of eighty-nine. Rev. Thomas Kyle before coming to Kentucky served as a soldier in the American Revolution.

Rufus McDonald Van Arsdall. In a land where merit wins rather than accident of birth or inherited fortune, the men of industry, high character, strong moral courage and worthy ambition are those to whom come the prizes of life. Among the prominent men of Mercer County who displayed the possession of these characteristics was the late Rufus McDonald Van Arsdall. He was one of those who essentially belonged to the men of action in his community, and that he did not overlook his opportunities is clearly shown in what he accomplished. His success was the logical sequence of the natural unfolding and development of his native powers, and close application, indefatigable energy, integrity and determination constituted the foundation of his achievements. As a farmer, banker, friend of education and supporter of all worthy movements which have their root in unselfish devotion to the best interests of the community Mr. Van Arsdall left his impress indelibly inscribed upon the history of the Harrodsburg community, and no citizen of the community had in larger measure the esteem of his fellows or exerted a stronger influence for progress and advancement.

Mr. Van Arsdall was born July 25, 1859, on a farm near Harrodsburg, a son of James Van Arsdall, a small farmer and schoolteacher, from whom Rufus received his early educational training. He also enjoyed a short period of attendance at the academy at Harrodsburg, but on the whole his educational advantages were somewhat limited. There were four children in the family: Betty, Henry, Harriet and Rufus M., of whom Betty and Henry still survive. The mother of these children died when her son Rufus was still a child and the father when he was but sixteen years of age, the children then going under the guardianship of an uncle, Edward Van Arsdall, who managed the home farm until the children were capable of caring for themselves. When the estate was sold Rufus and Henry Van Arsdall pooled their share of the proceeds and bought a small farm, for which they went heavily into debt. By incessant industry and good management they managed to pay off their indebtedness, remaining as partners, bought 279 acres on the Harrodsburg and Lexington pikes, known as the Harvey place. Later they also bought the Lyons place, adjoining, of about 200 acres, thus extending their operations to large proportions. They were strongly advised against taking these steps by relatives and friends, who warned them against the dangers of heavy indebtedness, but the brothers had faith in their own ability, and, working energetically as farmers and hog raisers, paid in full for their property and became the owners of the most valuable and best improved farms on the Lexington Pike. In 1906, after a long, pleasant and mutually profitable association, they dissolved partnership and divided their land, bank stock, etc., on an even basis. Rufus M. Van Arsdall continued to add to his holdings, erected a large modern home, commodious tobacco barns and other buildings, and installed fencing and other up-to-date improvements.

Mr. Van Arsdall was for many years a trusted director and large stockholder in the First National Bank of Harrodsburg, of which he was elected president a short time before his death. He had various other business and financial connections and was accounted a most stable and conservative business man of cautious and ripened judgment. On frequent occasions he was made the repository of valuable interests and often acted as conservator of trust funds and guardian of estates. His religious faith was that of the Christian Church. An ardent prohibitionist, he fought intemperance effectively, and in local and state affairs generally his name was found on the list of good citizens who were doing their utmost to bring about better conditions. The things that he accomplished stand as monuments to his energy, thrift and honesty. During the World war period he was an energetic worker in behalf of Liberty loans and a generous contributor to the Red Cross and other movements. In January, 1920, Mr. Van Arsdall was stricken with pneumonia, and although the battle with the disease was strong and ceaseless, he succumbed to its ravages. At the time of his death a local paper said: "His life has been an open book to everyone, blameless and full of honor. He was in the full enjoyment of his beautiful home, his devoted family and the wealth he had well earned and which he was ready to share with others less fortunate, or for the uplift and good of his community. The passing of such a citizen is a distinct loss."

Mr. Van Arsdall was married, October 26, 1904, to Miss Bernice Elliston, the sixth in order of birth of the eight children of James and Catherine Elliston, of Woodford County, Kentucky. Mr. Elliston, a farmer by vocation, became one of the wealthy agriculturists of his community, working his way up from humble circumstances. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Arsdall, Rufus Henry, born August 6, 1906, who is now attending school at Harrodsburg.

JOHN S. BUSTER. Those who have earned rather than inherited farm ownership in the rich and highly valuable Blue Grass section are very likely to be exemplars of the modern business efficiency in farming instead of the inexact methods that prevailed when the lands hereabout had only a nominal value. It is this high-class efficient farming that is exemplified on the place of John S. Buster, two miles south of Burgin on Buster Pike.

This is one of the notable families in Mercer County agriculture. Mr. Buster was born July 25, 1873, in Wayne County, Kentucky, son of Nimrod and Sallie (Bobbett) Buster, natives of the same county. From the mountainous section of Kentucky the family moved to Mercer County in 1875, and Nimrod Buster acquired 300 acres on the Buster Pike, two miles from Burgin and five miles from Danville or Harrodsburg. Nimrod Buster acquired a large degree of prosperity strictly through the legitimate lines of stock raising and general farming, and at the time of his death owned 750 acres. He died in 1907, and his widow is still living. Their five children are: Emma, wife of Dr. J. B. Ro-Bards, of Harrodsburg; John S.; Sophronia, Mrs. D. B. Moore, wife of a prosperous planter at Edwards, Mississippi; Nimrod, a business partner with his brother John; and Everett E., also a farmer in the same locality.

John S. Buster spent three years in the University of Kentucky, leaving school in 1893 to take his place on his father's farm. He helped handle the property until his marriage, ten years later, and then rented an adjoining farm of 300 acres, paying cash rent of $1,800 annually. He conducted it with profit for about three years, making money even in that time of comparatively low markets. He then leased 350 acres of his father's farm, and managed it until his father's death, when he and his brother Nimrod were appointed administrators of the estate. They operated it as a whole for about three years, and then the property was sold, John and Nimrod Buster and their brother Everett buying all the farm land. By subsequent division Everett Buster took as his portion 200 acres, while the remaining 550 acres continues under the partnership ownership of Nimrod and John Buster. They do general farming, raise horses, hogs and cattle, and grow large crops of tobacco, hemp, grains and grasses. The land is of exceptional fertility, there being none better in the Blue Grass district. The farm is well watered and the building improvements are of the very best, including a large stock barn and tobacco sheds. The brothers are acknowledged as a pair of the most up-to-date farmers in Mercer County. Their farm is on a good pike road, giving them access to all markets. They do their farming with the comforts of modern facilities, having electric light, running water and other conveniences both in home and in barns.

The Buster brothers have also built up a large business as handlers of loose leaf tobacco, having a large tobacco warehouse in Harrodsburg, where they handle on a commission basis about 3,000,000 pounds annually. They have built up this business through square dealing and hard work, and they have the confidence of the growers, giving them the maximum amount of money for their products. The Buster brothers' farm management is one that has shown profits, and one of the contributing causes without doubt is the fact that they do not permit a foot of waste land on their farm.

Mr. John S. Buster married in 1903 Miss Mattie Nooey, of Burgin. She died October 4, 1918, the mother of four children, Nimrod, Jack, Granville and William Lillard Buster.

JAMES H. WAGGENER, who is now living retired in the village of Burgin, Mercer County, was born on the old homestead farm of his father, the same having been the site of the present village of Burgin, and the date of his nativity was June 19, 1849. He is a representative of one of the old and influential families of this section of Kentucky, and the name which he bears has been closely linked with the annals of development and progress in Central Kentucky. He is a son of John C. and Elizabeth (England) Waggener, whose marriage was solemnized in 1840 and who became the parents of eight children. Mary E., the eldest of these children, became the wife of John Walden, of Mercer County, and both died within a short time after their marriage. Nannie W., the wife of Judge Thomas M. Caldwell, of Mercer County, died about the year 1910, and the death of her husband occurred in 1915. John G. and his wife, whose maiden name was Nannie Ensey, reside in the City of Louisville, where he is a contractor and decorator by vocation. James H., subject of this review, was the next in order of birth. Leslie C., a bachelor, is a printer by trade and vocation and is employed at Harrodsburg, Mercer County. He has exceptional musical ability, and other members of the family have likewise shown marked natural talent in a musical way. William W., a painter and decorator, was serving as city marshal of Harrodsburg at the time of his death in 1900. Ella became the wife of John R. Graham, a druggist at Harrodsburg and a representative of one of the influential families of Mercer County, and her death occurred in 1908, her husband having passed away in the preceding year. Their son Robert is a printer by occupation. Their elder daughter, Mary, is the wife of Eugene Biggerstaff, of Lexington, the second daughter, Elizabeth, is the wife of William Williams, of Lexington, and the youngest daughter is Annie, who likewise resides in that city. Frank, youngest of the eight children of John C. Waggener, died at the age of two years.

John C. Waggener was a son of Dr. Herbert Waggener, who came wth his father, a Revolutionary soldier, to Kentucky and took up land in Adair County, he having been one of the pioneer physicians of that county and having been a prosperous and influential citizen at the time of his death. James M. England, maternal grandfather of the subject of this review, was one of the early river traders of Kentucky and operated flatboats down the course ot the Kentucky, Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He would transport his boats to New Orleans and then make his way home on foot, with a pack mule to carry necessary provisions and cooking utensils. He made fourteen such pedestrian trips, and frequently found it necessary to elude hostile Indians en route. He was a wealthy man at the time of his death, and was the owner of a large landed estate, as well as numerous slaves.

James H. Waggener was reared to manhood in his native county, received the advantages of the schools of the locality and period, and early began independent activities as a farmer and in buying and selling lands. He was a young man at the time when he established his residence at Chillicothe, Missouri, where he remained four years and where on the 2d of April, 1870, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Hannah J. Smith. Upon leaving Missouri he returned to Kentucky and established his residence in Mercer County, where he served as county jailer for a period of eight years. He passed the following eight years in Jessamine County, and in the meanwhile served as deputy sheriff of the county. He has been a resident of Burgin since his return to his native county, and is a substantial citizen whose success has been principally won through association with farm enterprise and the buying and selling of farm lands and farm produce. In his operations in this line he became widely known throughout this section of the state, and he was long active and influential in political affairs of local order as a stanch advocate and supporter of the principles of the democratic party. As an aspirant for office he has never met defeat, and in his election to the position of jailer he received the largest majority ever accorded to a candidate for this office in Mercer County. Of the two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Waggener the elder, William Homer, was born in 1871, and his death occurred in 1907. He married Miss Vertria Ramsdell, of Mercer County, and their two children, John C., born in 1900, and William H., born in 1903, now reside in the home of their paternal grandfather, the subject of this sketch. Elizabeth Waggener was born in the year 1873 and is the wife of Gilford Cox, a prosperous farmer near Burgin. Mr. and Mrs. Cox have four children: Jennie Alma, who was born in 1901, is a popular teacher in the village schools of Burgin; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1903, likewise is a successful teacher in the Burgin schools; John Cavanaugh, born in 1904, and James, born in 1910, are still attending school.

Thomas L. Menaugh, M. D. The career of Dr. Thomas L. Menaugh is strongly entrenched in the professional history of Harrodsburg, and of more recent years his name has been identified with public affairs. The city which witnessed the beginning of his professional career in the spring of 1888 offered a promising field for the young physician, and the citizens who have watched his steady advancement have never had cause to regret the faith which they placed in his energy, enthusiasm and ability. He has grown into the opportunities of his community, has fashioned his resources to its needs, and during his years of active practice reflected dignity, sincerity and genuine worth upon a calling for which he was admirably fitted by nature and training. Since 1917 he has devoted himself to the duties of clerk of Mercer County, a capacity in which he has given evidence of sound executive capacity.

Doctor Menaugh was born at Salem, Indiana, March 10, 1861, a son of Thomas J. and Martha (Watts) Menaugh, natives of the Hoosier State, and a grandson of John L. and Fannie (Arbuckle) Menaugh, natives of Kentucky. Thomas J. Menaugh was a soldier of the Mexican war under General Scott, and was present at the fall of the City of Mexico. When the Civil war came on he again offered his services to his country and was accepted as a recruiting officer, a capacity in which he served the Federal Government for about three years. Both he and his worthy wife are now deceased. They were the parents of eight children: David, Emma, Thomas L., Lavega, Lizzie, Fannie, Nina and Lillie.

After attending the graded school at Salem, Indiana, Thomas L. Menaugh took a course at the Eikosi Academy, and in 1886 began the study of his profession as a student at the Louisville (Kentucky) Medical College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1888. In the spring of that year he began his practice in Mercer County, and from that time forward continued to follow his honored calling with constantly increasing success and reputation until his retirement from professional duties in 1917. During this long period of professional work Doctor Menaugh became esteemed for his many excellent qualities of heart and mind, for his thorough knowledge of the theory and practice of medicine and surgery, and for a public-spiritedness which ever prompted a sane and practical interest in those measures which tend to greater happiness, stability and good government. In 1917 he became a candidate for county clerk of Mercer County, and in the election which followed was chosen by a gratifying majority. He has served with efficiency and conscientiousness and to the entire satisfaction of the people of the community. Genial good nature and fair dealing with his fellow men have served to add to the doctor's long list of friends, and his contagious smile is calculated to banish gloom in a most wholesome way. He is a popular member of Harrodsburg Lodge No. 777, A. F. & A. M., and belongs with his family to the Methodist Church of this city.

On April 10, 1889, Doctor Menaugh was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Campbell, of Washington County, Kentucky, and to this union there have been born eight children: Byford H., born March 4, 1890, who enlisted in the regular United States army in 1914, was in the Philippine Islands when war was declared with Germany, and sent to Camp Presidio, California, where he became second lieutenant, was suddenly taken ill and died in May, 1919, leaving many to mourn the loss of this patriotic soldier and genial comrade; Lucille, born in January, 1892, married Theron E. Watson, who lost his health while in the Federal service in France, and is now recuperating at Lithonia, Georgia; Ruth, born in December, 1893, is a stenographer in an attorney's office at Harrodsburg; Marie, born in June, 1895, is employed in the county clerk's office at Harrodsburg; Thomas L., Jr., born March 6, 1900, although under draft age enlisted in 1918 in the Naval Aviation Corps, trained and went overseas to Camp Eastleigh, England, where he was training valorously at the time of the signing of the armistice, after which he was sent home and is now a student at the Kentucky State University at Lexington; Elsie, born in October, 1902, and a graduate of the Harrodsburg High School, class of 1920, is an accomplished pianiste and vocalist; Blanche, born in 1904, is being given an opportunity to develop her musical gifts; and William C., born in 1907, is still attending the local schools.

Green Lycurgus Johnson and Walter V. Martin. The Fort Harrod Garage of Harrodsburg is one of the best equipped establishments of its kind in Mercer County, and handles a very large trade which comes to it from a wide territory. The business is owned and conducted by the firm of Johnson & Martin, which owns and occupies the entire frontage on Lexington Street, corner of Main Street. This firm enlarged and improved the original buildings, of which they obtained possession in 1917, and the garage is a credit to the city and the enterprise of the owners. This firm is authorized agent for the Ford Motor Company and the Fordson tractor, and in addition to carrying the Ford cars and tractors the partners have a full and complete line of automobile accessories and tires, both solid and pneumatic. Theirs is the most modern of battery service, and their employes are experts, twenty of them being kept all the time. The partners are planning to further enlarge their premises so as to care for their constantly expanding business.

Green Lycurgus Johnson was born on a farm in Mercer County, April 13, 1884. After attending Center College, from which he was graduated in 1903, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, he took up the study of medicine in the Louisville Hospital College, from which he was graduated in 1907 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. The year following his graduation he went to Florida and engaged in the practice of his profession, continuing in it very successfully until 1916, when he returned to Kentucky and formed his present partnership with Mr. Martin. Ever since leaving school Mr. Johnson has financed himself, and has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished through his own, unaided efforts. In 1910 he was united in marriage with Miss Woodie Stout, of Owensboro, Kentucky, an accomplished young lady of an aristocratic family. They have one daughter, Nancy Lee.

Walter V. Martin was born in Mercer County, Kentucky, October 17, 1883, and his youth was spent amid rural surroundings. He attended the schools of Harrodsburg, and then took a year's course at a business college in Lexington, Kentucky. For a period he was engaged in farming, but not being content with an agricultural life he went into merchandising, as a member of the firm of Martin & Harmon, but later disposed of his interest in it, and, coming to Harrodsburg, went into the automobile business in 1909. At that time the automobile industry was practically in its infancy, but Mr. Martin had faith in its future and persevered, and is now enjoying the fruits of his earlier labors. In 1917 he and Mr. Johnson organized the Fort Harrod Garage, and have conducted the business with remarkable success, as before stated. In 1906 Mr. Martin was married to Miss Ethel Johnson, and they became the parents of two children, namely: Cora V., who was born in 1908, is now attending a private school at Harrodsburg; and James Franklin, who was born in 1910, is also attending a private school at Harrodsburg. Mr. Martin inherited a small amount of money from his father's estate, and by investing it wisely and using his own good judgment in selecting a line of endeavor for which his talents and inclinations fitted him has developed into one of the substantial business men of his county. Both members of the firm take an intelligent interest in the development of their community, and hold the full confidence of their fellow citizens.

Floyd James Laswell is one of the prominent younger members of the Owensboro bar, and is securely established in his practice, though during a large part of his professional career his time has been given to public office, including the Owensboro postoffice.

He was born at Owensboro, September 16, 1889, a son of Joseph R. and Mattie P. (Larkins) Laswell. His parents are also natives of Kentucky, and his father for many years has been a successful real estate dealer and a well known citizen of Owensboro.

While growing up in his native city Floyd J. Laswell attended the city schools, and in 1911 graduated in law from Centre College, Kentucky. In the meantime, after an examination at Bowling Green, he was admitted to the bar in 1910, about the time he attained his majority. After graduating from college he entered the law office of Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney at Owensboro, and with that old and prominent firm gained a wide range of professional experience. In 1912 he was appointed city prosecutor to fill an unexpired term, and in November of the same year was elected for the regular term of four years. He resigned to take up his duties as postmaster of Owensboro, in July, 1914, his appointment to that office by President Wilson being dated June 13, 1914. For nearly six years Mr. Laswell had the administration of the local postoffice, being the youngest man in the United States ever receiving appointment by the President to fill the position of postmaster in a first class office. By virtue of that office and by his energetic patriotism, he also did much to advance the cause of the Government during the period of the World war. Mr. Laswell resigned from the postoffice in April, 1920, to give all his time and energies to his practice as a lawyer. He is one of the prominent members of the Order of Elks, being past exalted ruler of Owensboro Lodge and also district deputy of the Grand District of Western Kentucky. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and a member of the Owensboro Rotary Club and the Presbyterian Church. In 1918 he married Cecelia (Moore) Little. They have one son, Floyd James, Jr.

Thomas Allen Wash, M. D. The life of the conscientious physician is never one of ease. Not only is he compelled to devote years to preliminary training, but his studies are not completed until he lays aside his duties, for medicine is one of the most progressive sciences known, and each day brings new advancements and discoveries. To keep abreast of them requires study and ability, constant application and comprehensive reading. The sacrifices of a life devoted to the care of suffering humanity are many and varied and are seldom appreciated by the laity. In Thomas Allen Wash, M. D., Harrodsburg has a physician who has constantly kept abreast of the advancements of his honored calling, and who during his practice has been called upon to make numerous sacrifices. He was born on a rough hill farm in Anderson County, Kentucky, May 7, 1878, a son of Benjamin F. and Melissa (Wiser) Wash.

Benjamin F. Wash was a school-teacher and farmer up to the Civil war, when he became a captain of cavalry and served gallantly until being permanently injured by the falling of his mount. He was honorably discharged after a few months of service, but never fully recovered from his injuries and died in 1881. He and his wife were the parents of seven children: John, who went to Illinois as a lad of fourteen years, educated himself and became a school-teacher, and had, apparently a brilliant future before him, judging by his early accomplishments, when his career was suddenly terminated by an attack of typhoid fever when he was twenty-two years of age; Doctor Bishop, who is engaged in medical practice at Cornishville, Kentucky; Dr. W. W., a veterinary surgeon at Lawrenceburg, this state; Absalom, engaged in mining ventures in Arizona; Marion, an insurance man of Harrodsburg; Thomas Allen; and Maggie, the wife of Earl Edwards, secretary and treasurer of an electric light company in Oklahoma.

The mother of Doctor Walsh maintained the home and educated her children, teaching them economy, thrift and self-reliance, and her example and sturdy character left a lasting impress on the lives of her children, aiding them in their efforts toward the securing of recognition and position. Thomas Allen Wash was only three years of age when his father died, but his mother contrived to give him a public school education and as a lad he assisted in the work of the home farm. In time he qualified as a school-teacher, and by farming in the summer months and teaching during the winter terms he managed to save enough to enable him to prosecute his medical studies. Thus he was able to pursue a course at the Hospital Medical College, Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1903, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in that year began the practice of medicine and surgery.

The early practice of Doctor Wash was in the hill country in the west end of Mercer County. His boyhood and youth spent among these people had made him a man of tender sympathies, with a thorough comprehension of human nature as represented in their lives, and with an understanding of their frailties. His visits were made largely on horse-back, often in inclement weather, over roads next to impassable. The night was never too dark or stormy or the roads too bad to cause him to falter, even though his call came from the poorest cabin. Duty and not remuneration of a material kind guided his mount and directed his way in those days. It was a training of the hardest kind, but it gave him endurance and self-confidence and taught him much that could not have been found inside the covers of books.

After a long experience in the country districts Doctor Wash took up his residence at Harrodsburg, where he has built up a large and representative practice, although he is not deaf to the call of suffering humanity when it comes from some of his fellow-beings who are in humble circumstances. In 1919 he took a special post-graduate course at the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, and on his return established himself in an exceedingly well-appointed suite of offices, where he has been specializing in the treatment and cure of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, although he still carries on a general practice. He has attained a high standing in his profession and in public confidence, and is a valued member of the county, state and national medical bodies. As a fraternalist Doctor Wash belongs to the Masons, in which he has attained the Knights Templar degree and is a member of Oleika Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Lexington, Kentucky; to the Knights of the Maccabees, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the war period he acted as assistant food administrator for his district, and was also active in bond drives and in Red Cross work.

Doctor Wash was married in 1913 to Miss Olga Endres, of Louisville. They are members of the Christian Church.

William A. Sharp, who is the efficient and honored incumbent of the office of tax commissioner of Mercer County, is a native of this county and a representative of a family whose name has been long and prominently associated with the annals of Kentucky history and those of the nation, this being likewise true in connection with the maternal ancestry.

Mr. Sharp was born in the neighborhood long known by the family name, near Kirkwood, Mercer County, and the date of his nativity was August 10, 1860. He is a son of William H. and Mary Elizabeth (Armstrong) Sharp, both likewise natives of Mercer County, where the former was born December 11, 1826, and the latter on the 21st of December, 1833, their marriage having been solemnized in 1858. The father's death occurred in the year 1900, and the venerable mother resides near the little Village of McAfee, Mercer County. Of the eight children the subject of this sketch is the eldest; Annie E. is the second in order of birth; Miss Virginia L. resides with her widowed mother; Thomas C. went to the State of Oregon in the year 1884 and is one of the most prominent horsemen of that state, his residence being in the City of Portland; John J. is a prosperous farmer near Georgetown, Indiana; Clarence B. is a successful farmer in his native county; Abraham is a mechanical engineer by vocation and resides in the City of Wichita, Kansas; Eugene, youngest of the children, enlisted in the nation's military service at the time of the Spanish-American war, was with his command in the Philippine Islands for a period of three years, and after his return to his native land was mustered out at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Thereafter he was in the nation's service three years at the Mare Island Navy Yards, and for an equal period held the position of Government Indian agent at the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon. His death occurred at St. Louis, Missouri, in January, 1917, and he is survived by his widow and one child.

William H. Sharp, father of him whose name initiates this review, was reared and educated in Mercer County and represented his native state as a gallant young soldier in the Mexican war. He was a son of Jacob and Ann (Edwards) Sharp, and his father was a soldier in the War of 1812. Jacob Sharp was a son of Capt. Abram Sharp and Rebecca (Armstrong) Sharp, Captain Sharp having taken part in the battle of Bunker Hill in 1775, and having thereafter been a patriot soldier in the command of General Washington during the greater part of the War of the Revolution. He was an uncle of Solomon P. Sharp, who served as a member of Congress, from Kentucky in 1816, and who was attorney general of this state in 1825, he having been murdered at the state capital, Frankfort, by Jeremiah Beauchamp, who was afterward tried and convicted and hanged for the crime.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Armstrong) Sharp, mother of the subject of this sketch, is a daughter of John Lapsley Armstrong and Alabama (McAfee) Armstrong. John Lapsley Armstrong was a son of Capt. William and Elizabeth (Robinson) Armstrong, Captain Armstrong having served as an officer in the command of Governor Shelby, first governor of Kentucky, in the War of 1812. Capt. William Armstrong was a son of Capt. John and Priscilla (McDonald) Armstrong. Capt. John Armstrong gained his military title while serving as an officer in the Continental Line in the War of the Revolution. He was born in Scotland and immigrated to America in 1770. He first established his residence in Pennsylvania, whence he removed to Virginia, and it was from the latter commonwealth that he came with his family to Kentucky in 1784. In 1780 he purchased 500 acres of land in what is now Mercer County, and on this property now stands the New Providence Church. Mrs. Elizabeth (Armstrong) Sharp now owns and maintains her home upon a portion of this ancestral estate, which has continuously remained in the possession of the family, and the original deed is the only one of record, the same bearing the signature of Benjamin Harrison, the second governor of Virginia, the domain of which commonwealth then included the present State of Kentucky. The great-great-grandfather, Capt. William Armstrong, came to Mercer County in 1784 with his family and assisted in organizing New Providence Presbyterian Church, seven miles north of Harrodsburg, and was one of the first elders. The other two were George Buchanan and James McCoun, Sr. Alabama (McAfee) Armstrong, wife of John Lapsley Armstrong, was a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Cardwell) McAfee, and her father was a brother of Gen. Robert B. McAfee, their father, Robert McAfee, having been one of the early pioneers and influential citizens of Kentucky. He aided Boone and Harrod in building the old-time fort or stockade at Harrodsburg at the founding of the town in 1773, and he explored the Ohio River from the mouth of the Big Sandy River to the Ohio Falls.

Of the descendants of Capt. John Armstrong, the Revolutionary soldier, there were fifty-three who became clergymen of the Presbyterian Church, and among this number was Rev. John Lapsley McKee, who was at one time president of Center College at Danville, Boyle County. A daughter of Capt. John Armstrong became the wife of Rev. Thomas Clelland, who became a pioneer Presbyterian clergyman in the State of Kentucky, and he was the first minister of this denomination to deliver a sermon, he having been at the time a guest of Gen. William Henry Harrison.

William A. Sharp, the immediate subject of this review, acquired his youthful education in the schools of his native county, and his independent career was initiated when he engaged in farm enterprise in the old Armstrong district of the county. He became a vigorous and successful representative of agricultural and live-stock industry, and found special satisfaction in the raising as well as in equestrian use of fine horses, which he was wont to employ frequently in the diversion of fox chasing. In his early youth he began to manifest much interest in the county fairs, besides which for many years he made exhibits of live stock at various county fairs in this section of the state.

Mr. Sharp has been a leader in the local councils of the democratic party, and for sixteen years after leaving his farm he held a position in the office of the county assessor. In 1917, without opposition, he was elected tax commissioner of Mercer County, in which important office he is giving a most efficient and satisfactory administration, his being a secure place in the confidence and esteem of the people of his native county. Four years ago Mr. and Mrs. Sharp came to Harrodsburg, in which city they have maintained their home since leaving the farm.

On the 7th of September, 1886, was solemnized the
